Stourbridge Observer 3/7/1869

“An inquest was held on Monday last, at the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, before Mr. Hooper, Coroner, touching the death of William Mogg (15).

From the evidence adduced, it appears that deceased was an idiot, and on Friday last got on to the railway at Rowley Station. At four minutes past five a fast train passed the station and knocked deceased down, and so injured him that he died in half an hour after.

Birmingham Daily Post 18/9/1869 - Correspondence

“To the Editor of the Birmingham Daily Post.

Sir. The end of the nailers’ strike, on Wednesday, was celebrated at Blackheath by the first and only public gift during the whole length of the strike, through the kindness of Mr. Laister, of The Hayes, Blackheath, who gave away upwards of 300 gallons of excellent soup, which was most ably distributed by Thomas Willetts, Edward Hall, and E. Payne, at the HANDEL HOTEL, to nailers, who seemed very thankful for it. If you find a corner in the Post for the above, you will much oblige.

“Charles Gadd was charged with assaulting Job Gadd, his cousin, on the 4th inst, at Blackheath. Complainant said he lived at Blackheath, and on the above date he met a friend from America, and together they went into the HANDEL HOTEL. They had not been there long before defendant came in, and, without saying anything, rushed at complainant, struck him twice, and blackened his eye.

Defendant pleaded guilty, and was fined 6d and costs; in default 14 days.”

“Joseph Round was charged by the police with being drunk, breaking a cup, and refusing to quit the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, on being requested to do so by the police on Saturday night, the 12th inst. He pleaded guilty and was fined 1s and costs, or in default, fourteen days’ imprisonment.”

County Advertiser 21/5/1870

“William Laister, of the HANDEL HOTEL, Black Heath, was summoned by Henry Withers, of Halesowen, on a charge of illegally having in his possession a certain dog. It seemed that some time ago a valuable spaniel dog followed the complainant home. Next day he took it to the police, who recommended him to advertise the dog in the local papers. He had done so, but no owner was forthcoming. A week or two since, the complainant lost the dog, which was found by the defendant, who also advertised it. Complainant applied to defendant for the dog, but he refused to give it up on the ground that he had quite as much right to it as complainant. The Bench ordered defendant to give the dog up at once, and pay the costs.”

“Thomas Knight was charged with refusing to assist Police-constable Slynn while in the execution of his duty as a police-constable, in quelling a disturbance, on the 30th of May, on being requested to do so.

Police-constable Slynn said he was attempting to put down a disturbance in Blackheath, on the 30th ult, which had arisen outside a public house, and as the prisoners resisted him, and as there was a large crowd around, he called on defendant and several others to assist him, but he took no notice whatever.

Defendant said the police officer asked a man to assist, ‘and Thomas Knight,’ but he did not think he wanted him or he would have helped. A short time afterwards he asked a policeman what he could do, and he told him to bring a cart to take the men in. He went for a cart but there was one there before him.

He was committed for trial to the Sessions, bail being allowed, on surety in £10.

Edward Southwick was also charged with refusing to assist Police-constable Taylor, on the 30th ult, while quelling a disturbance in the highway.

Police-constable Taylor said he and another constable found a man named Stephenton drunk in the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, and requested him to leave. As he refused they endeavoured to move him by force, when he became very violent, and they were compelled to handcuff him. There was a great crowd of people round, consisting of some hundreds. They asked defendant to assist them.

Police-constable Hume, who was with the last witness, gave corroborative evidence.

The Bench discharged the prisoner, as the evidence was not sufficiently strong.”

AND

“John Rose was charged in three different summonses with being drunk and disorderly and assaulting two parish constables, all at the same time, on Tuesday last, very early in the morning.

Police-constable Hume proved that he was drunk and disorderly in High Street, Blackheath, at half-past twelve on Tuesday morning, and creating a great disturbance.

Aaron Moyle, parish constable, said there was a disturbance outside the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath. Police-constable Hume came up and took the defendant into custody, afterwards leaving him in his charge. As several persons were pulling at the prisoner behind, he went towards them, when the prisoner struck him three times in the face and made his nose bleed. He struck him in return about the same number of times.

Parish constable Bennett gave corroborative evidence, adding that the prisoner also assaulted him while he was assisting the last witness.

The prisoner was fined 5s and costs for the assaults, and directed to pay costs for the charge of drunkenness.”

“On Tuesday an inquest was held at the HANDEL HOTEL, Rowley, before Mr. E. Hooper, Coroner, on the body of Edward Stuart, a collier lately employed at the Gawn Colliery, belonging to Mr. N. Hingley.

It appears from the evidence deceased was working down the pit, when some coal fell on him from the side, and he died in about ten minutes.

The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

Stourbridge Observer 13/8/1870

“At the Petty Sessions, on Wednesday last, William Laister, landlord of the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, was charged by Superintendent Mills with permitting drunkenness in his house.

Police-constable Taylor said that he visited defendant’s house, and found a number of men there. Several of them were drunk, and two men, named respectively, Jennings and Allen, were stripped, and standing up to fight. Witness tried to stop it, but defendant told him not to interfere, but to let them fight it out.

Police-constable Young corroborated.

Mr. Hayes then addressed the Bench for the defence, and denied that the defendant had permitted disorderly conduct, and that he had four witnesses to prove that Jennings came into the house and began a quarrel; that he ordered him out of the house, and had summoned him; and denied that he told the police to let them fight.

Ordered to pay the costs.”

AND

“Thomas Jennings was charged by William Laister with being drunk, and refusing to quit his house, when requested.

Complainant, who is the landlord of the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, proved the case.

Defendant pleaded guilty, and was fined 1s and costs.”

“The annual licensing meeting for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division was held yesterday.....

William Laister, HANDEL HOTEL were all cautioned in reference to the future conduct of their houses.”

“Thomas Harvey and William Crumpton were summoned for being drunk and refusing to quit the HANDEL HOTEL, Old Hill, on the 10th inst, when requested.

William Laister said on the above date defendants were in his house, drunk. He ordered them out, and they refused to go, and he had them removed.

Defendants pleaded guilty.

Crumpton was fined 2s 6d and costs; and Harvey 6d and costs.”

[1] William Laister (40), licensed victualler and maltster, born Rowley Regis;

[2] Thomas Willetts (65), general servant, born Rowley Regis:

“Noah Barnsley was charged by Joseph Attwood with assaulting him on the 24th ultimo. Mr. Addison appeared for the complainant, and Mr. Hayes for the defendant.

Complainant said he went into the HANDEL HOTEL at Blackheath, on the night of the above date. Several persons were inside the room. A dispute arose about a dog, when the defendant struck him a blow on the chest, which knocked him down. Witness then struck again, when defendant steeped down, put his head between his legs, and threw him over. They both fell together. Defendant got up and ran out of the house. Witness also ran out, because there was a cry of ‘Police.’ Defendant fell down by some palisades, and witness fell over him.

William Cole, a butcher, was called to give evidence, and corroborated the complainant in the assault.

In cross-examination he admitted that he had offered the defendant £2, a leg of mutton, and a bottle of wine to settle it.

The Bench remarked that one side appeared to be as bad as the other.....”

[In January 1873 Noah Barnsley, blacking maker, claimed damages from Joseph Attwood and William Cole, butchers, for £25, for loss of earnings for ten weeks owing to broken ribs. He did not succeed.]

William Laister was also a maltster. [1872]

William Laister was also a brewer and wine and spirit dealer [1873]

Stourbridge Observer 6/6/1874

“At the Police Court on Wednesday last, before Messrs. Barrs and Hingley, Samuel Hayward, formerly of Brierley Hill, applied for a transfer of a license from William Leicester, of the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath. Superintendent Mills said that before the license was transferred he wished to inform the Bench that the applicant had been convicted twice for keeping a disorderly house, and on one occasion was fined £5, and on another 10s, and also had his license endorsed; but the last conviction was more than twelve months past.

Mr. Hingley: I will not grant a license. Such men as you are not fit to keep a public house.

Applicant: Gentlemen, it is more than eighteen months since I was convicted. Please to give me a chance. The notice is signed by the minister and others.

Mr. Hingley: The minister ought to be ashamed of himself to sign it, and will tell him so the first time I see him.

The Applicant: Please to give me another chance.

Mr. Hingley: No, I shall not. Go and get something else to do to earn a living, and not make men drunk.

The applicant then retired.”

“Old Hill, Wednesday, before F. W. G. Barrs and N. Hingley, Esqs.....

“On Saturday last the deputy-coroner W. H. Topham Esq, held an inquest at the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, to enquire into the circumstances attending the death of George Bennett, aged 47, a labourer. It appeared on the Monday previous about 6pm deceased was loading a cart with hay in a field when by some accident he fell off on to the back of his head. He was picked up and taken home but died the next day about three o'clock. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

“William Portman was charged with being drunk and refusing to quit the HANDEL HOTEL, on the 15th inst. Police-constable Jackson proved the case, and said defendant insisted upon going on the stage, and singing a song, and refused to go when requested.

Defendant said he only wanted to sing a song. Fined 5s and costs, in default 14 days.”

Stourbridge Observer 17/10/1874

“Joseph Walters, a miner, was charged with assaulting Samuel Hayward, landlord of the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, on the 3rd inst. Complainant said defendant was very disorderly and when witness refused to fill him any drink, defendant threw a spill box at him, hitting him on the chest. Fined 5s and costs.”

“John Laking, saddler, was charged with stealing gas fittings belonging to William Laister on Tuesday.

Prosecutor said he lived at Blackheath. He had a sale at the HANDEL HOTEL on Tuesday. From information he received he followed the prisoner who was helping another to carry a clock. The gas pendant produced was found in the clock case.

PC Jackson said he saw the defendant take the gas pendant. Witness told him he must not take it but defendant afterwards put it in the clock case.

Defendant said he found the pendant in the clock case. He took it out, but put it back on being spoken to by Jackson.

The Bench dismissed the case.”

County Advertiser 6/3/1875

“Samuel Ward and John Jones were charged with having, on the 27th ult, been drunk and disorderly and refused to quit the HANDEL HOTEL, Tividale, when requested to do so. Defendant Ward was fined 20s and costs, and the other defendant was fined 2s 6d and costs.”

“William Blakeway, ostler, was charged with refusing to quit the HANDEL HOTEL, on the 8th May last. George Henry Lester, landlord, said that on the day in question he came to the house and was creating a disturbance and assaulting the servants, and he was ordered to leave, but he refused. Defendant said that he went for his wages and complainant refused to pay him. Mr. Hingley said the defendant was perfectly justified in refusing to leave until he had received his wages. The case was dismissed.”

“William Hodgetts and Michael Bastable were charged with having refused to quit the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, kept by William Laister, on the 31st ult.

It appeared that defendants went into prosecutor’s house in a drunken state, and created a disturbance. They were requested by the landlord to leave but refused to do so.

Defendants denied the charge, but previous convictions having been proved they were each fined 40s and costs, or two months’ imprisonment.”

County Advertiser 20/11/1875

“William Laister, HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, was charged with selling ale after eleven o’clock on the night of the 6th inst, and before six o’clock on the morning following. Mr. Addison defended.

Police-sergeant Wallace stated that at about fifteen minutes to one on Sunday morning he heard voices in the defendant’s house. On listening he heard defendant say, ‘Bring a quart of ale, some glasses, and some cigars.’ He then entered the house where he found the defendant and a neighbour named Patrick. There was some ale on the table.

Cross-examined: Did not hear of any money, nor see the ale brought in.

Mr. Addison stated that Mr. Patrick had received a cask of ale, and in friendship took some into the defendant’s house. They were discussing it together when the officer came in.

The case was dismissed.”

“Christopher Bate was charged with having been disorderly and refusing to quit the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, on the 11th inst. The landlord of the hotel proved the offence, and defendant was then charged, at the instance of Police-sergeant Hand, with being drunk and disorderly in the public highway on the same date.

There were eight previous convictions recorded against him. In the first case he was fined 5s and costs, and in the case of drunkenness sentenced to a month’s hard labour.”

County Advertiser 6/1/1877

“Solomon Roberts and George Hingley were charged with being drunk and disorderly in the public highway, on the 5th inst; Hingley was also charged with being disorderly on the licensed premises of Alfred Cox, on the same date. Mr. Hayes defended Hingley.

Police-constable Sykes said that he found the defendants drunk and fighting together in the highway, near to the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath. Mr. Cox, the proprietor of the HANDEL HOTEL, proved that defendants were disorderly in his house, and had to be forcibly ejected.

Mr. Hayes admitted that his client had had drink, but denied that he was drunk or disorderly.

The magistrates considered all the cases proved, and fined each defendant 2s 6d and costs for being drunk and disorderly, and Hingley 2s 6d and costs for being disorderly upon Cox's premises.”

“Adjourned Licensing Session.....

Alfred Cox, landlord of the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, applied for a seven days' license, his house at present only licensed for six days. Mr. Hayes appeared on behalf of the applicant, and Mr. Addison for the owner of the house, Mr. Laister. Mr. Hayes explained the circumstances under which the application was made, stating that when the house was formerly held by the owner, Mr. Laister, it was only opened on six days a week, Mr. Laister allowing his seven days' license to lapse. The present occupier now asked to resume the full license.

Mr. Addison examined Mr. Laister as to his taking a six days' license instead of a seven days' license.

There was no opposition. Application refused.”

AND

“David Parsons of the RAILWAY INN, Oldbury Road, Blackheath, applied for a six-days' spirit license. Mr. Hayes supported and Mr. Addison opposed the application, the latter appearing on behalf of Mr. Laister, owner of the HANDEL HOTEL. Mr. Hayes urged that his client had established a car and vehicle agency, and his house being near the railway-station, and not near to any old-licensed house, accommodation of the nature asked for was necessary. Mr. Addison's cross-examination elicited from the applicant that his house was a little over a hundred yards from the HANDEL HOTEL; but he did not think there were seven beerhouses within three hundred yards of it. The magistrates' clerk did not think the latter fact applied to the present case, the application being for a spirit license. Mr. Hayes presented a testimonial, signed by residents of the neighbourhood, in support of his client's application. There was no opposition made to it other than by Mr. Addison. Application refused.”

“At the Oldbury County Court, on Friday, before Mr. W. D. Griffiths, judge, Edward Darby, miner, of Blackheath, brought an action to recover £11 4s from the trustees of Court Briton’s Glory, Order of Foresters, held at the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, alleged to have been due as sick pay. Mr. Jackson, West Bromwich, appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Shakespeare defended. It appeared that the plaintiff met with an accident on the 29th of September, 1876, through which he was thrown upon the funds of the society. According to the rules of the society he received 8s per week for six months, and 6s per week afterwards. At the end of 12 months the pay was reduced to 4s per week, which he was entitled to receive as long as he was unable to follow his employment. The pay was, however, discontinued.

The defence was that the plaintiff, being guilty of a misdemeanour, was suspended on October 23, 1879.

Mr. Jackson contended that the rules only allowed a member to be suspended for one month.

After hearing the case. The Judge gave a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed, to be paid in a month.”

“Thomas Hill, miner, Garratts Lane, Old Hill, was fined 1s and costs for being drunk on the licensed premises of Silas Whitehouse, known as the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, on the 5th inst. PC Leadbeater proved the case.”

Dudley and District News 26/1/1884

“Silas Whitehouse, landlord of the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, was summoned for permitting drunkenness. Mr. Waldron appeared to prosecute, and Mr. Shakespeare to defend.

Mr. Waldron, in the course of his opening remarks, ventured to say that until this case came before the Bench they had never had a case before them where a man had been kept in pawn for drink. Thomas Hill, miner, Garratts Lane, Old Hill, stated that on Saturday morning, the 5th inst, about about 8.40, he went to the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, with a man named Thomas Bryant. Bryant left about two o'clock and was to return again, but failed to do so. About four o'clock he was going to leave the house when the landlady wanted him to pay for ten quarts of ale. He declined to pay for it, because Bryant was to pay his share for the ale, and offered to let the landlady kept his watch until he had seen Bryant. The landlady refused to have the watch, and kept him at the house for two hours, and during that time he went to sleep in the kitchen. He left the house about six o'clock, and paid the defendant for the ten quarts of ale on the following Monday morning.

PC Leadbeater deposed to visiting the hotel about six o'clock, and seeing the defendant, who was very drunk, leaning against the wall in the passage.

Mr. Shakespeare, for the defence, stated that the defendant and others went into the house at the time stated, and had the ten quarts of ale between them. About two o'clock they left the house, and the man Hill was not seen there until nearly six o'clock. At two o'clock the men left without paying for the ale that they had had, and when Hill came again about six o'clock, the landlady asked him to pay for it, but he declined to do so. The landlady then went for a policeman, an act that any publican would not have done if he had been guilty of an offence. Was the evidence, being the evidence of a drunken man, reliable as to having obtained beer there, and was it such evidence upon which the Bench could convict a respectable man?

Mr. Bassano remarked that they did not consider this a bad case, but the Bench wanted the publicans of that district to realise the fact that they kept houses for the supply of refreshment, and not for people to be supplied with drink hour after hour. He imposed a fine of 10s and costs.”

County Express 7/2/1885

“Benjamin Hingley, fruiterer, was charged with being disorderly on the premises of Silas Whitehouse, of the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, and refusing to leave when asked to do so. Mr. J. Wright defended.

Prosecutor stated that the defendant came into his house on the 28th ult and asked for some ale. Prosecutor refused to fill any, and told defendant to go out. Defendant returned three times, and struck prosecutor on one occasion.

Defendant was further charged with being drunk and disorderly on the same occasion.

Police-constable Whiston said he was called to the house to put defendant out. Defendant had been ejected twice, and was very disorderly.

Mr. Wright expressed the regret of the defendant at what had occurred, and asked the Bench to deal lightly with the case.

Defendant was then further charged with using threatening language to Joseph Bird on the same night.

Complainant said he was in the Hotel when defendant came in, and in the course of his disorderly conduct defendant threatened to kill him.

A witness named Laister corroborated as to the threats.

On the first charge defendant was fined 5s and costs, or fourteen days, on the second 2s 6d and costs, or seven days, and the third charge was dismissed.”

“The annual licensing session for the Petty Sessional division of Old Hill was held to-day.....

Mr. Waldron applied on behalf of Edward Mason for the renewal of the license to the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath. Mr. Shakespeare opposed the application. Mr. Waldron said that an order was sent to the Dudley Herald for the insertion of the usual notice for two consecutive weeks, but it only appeared once. The mistake was afterwards found out by the proprietors, and a rectification of the mistake was made in the Midland Evening News. The application was ultimately withdrawn.”

“To the Overseers of the Poor of the Parish of Rowley Regis, in the County of Stafford, and to the Superintendent of Police of the District or Division of Rowley Regis, in the said County, and to all whom it may concern.

I, Edward Mason, Licensed Victualler, the holder of a Six Days' License, now residing at Blackheath, in the Parish of Rowley Regis, in the County of Stafford, do hereby give Notice that it is my intention to apply, at the Adjourned General Annual Licensing Meeting, for the Division of Rowley Regis, to be holden at the Public Office, at Old Hill, in the said County, on the 29th day of September next ensuing, for a Seven Days' License to hold an Excise License to Sell all Intoxicating Liquors by Retail, to be consumed on and off the Premises, situate at Blackheath, known as the HANDEL HOTEL, in the Parish of Rowley Regis aforesaid, in pursuance of the Intoxicating Liquors Licensing Act, 1838, and Acts amending the same, of which said premises the Trustees of Mrs. Laister are the owners, and the same are of the annual value by law required, and are now in my own occupation.

Given under my hand this 31st day of August, 1886.

Edward Mason.”

“Adjourned Licensing Day.....

Mr. Waldron, of Brierley Hill, made an application on behalf of Edward Mason, landlord of the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, for a seven days' license. Mr. Vernon appeared to oppose the application.

Mr. Waldron stated that some years ago an agreement was entered into by the different landlords in the neighbourhood to close their houses on Sundays. That was done for a time, but eventually one or two of the landlords withdrew from the agreement, and he now applied for the license to the above hotel to be made into a seven days' license, instead of a six days'. There was ample accommodation at the house for everything, and he might also urge further that there was also a club held at the house, and when a funeral took place the members had to go to the house for their regalia, and also to get refreshment. This generally occurred on a Sunday, because people in the neighbourhood were very poor, and had to bury their dead on Sundays. The other houses which were opened on Sundays were doing good trades, and he thought it was hardly fair to the applicant to have house closed.

Mr. Laister, a former tenant of the HANDEL HOTEL, and owner of the property, stated that he entered into an agreement with the other landlords to close the public houses on a Sunday, but some of them soon broke faith, and were now doing a good trade on a Sunday. He would withdraw the application if all the other houses were shut up again. There was ample room at the house for stabling, and Mason let out carriages on hire now.

Mr. Bassano stated that a memorial had been presented to the Bench bearing the signatures of all the principal inhabitants of Blackheath, asking them not to grant the seven days' license. As to that part which Mr. Waldron considered made his application stronger, the memorialists stated that the hiring out of vehicles tended to promote the habit of drinking, because a number of young persons would, perhaps, go and hire a vehicle, and before going would have something to drink. The Bench could not set their faces against that memorial, because it was very well known it set forth what was really the truth. At the same time the Bench wished to put all publicans on an equality, and it was rather hard for one publican to have his house shut whilst his opposite neighbour had his house open.

Mr. Waldron said he would promise, on behalf of his client, not to let out vehicles on Sundays, and the Bench then granted the application.”

“Arthur Henry Howlett, signalman, Springfields, Rowley, was charged with stealing a bottle of brandy, value 6s, the property of Edward Mason, landlord of the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, on the 17th inst. Mr. Jackson defended.

After hearing the evidence Mr. Bassano said there was a doubt in the case, and the defendant would receive the benefit of it, and he would be discharged.”

Edward Mason issued tokens from here.

“Edward Mason, landlord of the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, was charged with permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises on the 27th of May. Mr. W. Waldron prosecuted, and Mr. Jackson (West Bromwich) defended.

Mr. Waldron stated that Police-sergeant Salt and Police-constable Jewson visited the defendant’s house on the night in question.

At 9.30 the sergeant went into one of the rooms and saw a man named Danks drunk. Danks went to a counter and asked, ‘Where’s my cup?’ picked up a cup, drank out of it, and asked the police to drink. On the landlord’s attention being called to the man’s condition he said the man came there at 7 o’clock, and he had ordered him out, but had not supplied him with anything. He submitted that if the landlord had the man on the premises from 7 till 9.30 that would not be such a control as was contemplated by the Act. Police-sergeant Salt and Police-constable Jewson were called to support the case for the prosecution.

Mr. Jackson, in defence, said the man Danks came late into the house twice, once at 10 minutes to 7 o’clock in the evening when there were only Mr. and Mrs. Mason in the house, and asked to be supplied ‘on the strap.’ Mason remarked that he reckoned that was the Missus’s business, and they did not strap anybody. Danks went away and came again, and had only been in a few minutes when the officers came in. A man named Wilson asked him to drink out of his cup and he did so. They refused positively to supply the man.

Defendant was called and swore that the man Danks was not supplied with anything. Danks said he had no money in his clothes, and wanted to borrow money off the customers.

Cross-examined: The man was not on the premises an hour after he came the second time. They ordered the man out because he had no money. The man was not drunk.

The case ended in a dismissal, the Bench remarking that the serving of the beer was not clearly proved.

Danks was fined 2s 6d and costs for being drunk on the premises.”

HOTEL, Blackheath, on the 10th inst.

Police-constable Archer said he saw the defendant go into the Hotel at 7.20 in the morning in a very drunken state.

Defendant was also charged with being drunk and disorderly on the 8th inst.

Fined 5s and costs in each case.”

“Joseph Mason, of the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, was charged with furious driving on the 26th ult.

Defendant stated that the horse he was driving was a very restive one, and he could not manage it.

The Bench advised the defendant not to drive a horse he could not manage in future. No fine was imposed.”

“On Thursday evening Mr. E. Hooper (Coroner) held an inquiry at the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, relative to the death of Elizabeth Hipkiss (56), Oldbury Road, Blackheath, who only four days prior to her decease was married to a man named Eli Hipkiss (69), labourer, of Blackheath. Mr. A. Tanfield (Solicitor) represented the deceased’s husband.

William Richards, draper, of Oldbury, brother of the deceased, said he had not seen his sister for twelve months, and when he was informed of her death on Monday morning, he was not aware of her marriage with Hipkiss, previous to which she was a widow and bore the name of Sharpe. At his request the registrar (Mr. William Whitehouse) communicated with the Coroner on the matter. Deceased had been a great sufferer from bronchitis, had an affection of the heart, and three months ago had her arm broken. Her father left her a sum of money, which she banked.

John Richards (18), who had lodged with deceased during the last seven years, and a neighbour named Eliza Willetts gave evidence as to deceased having suffered from bronchitis for a long period; and both stated that since the marriage they never saw anything to indicate that man and wife were not living happily and comfortably together.

Eli Hipkiss, husband of the deceased, said he had known deceased for fifteen or sixteen years. He married her that day week, and she died on Sunday evening last. He was sitting in his wife’s bedroom before the fire. On waking up from a short sleep, at about eleven o’clock, he found that deceased had a strange appearance, and called up the witness Willetts, and they found that she was dead. On the Friday night previous he went to Dr. Lyddon’s, Oldbury, for a bottle of medicine for his wife, but when he returned she told him that she had bought some from a man at the door, and she continued to take this latter medicine up to Sunday afternoon. When he married deceased he did not know that she had any money. He had no suspicion on the Sunday that his wife was dangerously ill.

Edwin Richards, another brother of the deceased, admitted he that when he heard of his sister’s death he had suspicions, but these had been entirely dissipated since hearing the evidence. He did not now have desire that a post mortem examination should be held.

The jury returned a verdict of Found Dead in Bed from Natural Causes.”

“Richard Parkes, labourer, Blackheath, was charged with assaulting Henry Parsons, on the 15th inst. Complainant stated that on the date in question he went into the HANDEL HOTEL, and defendant, who had been with a brake to Oxley Moor, came in and said, ‘Here’s a — Liberal —. Get out of the place, all such men as you.’ He began pushing complainant about, collared him by the coat and beard, shook him like a dog, and struck him on the side of the face. This made the second attack defendant had made. He never spoke to the defendant.

The defendant now stated that complainant made some remark about there being enough vagabonds and spongers and hypocrites at Oxley. One word begot another, and complainant struck him with a pint cup.

Two witnesses were called for the complainant. One called for the defence said both complainant and defendant were as bad as one another.

William Parsons, cousin to Henry Parsons, was charged with threatening Richard Parkes. Complainant said he and the complainant in the last case were ‘arguing over politics’ when defendant threatened him. He did not take out the summons until after he himself had been served with the other summons; his business would not allow him to come, but he knew he could get one out time enough.

Mr. Bassano: It’s a great pity you people cannot do without squabbling over politics. Both cases will be dismissed and perhaps you’ll be better friends.”

Edward Brine = Edward Bryant = Edward Bryan

County Advertiser 30/9/1893

“Edward Bryant, landlord of the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, was charged with permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises, and also with selling ale to a drunken person, David Latham, on the 11th inst. Mr. Waldron defended.

The evidence for the prosecution showed that about eight o’clock on the Monday evening named, Police-constable Poultney in company with Police-constable Wood, went to the HANDEL HOTEL VAULTS, where they saw Latham leaning against the bar in a drunken condition. Wood called the landlord’s attention to him, telling him the man was drunk, and asking him to account for his being there. Defendant denied that the man was drunk, and said he had had no drink there, and he had asked Latham to leave half-an-hour ago. There were a great many people in the house, and among them a person named Cox, who saw Latham supplied with two pints of fourpenny, and Mrs. Latham, his wife, stated that her husband was tipsy. After an hour and three quarters had elapsed Police-sergeant Salt, accompanied by one the officers mentioned, visited defendant's house, and the former saw Latham coming along the passage leading into the street. Salt also called defendant's attention to the man Latham, and defendant said he had been served with a summons, and it had upset him. Defendant denied having supplied him with any drink, but when an officer served him with the summons on the next day defendant admitted supplying him with two pints.

In cross-examination, Police-sergeant Salt said he had no fault to find with the house, which was quiet on the night in question. Latham reeled when going out of the house.

Mr. Waldron, for the defence, said the true explanation of the whole case was that Latham had received a summons that evening, which had put him about and upset him. There was nothing unusual in his appearance, and nothing to indicate that he was drunk when he was supplied with liquor, or when he came in. He would call evidence in support of this, and, under the circumstances he asked for the Bench to dismiss the case, or if they were satisfied that the case was made out, to inflict a light penalty.

Defendant deposed to having kept the house for thirteen months, and to having kept a house at Staleybridge for eight years.

Joseph Slimm, James Allcock (pianist at the house), and Williams (a comedian in the employ of defendant), gave evidence as to Latham being sober, Allcock stating that he was 'rationally sober.'

The Bench said they considered the case proved, and fined defendant 40s and costs in the first case and dismissed the other charge. Latham was fined 15s for being drunk on the premises."

"Alfred Thomas Newman, of Blackheath, was charged with assaulting Sarah Cole, on the 9th inst, by striking her in the eye, in the HANDEL HOTEL. Complainant said she did not wish to press the case against defendant, who was courting her, and they had made it up. Defendant was ordered to pay costs."

County Advertiser 12/5/1894

"Joseph Fletcher, of Blackheath, was charged with being drunk and disorderly on the licensed premises of the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath. It was alleged that on the 4th inst defendant visited the house, and after being served with refreshments, became very violent, used bad language, and refused to leave when requested by the landlord. Defendant said he was not drunk, and the disturbance was caused by a navvy who was there, and who had had seven pints while defendant was there, making, he said, seventeen pints during the day, while defendant only had half a pint.

There was a further charge against defendant of being drunk and disorderly in the Halesowen Road, Old Hill, at 10-45, on the same date. Defendant had been twenty-one times convicted previously. He was fined 5s and costs, in each case."

“.....On turning to leave the building the retiring audience is confronted with a wide open door leading into the tap room of the HANDEL HOTEL. The exit into the street down a narrow staircase soon becomes congested, so that the people are almost forced through the door, which is immediately near the top of the steps.

This is such an objectionable feature of the building as no licensing authority ought to allow. It is enough – yes, too much – that the vendors of the greatest enemy of the moral and spiritual life of men should be allowed the privilege by law to keep open their establishments on the Sunday, without being given the liberty to offer any other allurements. This desecration of the Lord's Day is a scandal and an offence to Godfearing people, and, if allowed to continue, will have a most demoralising effect on the younger generation.

Thanking you in anticipation, I am, yours sincerely, S. H. G. Bates, Holt Road, Blackheath.”

“Rowley Regis Urban Council.

The Clerk reported that a letter had been received from the Blackheath and District Free Church Council, calling attention to the fact that in a room known as the Hippodrome at Blackheath, where performances were held, there existed a door leading directly into the tap room of the HANDEL HOTEL. This door was thrown wide open during the performances, thus creating a great temptation to the persons visiting it, the majority of whom were boys and girls. The stairway leading into the street was very narrow, and consequently easily overcrowded. The temptation to go immediately from the Hippodrome room to the public house had therefore increased. They regarded this as a serious menace, not only to the young people but to the churches. They were therefore strongly opposed to increased inducements of the character referred to, and they requested the District Council to bring pressure to bear upon the licensing justices with a view of refusing the renewal of the license. The letter was signed by the Rev. J. S. Jones and Mr. E. E. Whitehouse on behalf of the Free Church Council.

The Chairman said this was a matter of great importance, and one which he thought should be referred to the licensing justices.

There was no doubt that some promise was made with regard to the doorway when the license was granted.

Mr. Tibbetts said all the publicans would desire a similar privilege.

Mr. Harris said he was one who inspected the Hippodrome premises, and he was under the impression that there was to be no communication between that place and the public house. He was staggered when he found that it was open for public amusement. He did not know whether the place should have a license.

Mr. Hadley said he was another of the committee who inspected the place, and they came to the conclusion that if a crowd assembled on the room floor it would swamp it.

The Chairman remarked that the Hippodrome had had a very bad effect upon Blackheath. It was disgraceful that they should be able to carry on a place of amusement so close to a public house, and allure people, or practically push them, into the public house.

Mr. Hadley proposed that the letter be forwarded to the licensing justices.”

“An important decision concerning the presence of children on licensed premises during opening hours was made by Old Hill magistrates yesterday.

Summonses against Albert Rose, manager of the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, licensee, for allowing children under 14 years of age to be in the bar, were dismissed on the grounds that they were in a room adjoining the bar, and that while there was consumption of intoxicating liquor there was not actual sale there.

Police-sergeant Perkins said he found in a room adjoining the bar about 40 women who were either drinking or had beer in front of them. Three women each had a child in her arms.

The manager said the room was not licensed, and no money was taken in the room, the customers fetching their own beer from the bar.

In cross-examination the witness said he saw notices to the effect that it was a children’s room.

Alice Young, aged 33, of 41, MacMillan Road, Blackheath, summoned for giving beer to her 14-months-old child, was warned and ordered to pay costs, 7s 6d.”

The HANDEL HOTEL gets a mention in a murder trial in 1933 – see under CALIFORNIA.

Birmingham Daily Gazette 22/11/1934

“A protest against the granting of a public house license to a man already engaged in other work was made by an outgoing tenant at Old Hill yesterday. Application was made by John Jones for the temporary transfer to him of the HANDEL HOTEL, Blackheath, from Walter Edmunds.

When asked if he had any objection to the transfer, Edmunds said, ‘I think there should be an objection. This man is at work, he is also a pensioner, and now he wants another job as well. I don’t think it’s fair for one man to have two situations while another has to go on ‘the labour.’ This house does plenty of trade – quite sufficient to pay a wage to allow a man to stop away from other work.’

After Supt. Elliott had said that Jones’s character was quite satisfactory, and he could not offer any objection, the magistrates granted an interim license.”

“Fixed Wheel Brewery is just days away from opening its new micro bar in Cradley Heath. The HANDLE BAR, on Cradley Heath High Street, will be the award-winning brewery’s second micro-bar. Based on Long Lane in Blackheath, the brewery also runs the WHEELIE THIRSTY micropub on Halesowen Road, Old Hill. It has spent tens of thousands of pounds completely gutting and transforming the former PRESLEY'S BAR in Cradley Heath. The bar, which will be a live music venue hosting local bands on Saturday nights, is all set to open to eager punters at noon on Friday (August 27). It has a capacity of 120 inside as well as an outdoor beer garden and is creating five new jobs.

Penny Birks, manager, said, 'It looks fantastic. We've been doing the work for a couple of months now and the transformation is amazing. I'm really excited about it. The way things have been going with the WHEELIE THIRSTY micropub being busier than ever is great. As soon as we reopened everyone came back in floods. We will see how the live music goes at the HANDLE BAR on a Saturday and if there's demand we may do other nights with live music as well.'

The brewery is owned by semi-professional cyclist Scott Povey. The record-breaking time trialist successfully combined his two greatest passions to create Fixed Wheel Brewery. The brewery has gone from strength-to-strength winning multiple awards. It sells beers from its website at fixedwheelbrewery.co.uk and its tap room is open to the public every Friday from 4pm – 10pm and on Saturdays from 11am till 10pm. A micro-bar which it opened on Lye High Street, unfortunately closed before lockdown. The HANDLE BAR will open from Thursdays to Sundays from noon till 11pm. It has ABK lagers, ales, ciders and gins as well as other spirits. Fixed Wheel beers are on offer along with a selection of guest ales."

Dudley and District News 29/7/1882

“Thomas Price, HAND OF PROVIDENCE INN, Park Street, Cradley Heath, was summoned that he being a licensed victualler did unlawfully permit drunkenness upon his licensed premises. Mr. Warmington, Dudley, defended.

PC Rowlands said about 7pm on the 10th inst he and Titherley visited the defendant's house, and saw a man named Levi Stevens drunk in the taproom. They called the landlord's attention to him, and he was eventually led out.

For the defence Benjamin Tromans, chainmaker, said he remembered the police officer coming in on Monday the 10th inst, and saw Levi Stevens there. He was not supplied with drink by the landlord, but witness and his friends gave him three or four glasses. The landlord's wife ordered Stevens out, and in about five minutes after he came in again, and about ten minutes after the police came. Stevens was neither drunk nor sober, but he had had a 'drop.'

Cross-examined by Superintendent Wollaston: The landlady ordered Stevens out before the police came. She said, 'Now Stevens go out; you have had enough.'

The Bench said there was not the least doubt that the man was drunk, and they would find defendant 2s 6d and costs, or in default seven days.”

The following is the black list, and in each of the cases the licenses were suspended till the adjourned licensing meeting Beerhouse Keepers. . . .

Thomas Price, HAND OF PROVIDENCE, Park Street, Cradley Heath, permitting drunkenness, fined 2s 6d and costs.”

Dudley and District News 30/9/1882

“This being the Old Hill adjourned licensing sessions the Bench granted a renewal of the licenses which were suspended at the last annual general sessions. The Chairman stated that the magistrates had very carefully considered each case, and they had decided to renew the licenses on the understanding that some assurance was given on the part of each defaulter, that their respective houses should be better conducted in the future. The Bench were determined that the law should be enforced, and if the defendants were guilty of any further offence against the Licensing Laws they would be severely punished and their licenses forfeited. The Chairman added that Henry Heath, who was convicted for selling ale during prohibited hours on Sunday, was now taking out a six days' license instead of a seven days', and his license was renewed on that condition; and if any of the others wished to have six days' licenses the Bench would be pleased to grant them."

"Thomas Price, landlord of the PROVIDENCE INN, Holly Bush Street, Reddal Hill, was charged with having on the 22nd ult sold ale in a garden, he not being authorised to do so by his license. Mr. E. M. Warmington (Messrs. Warmington and Thompson, Dudley) appeared for the defence.

Police-sergeant Hayward stated that he went into the garden, which adjoins defendant's house, and found the defendant and a number of other men there, sitting round a table. On the table was a number of glasses and two quart jugs, and underneath was a large stone jar. Defendant admitted supplying the beer, but said he was not paid for it there. The men were all drunk.

In cross-examination Hayward said he did not know that the men who were with the defendant worked for him. Did not know who the land belonged to.

Police-constable Cartwright was called in, and gave corroborative evidence, and added that his attention was called to men in the garden by some neighbours, who complained of the conduct of the men. He cautioned defendant previous to the visit of Sergeant Hayward.

Mr. Warmington, in defence, said he thought the Police had been made use of by some neighbours close by who wished to persecute defendant, and another unfortunate thing was that it occurred on the day after jubilee day. Not until the day mentioned in the charge had benches been placed in that garden, although the men had gone into the garden on previous occasions to drink their ale. His client, however, was prepared to promise that no one should go into the garden any more, as it was really no advantage to him.

The Bench said the least fine they could inflict was 10s and costs.

Mr. Bassano said that such questions as these in the licensing laws ought not to be played with."

County Express 8/12/1888

"Benjamin Darby, anchor smith, Holly Bush Street, Cradley Heath, was remanded for a week on a charge of doing bodily injury to Daniel Woodhall, shackle maker, on the 24th ult.

Inspector Walters stated that on the date named complainant and defendant were drinking together in the HAND OF PROVIDENCE INN, Holly Bush Street, when they began a quarrel. They went outside and defendant struck, bit, and kicked complainant, breaking two ribs, discolouring one eye, and bruising other parts of his body.

Bail was allowed, defendant in his own recognisance of £50, and two other sureties of £20 each."

Dudley Mercury 12/1/1889

"At the Rowley Police Court, on Wednesday, before W. Bassano, H. T. Hickman, and H. A. Wiggins, Esqs, Benjamin Darby, anchor smith, Holly Bush Street, Cradley Heath, was charged with inflicting grievous bodily harm upon Daniel Woodall, shackle smith, Cradley Heath. Mr. W. Waldron defended.

Complainant said he met the defendant in the HAND OF PROVIDENCE INN, Holly Bush Street, Cradley Heath, between five and six o'clock at night. Defendant asked witness to drink with him, but witness refused. The defendant began to grumble because witness would not drink with him, and said, 'That's the — way is it?' Witness was sober when he went into the house. His wife came in and had share of beer, and some words took place between him and the defendant. When he got up to leave defendant said, 'Go Dan, and God bless thee.' He went round the partition, and the defendant struck him. Witness went into the yard, and finding the door locked he had to climb over the gate into the street, and remained there until his wife came out through the house. Defendant then came up to him, struck him on the eye, knocked him down, and got on him and punched him on the head and face. Witness was taken into the house, and the defendant went away. Shortly afterwards he went to Preston's, and finding that his money was lost, went back to look for it in the street where he had been down. While he was looking for his money, he heard a woman say, 'Here he is, Ben; come out and give it him again.' The defendant then came out and struck him on the side of the head and mouth as he was stooping for his money, he was knocked down, then kicked by some one, but he could not tell by whom, because he could not see. The defendant had something on his hands when he struck him. He was kicked under the mouth, on the ear, and in the ribs, and was rendered unconscious. When he came to his senses he was held by his wife, and was taken home and put to bed. The doctor came to see him on the 3rd. He was in great pain, and there were twelve cuts on his face. Dr. Standish attended him for a month, and he was in bed for a fortnight.

In cross-examination witness said he did not strike the defendant back over the partition. When he went to look for his money he did not go to the defendant's entry and fall down on his ribs.

Mr. Waldron: Did you not say in Stanley's what you would do to the defendant on the following Monday?

Witness: I said I should not work until I had satisfied myself. I wanted to know what he did it for. He has been sneering me for some time in the works.

Sarah Ann Woodall corroborated.

A boy named Preston, residing in Holly Bush Street, Cradley Heath, said he saw the defendant kick the complainant in the ribs whilst he was on the ground in Holly Bush Street.

Joseph Danks, groom, Cradley Heath, said he saw defendant strike the complainant in the eye, knock him down, and then kick him in the ribs twice and fall upon him. The defendant punched the complainant about the head and face with some iron rings.

Witness asked the defendant on his doorstep what he had done it for, and he said, 'I'll give it the — up the ribs; I've given him what he asked for.' Defendant then showed witness the iron couplings on his hands.

James Smart, signalman, corroborated.

Dr. Standish, Cradley Heath, said that he was called to see the prosecutor on the 4th, and on examining him found several marks about the face. He had two black eyes, and the under lip was cut nearly through, and one of his teeth was knocked out. He also had two fractured ribs on the right side of the body, and several bruises. The ribs might have been fractured by a kick or a fall on a step.

Police-constable Hinsley said that when charged defendant said, 'All right, I will go with you quiet if you will not put the hand-cuffs on me; I am very sorry this has happened. I heard this morning that he was dead, but I think he is acting it a bit. If his ribs are broken I am very sorry. He walked home afterwards. He must have broke his ribs going home. I never kicked him. I only struck him once in the face, and I was obliged to do that to keep him away from me.' When at the station defendant said, 'I did not kick him; he must have fell against the step.'

The Bench said they would deal with the case themselves.

Mr. Waldron said that that would relieve him of a great amount of difficulty, and the question was whether his client kicked the prosecutor in the manner alleged. He would satisfy the Bench that it was a public house brawl.

The Bench said that it came to this, that if it had not been for the ribs being fractured it would have been a public house brawl and fight, but the excessive injury made the case one of aggravated assault.

Mr. Waldron said the defendant had been seriously injured either by a kick or by a fall on to some steps. He had told the defendant that he ought to make some compensation to the prosecutor for the injuries he had received, as he had no doubt suffered a lot of pain, and would also lose a month's wages. The defendant had a good character. On the day in question there was a quarrel in the public house, and the complainant was locked in the yard by the publican on account of his conduct. The complainant got over the wall or gate, and he and the defendant had a fair stand-up fight. About an hour after this the complainant went to the defendant's entry and challenged him to fight, and said he would knock the defendant's neck in. A fight took place and the complainant was knocked on to a stone step by the defendant.

William Billingham said he was in the HAND OF PROVIDENCE with the defendant on the night in question. Woodall came in, and after a time got to high words with Darby, and the landlord put Woodall and his wife into the back yard. No blow was struck in the house.

Arthur Tromans, chainmaker, said that he saw the complainant near the defendant's entry cursing and swearing and using threats towards the defendant, saying that he would break his — neck. The defendant came down the entry, and Woodall struck him. They began to fight, and Woodall was knocked on to a step by a blow given by the defendant. Darby did not kick the complainant.

Kate Male, Springfield, James Homer, and Ann Homer, Spinners End, corroborated.

The Bench said that it was a very serious case, and they had some doubt as to whether they should deal with it or not. They would give the defendant the benefit of any possible doubt as to the falling on the step, but a most serious assault had been committed upon Woodall. Defendant would be fined 20s and costs, or one month's imprisonment. They would have fined him 40s and costs had it not been for the costs being so exceptionally high, the costs amounting to £4 13s 6d. The case lasted nearly four hours."

"Benjamin Price, landlord of the HAND OF PROVIDENCE INN, Holly Bush Street, Cradley Heath, was summoned under the Child Messenger Act for supplying a child under fourteen years of age in a bottle which was not properly sealed. Mr. G. Williams defended.

PC Lawson deposed that on the 11th inst he saw a girl named Phoebe Ann Whittle, aged eleven years, coming out of defendant's house with a bottle in her hand containing half-a-pint of ale. The bottle was neither corked nor sealed. Witness took the child back to the house, and asked the landlord how he accounted for supplying the child. Defendant replied, 'I have got no labels; we are out of them. I am very sorry, and if you will overlook it I will see that it does not occur again.'

Mr. Williams pointed out that the girl was served by defendant's son, a lad of twelve years of age, and the girl appeared to be over fourteen years of age. He asked the Bench not to inflict a fine.

The Bench said the defendant had left the house in charge of the lad, and he must suffer the consequences. A fine of 20s and costs (13s 1d) was imposed.

For sending the child for beer, Sarah Ann Bennett, of St. Luke's Street, Cradley Heath, was fined 5s and costs."

"Ambrose Hower, Dudley Wood, was charged with refusing to quit the licensed premises of the HAND OF PROVIDENCE INN, Holly Bush Street, Cradley Heath, and also with being drunk and disorderly in the highway. Benjamin Price, landlord, stated that defendant was in his house, and was using bad language. He requested him to leave. He refused to do so, and the police were sent for. PC Donillan went to the house, and the defendant left. In answer to Inspector Hodgkinson, witness said defendant was not drunk, it was his bad language. He had been in his house six or seven hours. PC Donillan stated that he saw defendant in Price's tap room in a drunken condition. He staggered out into the street, and attempted to obtain drink in another house lower down. Defendant, who denied being drunk, called several witnesses, who corroborated his statement. For refusing to quit he was fined 10s and costs, and for being drunk 15s including costs."

"Benjamin Price, landlord of the HAND OF PROVIDENCE INN, Holly Bush Street, Cradley Heath, was summoned for permitting drunkenness in his house on the 8th ult. Mr. J. W. Clulow prosecuted, and Mr. S. Ward defended. Police-constable Donellan stated that on the night in question, between nine and ten o'clock, he visited defendant's house in company with Police-constable Foulkes. They saw a man named Ambrose Homer, of Dudley Wood, sitting by the fire in a drunken condition. They saw the landlord, who said he had requested the man to leave several times, but he had refused to go. He had also sent to the Police Station, but no one was there, and he was just going again for an officer. The man was very disorderly, and used bad language. He was ejected, and he then went to the HOLLY BUSH INN, where he was refused drink. Police-constable Foulkes corroborated this statement, and the landlord of the HOLLY BUSH INN also gave evidence of the drunken condition of the man. For the defence Mr. Ward said it was a most extraordinary case. Homer was quarrelling with some other men in the house, and creating a disturbance. Defendant ordered him to leave the house on several occasions, but he refused to go. He also sent to the Police Station, but no assistance was received from them. Immediately after the police called Homer went to see Drs. Mitchell and McKay, who both tested him, and considered he was perfectly sober, and bore no signs of recent intoxication. Evidence was given in support of this statement. After a lengthy hearing the Bench considered defendant had taken all reasonable steps to prevent drunkenness, and dismissed the case."

"The annual licensing sessions for the Old Hill Petty Sessional Division were held on Wednesday, at the Police Court. The renewal of the license of the HAND IN PROVIDENCE INN, Holly Bush Street, Cradley Heath, was also deferred until the adjourned sessions."

County Advertiser 12/3/1904

"On Wednesday, the adjourned annual licensing sessions for the Old Hill Petty Sessional Division were held at the Police Court. The renewal of the HAND IN PROVIDENCE INN, Holly Bush Street, Cradley Heath, was objected to on the ground that the landlord had been convicted under the Child Messenger Act. Mr. G. Williams appeared for the landlord. The justices renewed the license."

"Friendly Societies' Parade. On Wednesday evening the committee of the above met at the PLOUGH AND HARROW INN, Mr. W. Coley presiding over a large attendance. The following was a complete list of those boxes which contained amounts of 1s and upwards. Mr. B. Price, HAND OF PROVIDENCE, 12s."

Tipton Herald 7/8/1909

"When returning from a drive on Wednesday night, Mr. Ben Price, of the HAND OF PROVIDENCE, Providence Street, met with an accident. As he was nearing home the horse stumbled on a piece of Rowley rag and came down, the result being that Mr. Price was thrown heavily to the ground. He sustained slight injuries to the forehead. He was attended by Dr. Kelley, and is progressing favourably."

County Express 16/7/1910

"A meeting of the Parade Committee was held on Wednesday night, at the HAND OF PROVIDENCE, Hollybush Street, when the final arrangements were entered upon. Mr. D. M. Chapman (chairman) presided over a good attendance, and announced that, despite rumours to the contrary, the Rechabites intended joining the parade. It was stated that Miss Anna Bunn had consented to sing at the service. The Chairman said, with regard to lady collectors, the ladies of Christ Church had been approached, and they seemed favourable. The ladies of Graingers Lane church, who rendered such good service last year, had also been approached, and the Rev. J. Pearce had agreed to use his influence. There was no doubt they would get plenty of ladies to help them on the Saturday. It was decided that on the Saturday before the parade there should be variety stalls in the streets adorned with cut flowers, eggs, fowls, etc.

The final meeting of the committee before the parade will be held next Wednesday, at the ANCHOR HOTEL. An air-gun meeting in aid of funds is to be held at the QUEENS HEAD on Thursday.”

“On Wednesday, at Old Hill Police Court, Polly Boswell, a married woman of Holly Bush Street, Cradley Heath, was summoned for taking beer from a public house during prohibited hours, and Benjamin Price, licensee of the HAND OF PROVIDENCE INN, Holly Bush Street, was summoned for permitting the beer to be taken away. Mr. Riley Pearson defended Price.

PC Hall said at 10.40pm on the night of the 12th ult he saw the woman Boswell leave the public house with a jug of beer under her shawl. He asked her who had supplied her, and she replied, ‘Nobody,’ subsequently admitting that it was beer which she had tipped into her jug from the quantities supplied to her. Mr. Riley Pearson admitted the facts, but said the landlord nor his wife did not know anything of the occurrences, the woman having tricked the management. She went into the house and tipped the beer into a jug whilst no one was looking. The woman kept the jug behind her, and if they had a detective in every room they could not prevent that kind of thing. He urged that whilst a proper case to bring before the Court, a conviction ought not to be recorded, because defendant had no knowledge of the occurrence. The Bench agreed with Mr. Riley Pearson and allowed the case to be withdrawn on payment of costs.

Boswell was fined 40s, the Chairman (Mr. C. W. Bassano) characterizing it as a mean action.

Price was summoned for not exhibiting a copy of the Central Control Board’s Order, to which he pleaded guilty, and was fined 20s.”

“On Monday last Mr. Henry Johnson, of the HAWTHORN TAVERN, Blackheath, gave an excellent dinner of roast beef and plum pudding to twenty of the oldest men in the neighbourhood. The combined ages of the twenty amounted to 1,592 years. The oldest was ninety four years. Two conveyances were employed in gathering the party. After dinner they went into a field close by, and enjoyed their pipe and ale till sunset, when, having drunk the health of their kind host, they parted.”

Staffordshire Advertiser 23/3/1867

“At Dudley Police Court on Wednesday, before Mr. S. D. Fereday, Thomas Round, alias Hingley, 31, labourer, Cross Street; Elijah Danks, 37, miner, Dudley Wood; and Mary Ann Price, 44, widow, Cross Street, were charged, the male prisoners with burglariously entering the dwelling house of William Piper, miner, Cinder Bank, and the female prisoner with receiving a quantity of the stolen property. The peculiar circumstances attending the apprehension of the prisoners were stated last week. Round and Price lived together at the house in Cross Street. There were eight charges against the prisoners, but three only were gone into. Mr. Addison prosecuted. The charges proceeded with were those of breaking into the dwelling houses of Mr. Joseph Clarke, furniture and boot and shoe dealer, Sedgley; Mr. Henry Johnson, HAWTHORN TAVERN, Blackheath; and Mr. George Cook, victualler, Amblecote. The property stolen from these places was found in the prisoners’ houses and identified by the owners. Upon being charged by the Bench, both male prisoners emphatically denied any knowledge of the robberies. Round endeavoured to exculpate Mrs. Price. The whole of the prisoners were committed to the Stafford Assizes upon each charge. The hearing of the case occupied four hours.”

[At Stafford Assizes, Thomas Round and Elijah Danks were tried on various charges of burglary, and found guilty; as both men had previous convictions, each were sentenced to ten years penal servitude. Mary Ann Price was found not guilty.]

“An inquest was held on Tuesday last, at the HAWTHORN TAVERN, Blackheath, before E. Hooper, Esq, Coroner, touching the death of Joseph Henry Dingley, aged two years. From the evidence it appears that the deceased followed his mother into a nail shop. A woman named Sophia Johnson threw a ‘caked’ cinder out of the fire across the shop, which struck the child on the neck, and it was so injured that it died on Thursday.

“Staffordshire Summer Assizes.....

James Powell, 26, miner, was indicted for burglariously entering the dwelling house of David Bennett, at Ross, in the parish of Rowley Regis. Mr. Underhill was for the prosecution.

The prosecutor was a labourer, and lived at Ross, Rowley Regis. Late on the night of the 9th of July he went to bed and the house was left all safe. His sons subsequently came in and they left the house safe. Soon afterwards they were awakened by a noise, and on looking out at the window they saw the prisoner standing below with a quantity of clothing near him. They immediately got up and followed the prisoner, and found him at the HAWTHORN TAVERN. Bennett, the parish constable, and Taylor, an officer of the county police, were there and the prisoner was given into custody. On a search being made, several articles of wearing apparel belonging to the prosecutor were found. The prisoner was very violent and struck the parish constable violently with the handcuffs.

The prisoner was found guilty and sentenced to 15 months’ imprisonment.”

“Edwin Payne and Solomon Adams, miners, were charged with being disorderly, and refusing to quit the HAWTHORN TAVERN, Rowley.

Joseph Johnson, proprietor of the house, said defendants quarrelled while in it on the 8th inst, and eventually commenced to fight. He ordered them to leave, but they refused to comply. Defendants pleaded guilty, and were each fined 10s and costs; in default, fourteen days' imprisonment.”

“Solomon Adams, John Adams, William Adams, and James Hingley, nailmakers, were charged with having, on the 10th inst, unlawfully and maliciously wounded William Parsons, with intent to do him grievous bodily harm. Mr. Hayes prosecuted, and Mr. Addison defended.

Complainant said that he resided at Halesowen Road, Blackheath, and on the morning of the above date went to the HAWTHORN TAVERN, at Blackheath. On entering he had ‘something to drink’ with John Hadley, and seeing a companion named Bolton in the adjoining room went to him, and found defendants there also. There was a slight dispute as to whether he (complainant) should drink with them, and at last Solomon Adams struck him. He was knocked down, and the other defendants commenced to kick him; and he was also wounded upon the head by a blow from a poker. A medical man (Dr. Beasley) was subsequently called in, and he sewed up the wound.

Cross-examined: There was not a free fight in the house. He did not break any person's nose.

Thomas Bolton corroborated the evidence of the complainant, and in cross-examination said he did not see the complainant strike Solomon Adams.

Mr. Addison, in addressing the Bench for the defence, argued that the occurrence was no more than a public house scrimmage in which complainant had undoubtedly got the worst of it. He submitted that on the evidence adduced it was impossible the Bench could convict his clients of unlawfully wounding.

Joseph Harris said he was in the HAWTHORN INN on the day in question. He saw a scuffle, and also witnessed an assault committed by the complainant upon William and Solomon Adams. He did not, however, see any poker used during the time he was in the house.

A witness named Hipkiss said that after complainant had challenged to ‘fight any b—— in the house,’ he struck William Adams and knocked him down; and afterwards ‘pitched into’ Solomon Adams by striking him upon the nose.

Cross-examined: He (witness) and complainant were rivet makers and had been on strike, but there was no ill feeling shown towards complainant because he had resumed work.

Other witnesses having been called, Mr. Smith said the Bench considered the case proved, and each defendant would be fined 20s and costs for a common assault. They should also order Solomon Adams and William Adams to find two sureties in £10 each, and be bound over themselves in £20 each to keep the peace for twelve months.

A charge against Edwin Payne, John Hadley, and William Parsons for having refused to quit the HAWTHORN INN when requested so to do, was withdrawn.”

County Advertiser 29/9/1877

“John Hadley, landlord of the HAWTHORN TAVERN, Blackheath, was charged with keeping his house open at an illegal time, on the night of the 22nd ult. Mr. Addison prosecuted and Mr. Hayes defended.

In support of the summons it was stated by Police-constable McGourty that he was on duty near the defendant's house at thirty-five minutes past eleven o'clock. While there he heard a door, which he believed to be that of the defendant's house, opened and closed, and then saw a woman named Mary Siviter coming along the yard from the direction of the public house. He accosted her, asking what brought her there, on which she started to run away. The officer took hold of her, and found she had got a can containing beer, which appeared to have recently been filled, froth being on the top. When he caught hold of the woman she tried to upset the can, and spilt some over his clothes. He took her to the defendant's house, and defendant attempted to say that he had been in bed and knew nothing about it. In conversation he admitted, however, that the can belonged to him.

Cross-examined: Was sure it was the door of the defendant's house that he heard open and shut, and was sure that the woman came from it.

Mr. Hayes asserted that the policeman had committed wilful and corrupt perjury, and that he had ample evidence to establish this. He submitted that the woman Siviter had the ale supplied to her at ten minutes past ten o'clock, and that she left and went to an adjoining house to see the occupier, a Mrs. Ann Webster, who was ill. She left this house after eleven o'clock, and had to pass along the yard where the officer met her in order to get to the street.

Mr. Hayes called the defendant, who swore he shut up his premises at eleven o'clock, and went to bed then. His wife and family had gone before. He was in bed when the policeman came to his house, and came downstairs to admit him without having on his boots, and the policeman waited while he put on his boots.

The defendant's wife, who was afterwards called, gave evidence to the effect that she went to bed at the same time as her husband, and that no one was admitted into the house after eleven o'clock, and before McGourty came.

Sarah Siviter and Ann Webster also gave evidence for the defence.

The magistrates thought they were bound to believe the evidence of the policeman, and fined defendant 20s and costs.

Mr. Hayes asked that the fine should be increased to 40s to give him opportunity to appeal, but the magistrates declined to do so.

The woman Siviter was then charged with having been upon the licensed premises of Hadley during prohibited hours. Mr. Hayes was concerned with the defence in this case also.

Police-constable McGourty repeated the evidence he had given in the former case.

When asked whether he had any question to ask the witness, Mr. Hayes said he had not; he should indict him for perjury.

Mr. Superintendent Woollaston protested against this.

Mr. Hayes: I shall certainly indict him.

Mr. Woollaston: Well, indict him then, and we shall be prepared to meet it.

Mr. Price (inspector of police): It is becoming a perfect nuisance in this court threatening a policeman in this way. It's an abominable nuisance; no policeman gets into the box now but you say you will indict him for perjury.

Mr. Hingley: Silence, silence; these remarks are best not made.

The case ended in the defendant being fined 2s 6d and costs."

"John Hadley, landlord of the HAWTHORN INN, Blackheath, was charged with stealing a dog, the property of Walter Cox. Mr. Cooksey defended.

Prosecutor said that in January he lost a dog, and about the 18th of February, being told by a friend the dog was at Blackheath, he went there to make enquiries, and was told that Mr. Hadley had it. He went to Mr. Hadley's, but he was out. Mrs. Hadley, however, showed him the dog, which he recognised at once. She told him it went there one Sunday. When witness left, the dog, which recognised him, followed him to Mr. Cocking's stables.

The next day he was told that defendant had been to the stables, and taken the dog away.

Charles Cocking deposed to seeing defendant take the dog out of his father's stables.

Mr. Cooksey stated, in defence, that the dog, which belonged to defendant two years ago, went to the house one Sunday, and not knowing whose it was he advertised it. No one owning it, he took a license out to prevent himself being summoned. On the day when prosecutor went to his house, defendant was out, but prosecutor was told by Mrs. Hadley that he could have the dog if he would pay the expenses. He, however, took it away without any offer to do so. Defendant, thinking he had a legal right to the dog, unless the expenses he had incurred were paid, went next day and took it away.

The Bench dismissed the case."

“John Hadley, publican and puddler, residing at Blackheath, was summoned for neglecting to support his wife. Mr. Taylor, relieving officer, said the defendant had been chargeable to the Dudley Union for one week, and his wife’s maintenance had cost 7s 6d. The defendant said he turned his wife out of the house in consequence of her drunken habits. Owing to his wife resorting to drunken habits he had lost nearly all his property.

The Bench ordered defendant to pay 5s a week towards his wife’s maintenance and to pay costs.”

“John Hadley, landlord of the HAWTHORN INN, Ross, was summoned for neglecting to support his wife, whereby she became chargeable to the common fund of the Dudley Union.

The defendant turned his wife out of doors on the 7th inst, and she received 7s 6d from the parish.

Defendant said he turned his wife out because of her drunken habits. She had drunk away five houses that once belonged to him, and was bringing him to poverty.

He was ordered to pay 7s 6d and costs, and to allow 5s a week towards her maintenance.”

“William Windsor was charged with being drunk on the licensed premises of Isaac Mullett on the 25th ult. Mr. Cooksey defended.

Two police officers swore that the defendant was drunk.

Two witnesses were called for the defence and swore defendant was not drunk.

Defendant was fined 1s and costs.”

County Advertiser 21/8/1886

“Isaac Mullett, landlord of the HAWTHORN INN, Ross, Rowley, was charged with assaulting his wife, Elizabeth Mullett, on the 2nd inst. Mr. Waldron defended. Complainant said that on the day in question the defendant threw several buckets of water over her, and dragged her into the yard. Defendant said his wife had taken to drink, and neglected the business, and he was obliged to turn her out, but he denied the assault. Defendant was fined 1s and costs, or seven days.”

County Express 28/8/1886

“John Brown, tobacconist, Smethwick, was charged with, on the 3rd June, unlawfully selling, or offering for sale, a certain quantity of tobacco. Mr. Barradale appeared to prosecute on behalf of the Inland Revenue Authorities, and Mr. Shakespeare appeared for the defence.

Mr. Barradale stated that the defendant was found at Blackheath, calling on publicans and tobacconists with tobacco, which had not been previously ordered. He would in this case ask for a penalty to be inflicted as a deterrent to others, as he was led to believe this practice was extensively carried on in the district.

Mr. J. B. Davies, supervisor of Inland Revenue, stated that upon receipt of certain information, he visited Blackheath on the 3rd June, and found the defendant with a pony and trap, in which he had a black box. Witness watched defendant’s movements, and saw him go into several houses, returning immediately afterwards to fetch a small parcel from the black box. He went to the house of Mr. Isaac Mullett, and after his departure witness had a conversation with Mullett. Following in pursuit of defendant, he finally overtook him, and asked him what he was doing. Defendant said, ‘I am simply delivering orders.’ They returned to Mullett, who identified defendant as the person who supplied him with tobacco. Witness searched the box and found therein twenty-four packets. They had no addresses upon them, and were of various weights. Defendant could not show him an order for any of the parcels, which in all weighed about nineteen pounds. There were also a few cigars, but defendant said these were put in by mistake, as they had not been ordered.

Isaac Mullett stated that the defendant called upon him and supplied him with tobacco. He paid him each time he called, but never gave him an order. In reply to Mr. Shakespeare, witness said that there existed between them an understanding that the defendant was to call, but there was no agreement as to the amount of tobacco to be purchased.

Mr. Hackett, another person upon whom the defendant called, gave corroborative evidence. Witness said the defendant called every week, but the quantity purchased varied according to the business transacted.

Mr. Shakespeare then addressed the Bench for the defence, and said that if the evidence given showed that defendant had been hawking the tobacco, he had committed an offence. Defendant was a respectable man, and had no idea that he was committing a breach of the law. The man had arranged to call every week and supply them with the amount required, and did not go with the intention of bargaining and selling it there. He was a man who thought he was not infringing the law.

The Bench intimated their intention to impose a fine of 40s and costs.

A discussion took place between Mr. Barradale and Mr. Shakespeare, and ultimately, with the approbation of the Bench, it was decided that the amount should be £4, including costs.”

County Advertiser 11/9/1886

“Isaac Mullett, HAWTHORN INN, Blackheath, was summoned by the Dudley Guardians to show cause why he had not contributed towards the support of his wife. Mr. Waldron, for the defence, said there was in connection with the case a question that would have to be considered at some future time as to whether the marriage of the parties was legal, inasmuch as it was alleged that Mrs. Mullett had a husband when she married the defendant. Unless he could prove this he was liable, but as the question would have to be fought out in the future he offered 5s a week. The offer was accepted, and the case was withdrawn on payment of the costs."

"Isaac Mullett, landlord of the HAWTHORN INN, Blackheath, was charged with permitting drunkenness on the licensed premises on the 7th inst.

At half-past seven o'clock on the night in question Police-sergeant Salt visited the defendant's house, and in the tap room found four men sitting at the tap room table. One of the men, David Bennett, was very drunk, and on getting up fell sideways. The landlord was not at home, and the officer called the attention of the landlord's daughter to the condition of Bennett, who, she said, had been supplied with two pints of fourpenny, though there were four of them to drink it. She added that she did not think he was drunk as he had been so quiet, and was always noisy when drunk.

Mr. Forrest, for the defence, said Bennett was sober, and he called Miss Mullett, who said the man was perfectly sober, and reiterated the statement made to the officer as to the amount of drink supplied. The man, she added, was excited when he left the house, but walked straight. She was pressed in cross-examination as to whether she remarked to the police-officer that if he would look over the matter she would never fill the man any more drink, and after some hesitation admitted that she did say this, but explained that her reason for saying so was because she did not want any bother.

Several of the men who were in the house with Bennett were called to speak to the sobriety of the latter at the time in question. One of them named Evans said he knew Bennett intimately, and could tell when he was drunk by his talk without looking at his legs. (Laughter.)

Cross-examined: Would not say that Bennett was quite sober.

Mr. Forrest: No man is quite sober when he has had a pint.

The Bench said they entirely believed the evidence of the police-officer, and had no doubt that Bennett was drunk. They entirely disbelieved the evidence of the witnesses. The case was another melancholy instance of untruthfulness which prevailed in that district. A fine of 10s and costs was imposed."

"The members of Ross Rovers Football Club had their annual dinner at the club house, the HAWTHORN INN, Ross, Rowley Regis, on Tuesday last. Previous to the dinner a most enjoyable game was played on the football field. Dinner was served at three o'clock prompt. Songs, recitations, and readings, rendered by the members, added to the harmony of the evening. The club have played twenty-one matches up to the present date this season, and of this number have won 9, lost 4, and 8 were draws."

"At Old Hill Police Court yesterday, James Southwick, landlord of the YEW TREE INN, Blackheath; Isaac Mullett, landlord of the HAWTHORN INN; Joseph Tromans, landlord of the BOAT INN, Gosty Hill; James Lovatt of the PORTWAY TAVERN, Perris Lake, Rowley; Henry Cooper of the THREE FURNACES, Old Hill; and Joseph Tibbetts, Spring Fields, Rowley, were summoned by the Excise officials for adding sugar to beer after the duty had been taken, between the dates of April 18 and 27.

Mr. Davis stated that the defendants added a quantity of sugar to the beer after the Excise officers had been round and taken the duty. Books were supplied by the Inland Revenue, in which the quantity of sugar and other ingredients used was entered. Upon visiting the defendants' premises it was found that sugar had been added which was capable of raising the standard of ale from what was termed twopenny up to sixpenny.

Mr. Shakespeare, who defended, pleaded guilty to the charges, but pointed out that the defendants were ignorant of the law, and were not aware they were doing wrong. Their object in adding the sugar was to give the beer a 'head,' make it clear and palatable. There was no intention of defrauding the Inland Revenue Office.

Mr. Davis stated that in one case the gravity of the ale was increased from 66 to 77 degrees.

Mr. Shakespeare asked that a nominal penalty be inflicted.

Defendants were fined £20 each, including costs, the aggregated amount of the penalties being £120."

"Moses Phipps, Wagon Street, Old Hill, was charged with assaulting James Payne, bailiff, Blackheath, on the 15th ult. Prosecutor said that on the day in question he was in the HAWTHORN public house, Ross, Blackheath, when the defendant and two others came into the house. One of the number said, 'There's one of the — bums,' and another said, 'Let's go and kill the —.' Thinking there was going to be a row witness got up to go out, and when he got into the passage the defendant struck him several times, and afterwards ran him outside.

Two witnesses named Isaac Cashmore and Isaac Hall gave corroborative evidence. Both witnesses said the defendant and his companions were drunk, and the landlord's daughter refused to supply them with beer.

Defendant denied the charge, and called a witness who said the man who assaulted the prosecutor was named Thomas Bryan. Defendant was fined 2s 6d and 14s 6d costs."

“At the Old Hill Police Court, on Wednesday, before Messrs. W. Bassano and H. A. Wiggin, Isaac Mullett, licensed victualler, HAWTHORN INN, Ross, Blackheath, was charged with making an untrue entry in his brewing book as to the quantity of malt he was going to brew on the 26th August, 1889. Mr. Blake Davis, supervisor, appeared on behalf of the Inland Revenue authorities, and Mr. W. Waldron defended.

Mr. Davis, in opening the case, said the defendant was liable to a fine of £100. On the 25th August he made an entry in the prescribed book that he intended to mash one quarter of malt and fifty pounds of sugar. On the officer visiting the premises and gauging the grains, it was found that there were more than was consistent with the quantity of malt entered.

Thomas Cruickshank, an officer of the Inland Revenue, said the defendant was licensed as a brewer in the parish of Rowley. On the 25th of August he found in the brewing book an entry to brew on the following day one quarter of malt and 50lbs of sugar. No further quantity of materials was entered. On visiting the premises on the 26th, about 1.45 he saw a man named Hadley there, who said, ‘The malt is badly crushed today, and is not gone down.’ He found the grains crushed and level. He gauged them, taking several dips, the average being 13in. From this he was able to tell that there was a much larger quantity of grains present than he had found at any brewery for the quantity of malt. He sent for Mr. Mullett and told him what the brewer had said, and also that he found the grains higher than he had before, and that he should have to report the circumstances to the supervisor. He requested Mr. Mullett to dip the grains in his presence. Mr. Mullett did so, and then asked witness to tell him what it was, as he could not see the figures upon the rod. The dip was 13in 3-10ths. His (witness’s) second dip averaged 13in, and from that he was able to swear the malt used was 1 quarter, 2 bushels, and 4 gallons. He took samples of the grains and sent them to Somerset House. The percentage was 30-6 over. The grains were well compressed. Mr. Mullett then said, ‘You must go and fetch the supervisor to gauge the grains.’ He said he could not do that, but he would remain while they fetched him, and Mr. Mullett then said it was not his duty to fetch him, and started to remove the grains from the mash tub. After this witness took the dimensions of the vessel, and weighed some of the malt, and found it 42lbs to the bushel. Mr. Mullett said the malt had been in his store for six months. He said he had not himself taken the quantity of malt, as that had been done by a man named Siviter. Hadley also said the same. He saw the man Siviter in the evening, and he remarked that he had weighed out the proper quantity, and he prepared to swear it. The total produce was 148 standard gallons. Fifty pounds of sugar would produce 92 gallons. Mr. Mullett asked him to attend a brewing, when he would see that the quantities used on the 25th August were correct. He attended a brewing on the 2nd September, and the entry was to brew the same quantities. He remained on the premises till the mashing up was finished, and till after the grains were drained. Just before the running-off the brewer took an oar and thoroughly stirred up the grains. He gauged the grains, and the average was 12-3. This represented one-quarter one bushel, six gallons. There were twelve gallons less in this brewing as compared with the previous brew. He had been in the revenue employment sixteen years, and for the last nine years had surveyed breweries. The grains on the 26th August could not have been produced from one-quarter of malt.

Cross-examined: He had twenty-one breweries under his supervision at present. The 18th August, 1888, was the first time he ever saw the mash-tub in the brewhouse. He had found nine bushels of grains when there had only been eight bushels of malt. In all instances where a brewer brewed eight bushels of malt and more than eight bushels of grains were found an offence was not necessarily committed. He could give no answer as to the following question in the form it was put, ‘How high can a brewer go with increased grains over malt without committing an offence?’ He had never found ten bushels of grains when Mr. Mullett had brewed eight bushels of malt, but he had found nine, and a gallon over that. He had known a prosecution where there was a percentage of 25. The highest percentage he had ever had was in the present instance, 30-6. The brewing was carried on in a perfectly open way, and there was no attempt in any shape of form to conceal the grains. Practically the grains drained level. They were comparatively dry, and all possible wort had been got out.

Mr. George Sewin, analyst, Somerset House, said the quantity of grains was inconsistent with the quantity of malt. The grains of the 25th of August were mashed with fresh malt extract, and he found thirty-one per cent upon the dry grains. The moisture was eleven per cent. The grains were not fully exhausted such as in a scientific brew. By weighing the malt in a miniature bushel, he found it was forty-two pounds.

Mr. H. W. Davis, analyst, Somerset House, gave similar evidence as to September 2nd.

Mr. Waldron, for the defence, contended that if an offence had been committed it was committed unwittingly. Supposing there was more malt than there ought to have been, there was no knowledge whatever on the part of his client that he was committing an offence. The circumstances tended to show he had no knowledge. There was the entry in the book of the time of the brew, when the grains would be drained and the worts run; and further, his client knew the officer would be coming to the premises. Knowing this, would a man be such a fool, such an idiot, as to put in more malt than entered in the book. He asked the Bench to say a mistake had been made by the officer, and if they said that he would be entitled to a dismissal of the case.

Thomas Hadley, Silas Siviter, and Mr. Garratt gave evidence.

Mr. C. King, brewer, Oldbury, who gave his evidence voluntarily, said he was a practical brewer, and the highest percentage he had known was 25. It was possible, but not probable, to get 30.

The Bench said this was not the first time defendant had been before the Bench, and that influenced them in the amount of the penalty. They had no doubt whatever, after very carefully considering the case, there was an infraction of the revenue laws, and of course intentionally, and they thought it their duty to inflict a fine of £25 and costs.”

“Isaac Mullett, landlord of the HAWTHORN INN, Ross, Blackheath, was charged by William Burton, a cooper, of Langley, with being a fraudulent bailee. Mr. W. Waldon prosecuted, and Mr. Deeley, of Dudley, defended.

The case for the prosecution was that Burton purchased from the defendant brewing utensils, value £4 6s, and an agreement was entered into that the goods should remain on the premises for a week. Before the end of the week the defendant gave the prosecutor notice to remove the goods, as a sale was about to take place, but he did not act upon the notice, and upon going to the defendant’s house on the day specified in the agreement he was told that the goods had been sold and removed.

Mr. Deeley submitted that the charge could not be sustained. The prosecutor was served with a notice to remove the goods, and he did not comply with it.

Mr. Waldron said he was not aware a notice to remove the goods had been given.

The Magistrates dismissed the case, saying that the matter was one for the County Court.”

“Mr. Hadley applied on behalf of the owner for the transfer of the license of the OLD HAWTHORN INN, at Ross.

In reply to Mr. Bassano (magistrate), the owner of the licensed premises said he had ejected the late tenant (Mr. Isaac Mullett), who refused to give his consent to the transfer of the license.

Mr. Mullett said he refused to give up his license as the applicant refused to compensate him, although he had paid for the license until next October.

The Magistrates’ Clerk: But you are not the occupier of the licensed premises, consequently the license is of no use to you.

Mr. Mullett: I shall refuse to give up the license until he compensates me.

The magistrates granted the transfer.”

“On Tuesday morning, Mr. E. Hooper (coroner) held an inquest at the NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill, on the body of Charles Scambler (24), labourer, who committed suicide by drowning on Saturday night.

Hannah Hill, with whom deceased lodged, said he had a very weak intellect. On the 9th inst he came home drunk at 7.30 in the evening, and shortly afterwards a neighbour named Daniel Westwood came in and said deceased owed him 11s. Deceased denied it, and they had a fight. He met his sister outside, and said, ‘Mary, thee come and go with me, the cuts thy doom.’ They heard no more of him till Sunday morning, when he was found in the canal.

Mary Scambler, sister of the deceased, a girl of weak intellect, said at seven o’clock she saw her brother standing at the door of the HAWTHORNE INN with a pint cup in his hand. He asked her to drink, and she did so. He was then drunk and could not stand. He asked her to fetch him some groceries, which she did, and took them to his lodgings.

Daniel Westwood said after he came from work on Saturday at three o’clock, he went to a Mr. Taylor’s public house at Rowley, and had five pints of ale, but did not drink it all himself. He then went home and had some beer and porter, and afterwards went to the HAWTHORNE INN, and had two pints of ale. That was all the beer he had there. He recollected seeing Scambler. He admitted he had rather too much, and was not sober. They did not refuse to supply him with what he asked for. He went to Scambler’s lodgings, and they had a bit of a ‘tussle’ over some money. He heard Scambler say he would destroy himself in the canal.

Phoebe Faulkner said she saw deceased at the door of the HAWTHORNE INN, in a drunken condition.

George Gome deposed to finding the body in the canal, and some of the deceased's clothes on the towing path.

The Coroner said from the evidence, it appeared that deceased was not sober when he was seen at 7.30, and from the fact that his clothes were by the side of the canal he must have committed suicide. His impression was that the drink which had been supplied to him illegally that afternoon was the cause of his death. From the evidence there was no doubt that he had been supplied with drink when he was intoxicated.

The jury returned a verdict of Suicide whilst of Unsound Mind.

The case was watched by Superintendent Woollaston and Inspector Bishop, Mr. Woollaston remarking that the facts would be laid before the Chief-constable."

Birmingham Mail 20/5/1891

"Today at Old Hill Police Court, John Hadley, landlord of the HAWTHORN INN, Ross, Rowley, was charged with permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises, and also with supplying beer to a drunken person on the 9th inst. Mr. Waldron prosecuted and Mr. W. Shakespeare defended.

Mr. Waldron explained that a young man named Scambler, aged 24 years, committed suicide on 9th May as, it was alleged, the result of excessive drinking at the defendant's house. On the day named Scambler left his lodgings at Ross, Rowley, in the afternoon, and at four o'clock went into the HAWTHORN INN. Shortly afterwards he invited his landlady to drink with him, and it was then noticed that the deceased was under the influence of drink. At six o'clock the same day he was seen by another person in defendant's house in a drunken condition.

Hannah Hill, with whom the deceased Scambler lodged, corroborated, and added that the deceased was a man of rather weak intellect.

Mary Scambler, sister of the deceased, also gave evidence of a similar character, and also Daniel Westwood and others.

For the defence, Mr. Shakespeare submitted that if Scambler had not committed suicide there would have been nothing heard of the matter. The man only had one pint of ale whilst he was in the defendant's house.

After some evidence the defendant was fined 40s and costs."

The Relieving Officer said the man was 76, and the woman 73, and they had been chargeable to the parish since April 9th. Defendant was the occupier and owner of the HAWTHORNE INN. He saw the defendant on the 3rd, and defendant said his father and his grandfather had paid rates, and he did not see why the old man should not have something out of them now.

The Defendant: I am quite willing to pay what the Guardians pay to him. He has brought me here to show me up, and he is showing himself up instead.

Mr. Bassano: It's perfectly clear you can't complain of paying, and the only question is what you should pay.

The Bench said they would make an order for the payment of 10s per week.

The Defendant: It's too much.

Mr. Bassano: I don't think they will find it too much."

“Mr. J. W. Clulow made an application for sanction to make alterations at the HAWTHORN INN, Ross, Blackheath, belonging to Messrs. Chesshire Brewery Company Ltd, and kept by Frank Woodall. He explained that the alterations were very necessary. The premises were very ancient in construction, and the room in which the licensee and his family lived was known as the smoke room. There was no private room in the house which the landlord could exclude his customers from. That was very objectionable, and what they proposed to do was to close the smoke room and convert it into a private living room for the accommodation of the landlord and his family. They also proposed to convert a brewhouse into a smoke room. It was also intended to make improvements to the front entrance of the house so as to enable the police and landlord to have better supervision of the house. Superintendent Johnson said he approved of the plans. He considered it would be a great improvement, and would enable them to exercise better supervision over the house.

The application was granted.”

Subsequently defendant called upon Police-sergeant Bentley and told him that he was very sorry for what had occurred whilst he was from the house.

“Army Reservist Thomas Henry Batty, aged 32, of Imperial Road, Blackheath, drew his pension on 1 April and set out to celebrate. At the HAWTHORN INN, Ross Road, Blackheath, he saw his father with a friend, ordered a round of beer and followed it up with a round of double whiskies. Thomas Henry drank his whiskey quickly. His father and friend refused any more, but Thomas Henry called for another ‘double,’ and drank that as quickly as the first. When the landlord, Ernest George Burden, told him that he could have no more intoxicants Thomas Henry became quarrelsome, refused to leave the premises and had to be put out. A few minutes later he rushed back into the bar and the police had to be called.

PS Wright and PC Alexander had to requisition a lorry owing to Batty’s violent behaviour. He was lifted on to it, kicking the sergeant on the cheek during his struggles. The side-board of the lorry was put up but Batty fell head-first into the road, sustaining a deep head wound which knocked him unconscious.

This story was told at Old Hill Police Court today, when Batty pleaded guilty to being drunk and disorderly on licensed premises and refusing to quit, and also with being drunk and disorderly in Ross Road. ‘I did not know what I was doing,’ said Batty to the magistrates.

Sergeant Wright said he did not charge the man with assault because he realised that he did not know what he was doing and he had since apologised.

“Popular sports pub the HAWTHORNS, regularly filled with Baggies fans on match days, has been put on the market. The pub, in Blackheath, was popular with fans on their way to watch home matches. It is going up for auction with SDL Bigwood at the end of the month. The pub has also played host to regular appearances from some of the biggest local names in sport including darts player Jamie Hughes who is appearing at the pub tonight.

Landlady Kerry Poole said, ‘It’s with a sad heart that we’re leaving the pub as it’s being sold off. We absolutely love it here and don’t want it to go but we don’t have much choice. We’ve really enjoyed the time spent here and all the new people we meet but it’s time for us to move on.’ The 36-year-old added, ‘All of our customers want it to stay as a pub if it is sold on because we do have quite a lot of regulars.’

Ward councillor Danny Millard said it would be sad to see his local pub go. He said, ‘The pub is quite popular but unfortunately trade seems to have slowed down. Obviously the building does need to be used as it’s in a nice location but it depends on who buys it and what they want to do with it. I’d like it to stay as a pub.’

The pub is owned by Enterprise Inns. The auction is on February 23 at Aston Villa FC.”

Kerry Poole’s partner was Chris Hughes.

“The HAWTHORNS, in Blackheath, was described as ‘suitable for a variety of alternative uses subject to obtaining any appropriate planning permission’ when it went up for auction with SDL Bigwood on February 23, suggesting that the site could be redeveloped. But new owner Steven Hayer has pledged it will remain a pub so long as it can turn a profit and is supported by the community.

Mr. Hayer, who bought the pub prior to the auction for an undisclosed sum, said he had acquired it as an investment. He said, ‘The plan is to keep it as a local pub with the community’s help. If it can be successful, then that is how it will remain. But obviously, it has to make money to sustain itself. If not, then we will have to look at alternatives.’

Mr. Hayer urged West Bromwich fans to keep using the pub though he does not intend to run it himself.”

“Important Meeting of Colliers at Dudley.

On Monday morning a district meeting, representing forty-five lodges belonging to the Dudley district, was held at the Central Lodge House, SHAKESPEARE INN, New Mill Street, Dudley.

Mr. Joseph Lee occupied the chair, and in opening the proceedings, he said he should have been glad to have met the delegates under more gratifying circumstances, but it appeared that they could not turn back. How long the struggle would last it was not for him to say; in fact, he did not know. It rested with the delegates who represented the men to say what was the feeling of their constituents – whether they were disposed to play on, or go to work at the reduction – (cries of ‘No’). The masters, by their conduct, did not seem disposed to give way, or offer any conciliatory terms; but the men, on the other hand, wanted to have the dispute amicably and honourably settled They had carried on the fight for thirteen weeks.....

The reports from each delegate were then verbally given.....

No.42 Lodge, HEARTY GOOD FELLOWS INN, Old Hill; 123 members. We have passed a resolution to remain out if the strike lasts until 1875. That was our decision without the interference or advice of any of our agents.”

[The consensus was overwhelmingly to remain on strike.]

Dudley and District News 13/5/1882

“At the Old Hill Police Court on Wednesday, before Messrs. W. Bassano and C. Holcroft, William Ball, alias George Keel, Poplar Place, Bridge Street, West Hockley, Birmingham, pearl and stud turner, and John Johnson, 12, Eaton Street, Hockley, pearl turner, were charged with uttering and putting off counterfeit coins representing half-crowns, and one florin, at Old Hill and Cradley Heath, on the 8th inst. On the prisoner Ball was found 8s 9d and five coins, and on Johnson 29s 7½d and two coins.

Joseph Manning, QUEENS HEAD, Corngreaves Road, said on Monday evening last the prisoners came to his house while he was sitting at tea. Ball called for two drinks, and was served by his wife, who called him to look at the half-crown they had tendered for the drink. He looked at the coin and broke it in two. It was bad, and he sent for a police officer, and detained Ball, but Johnson would not stay, and went out because he said he had nothing to do with Ball.

Aquilla Parkes, landlord of the BIRD IN HAND, Spinners End, said Ball came to his house on Monday afternoon about 4.30 and called for a glass of ale, tendering the base half-crown produced, he filled the glass of ale and gave him 2s 4½d back. It rang well on the counter. Ball drank the ale and went out. The next morning a police officer came and asked if he had taken any bad money, and his wife examined the money they took on Monday and picked the half-crown out, it being the only one they took that day. He identified Ball next day.

Susan Harris, wife of Thomas Harris, licensed victualler, CROWN AND ANCHOR INN, Providence Street, New Town, said on Monday Ball came to her house and asked for a bottle of soda water, she had none and gave him a bottle of ginger beer, he tendered her half-a-crown, she gave him 2s 4½d in change and he went out. Next day she found that the coin was bad.

Louisa Nicklin said she was servant to Priscilla Foley, who kept the BRITISH OAK, High Street. On Monday afternoon both the prisoners came to the house and Ball called for a pint of ale. She filled it and Ball gave her half-a-crown which she took to her mistress who gave her change. She was quite sure that Johnson was with Ball. Priscilla Foley said when her servant brought the half-crown and she had given her the change she went into the shop and saw the prisoners standing by the counter. Two more men were with them. When she went into the bar Ball asked for the cup to be filled, and gave her a two shilling piece, she gave him 1s 9½d in change, they did not wait to empty their cup but said they must go so as not to be caught in the rain. Ball and Johnson then left the other men and went out. The two coins she received were bad, and she gave them to the police.

Emma Johnson (14), daughter of Samuel Johnson, the HEARTY GOOD FELLOW, King Street, Old Hill, said she saw the prisoners come into the house on Monday afternoon. Ball called for a quart of ale, she supplied it and Ball gave her half-a-crown in payment. She gave the change, Ball threw the drink down and both went out. Her father wanted some change and she took it to Chances for sixpences.

Hanna Webb, barmaid at Mr. John Foley's, the SWAN INN, Old Hill, said the prisoner came into the house and Ball asked for some ale and tendered her half-a-crown, she took the coin to Mrs. Foley and gave Ball the change. Hannah Foley said Hannah Webb brought her a half-crown which she put in her pocket with the other money. The same night she gave it to a police officer. PC Litherly said he was sent for to the QUEENS HEAD, Corngreaves Road, on Monday and received the half-crown produced, from Mr. Manning, who said in the presence of Ball, that he had received it from him. He took Ball into custody, and he at first gave the name of George Keel, Hart Yard, Hatton Garden, London, and said it was not half-a-crown but a two shilling piece which he gave. PCs Litherly and Lawrence proved receiving the base coins produced from the witnesses.

Inspector Walters said on Monday the prisoner Ball was brought to the station and gave the name of George Keel, Hart Yard, Hatton Garden, London. He declined to give any reference, and said witness might enquire about it. He took him to Birmingham to the detective department, where he saw detective Baker, who called Keel by his right name, and said, 'How do William Ball.' He then went to Ball's address in Bridge Street, West Hockley, and on going into the house he found the prisoner Johnson lying on a screen, he then gave the name of George William Hobson, No.13, Eaton Street, Abbey Fields, Hockley. He told him he would be charged with being in company with Ball the previous day at Old Hill, and passing counterfeit coins. He replied, 'I know nothing at all about it.' He searched him and found £1 9s 7½d all in small coins. He told him he would have to go with him to Old Hill, when he became very violent, and rushed to the table to get a knife, but he put the handcuffs on him and brought him to Old Hill. He was present in the office when Ball was identified, and he might add that he went to Eaton Street, Hockley, but no such person as the prisoner Johnson was known there.

Honor Chance, wife of John Chance, 2, King Street, underground manager for Messrs. Hingley, said she changed half-a-crown for Emma Johnson on Monday afternoon. Emma came and told her that it was a bad half-crown, and took it back.

Eliza Johnson, wife of George Johnson, publican, KINGS HEAD, Elbow Street, said four men came to her house on Monday, and Ball asked for half-an-ounce of tobacco and a pipe, and gave her half-a-crown which she changed. PC Rowlands came at night, and she found the coin was a bad one.

Mr. Henn, Cradley Heath, said PC Litherly showed him three half-crowns which he examined and found to be bad. They were made principally of lead. PC Rowlands also showed him four half-crowns, and one two shilling piece which were counterfeit. The half-crowns were all from the same mould, dated 1875, and plated.

Prisoners were remanded to Stafford to appear on Wednesday."

[At the Staffordshire Quarter Sessions, William Ball (32) and John Johnson (27), both button makers, were each sentenced to twelve months, Ball pleading guilty.]

"At the Old Hill Police Court, yesterday, Henry York, miner, of Elbow Street, Old Hill, was charged with unlawfully wounding William Harper on Monday last. Mr. Waldron defended.

Evidence was given by Police-inspector Bishop and Police-constable Insley to the effect that on Monday night some men, who were under the influence of drink, were at the HEARTY GOOD FELLOW INN, when they became disorderly, and were requested to leave. As they refused they were ejected, and when outside York struck the prosecutor on the forehead with a broken portion of a jug, inflicting terrible injuries, and causing prosecutor to lose a large quantity of blood.

For the defence evidence was called showing that a scuffle took place on the premises, in the course of which the jug came in contact with prosecutor's face. The charge was reduced to one of common assault. Defendant was fined £3 and costs."

AND

"Henry York, miner, Elbow Street, Old Hill, was charged with assaulting William Harper, on the 7th inst. Mr. W. Waldron defended.

Complainant said that on the day in question he went into the HEARTY GOOD FELLOW, and went into the kitchen. After remaining there some time he went into the bar room, and he heard a noise in the kitchen. He went into the kitchen, and the son of the landlady asked him to assist him in getting the defendant out. In doing so defendant struck him with a broken cup on the forehead, inflicting two wounds, which bled very much. Witness was unconscious, and had to be taken to a doctor.

Cross-examined: He did not know how long the defendant had been there. There was a band in the kitchen, and a man named Patrick made a collection for them. He did know that Patrick spent the money in drink, and witness did not say he was the 'chucker out.' It was not during the struggle that he got the blow. Defendant was drunk.

Thomas Johnson, son of the landlady, said the defendant wanted to fight, and he asked the defendant to leave, which he refused to do. Witness asked Harper to assist him, and whilst he was doing so the defendant struck him with a cup. Mr. Waldron said it was one of those unfortunate quarrels through drink. The defendant had been in the house some hours, and a collection was made for the band, but instead of the money being given to the band it was spent in drink. This commenced the row, and in the struggle the complainant was struck. The Bench inflicted a fine of £3 and costs, and the doctor's bill, or twenty-eight days."

"Martha Johnson, landlady of the HEARTY GOOD FELLOW INN, King Street, Old Hill, was charged with permitting drunkenness on her licensed premises, on the 7th inst. Mr. W. Waldron appeared for the police, and Mr. Tanfield defended.

Mr. Waldron said that the case was one in which the licensee had shown great want of carefulness. The facts of the case were that a man named Henry Yorke went into the tap room of defendant's house. A gallon and a half of beer was on the table. Yorke saw a man named [David] Harper there, who asked him to pay for a quart, which he did. He afterwards went away, and on returning found Harper there still. An altercation took place some time after over some money collected for a band, and an assault took place. Harper went to the police station, and he was then very drunk. He (Mr. Waldron) need not point out to their Worships the increase of drunkenness of late, probably due to good trade, but beyond all doubt the publicans were parties to it, winking at men getting drunk in their houses. He asked the Bench to inflict a substantial penalty.

Henry Yorke, miner, Elbow Street, Old Hill, was called and gave evidence bearing out Mr. Waldron's statement. Inspector Bishop said that Harper came to the station about 6.30, and he was in a drunken condition. Witness then visited the HEARTY GOOD FELLOW in search of Yorke. He went into the tap room and found Harper drinking from a pint cup. He left the house and visited it again at eight o'clock in company with Police-constable Insley. They found Harper, who was drunk, still on the premises. He called the attention of Mrs. Johnson to the fact, and she said she was very sorry.

Police constable Insley corroborated.

Mr. Tanfield said they admitted that the police found a drunken man in the house, but claimed that no drink was supplied to him in the house, and urged that the house had always been well conducted.

The Bench considered the case proved, and after remarking on the increase of drunkenness fined defendant £5 and £2 0s 6d costs."

"Old Hill. The Licensing Session for the division was held yesterday.....

Police-inspector Bishop reported that there were 163 license-holders in the division. Thirty-eight transfers had taken place since last licensing meeting. Five licensed victuallers and four beerhouse keepers had been fined, and 403 persons had been charged with drunkenness, three of whom were discharged. Mr. Bassano (presiding magistrate) said The report for the year was not at all satisfactory, as it reflected discreditably upon the licensed victuallers. He pointed out that it was becoming a very serious matter to have an increase of 138 cases of drunkenness in one year. All the licenses would be renewed with the exception of..... Martha Johnson, of the HEARTY GOOD FELLOW INN, Old Hill."

"Adjourned Licensing Sessions.....

Mr. Waldron applied for the renewal of the license of the HEARTY GOOD FELLOW INN, Old Hill, to Martha Johnson, who had been fined £5 and costs. He stated that the applicant had kept the house for twenty-five years, and during that long period only one complaint had been made against the house. The police would admit that since the conviction the house had been well conducted. The renewal was granted."

AND

County Advertiser 27/9/1890

"Adjourned Licensing Session at Old Hill.....

Martha Johnson, of the HEARTY GOOD FELLOW, Old Hill, came up, and Mr. Waldron appeared for her. He said that she was an old lady, and had kept the house for five years, and during the whole of those years there had been no complaints against her or her house. On the 25th of April last she was summoned for permitting drunkenness, and was fined in a good sum, but the license was not endorsed. That showed that the magistrates who tried the case did not consider there had been a great fault committed. She promised through him to conduct the house in the future in a way that would meet with the approval of the police. Since that conviction the house had been visited several times, and no complaints had been made, so that he now asked for the license to be renewed. Inspector Bishop corroborated Mr. Waldron's statement as to the way the house had been conducted, and the application was granted."

"Yesterday, at Old Hill Police Court.....

ness on her licensed premises on 25th ult, and was fined £10 and costs, and the license endorsed; in all £12 2s 6d. There was a previous conviction.”

AND

“Martha Johnson, landlady of the HEARTY GOOD FELLOW, Old Hill, was charged with permitting drunkenness on her licensed premises on the 20th ult. Mr. Waldron prosecuted and Mr. Ward defended.

Mr. Waldron said at 10.40 on the night of the charge Police-constables Insley and Lewis saw two men come out of the house drunk, and they then visited the house of the defendant. In the bar there were about a dozen men, half of them drunk, their names being Bridgwater, Hackett, Simeon Johnson, Daniel Johnson, Thomas Willetts, and Thomas Fletcher. The landlord’s son saw the officers come in, and he caught hold of Daniel Johnson, and took him out into the back yard. Simeon Johnson and Willetts were staggering about the bar. Each of them had a cup on the table, and they drank beer in the presence of the officers. Hackett and Bridgwater were sitting down, and had cups containing ale before them out of which they drank. Insley went into the kitchen, and was followed by Fletcher, who asked Insley to have something to drink, and ordered two glasses of beer, saying, ‘Drink up and have some more.’ The officer declined. The landlady was an old lady, and she referred the officers to her son Tom. The officers went and saw the son, and he said, ‘They’ve had a lot to drink, but they’re not drunk. Bridgwater has been in about two hours, and the others have been in about the same time also. It’s nearly eleven o’clock, and they won’t get much worse.’

Police-constable Insley gave evidence in support of this statement, and said that the son of defendant told him that since the last conviction he had tried to conduct the house properly.

Police-constable Lewis corroborated.

Mr. Ward, addressing the Bench for the defence, denied that the evidence for the prosecution was of such a character as to conclusively prove the charge of drunkenness. He reviewed the evidence given by the police with regard to the state of the persons individually, and remarked that it was very contradictory. He was in a position to bring independent testimony to prove emphatically that the men named by the officers were perfectly sober.

The defendant’s son, Thomas Johnson, said there was a disturbance in the house, but he denied that it arose out of any drunkenness, and stated that it was in consequence of a dispute about a girl whom one of the men present was courting. All the men were sober. He did not ask the officers to overlook the matter.

Cross-examined: He didn’t take Daniel Johnson out to the back of the premises; and repeated that the men in question were sober. Several other witnesses were called to show that the men were sober.

The Bench said they were of opinion that the men were drunk, and a fine of £10 and costs would be inflicted, amounting in all to £12 12s 6d. All the men were ordered to pay the costs for being drunk.”

County Advertiser 29/8/1891

“The annual licensing sessions for Rowley Petty Sessional Division were held last Wednesday.....

The magistrates said they were pleased to learn that there had been a decrease in the drunken cases. They then proceeded to consider the ‘black list’.....

Mr. Waldron applied for the renewal of the license of Martha Johnson, the HEARTY GOOD FELLOW INN, who was fined £5 and costs on the 23rd of April, 1890, for permitting drunkenness, and on the 6th of May this year £10 and costs, and license endorsed for a similar offence. He said it was proposed to apply shortly for a temporary permit on behalf of John Perks. There was nothing against the applicant’s character beside the two convictions.....

In the case the of beerhouse of Martha Johnson, of the HEARTY GOOD FELLOW, Old Hill, the Bench were informed that there was to be an application for the transference of the license to a man named Perks, and this would be adjourned also.”

“Old Hill Adjourned Licensing Sessions.....

Mr. W. Bassano said the only case in which they proposed not to renew the license was in the case of the CROSS INN, Old Hill.....

Mr. Ward asked if all the other licenses were granted without any special application being necessary. Mr. Bassano said this was so. Of course they had, in the exercise of their discretion, thought there were several cases in which they might reasonably withhold the license, and the Bench had had a long discussion that morning before coming into Court as to whether they should do so in the case of a man fined £10 and costs. However, they had decided to grant the whole of the licenses this year, and they gave an intimation that in future the Bench would deal very stringently in cases of conviction under the licensing laws, both as regards the amount of fines and endorsements, and in the cases of endorsements they would deal more stringently. In plain English, this meant that a person with an endorsement against the house would in future have a very small chance indeed of getting his license renewed. They hoped the licensed victuallers and other licensed persons in the district would take a warning from that.”

“On Tuesday morning last another of those deplorable mine accidents, which unfortunately have lately been of such frequent occurrence in this and the adjoining counties, took place at Rowley Regis, by which no less than nine lives have been sacrificed, and many persons severely injured. The scene of the catastrophe was the coal pit of Mr. Dudley, situate in the above parish. It appears that the men descended as usual to their work at six o'clock on the morning of the accident, and having distributed themselves through the mine, commenced operations. Thirteen of them, however, were occupied in one part of the workings, and at about half-past six o'clock two of the number, for some purpose not yet ascertained, went into other side works, one having a lighted candle in his hand, and immediately after a terrible explosion took place. The two unfortunate men who so incautiously proceeded without the safety lamp and six others were killed, and their bodies found dreadfully burned in various parts of the mine. The other five men were much burned and otherwise injured, and one of them, a young man named Edwards, died the following day. As soon as the occurrence became known, Mr. Horton, of Dudley, the field surgeon, and Mr. Atkins, of Rowley Regis, were in immediate attendance, and rendered every possible assistance. This morning, Mr. George Hinchliffe, Esq, coroner, of West-bromwich, commenced an inquiry at the HEATH TAVERN, Cradley Heath, on the bodies of Daniel Worrall, aged 31, and Joseph Edwards. After swearing in the jury, the coroner adjourned the inquest, to afford time to communicate with the Secretary of State; and he appointed Friday next for the re-opening of the inquiry. At the same time another inquest was held at Daisy Bank, King-swinford, before Mr. Phillips, coroner for the district, on six of the bodies, but the result cannot be known this evening in time for the express by which this leaves. The most interesting inquiry, however, will be that held next week, as a Government Commissioner will no doubt be in attendance.”

“On the 19th inst, at Cradley Heath, after many years' severe affliction, borne with great resignation, deeply regretted by her family and friends, aged 54, Mary Ann, beloved wife of Mr. Tobias Hingley. She was an affectionate and tender mother, a kind neighbour, and a friend to the needy.”

Wolverhampton Chronicle 20/8/1851

“An inquest was held before G. Hinchliffe, Esq, coroner, at Mr. Tobias Hingley's, the HEATH TAVERN, Cradley Heath, Rowley Regis, on Saturday last, on view of the body of James Henry Hingley, aged two years, the only son of Mr. Henry Hingley, of Cradley Heath. The mother of the deceased had been brewing in a brewhouse which was separated from her house by a yard or fold. She left on the brewhouse floor a tub of scalding wort, and went into her house, and shortly afterwards missing the deceased, made inquiries of her servant where he was, but not receiving a satisfactory answer she went into the yard to look for him, and not seeing him there she looked in the brewhouse, and there saw him in the scalding wort; she instantly pulled him out, but he died in a short time afterwards, being most dreadfully scalded. The jury found a verdict 'that the deceased was found scalded in a tub of wort, which caused his death, but how he got there there was no evidence to show'.”

Tobias Hingley was also a chain manufacturer. [1854], [1861], [1864], [1865], [1872]

Birmingham Journal 13/12/1856

“On Monday evening in the lodge room of Mr. Tobias Hingley, HEATH TAVERN, Cradley Heath, Mr. C. F. G. Clarke, of Dudley, delivered to a numerous auditory, and interesting lecture on 'England's Greatest and England's Glory.' The lecture was much applauded. Mr. H. F. Hudson, surgeon, occupied the chair. At the close a vote of thanks was awarded Mr. Clarke.”

Worcestershire Chronicle 5/1/1859

“On Friday evening, the Coroner, Mr. G. H. Hinchliffe, Esq, held an adjourned enquiry at the HEATH TAVERN, Cradley Heath, on the body of Mary Ann Hingley. The deceased was twenty-four years of age, and was married in May last. The husband, it appears, has treated his wife in a very barbarous manner, and in consequence of his been seen to ill-use her a short time previous to her death, the relatives of the deceased demanded an inquest, which was held on the 20th of December, when a post mortem examination of the body of the deceased being thought desirable, an adjournment took place till Friday last, when the jury again assembled. The deceased was buried the day following the post mortem examination, and a 'scene' took place at the funeral, which is rarely witnessed when the dead are consigned to the grave. A tumultuous crowd assembled in the churchyard and attempted to push Hingley into the grave where the remains of his wife had just been deposited. At last the police had to protect him, and finally Hingley, to save himself from the effects of Lynch law, took to his heels and ran away. Witnesses at the previous examination stated that they had observed the deceased beaten and ill-used by her husband. On one occasion he bent her over the nail-block in his shop, striking her at the same time a violent blow on the mouth. The medical evidence showed that obstruction of the bowels had been the cause of death. The jury returned a verdict of Died from Natural Causes, and expressed a wish that the deceased's husband should be reprimanded for his inhuman conduct. The fellow having been fetched, the coroner administered a severe reprimand to him.”

Tobias Hingley was also a chain, trace and small coil manufacturer. [1860], [1868], [1870]

“Yesterday evening a public meeting was held at the house of Mr. Hingley, the HEATH TAVERN, Cradley Heath, to consider what steps should be taken in order to procure a reduction in the price of gas. Some six weeks ago a meeting was held to consider the same question; and then, after some discussion, and adjournment was agreed upon. At the adjourned meeting a deputation was appointed to wait upon the directors of the Cradley Heath Gas Company, to represent to them the feeling of the meeting, and to ask them to reduce the price of gas. The price at present paid is 4s per 1,000 cubic feet, to consumers of above 25,000 feet per quarter; 5s to consumers of from 10,000 to 20,000; and 5s 6d to consumers of less than 10,000 feet. The deputation was instructed to ask the Gas Company to reduce the price of gas as follows: the minimum price to be 2s 6d per 1,000 feet, and the maximum to be 2s 9d per 1,000 feet. The meeting held yesterday evening was to receive the report of the deputation, and there was a numerous attendance. Mr. Green was called to the chair.

The Chairman briefly explained what had been done at the previous meetings, and urged that it was highly desirable, in order to carry out the objects which the gas consumers had in view, that they should be unanimous in their proceedings. He called upon the deputation to present their report.

The report was as follows: ‘At a meeting of the directors, held on the 29th ult., the deputation waited upon themThe reply of the directors was, ‘We cannot entertain the proposed reduction in price of gas at present; but as soon as the price of coal is settled, in January next, we will consider the question and let the consumer know in the course of next month (January).....’

Mr. Chandler (one of the deputation) being called upon, stated that the directors received the deputation very courteously, and after some considerable discussion, the Chairman (Dr. Moore) said that the directors had ascertained that they could not make gas at less than 3s 4d per 1,000 feet, and that did not include working expenses. The speaker went on to say that it was known that the Gas Company were supplying gas to the British Iron Company for 2s 9d per 1,000 [The price of gas in Walsall was stated to be 2s 6d per 1,000].....

Mr. Chandler suggested that the meeting should not come to a definite decision until the reply of the Gas Company should have been received. He moved a resolution to that effect. Mr. Grainger seconded the motion.

Mr. Homer moved as an amendment, ‘That all the gas consumers be requested to decline payment of their accounts until the decision of the company should be made known.’

The Chairman said that before such a motion was passed, they ought to raise a fund to indemnify any who might be subjected to legal proceedings. Mr. Homer said he was prepared to submit to any results which might take place. (Cheers.)

The amendment having been seconded, was, on a vote being taken, carried by a majority of 26 to 9.

The remaining business had not terminated when our reporter left.”

“On Monday morning last, the colliers’ club, to the number of 60, assembled at the old-established and well-conducted house of Mr. Tobias Hingley, the CRADLEY HEATH TAVERN. Shortly before ten o’clock in the morning the Spinners End Band, conducted by Mr. W. Bennett, of Cradley Heath, played through the streets to the tavern, where the members were awaiting their arrival. A procession having been formed, headed by the band, paraded the streets to Cradley Forge, Cradley Park, to the Methodist Chapel, where they were met by Mr. Bluck, who preached a most impressive sermon, taking for his text, the 44th verse of the 24th chapter of Matthew. ‘Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the son of man cometh.’

After the service the members proceeded to the CRADLEY HEATH TAVERN, where a first-rate repast was sat down to. Ample justice having been done to the good things provided, Mr. Elisha Wood proposed the health of the Queen, observing that England was proud of her. Nobody of persons more respected her than the colliers of Cradley, and may she live long, and God bless her. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. James Dimmock, in a neat speech, proposed the health of The Prince and Princess of Wales.

After dinner the members adjourned to the garden at the rear of the house, and all seemed to have made up their minds to enjoy themselves, which they did. In the afternoon, the members, headed by the band, paraded the streets, and having played some favourite tunes, returned to their club house.

This society, which is a most useful one, has been established six years last January. There is at the present time nearly £100 in hand, and during the year many new members have joined. The whole proceedings passed off most pleasingly, and reflected the greatest credit on Mr. Hingley, the respected host.”

Stourbridge Observer 2/6/1866

“On Saturday last, the 26th ult, an inquest was held at the HEATH TAVERN, Cradley Heath, before E. Hooper, Esq, Coroner, on the bodies of John Merriman and James Elcome, who came to their death on the Tuesday night previous by drowning in the New Pool.....

Mr. Enoch Gould: I am a draper by trade, living at Cradley Heath. I knew John Merriman and James Elcome. They were in my employ as assistants. Merriman was 18, and Elcome was 17. The bodies the jury have seen are the bodies of John Merriman and James Elcome. On Tuesday night last from half past eight to nine, I heard that the two deceased were drowned in Cradley Pool. I saw them alive at half past seven the same night. They were in the shop when I saw them. I closed the shop about seven. I knew they were in the habit of going to the pool as I have seen them there. I was at the pool on Tuesday night when Elcome was taken out. He was quite dead and cold.

Jethro Nicholson Lally: I am draper's assistant in Mr. Barker's employ, Cradley Heath. I knew Merriman and Elcome, the deceased. On Tuesday evening last I went on the Cradley Pool in a boat, and had been there an hour when they came. When they came I was just leaving the boat. As neither of them could row they asked me to row them. I repeatedly told Merriman to sit in the centre of the boat. When I told him the last time he said he would not sit there and stepped over my arm and got into the stern of the boat. I requested him to return to his former position. He said, 'I shan't.' The boat was then sinking stern foremost. When I saw the water coming over the boat I threw myself into the water. When I came to the surface I found both the deceased in the water, and the boat capsized. I had hold of the boat and said to them 'save yourselves'. No one came to us for upwards of ten minutes. Oliver's son came first. When I got to the side of the boat Merriman grasped me, and to escape his grasp I dived into the water and came up on the other side of the boat. The boat is capable of holding three. I have often seen three persons in it, and did not think it dangerous.

By the jury: Elcome was in the stern and Merriman next to him. I think we might have had assistance sooner. They shouted twice and I shouted repeatedly. We were in the water full five minutes before assistance came. The boat did not leak. There were no angry words passed between the deceased and me; neither was there any sparring.

Oliver Hindmarch: I am anchor smith by trade. I live at the Pool. There are boats kept there, and I look after them for the gentlemen who own them. I have no boat of my own. I have the liberty of letting out boats for hire. I let a boat on Tuesday evening to the last witness about eight o'clock. I was in the pool house when I saw the boat had been upset, and the last witness holding on. I went to them the moment I saw them. I pulled the last witness into my boat, and took him to the boat house. I then took drags and searched for the other two. They were both dead when they were got up.

By the jury: I make boats. The water was 24ft deep where they went down. The boat the young men had belonged to Noah Hingley. I was not a minute in going across to them. The young man last examined was quite capable of managing the boat. It is a fact that there was a boat with four men in near them when they upset. The boat the four men were in was a light one and they were perhaps afraid either of the deceased would lay hold of it and capsize it. None of the boats belong to me; neither did I ever own one.

After a little consultation the jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death, and wished to append thereto a request that great caution be used in letting out boats.

At two o'clock the same day, the two deceased were buried in one grave in the Four Ways churchyard, and so dense was the number of spectators that a path had to be forcibly cleared for the funeral procession.”

Stourbridge Observer 21/7/1866

“On Monday, some 50 colliers, who form a club held at the HEATH TAVERN, met at one o'clock in the large room and arranged themselves in due order before several legs of mutton, and a very large piece of beef, and a tremendous supply of peas and potatoes to which they did, as may be supposed, the most ample justice, and freely exchanged after dinner jokes. The afternoon and evening were spent in harmonious fellowship, and at the close it was generally observed by those present that they had had a jolly good feast.”

“On Thursday evening a number of the relatives of Mr. H. Hingley, now of Hingley House, Wollaston, but late of this place, met together at the HEATH TAVERN, and partook of a first rate repast. After the removal of the cloth, Mr. Barzillah Hingley, senior, was voted to the chair, and Mr. Alfred Taylor, HF, to the vice chair. Songs, toasts, &c, were indulged in freely, and the utmost conviviality was manifest. The heath of the guest, Mr. H. Hingley, was drunk with musical honours, and duly responded to; and a most enjoyable evening was afterwards spent.”

“An enquiry was held on Friday evening, the 15th instant, at the HEATH TAVERN, touching the death of a boy named William Smith.

From the evidence adduced it appears that on the Thursday previous the boy complained of having a sore mouth. The servant intending to give him a little magnesia, reached out unknowingly a packet containing arsenic, and marked poison. Of this he partook, and she also drank some. Soon after it was discovered that a fearful blunder had been made, and medical aid was called. The poor fellow however died in a few hours; but the servant has recovered from the effects of her poisonous dose. The jury returned a verdict of Accidentally Poisoned.”

“The Watering of High Street. On Thursday evening, a meeting of tradesmen and others, residing in High Street, was held at the HEATH TAVERN, Cradley Heath, to consider the advisability of making arrangements with the Local Board for watering of the above street during the summer months. Mr. Standish occupied the chair. During the meeting it was explained by Mr. G. Green that the cost of watering would be defrayed only by those who shared the benefit, so that only those residing in High Street would be called upon to share the cost. Ultimately a committee was appointed to wait upon the Local Board to ascertain the probable cost of the undertaking, and to confer with the Board respecting its being carried out.”

“On Tuesday morning, the washerwoman employed at the house of Mr. Isaac Attwood, potato merchant, was surprised to find that her mistress did not get up at the usual time. She waited till about ten o’clock in the morning, and then went to her mistress’s bedroom to ascertain the cause. She there found Mrs. Attwood and her son, a boy of four years of age, foaming at the mouth, and to all appearances dead. An alarm was raised, and Mr. Standish, surgeon, was soon in attendance. Despite his endeavours, the boy died in the evening, and the mother continued to lie in an unconscious state all the day. She, however, eventually regained her consciousness, and is now slowly recovering. The inquest on the body of the boy was held at the HEATH TAVERN, yesterday afternoon. After hearing the evidence, the Jury returned a verdict of Accidentally Killed by Gas.”

“On Thursday afternoon, the HEATH TAVERN, High Street, received a visit from a cow belonging to Mr. Thomas Attwood, which was being driven down the street. The animal suddenly rushed into the passage, and, as only one of the half-doors was open, her body was jammed in the narrow space and she was unable to extricate herself. After the landlord’s son had given her a blow or two on the head with a poker, a rope was procured and she was pulled into the street. Her visit frightened some of the inmates and she knocked a hole into the large pane of glass.”

"Joseph Yardley, miner, of Cradley Heath, was summoned on a charge of having assaulted John Mantle, miner, Quarry Bank, on the 4th inst, at the HEATH TAVERN, Cradley Heath.

The evidence of the complainant was to the effect that when at the HEATH TAVERN in company with some companions on the day named he missed his pocket handkerchief from his pocket, and subsequently spoke to the defendant about it when he (Yardley) seized him by the throat and attempted to throttle him and also otherwise assault him. Fined 20s and costs or twenty-eight days.

Samuel Fletcher was then charged with stealing the handkerchief above referred to from Mantle. It was alleged that the defendant took the handkerchief from Yardley. Ultimately the charge was dismissed.

Benjamin Shaw, Joseph Yardley, Samuel Fletcher, and Thomas Hasbury were severally charged with being drunk and disorderly and refusing to quit the HEATH TAVERN, on the 4th inst, when requested to do so by the landlord.

From the evidence adduced it appeared that a general row took place in the house and that defendants, although repeatedly told to leave, refused to do so, and continued the disturbance.

Shaw and Yardley were fined 10s and costs each, in default twenty-eight days' imprisonment; and Fletcher and Hasbury 2s 6d and costs, with the alternative of fourteen days' imprisonment."

"A meeting of the creditors of William Woodhouse, nail and chain manufacturer, High Street, Cradley Heath, was held on Wednesday at the HEATH TAVERN INN, Market Place, Cradley Heath. There was a large attendance of creditors, and Mr. Samuel Cave, boot and shoe manufacturer, was voted to the chair. Mr. J. Wright, of Cradley Heath, appeared on behalf of the debtor.

Mr. Wright read the statement of accounts which showed the liabilities to amount to £901 9s 6d, and the assets on the 2nd of December – the day on which the petition was filed – amounted to £265 17s 6d.

Mr. Wright explained that since the petition had been filed a portion of the debtor's goods had been sold by auction, and the debtor had also received some of the accounts, but as he had not been able to see the debtor in consequence of his having left the district, he could not say for certain what the accounts really were, but he thought they would be at least £90. Mr. Homer said he should have been glad if the debtor had been present, as he had some very important questions to put to him. He had, however, been informed that he had left the town. He trusted that steps would be taken to prosecute him. The Chairman strongly complained of the debtor's conduct, and considered that he ought to have put in an appearance. Mr. Wright said he was unable to offer a composition, and the meeting decided upon liquidating the estate. Mr. Wright was appointed solicitor to the estate, and Messrs. Cave and Perterhall trustees."

"Mr. Sheridan attended at the HEATH TAVERN, Cradley Heath, for the purpose of receiving deputations from his constituents residing in the Cradley Heath district.

The first deputation was headed by Mr. Barford, who urged Mr. Sheridan to take steps to induce the Postmaster General to order an extra delivery of letters, and also to make Cradley Heath a head office instead of a branch office. It was explained that Cradley Heath was a district in the parish of Rowley Regis, and contained a population of about 15,000 persons, and required attention at the hands of the Postmaster General. Mr. Sheridan promised to carry out the wishes of the deputation.

Mr. Cave and Mr. Thomas Bowser waited upon Mr. Sheridan and asked him to take steps to obtain the ballot in Local Board and Guardians' elections, and also that the parish of Rowley should be divided into wards. Mr. Cave said under the present mode of conducting elections – the distribution of voting papers – many irregularities were allowed to take place, the result being that the Liberals of the district could not have their fair share of the representation. Mr. Sheridan pointed out to Mr. Cave that the returning officer was responsible for the manner in which the elections were conducted. Mr. Cave said Mr. Bassano was the returning officer at the Local Board elections, and the tactics resorted to made it impossible to return Liberals on the Board. Mr. F. Coley urged that something should be done to alter the present mode of voting. Mr. Sheridan said it was intended that the ballot should be extended to Local Board elections. Mr. Cave urged that a stipendiary magistrate should be appointed for the Rowley Petty Session district, and also county magistrates holding Liberal views. Mr. Sheridan said he would bring the matter before the proper authorities."

"The Black Diamond Friendly Society had their annual dinner at the HEATH TAVERN, Cradley Heath, on Whit-Monday. Upwards of fifty members sat down to table. The Secretary's statement of accounts showed a balance of over £180 in hand. Songs and toasts by various of the members added to the enjoyment of the evening."

County Express 12/9/1885

"On Monday an inquest was held at the HEATH TAVERN, Cradley Road, respecting the death of Sarah Ellen Darbey, aged eleven weeks, the daughter of Walter and Eliza Darbey, who died suddenly on the 3rd inst.

It was shown that the deceased was seized with a fit, and died before medical aid could be obtained.

The Coroner remarked that there was a possibility that the child's life might have been saved had the people thought to have put it in a warm bath. It was astonishing to him that people were so thoughtless, and he had no hesitation in saying that in the Black County the lives of many children was lost through persons not using that discretion they ought to.

A verdict of Died from Natural Causes was returned."

Birmingham Daily Post 1/10/1894

“At Bow Street Police Court, London, on Saturday, William James Ring, Arthur Shaw, and Thomas D’Aubeny were charged on remand, before Mr. Vaughan, with being concerned together in keeping a common betting house at 18, Grays Inn Chambers, Holborn. Mr. Blanchard Wontner prosecuted on behalf of the Commissioner of Police. Mr. Besley appeared for Ring, and Mr. Travers Humphreys and Mr. Temple Martin defended the other men. D’Aubeny was not placed in the dock, it being understood that he would be called as a witness for the prosecution.

Evidence was given to show that Shaw was the tenant of the chambers in which the betting was carried on, and that Ring was his principal reference.

A clerk from the Chancery Lane Branch of the London Joint Stock Bank stated that in January of this year Ring opened an account there in the name of Bradbury and Co. The account was now closed, the manager not being satisfied with the working of it. John Templeton, now an omnibus conductor, stated that two years ago he acted as clerk to Ring, who was then carrying on business in Chancery Lane as a betting agent. Shaw acted as clerk. The business was carried on in the name of Hanson and Co. When the business was transferred to Grays Inn Chambers in the name of Bradbury and Co. witness went there, and addressed circulars relating to betting. The books were kept by Shaw, who also opened the letters when he was the first to arrive at the office. In reply to Mr. Besley, witness stated that the initials of Ring’s father were ‘J. C.’ it being contended that he and not the prisoner Ring gave Shaw the reference which enabled him to take the premises in Holborn.

Mr. Wontner read a very lengthy letter from Ring to Shaw when the latter was staying at Hastings. The writer referred to large number of persons with whom he was doing business, and advised Shaw as to how he should deal with the various accounts. He described a man named Walden as a ‘pounder’ because he had only paid £1. He advised Shaw not to let him have another bet if he paid nothing more, as it would be useless to let him get into their debt. Referring to his own pecuniary position, he said he must consider what ruse to adopt. He said he had better write to a certain lady at Enfield, asking her not to present for a few days a cheque they had sent her, as there would be no money to meet it. There was also a reference to another cheque which he was afraid could not be met. He implored Shaw to get some money for him, as his funds were only four-pence ‘strong,’ and he added that that would very soon be spent in two glasses of beer. He had nothing to pawn, but had, he said, paid a visit to ‘Uncle Gush.’ He advised Shaw to visit the house of a man who had gone away, saying, ‘We ought to get something, if only from his missus.’ Mr. Vaughan: What a revelation of fraud that letter is.

Mr. Wontner: There are other letters of the same sort. You see, they are taking money for bets, and yet have not sufficient money to pay for the postage of this letter. Shall I read the other letters?

Mr. Vaughan: No, that is quite sufficient at present.

The housekeeper at Grays Inn Chambers proved that Shaw and Ring did business there, and Detective-sergeant Nicholls gave similar evidence.

Detective-inspector Hare, of Scotland Yard, produced receipts showing that Shaw paid the rent of the office at Grays Inn Chambers.

Horace Hewatt Hickman, HEATH TAVERN, Cradley Heath, spoke to having, in conjunction with a man named Hingley, sent money to Bradbury and Co. for betting purposes.

Detective-inspector Hare proved finding on the premises when the raid was made a letter from Mr. A. Ingram, of Bow Wood, Wilts, stating that he enclosed 5s to put on Why Not for the Grand National.

Prisoners were remanded until Wednesday.”

[Ring was fined £100 or three months in default, plus £30 or one month with respect to the circulars, plus £10 10s costs; Shaw was fined £50 or two months.]

County Advertiser 26/10/1895

“Samuel Perry, Cradley Heath, was charged with being drunk and disorderly on the highway, on the 12th inst. Mr. A. E. G. Pritchard defended.

Police-constable Wynn said that about 5-30 in the afternoon of the 12th inst, he saw defendant in Bank Street, Cradley Heath, very drunk, and making use of bad language. Defendant's wife, who was with him, was trying to get defendant home. Defendant afterwards went into Foxoak Street, and began to behave indecently. Witness spoke to him about his conduct, and defendant then went home. At five minutes to five previously witness saw defendant in High Street, Cradley Heath, and he was then drunk, but was not making use of bad language.

Cross-examined: Witness did not speak to defendant at five o'clock because he was not disorderly. He did not interfere with drunkards when quiet.

Police-constable Hughes corroborated, and said that defendant was staggering drunk at five minutes to five.

Harry Neville said he was in the HEATH TAVERN, Cradley Heath, and defendant, who was there, asked him to treat him, remarking that the landlady would not serve him.

Eleanor Hickman and Ernest Hickman corroborated.

Mr. Pritchard said the defence was a total denial of the drunkenness. The defendant left his work at 2-30, and upon visiting the HEATH TAVERN got to high words with a man of the name of Yardley. Both men were put out on account of their disorderly conduct. He should call witnesses, who would say that defendant was sober, and he asked the Bench to give defendant the benefit of the doubt.

Defendant was called, and denied he was drunk.

Mary Ann Hadley and Mrs. Perry gave corroborative evidence.

Defendant was fined 5s and costs."

"Horace Hickman, landlord of the HEATH TAVERN, High Street, Cradley Heath, was summoned for selling whiskey which contained 14 per cent of water beyond the statutory limit. In reply to Mr. Waldron, who defended, Mr. Toy (sub-inspector) said he did not see a notice in the room to the effect 'All spirits sold at this establishment are diluted with water according to price and quality.'

Mr. Waldron: Will you swear the notice was not exhibited in the licensed room?

Witness: I say it was not exhibited in clear view of the customer.

Mr. Waldron submitted that the whiskey had not been sold to the prejudice of the customer, because of the notice. After a long legal argument, defendant said the notice was over the jar from which whiskey was taken. His wife broke the whiskey down during his absence. In reply to the Bench, Mrs. Hickman said she had never previously broken whiskey down. The Bench decided to convict, and fined defendant £5 and costs."

County Advertiser 28/11/1903

"Rowland Tromans, of Yardleys Yard, Cradley Heath, was summoned for being drunk and disorderly and refusing to quit the HEATH TAVERN, High Street, Cradley Heath, on the 21st inst. Horace Hickman, landlord of the house, stated that on the date named defendant was supplied with ale, but witness, noticing his drunken condition, took it off him, and ordered him to leave the premises. Defendant refused, and witness had to eject him. Defendant then threatened him in a violent manner, but eventually left when Police-constable Donellan came upon the scene. He was fined 10s and costs for refusing to quit, and 2s 6d and costs for the drunkenness."

"The annual licensing sessions for the Old Hill Petty Sessional Division were held on Wednesday, at the Police Court.

Superintendent Johnson had given notice to oppose the renewal of the licenses of the HEATH TAVERN, High Street, Cradley Heath, kept by Horace Hewitt Hickman, in order to secure the proper conduct of the business upon the premises.

The magistrates adjourned the renewal of the licenses of the HEATH TAVERN, Cradley Heath, until the adjourned licensing sessions, pending the completion of alterations to the premises."

County Advertiser 12/3/1904

“On Wednesday, the adjourned annual licensing sessions for the Old Hill Petty Sessional Division were held at the Police Court.

The Justices then considered the objections to the houses on the black list....

Supt. Johnson explained that the renewal of the HEATH TAVERN, High Street, Cradley Heath, was adjourned until that day for the applicant to make structural alterations to the premises. These were well in hand, and would be completed shortly. The licenses were accordingly renewed.”

County Advertiser 17/12/1904

“An application was made by Horace Ewart Hickman, landlord of the HEATH TAVERN, High Street, Cradley Heath, for sanction to make structural alterations at the premises. Mr. L. Harris (architect) explained the proposed alterations and in reply to superintendent Johnson, said they would make the premises entire self-contained. Superintendent Johnson said there was no opposition to the proposal, as he considered it was a very good improvement. The application was granted.”

County Advertiser 21/7/1906

“A painful sensation was created at the beginning of this week by the sudden illness and death of Mr. Horace Ewart Hickman, of HEATH TAVERN, High Street, Cradley Heath. After midnight on Saturday night Mr. Hickman, who was only 32 years of age, was out in the street, looking quite well. At four o'clock on Sunday morning he roused his wife and said, ‘Fetch me a drop of brandy; I am ill.’ She hurried to do so, but before he could drink it he burst a blood-vessel, and vomited a tremendous quantity of blood. Drs. Tibbetts and Weaver were at once summoned, and all that could be done for the poor fellow was done; but from the first his condition was hopeless, and he passed quietly away at eleven o'clock on Sunday night. He widow is left with two young children, and the greatest sympathy is extended to her in her sudden bereavement. Deceased was a quiet, pleasant man, a native of Cradley Heath, and had held the license of HEATH TAVERN for eight years, having lived there for seventeen years in all. The funeral took place on Thursday afternoon.”

Mr. W. H. Thompson referred to the improvements at the HEATH TAVERN, Cradley Heath, and pointed out that these had not been completed because his clients were negotiating for an extended lease of the premises. They did not wish to carry out the alterations until the lease was extended.

Superintendent Johnson said the accommodation at the house was bad, and it was desirable the improvements should be carried out.

The Bench decided to refer the matter to the adjourned sessions.”

“The enthusiasm engendered by the festivities at Cradley Heath in aid of the hospital funds continues to increase as the week nears its end. Thousands of flags have been used in street decorations and even the most fastidious pleasure seeker is admirably catered for. Last night a mile of pennies in charge of local Boy Scouts was started by Mr. W. Willetts, JP, CC, the chairman of Rowley Regis Council, and Mr. J. H. Griffiths, JP. During the day an ox was roasted outside HEATH TAVERN, High Street, and scores of people purchased sandwiches. At night several jazz bands paraded the streets and merriment continued until a late hour.”

“At the public office, Wordsley, on Monday, Nehemiah Homer, John Morgan, and James Woodhouse, stewards of The Friendly Fellowship of Rowley Regis, were summoned by John Woodhouse, a member of the society, on the following grounds. In December Woodhouse was taken ill; but as the stewards considered his illness had been accelerated by drinking and fighting, relief was refused. While the case was pending complainant paid his subscription, but was subsequently expelled by a rule of the society, which provided that when any member became chargeable through drinking or fighting he should be excluded. The present application was that he might be reinstated. It was contended that he had not become chargeable to the club, since relief had not been offered to him, and was not, therefore, liable to the rule. The bench ordered the complainant to be reinstated with costs.”

“Important Meeting of Colliers at Dudley.

On Monday morning a district meeting, representing forty-five lodges belonging to the Dudley district, was held at the Central Lodge House, SHAKESPEARE INN, New Mill Street, Dudley.

Mr. Joseph Lee occupied the chair, and in opening the proceedings, he said he should have been glad to have met the delegates under more gratifying circumstances, but it appeared that they could not turn back. How long the struggle would last it was not for him to say; in fact, he did not know. It rested with the delegates who represented the men to say what was the feeling of their constituents – whether they were disposed to play on, or go to work at the reduction – (cries of ‘No’). The masters, by their conduct, did not seem disposed to give way, or offer any conciliatory terms; but the men, on the other hand, wanted to have the dispute amicably and honourably settled They had carried on the fight for thirteen weeks. . . .

The reports from each delegate were then verbally given. . . .

No.18 Lodge, OLD BUSH INN, Cradley Heath; 200 members. We have from 20 to 30 men at work at the old rate of wages, and the others are determined to stick until they are offered the old wages. The men at work pay the levy regularly.”

“At the Staffordshire Winter Assizes on Wednesday, before Mr. Commissioner Wills, QC, John Dean, aged 27, horse-dealer, the Thorns, Brierley Hill, and Henry Eveson (on bail), spade-tree maker, the Lye Waste, were charged with uttering counterfeit coin. Mr. Marshall Todd prosecuted on behalf of the Treasury; Mr. Darling (instructed by Mr. Stokes, Dudley) defended Dean, and Mr. Godson (instructed by Mr. Waldron, Brierley Hill) defended Eveson.

There were two indictments, the first against Dean only, and charged him with feloniously uttering and putting off on the 13th January last a certain piece of counterfeit coin, intended to resemble the current coin of the realm.

Mary Jeffcott stated that she lived with her father, a grocer, of Lawrence Lane, Old Hill. Between half-past seven and eight o’clock on the night of the 13th inst the prisoner Dean came into the shop, and asked for a pennyworth of cough lozenges, tendering in payment a 2s piece. She gave him 1s 11d change, and put the florin away in the house, subsequently handing it over to Inspector Walters.

Nehemiah Homer, son of the landlady of the HOLLY BUSH INN, Cradley Heath, stated that Dean came to the house at about half-past eight o’clock on the night of the 13th inst and asked for a pennyworth of rum. He tendered a two-shilling piece in payment, and received the change. After the prisoner had left witness looked at the coin, and having a doubt about its being good rung it. He subsequently handed it over to Police-sergeant Shaw.

Henry Grainger gave supporting evidence.

Police-sergeant Shaw said that on the 13th January he, in company with Police-constable Mountford, arrested the prisoner Dean, and charged him with passing a counterfeit coin at the house of Nehemiah Homer. He replied, ‘I know nothing about it.’

Cross-examined: He was in bed at the time he was arrested. Witness searched the house, but found no bad money.

John Wesley Henn said he examined the coins brought to him by Inspector Walters, and found them to be counterfeit.

Inspector Walters, of Old Hill, deposed that he charged Dean with uttering a bad two shilling piece upon Mary Jeffcott. He replied, ‘I never was in the shop.’

Mr. Todd said this was the case for the prosecution.

The Judge said he hardly saw Mr. Todd’s case. It was alleged that on the same day the prisoner passed two pieces of bad coin.

Mr. Todd replied that it was not necessary to prove more than the passing of one; and he pointed out that the prisoner had passed two within a short space of time.

The Judge said it was very necessary to show that he knew it was a bad coin. He would not absolutely withdraw the case from the jury, but before it went further he must ask them what they thought about it, whether it was safe to convict a man upon nothing else than that upon one day within a short time he had in his possession two bad coins.

Mr. Todd then, with permission of his lordship, called another witness.

Thomas Burgess, landlord of the GEORGE HOTEL, Old Hill, said the prisoner at the bar came into his house about half-past seven o’clock on the evening of the 13th January. There was another person in company with him, and the prisoner asked his companion what he would take to drink. The other man replied that he would take whiskey. Dean then said, ‘Don’t go for too much, or we shall have to go into the silver. They paid 5d for what they had to drink.

The jury then consulted and brought in a verdict of not guilty.”

[The second case (see under WAGGON AND HORSES, Reddal Hill) was then heard and the jury returned a verdict of guilty and they were each committed to hard labour for a year.]

J. Homer issued tokens from here.

“Eli Bloomer, Quarry Bank, was charged with being drunk on the licensed premises of Jane Homer, HOLLY BUSH INN, Cradley Heath, on the 26th ult. Mr. Cooksey defended.

Police-sergeant White and Police-constable Tytherleigh said that on the evening in question they saw the defendant while in a drunken condition go to the HOLLY BUSH INN. The officers went into the house shortly afterwards and found the defendant sitting in one of the rooms with a glass in his hand.

The defendant denied being drunk and called six witnesses who said he was not drunk.

The Bench gave defendant the benefit of the doubt and dismissed the case.”

“On Wednesday morning a large meeting of chainmakers was held in the Salvation Army Barracks, Cradley Heath, Mr. T. Homer presiding. It was reported that Mr. T. Darby, of Old Hill, had sent £5 5s towards the relief fund, and also that the members of the True Albion Society, held at the HOLLY BUSH INN, Cradley Heath, had sent £1. A letter was read from Mr. D. Parsons, grocer, High Street, Cradley Heath, stating his willingness to give 200 packets of sugar – (applause) – and 200 packets of tea. (Loud applause.) Mr. Homer referred to a letter which appeared in the Daily Gazette, and which stated that female chainmakers earned 1s 6d to 2s 6d per day, and men with skill, who would work could earn 20s to 30s per week, and that they were only half as badly off as represented. He (Mr. Homer) said the man who wrote that latter did not tell the truth, and he wished he had to work as long as the chainmakers had for the amount they had been receiving, and then he would know something about it. Some persons were always grumbling, and he thought that man was one of them. The man also wanted the association to make out a balance-sheet to see where the money went to. He (Mr. Homer) would soon make out a balance-sheet if he would pay for them, but Mr. Homer thought if he had been there last week whilst bread was being distributed he would have seen where the money went to. It was decided to play on.”

“Thomas Baker, no fixed abode, was charged with being drunk and disorderly, on the 1st of May, 1888, and also with assaulting Police-constable Wynne, on the 2nd inst. The officer stated that on the 1st of May, last year, he saw the prisoner drunk, at the FIVE WAYS INN, Cradley Heath. He had been turned out of a public house, had broken several jugs, and had thrown a jug at the landlord and a customer. Prisoner had since absconded. On Tuesday afternoon he arrested the prisoner in the HOLLY BUSH INN, Cradley Heath. He had to drag and carry the prisoner, who kicked him several times. Prisoner was fined 2s 6d and costs, or seven days’ imprisonment for the drunkenness, and 5s and costs, or fourteen days’ imprisonment for the assault.

John Stinton, Garratts Lane, Old Hill, was charged with attempting to rescue the last prisoner from the police, on the 2nd inst, and was fined 2s 6d and costs, or fourteen days’ imprisonment.”

“Mr. A. A. Betham (deputy coroner) held an inquest at the HOLLY BUSH INN, High Street, Cradley Heath, on Wednesday, on the body of Lucy Harris (81), formerly residing in Fox Oak Street, Cradley Heath, who died on Tuesday last, from injuries received through falling down on the 26th June.

William Harris, son, stated that deceased had been a very feeble old lady. On the 26th of June she was walking by the Theatre Royal when she stumbled and fell backwards to the ground. Witness and another man assisted to get deceased into the house.

Dr. T. V. de Denne was called in, and he attended her until she died on Tuesday last. The doctor informed him that deceased had suffered from a broken thigh. Deceased had on many occasions fallen down, but had not hurt herself.

Evidence was given by a Mrs. Doods, and Police-constable Maisey deposed to making all the inquiries into the case and finding no suspicious circumstances connected with it.

The Jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

“On Monday morning Mr. H. A. Pearson (coroner) held an inquest at the HOLLY BUSH INN, High Street, Cradley Heath, concerning the death of Francis Horace Blunt, aged one year and eleven months, whose parents reside in High Street, Cradley Heath, who died on the 9th inst, from burns received on the 8th.

The evidence showed that on the 8th the deceased was left in the kitchen playing, when suddenly the assistant at the shop, Sophia Homer, heard screams, and rushing in she saw him with his clothing all in flames. The flames were extinguished, and deceased was attended by Dr. Tibbetts, but he died at 6-30 on the 9th inst.

Dr. Tibbetts stated that deceased had sustained serious burns to his legs, arms chest, and face. He attributed death to be due to the high fever which set in as a result of the burns.

Evidence was also given by Police-sergeant Pitcher and Rosannah Homer, who stated that before he died deceased said he was playing with a piece of string when his clothing caught fire.

The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

Mr. J. W. Clulow applied on behalf of Messrs. Atkinsons Ltd, brewers of Birmingham, for sanction to the re-building of the HOLLY BUSH INN, which is one of the oldest licensed houses in the Cradley Heath district. He pointed out that it was necessary both in the interests of the owners and also the public that it should be re-built. He submitted plans for the re-building of the house, and also for the erection of stabling to accommodate four horses. Mr. Bassano (presiding magistrate) said it appeared to the licensing justices that the restored house would fit in with the general scheme as regarded licensed houses in the district, and that from its position it should remain. The magistrates therefore approved the plans.”

“Daniel Bridgwater, chainmaker, of Foxoak Street, Cradley Heath, was charged with using threats towards Arthur Harvey, landlord of the HOLLY BUSH INN, High Street, Cradley Heath, on the 23rd inst.

Mr. G. Williams, who prosecuted, explained that defendant was annoyed because complainant refused to serve him in his house. On the date in question the defendant threatened him in a very violent manner.

The magistrates bound defendant over to keep the peace for six months.”

“Arthur Harvey, licensee of the HOLLY BUSH INN, High Street, Cradley Heath, was summoned for permitting drunkenness upon his licensed premises, and also for supplying a drunken person, on the 1st ult. Mr. J. Clulow prosecuted for the Chief Constable, and Mr. W. Waldron defended.

Mr. Clulow explained that shortly after nine o'clock on the night in question, Police-constables Bridgwood and Horton visited the public house, and upon going into the tap room they found a man named Andrew Billingham in a very drunken state. At the time the officers entered Billingham was drinking from a cup. Bridgwood spoke to defendant, who said the man had been in the house about half an hour, but had not been served, and one of the customers had given him his cup to drink from. Evidence bearing out this statement was given by Police-constables Bridgwood and Horton.

For the defence, Mr. Waldron admitted that Billingham was drunk, but said he had been in the house about five minutes before the constables came in. The man went to the public house during a rush in the business, but was refused by Harvey, who asked him to leave. Defendant thought Billingham had done so, but later on, when the rush was over, he found that he was still in the house. Another man gave Billingham his cup of beer to drink from before defendant could intervene, and he was in the act of drinking when the constables appeared on the scene. He contended that defendant had taken all necessary precaution to prevent drunkenness, especially as Billingham was suffering from consumption, and to use force in ejecting him would probably have a serious effect. A number of witnesses were called to support.

The Bench, however, considered that insufficient care was used by defendant, and fined him 40s and costs, amounting in all to £4 15s 6d.

Billingham was fined 20s and costs, for being drunk upon the licensed premises.”

Tipton Herald 6/11/1909

“On Monday morning the Coroner, Mr. G. C. Lewis, held an inquest in the HOLLY BUSH INN, Cradley Heath, into the circumstances concerning the death of Sidney Richard Priest, son of Horace Priest, who died at the house of his grandmother, 189, High Street, Cradley Heath.

It appears that on the 27th ult, the child was playing in the kitchen when he upset a pan, which was on the hob, containing melted butter, and a quantity of the liquid went over one of his legs.

Phoebe Bennett, 189, High Street, Cradley Heath, said she was a grandmother of the dead child. On the 27th ult she was engaged in her usual household duties when the boy got on a chair behind her and by some means or other a quantity of melted butter fell on to his leg, which was badly burned. She was advised to dress the wound with olive oil. She did this. The boy cried for half an hour, and then appeared all right and playful. The next day she sent for Dr. Kelly. The child, however, died on the following morning.

Dr. L. F. Kelly said he was sent for after the accident. The child was suffering badly from shock. He called next morning, and the child was dead. The burns were superficial. So far as treatment was concerned, the people in the house did what was necessary.

The cause of death was septic absorption.

Mr. Thomas Pateshall, the foreman of the jury, proposed a resolution of sympathy with the parents and relatives.

Mr. Walter Coley seconded, and the Coroner was asked to forward the message.

The jury returned a verdict in accordance with the doctor’s evidence.”

“The Sessions for Old Hill division were held on Wednesday. Supt. Johnson reported that the number of licenses for renewal was 147, showing a decrease of two alehouses and one beerhouse, dealt with by the Compensation Authority. The Bench renewed the licenses of the WAGGON AND HORSES, Old Hill, the HOLLY BUSH, High Street, Cradley Heath, and the VINE INN, Cradley Heath, but the Chairman warned the holders to be more careful about the manner in which the houses were managed.”

Perks and a brother private are members of a cork club at the HOLLY BUSH HOTEL, Cradley Heath, one of the rules of which is to the effect that when challenged a member has to produce his cork or pay a fine. The two men met at the front, and this is how Perks refers to the meeting, ‘You can tell the boys at the club that I have a complaint from Belgium to lodge against Alf. Grosvenor. I corked him up, but he had not got his cork.’”

“On Tuesday, Mr. Nehemiah Homer, Foxoak Street, Cradley Heath, died at the age of 70. He leaves a widow and a son. Mr. Homer was a retired publican, having succeeded his father as licensee of the HOLLY BUSH, Upper High Street, now re-built and owned by Messrs. Atkinsons Brewery Company. The old house was built by a forebear and it is said the license has been held by members of the Homer family for 200 years, and the son of the deceased is the fifth generation to bear the christian name Nehemiah. In the ‘good old days’ bull baiting took place on the ground on which the present Empire Theatre stands, and there is in possession of the family one of the old bull baiting ropes. Whilst his father was still alive, Mr. Homer was for some time manager of the works of Messrs. Holmes and Hickman, nail and chain manufacturers, Halesowen, and later he was at the firm in Netherton. He retired from the business of the HOLLY BUSH some 11 years ago. The funeral is to-day, at 3.30, at St. Luke’s Church.”

OLD HOLLY BUSH [1845]

Aris’s Birmingham Gazette 12/2/1838 - Advert

“Freehold Steam Engine and Mills, Newtown, Cradley Heath.

To be Sold by Auction, by John Webb, on Monday the 26th day of February inst, at four o’clock in the afternoon, at the house of Mrs. Sarah Bannister, the HOLLY BUSH, at Newtown, near the Five Ways, Cradley Heath, by direction of the Assignee of Joseph Attwood, a bankrupt, subject to conditions then to be produced.

All that recently erected Gun-barrel Boring, Grinding, and Polishing Mill, with Sawing Mill attached, and the Machinery thereto belonging, together with, the Shops and other Buildings; also a high-pressure Steam Engine, 14-horse power, with Boiler, and Fly and other Wheels quite complete, situate at Newtown, in the parish of Rowley Regis, in the county of Stafford, and till recently worked by the bankrupt.

The Works, with a commodious Yard, contain upwards of 500 square yards, and they are capable of considerable extension, or may at a small expense be altered for a Corn or Flour Mill, or any other purpose where steam power in necessary.

A full stream of water flows round the Works, affording an abundant supply thereto.

The Works have been erected with great care within the last 18 months, and the Engine and Machinery are in a very superior working state.

Being surrounded with Gun-barrel and other extensive Hardware Manufactories, of Cradley and Rowley, these Works are rendered a desirable acquisition.

Any further particulars may be obtained upon application to Messrs. Roberts and Crompton, Solicitors, Stourbridge.”

Birmingham Daily Post 14/5/1878

“A meeting of the small chainmakers now on strike in the Cradley and Cradley Heath districts for an increase of wages was held yesterday morning, at the MANCHESTER INN, Four Ways, Cradley Heath. Mr. N. Forrest presided, and stated that he had waited upon two other masters – Messrs. B. Price, Cradley Heath, and Jones and Kendrick, Rowley – and both these firms had promised to pay their workmen according to the advanced list. It was decided by resolution that their men should return to their work at once. The Chairman further stated that no information had been received concerning the difficulty which arose through Messrs. Noah Hingley and Sons, Primrose Hill, Netherton, paying their men at a lower rate than other firms, and they were not in a position to say what steps that firm intended to take. The Secretary, Mr. Price, reported that he had been informed that Mr. William Bannister (employer), New Town, after having promised to pay the advance had refused to do so when his workpeople took in their work. He (Mr. Bannister) had told his employés that he could not give out work only at the old prices, and that he could only afford to give the increase for a little odd work. He (the secretary) also reported that some of the men had taken out work from Mr. Holmes, Halesowen, at the old price list. A deputation was appointed to wait upon Mr. Bannister and also the men who had taken out work at reduced rates from Mr. Holmes. The men, as usual, passed a resolution pledging themselves to remain out on strike until the advanced list was obtained from all the employers.”

“Joseph Dunn, of Quarry Bank, was charged with being drunk and disorderly on the licensed premises of Charles Mills, landlord of the HOLLY BUSH INN, Cradley Heath, and refusing to leave the same when requested, on the 24th instant [sic].

The landlord said that on the night in question defendant came to his house and began to quarrel, taking a piece of meat off another man's plate. Defendant was using very bad language, and witness told him to go away, which defendant refused to do at first.

Witness sent for Police-constable Davies. The latter deposed to defendant being drunk.

The Bench fined defendant 5s and costs, or seven days.”

“On Thursday morning Mr. H. A. Pearson (coroner) held an inquest at the HOLLY BUSH INN, Newtown Road, Cradley Heath, respecting the death of Josiah Nock (54), chainmaker, of Allbut Street, Cradley Heath, who died suddenly on the 12th inst. One of the jurymen summoned (Mr. H. Collier) sent a substitute, but the coroner ordered him to be fetched, and then reminded him that he and the one who came as his substitute had rendered themselves each liable to a penalty of £5.

Phoebe Nock, wife of deceased, stated that her husband had not been in very good health for the past few months, but had been able to attend to his work. On Monday morning he seemed very low spirited and troubled. He returned from work, but could not eat anything at breakfast. Shortly after seven o'clock three young men named James Tibbetts, Ezra Applebey, and James Shaw, who were employed at deceased's shop, were playing in the yard. A traveller called, and beer was fetched and several recitations were given by the traveller, and a man sang. After the traveller left the men were singing for money, when a quarrel arose, and Shaw commenced to use obscene language. Witness went to strike Shaw, but Tibbetts stopped her from doing so. Shaw then picked up some bricks, but Tibbetts caught hold of him, threw him to the ground, and took the bricks off him. Shaw then turned on Applebey and they commenced to fight, but deceased interfered, saying he would not have any fighting there. He went to Shaw and said they ought to be ashamed of themselves, when he fell backwards and immediately expired.

James Shaw, chainmaker, said he was formerly employed by deceased. On the night in question they had a few recitations and songs, when witness used some bad language to Mrs. Nock, who struck him on the mouth. Witness and Applebey were both drunk, and they had a fight, when deceased, who was coming towards them, fell down and expired.

In reply to a jurymen, witness said deceased was not struck at all during the fight. Deceased appeared very excited, but he was not struck.

Shaw gave his evidence in a very careless manner, and the coroner reminded him that it was no laughing matter on such an occasion.

Benjamin Moore, residing in Allbutt Street, stated that he helped to pick deceased up, and he was then dead, but Dr. Tibbetts was sent for. He was quite sure that deceased was not struck.

Dr. Tibbetts said he was called at 7.45pm to deceased's house. He had since made a post-mortem examination of the body, and attributed death to syncope, accelerated by excitement on the night of the fight.

The Coroner said it was a sad sequel to a drunken brawl.

The jury returned a verdict of Death from Natural Causes.

One of the jurymen said the way in which Shaw gave his evidence was very unsatisfactory, and he was deserving of censure.

The Coroner, on the jury's recommendation, administered a severe reprimand to Shaw, and said he had given his evidence in a very careless manner, and had treated the matter more as a joke. He should disallow his expenses. A jurymen remarked that Shaw had acted in a very callous manner.”

"From photography to pottery and music to murals, organisers are promising something for everyone at this year's Cradley Heath Arts Festival. The fifth annual free community arts festival, organised by Cradley Heath Creative, takes place on Saturday, June 8. Four different venues – the HOLLY BUSH Arts Pub, the Art Yard Gallery, Haden Hill Park and Cradley Heath Library – will host an exciting mix of exhibitions, events and practical workshops. It will be the first time photography has featured at the event, thanks to a collaboration between Cradley Heath Creative and Blast! photo festival. The HOLLY BUSH will be the hub of the event, hosting drop-in workshops for solar powered photography, stop-motion animation, embroidery involving photography, portrait painting and creative writing. It will also host viewings of the results of an open competition for three-minute films made on mobile phones. These events will run alongside expressive ballet workshops led by Elisha Willis, former Prima Ballerina at Birmingham Royal Ballet, as well as pottery and mural painting. The HOLLY BUSH will also host the 'Comedy Caravan' and Cradley Heath Creative's famous Oss Box, a horse trailer converted into a mobile arts venue. In the evening there will be live music, performances, an art auction and the opportunity to meet artist Vicky Roden with 'Honours', her sideshow of Sandwell civic artefacts. Finally, there will be a showing of 'Glory of the Garden', a new film from Black Country visionary artist Paul 'Rick' Jones. At the Art Yard, on Redall Hill Road, meanwhile, there will be a felt sculpture workshop. The gallery is also holding an exhibition over the next month, running until June 29, featuring artists' interpretations of local people and places, alongside photographs of Sandwell people by famous photographer Martin Parr. Haden Hill will be hosting 'Painting in the Park' on June 8, a day's interpretation of the park's dramatic landscape, open to artists working in any art form. Finally, Cradley Heath Library will host special children's arts activities during its opening hours."

“A Black Country pub has been forced to temporarily close after a loud party led to a spate of complaints from neighbours. A 48-hour closure notice was issued to the HOLLY BUSH pub in Cradley Heath after concerns over loud noise and anti-social behaviour were ignored on Saturday, West Midlands Police said. The party at the pub was one of more than 100 that the force shut down across the region over the weekend as officers responded to reports of illegal gatherings. Although pubs and bars are now allowed to open with social distancing measures in place, gatherings of more than six people from different households remain illegal. Residents in Cradley Heath said police attended the HOLLY BUSH at least five times on Saturday and a drone was used to monitor the party which lasted for around eight hours before the music stopped at around 8pm.

A resident, who wished to remain anonymous, described the noise as ‘exceptionally loud,’ adding, ‘We needed to have our windows shut because it was that loud, despite being how hot it was.’

The licensee of the pub, on the junction of Newtown Lane and Bannister Street, said the party having to be held outside meant noise travelled further than usual. Mr. Francis, who did not provide his first name, said, ‘I would like to apologise. I didn’t realise how far the sound would travel and how loud it was. We did a drum and bass thing. I haven’t done anything outside for a year. It’s been over a year since the last time we had recording music played at volume outside. Normally these events would be held inside but due to the current restrictions we weren’t allowed to.’”

“Today Mr. E. Hooper, coroner, held an inquest at the THREE FURNACES INN, Waterfall Lane, touching the death of Charles Baldwin (34), a baker, who was employed by Mr. Hickin, baker, of High Street, Black Heath.

Edward Hickin stated that he last saw deceased alive about half-past two on Monday afternoon. About five o’clock he was sent to Great Bridge, and he was expected to return from Great Bridge on the 9.8 train, but he did not come. Witness afterwards communicated with the police and they dragged the canal, and in a short time found the body in the water.

Thomas Belcher, of Waterfall Lane, stated that on Monday night, about a quarter or twenty minutes to ten, deceased came into Darby’s, the HORSE SHOE INN, Waterfall Lane, and had a pint of ale. Deceased paid for a pint of ale for witness. They left about a quarter-past ten, when deceased said he was going to Black Heath. Witness heard nothing more of him until Tuesday, when he heard he was drowned in the canal.

Police-sergeant Salt, stationed at Black Heath, stated that on Tuesday night, from information he received from Mr. Hickin, he went to the canal, and Mr. Hackett pulled the body out.

Mr. Barnsley, occupier of the wharf where it is supposed deceased walked into the water, also gave evidence, and said the place had been in its present condition for a number of years.

The jury returned a verdict of Found Drowned, and suggested that the place should be properly fenced. Mr. Barnsley promised to comply with the recommendation of the coroner and jury.”

“At the County Court on Thursday, before Sir Rupert Kettle, Judge, and a jury, a case was heard in which William Burton, cooper, of Langley, sued Benjamin Darby, publican, Old Hill, for the sum of £9 18s 8d, and there was a counter claim for £50. Mr. Sharpe was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Jackson for the defendant. Mr. Sharpe stated that about seven o’clock on the 19th of last December plaintiff was on the right side, driving a pony and truck past the GEORGE AND DRAGON, Blackheath, when defendant’s trap ran into plaintiff’s truck, and defendant, who was in the trap, was thrown out and seriously injured. In subsequent conversation defendant admitted his liability and promised recompense, which he not only failed to pay, but had now made a counter claim. Evidence was given. A verdict of 40s was given.”

“The annual Brewster Sessions for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division, were held at Old Hill Police Court on Wednesday.....

Benjamin Darby, HORSE SHOE INN, Waterfall Lane, applied, though Mr. Waldron, for an extension of his beerhouse license to a full license, and the application was opposed by Mr. Barradale on behalf of Mr. Andrews, a neighbouring licensed victualler.

Superintendent Woollaston also took objection to the application.

In support of the application Mr. Waldron said his client's premises were situate in an important centre, and a place where a full license should be given. It was a house which had been in the occupation of the Darby family for a very considerable time. He understood it had been a licensed house for nearly sixty years. If he was correctly informed the next licensed house was the CROWN. He failed to understand the opposition of his friend to the granting of this license. There was a memorial in favour of the granting of the license, and amongst those who had signed it was Mr. Haden Best, and the opposition was not only a selfish but an interested opposition on the part of Mr. Andrews of the CROWN INN. Some 800 people went daily to and from the railway station. Travellers called for spirits, but no spirits could be had, because there was no license. No one house, he argued, should have a monopoly to the exclusion of other houses.

Mr. Bassano: Do you seriously say we ought to level up all the licenses? – Mr. Waldron: I do.

Mr. Bassano: I'm afraid you'll be disappointed in the result.

Mr. Waldron said his disappointment would not affect the Bench. The experiment had been tried.

Mr. Bassano: It won't be tried again. It is such an absurdity to plead it. You know perfectly well what our duty is, and it is no use trying to make us think we have some other duty. The question is whether the house is wanted or not.

Mr. Waldron: That is the one point.

In the course of some further argument, Mr. Waldron said he had a duty to perform, and after the expression of opinion from the Bench he should call witnesses. Applicant was then called.

Mr. Bassano said they could quite understand if there were not already a fully-licensed house, then the present would be a proper application, but inasmuch as there was already a fully-licensed house near, whatever their sympathies be, and he liked to see people on an equality in trade facility, they must not be guided by that and add to the already outrageously great number of fully-licensed houses. It would be a flagrant neglect of duty to comply with the application, which, therefore, must be refused."

"Dudley County Court.

James Holden and Co., seed merchants, Tewkesbury, sued Benjamin Darby, brewer and maltster, of Old Hill, for £7 10s damages for breach of contract to accept and pay for 37½qrs of barley at 25s 6d per qr, which had been sold at a loss equalising the amount claimed. Mr. A. H. Spink, of Gloucester, appeared for plaintiffs, and Mr. Frank Deeley defended.

The plaintiff's case was that Mr. James Davenport, a broker, had sold the plaintiffs' barley to the defendant on December 14th, handing the defendant a sold note stating the terms of the bargain. The note was not signed by the defendant, although the latter had written several letters to the plaintiffs in relation to the matter. The barley was tendered in the early part of January, and rejected by the defendant, consequent on its not being equal to sample.

Mr. Deeley, at the outset, pointed out that although his client had a perfectly good defence on the merits, yet as there was no sufficient note of the contract signed by the defendant to satisfy the requirements of Section 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, plaintiffs could not make out a case against the defendant. A comparison of the sold note and particulars of claim showed that 4qrs more than had been contracted for had been tendered, and that this alone justified the defendant in refusing to accept delivery even of that which he was alleged to have contracted to purchase.

Mr. Spink, in reply, argued that, according to the custom of the trade, James Davenport was the agent for both parties, and that therefore, the memorandum was sufficient.

His Honour, without hearing any further evidence, nonsuited the plaintiffs with costs, but gave leave to appeal conditionally upon the plaintiffs giving security for the defendant's costs of the appeal."

Dudley Herald 27/8/1898

“The annual Licensing Sessions of the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division was held at the Old Hill Police Court on Wednesday.....

Mr. Cartland, Birmingham (instructed by Messrs. Redfern and Company) applied for the transferring of a full license from the NAVIGATION INN to the HORSE SHOE INN, Old Hill, and also for the beer license of the HORSE SHOE INN to be transferred to the NAVIGATION INN.

Mr. B. Shakespeare opposed on behalf of Mrs. Foley, of the THREE FURNACES INN, and Mr. McWinter, of the CROWN INN. Mr. Clulow also opposed for Mr. McWinter.

Mr. Cartland thought that this exchange would be one which would be for the benefit of the district. The HORSE SHOE INN was situated, as the Bench knew, on the main road near to the station and was in every way suitable for a fully licensed house. The tenant, Mr. Gad, provided an ‘ordinary’ for the travellers within the district and they required something stronger than beer with their dinner. The opposition was made upon selfish grounds as the CROWN INN and the THREE FURNACES were also near to the railway station.

Mr. Bassano said the NAVIGATION INN would probably have to be given up. He said the Bench knew most of the circumstances in connection with the houses and they were of opinion that the NAVIGATION INN was a house where a license ought not to be held.

Mr. Cartland: I understand that the house does a great deal of business.

The Chairman: You never knew a house that did not – (laughter).

Eventually the consideration of the matter was adjourned to the Adjourned Sessions.”

“The adjourned licensing sessions for the Rowley petty sessional division were held on Wednesday.....

Mr. Cartland, of Birmingham, applied for a full license on behalf of Mr. Gadd, in respect of the HORSE SHOE INN, and also for the renewal of the license of the NAVIGATION INN. He might say in his opening remarks that Messrs. Atkinson and Co. had thought over the advice given by the magistrates at the last meeting, and they had acted very wisely. They could see that there were a considerable number of houses in the district, and they were willing to surrender the license of the NAVIGATION INN if the application for the full license of the HORSE SHOE INN was granted by the Bench. The NAVIGATION INN was a valuable property, and they consented to surrender it with reluctance.

Mr. Bassano said the Bench knew the district very well, and the opinion of the Bench was that they would grant the license of the HORSE SHOE INN, but it would have to go to Stafford for confirmation.

Mr. B. Shakespeare said he appeared to oppose on behalf of other publicans, but after the intimation of the Bench he could go no further.

Mr. J. W. Clulow also opposed the application on behalf of other licensed holders; and stated that he thought premises were included in the application which had not been used in the premises before.

Mr. Cooksey (magistrates’ clerk) said the premises alluded to had been used before.

The tenant of the house, Frank Gadd, was then called, and said that at present he had a beer license. He had occupied the premises since December 1897, and he produced a memorial to the justices from several of the inhabitants (Mr. Cartland said he would put in the memorial for what it was worth).

Witness said he was in the habit of providing dinners daily for travellers, and he should think he provided between 200 and 300 a week. Witness had great many applications for spirits from people who used the house. The applications for spirits averaged twelve times a day during the last month. He had considerable stabling at the house. He had four rooms downstairs for the use of the public.

Cross-examined by Mr. Clulow: He used the cottage adjoining for the purpose of selling beer for the accommodation of passengers from the station. There was no communication between the licensed house and the cottage. The CROWN INN was separated from him by Waterfall Lane.

Cross-examined by Mr. Shakespeare: He was going to sell Atkinson and Co’s spirits, and Atkinson and Co. were really making the application. The CROWN INN, kept by Mr. McWhirter, was more than fifty yards away. There were six fully-licensed houses within 400 yards. He thought they had more callers from the station than the other six had.

Mr. Bassano said the license would be granted, but the other license would not be. The house was totally unfit to be licensed, and ought never to have been licensed.”

County Advertiser 8/10/1898

“The annual meeting of the Licensing Committee of the county of Staffordshire was held at the Shire Hall, Stafford, on Saturday.....

HORSESHOE INN, Old Hill. Frank Gadd, landlord of the above-named public-house, applied for the confirmation of the grant of a full license to the house by the licensing justices in petty sessions. Mr. Cartland and Mr. Parfitt supported the application, and Mr. Vachell (instructed by Mr. J. W. Clulow) opposed, on behalf of the North Worcestershire Breweries Limited and others. Mr. Cartland stated that the HORSESHOE INN had been in existence over seventy years. Some ten years ago a wine license was granted. Gadd entered into possession of the house last December, and he had got a large dining trade. He had endeavoured to improve the standing of the house, and he now provided on an average between 200 and 300 dinners a week. The district was a populous one, and in the neighbourhood were some extensive works giving employment to a large number of men. The house was the property of Messrs. Atkinson, brewers, and they had given an undertaking to the Court below, that should a full license be granted to the HORSESHOE and confirmed, they would allow the license of the NAVIGATION INN, also owned by them, to lapse.

Applicant gave evidence in support of the case. He stated that he had taken a record of the number of times he had been asked for spirits, and he found that since August 1st the number was 743.

Mr. Vachell contended that the applicant had no interest in having the license enlarged, it being a pure case of a brewery company seeking to improve their property. There were houses in the district which were sufficient in all purposes, and he ridiculed the statement that since August 1st 743 people had asked for spirits. He asked the committee to consider the case on its merits, and regretted that the practice was springing up of bolstering up a case by offering to give up a license belonging to some other house. In this case the brewery company were not offering much, as the NAVIGATION INN had been soundly condemned by the police and was of no value.

Mr. Cartland said the license to the NAVIGATION INN had been renewed, but he was instructed to give an undertaking to the committee that in case the full license to the HORSESHOE was confirmed the other license should be given up immediately. The Chairman said that on that undertaking, and that undertaking only, the committee were willing to confirm the grant of the Court below.”

County Advertiser 10/12/1898

“Dudley Board Of Guardians.

The tender of Mr. Darby, THREE HORSE SHOES, Old Hill, for the supply of 90 to 100 gallons of XXX ale for the Christmas dinner, at 11d per gallon, was accepted.”

“Joseph Smith, of Waterfall Lane, Old Hill, was charged with being disorderly on the licensed premises of Frank Gadd, and also with refusing to quit when requested, on the 12th inst.

Frank Gadd said that he kept the HORSESHOE INN, Old Hill, and that on Sunday, the 12th inst, defendant came into his house about 6.40pm, and was quite sober. Soon afterwards he commenced using obscene language, and his (complainant's) wife went up to him and told him that they would not have that language there. Defendant, however, continued it. He then ordered defendant to quit, but he refused to do so, and tried to get hold of two cups that were on the table, and, in doing so, knocked one on the floor and broke it. The other cup he threw at the wife of witness and broke it. The mother of the defendant came in, and he used worse language to her. Complainant then sent for the police.

Joseph Careless corroborated.

Defendant was also charged with wilful damage to the cups. He was fined 10s and costs for refusing to quit, and in the other case he was ordered to pay the damages and costs.”

Frank Gadd died on 15th April 1900.

Birmingham Daily Gazette 11/11/1905

“An inquest was held by Mr. Betham (acting coroner for South Staffordshire) at the HORSE SHOE HOTEL, Waterfall Lane, with respect to the death of an illegitimate child of Mahalah Johnson, a domestic servant. The deceased was nearly five months old, and the mother was housekeeper to Walter Homer, who resided in Waterfall Lane, and as he promised her marriage she consented to live with him, and the child was born in June Last. She instituted proceedings against Homer to contribute to the maintenance of the child, and the magistrates made an order for Homer to contribute 3s a week, but the police had been unable to serve the order, he having left the district for America. The child became emaciated, and died in consequence of not being properly fed. The inquiry was adjourned until Tuesday.”

“On Tuesday morning, Mr. A. A. Betham (acting coroner) resumed the adjourned inquest at the HORSE SHOE HOTEL, Station Road, Old Hill, respecting the death of Mahalah Johnson, aged four months and three weeks, the illegitimate child of Mahalah Johnson, a single woman residing at Waterfall Lane, Old Hill, who died under singular circumstances on the 5th last. Bertha Ann Smith, a widow residing at Waterfall Lane, stated that some time ago she took in the mother of the child, and agreed to look after the infant for 3s a week. The mother then went away and returned about ten days later, when she paid witness 3s. Witness could not communicate with the mother in case there was anything the matter with the child because she did not leave any address. Johnson then stayed with witness for about three weeks, and left to go to the hop fields. Witness fed the child upon condensed cream milk during the time she was in her charge. The baby grew worse, and witness took the child to Dr. Tibbetts. Subsequently the mother obtained a note for Dr. Tibbetts to attend the child. Dr. Tibbetts attended the deceased on several occasions, and once advised the mother to obtain Nestlé’s milk for it, as the milk she was giving it was not fit for pigs. Dr. Tibbetts also advised the mother to go into the Workhouse with the child, but when the doctor had gone she told witness that she would not go into the Union. She continued to feed it upon the skimmed milk preparation, and when witness asked why she did not obtain Nestlé’s milk she told her that she got what she could afford. In reply to Inspector Gibbs, witness said the child had been fed properly during the time it had been in her charge. She had purchased as much as four tins of condensed milk in one week. The mother of the child was recalled, and was cross-examined by Inspector Gibbs at considerable length. She admitted that when she went away to Birmingham she forgot to leave her address with Mrs. Smith. She had done her duty to the child. A woman named Preece stated that it was untrue that Mrs. Smith obtained four tins of condensed milk each week, and Lily Owen, a married woman residing at Waterfall Lane, said that before the mother left her house the child was a healthy one. Dr. Tibbetts stated that when he first attended the infant it was fairly healthy. He was informed that the child was being fed upon tinned milk, and he asked the mother to bring him a tin of the milk she was giving it. She, however, failed to do this, and treated the matter lightly. About a week after he had asked for the tin, witness saw the deceased child at its home, and also noticed a tin containing some condensed milk upon the table. It was labelled ‘Machine skimmed.’ Witness told the mother that the milk was not fit to feed pigs upon. He had previously given the mother a bottle of Nestlé’s milk, and told her to feed the child upon this. He also advised her to go to the Workhouse, but this she did not do. Since the adjournment of the inquest he had made a post mortem examination of the body of the child. It was in a very emaciated condition. The child only weighed 8lbs, whereas she ought to have weighed 12lbs. All the internal organs were healthy excepting the brain, which was generally inflamed. Death was due to meningitis, which was a very rare thing to account for the death of children. The child had apparently been improperly fed. He gave a certificate of death and added it was due to want of breast milk. The Acting Coroner said that led up the question which he dealt with at the previous inquiry, and he still thought it would be better in cases of that kind for the medical man to report the matter to the police or coroner. Dr. Tibbetts said unfortunately in that district there were so many cases, that if they reported every case in which the mothers failed to carry out the instructions the doctor and coroner would be very busy. The Acting Coroner said he would make an example of some of them. Dr. Tibbetts said the tinned milk was largely used in that district, and mothers were quite indifferent to the use of the milk so long as it was tinned milk. There was a tremendous amount of ignorance amongst the mothers. He also added that the meningitis might have been the result of blood poisoning from a sore upon the child’s hip. It might also have been produced from other causes. In summing up the acting Coroner said unfortunately the infantile death-rate throughout the country was very high, and he noticed that medical officers had been calling attention to the excessive infantile death-rate in the Black Country. To his own knowledge the infantile death-rate in the Black Country was very high indeed. The evidence of Mrs. Smith was very unreliable, and was not of much value. It was clear in his opinion that both women had neglected the child, and if he had been quite certain that the child had been starved, and died from that cause, he would have sent them both to the assizes for trial. The jury returned a verdict of Death from Natural Causes and requested the acting Coroner to severely censure both the women. The acting Coroner called the mother and Mrs. Smith before him, and addressing them said the jury had devoted much time to the case, and they had come to the conclusion that the child might have lived if it had had that attention which it ought to have had. It was very clear to them after hearing the evidence, that both of them had neglected this child, and very luckily for them the medical evidence was not sufficient to prove that the child had actually died from that neglect. If that had been so he should have sent them both for trial at the Assizes. It was such serious neglect that he should have been rather glad to have done it. He thought their conduct was very bad indeed and they could thank themselves that they were not sent upon their trial. He considered that both ought to be punished, and he should instruct Inspector Gibbs to report the matter to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. He should also disallow the expenses of both of them.”

“The customers at the HORSE SHOES, Old Hill, were on Saturday evening entertained to supper in the clubroom. There were about 50 present. The artistes were Messrs. Steve Hingley, Dud Hingley, H. Burrup, W. Travis, and B. Dorse. A pleasant evening was spent. On the proposition of Mr. H. Burrup, seconded by Mr. H. Dorse, the host and hostess were heartily thanked for their catering.”

“To celebrate the wedding of Mr. Joseph Hall, of Gorsty Hill, a party was on Tuesday held in the HORSE SHOE HOTEL, Old Hill. An excellent dinner was served by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Sample, to which exhaustive justice was done. Afterwards Mr. J. Evans was voted in the chair, and Mr. T. Tromans the vice chair, and a happy evening was spent.....”

“A sad accident, resulting in the drowning of two girls, named Laura Withers (13), and Elsie Foster (11), of Tory Street, Blackheath, occurred at a canal basin belonging to the Station Colliery, Old Hill, on Saturday morning. The girls, together with Maggie Roden (8), of the same locality, left their homes shortly before eight o’clock, and at length found their way to the canal basin close to the Station Colliery, Old Hill, which is at present disused. The elder girls were on a wooden bridge, formerly used for the purposes of an endless rope, when the woodwork beneath them gave way, and they fell into the canal. Roden raised an alarm, and Elijah Evans, of Tory Street, Blackheath who was engaged at a local tube works, ran to the spot, and jumped into the water. He succeeded in getting out the body of Foster, which was at once removed to its home. Later he secured Withers’ body, and PCs Longman and Pass and Mr. Harry Sample, of the HORSE SHOE INN, Station Road, Old Hill, tried artificial respiration. This was continued for 45 minutes, until Dr. McQueen arriving pronounced life extinct, and the body was removed home by the police. The inquest was held on Tuesday morning at the THREE FURNACES INN, Waterfall Lane, before Mr. G. C. Lewis (coroner). Mr. J. L. Fellows represented the proprietors of the Station Colliery.

The parents stated that early on Saturday morning the children left their homes for the purpose of playing.

Maggie Roden, aged eight, said she accompanied the two girls to the Station Colliery for the purpose of picking coal. She saw then go on the bridge, which spans the canal, and suddenly the floor collapsed, and the girls fell into the water. She was frightened and ran away, and told the first man she met.

Elijah Evans (50), miner, stated that when the child Roden told him of the accident he hurried to the canal, and divesting himself of clothing jumped in. He soon recovered the body of Foster, but a considerable time elapsed before he could recover Withers.

The Coroner thanked Evans for his courageous efforts.

PC Longman stated that when he and PC Pass arrived at the colliery the body of Foster had been recovered and conveyed to her home. With the assistance of a man named Sample they tried artificial respiration with Withers for three-quarters of an hour without success.

The Coroner: Were the girls trespassing?

Witness: Yes, sir, they were. Trespassers had been warned many times not to go on the colliery estate. The floor of the canal bridge was decayed; it had, in fact, been fenced off.

The Coroner said it was a very sad accident, but the unfortunate girls were the authors of their own misfortune. The owners of the bridge were not to blame. PCs Longman and Pass and Mr. Sample were to be commended for what they had done. Bright features of the sad affair were the gallant efforts made to save life.

Mr. Waldron supported an application by George Harry Sample, the licensee of the HORSE SHOE HOTEL, Station Road, Old Hill, for alterations to the premises. He said the accommodation at the house was of a limited character, and inadequate for the trade. It was proposed to convert the bed rooms of an adjoining cottage into a club room, the bottom rooms to be utilised as a store room.

Applicant gave evidence, and he said he had been unable to cater for dinner parties at his house because the club room was too small to accommodate the members.

The Chairman said the Bench considered it was a reasonable public requirement, and the application would be granted.”

“The annual dinner of the members of the Coombs Wood Ambulance Brigade was held on Saturday, at the HORSESHOE HOTEL, Old Hill.

The superintendent of the brigade, Mr. D. H. Williams, who presided, was presented with a malacca walking-stick, mounted in silver with the crest of the St. John’s Ambulance Association. Mrs. G. H. Sample, for her efforts as a collector, was presented with a piece of Worcester ware. In returning thanks Mr. Williams said that during the year the brigade had attended 2,000 accidents at Coombs Wood Works. During the year the committee had raised £54 10s, and after meeting all expenses had been able to hand over £40 to the brigade. This sum had enabled thirty-three men to attend camp.

The artistes at the subsequent concert were Messrs. D. H. Williams, W. H. Mitchell, D. C. Nock, George Hadley, R. Willetts, and E. Skidmore (pianist).”

“On a charge of embezzling money from his employer, John Walker, of 99, Ash Road, Saltley, was sent to gaol for two months by the magistrates at the Birmingham Victoria Courts yesterday.

Mr. Walter George Townsend, of 34, Victoria Road, Stechford, carrying on business in Cornwall Buildings, Newhall Street, as a wholesale tea merchant, under the name of Townsend and Co., said that it was the prisoner’s duty to solicit orders and collect accounts. He was paid salary, expenses, and commission. On 15 May he called on Mr. George H. Sample, of the HORSE SHOE HOTEL, Old Hill, and received £2 16s. This had not been paid to Mr. Townsend or his agents.”

“An inquest was held at the HORSE SHOE HOTEL, Old Hill, on Albert Victor Smith (10), of Waterfall Lane, Old Hill, who was drowned the previous evening. The evidence showed that the lad was playing on the towing past of the Birmingham canal, near Barr’s Colliery, when he was seized with an epileptic fit and fell into the water. A verdict of Accidental Death was returned.”

“I have been here since the beginning and have gone through all the war so far, I am thankful to say, without a scratch, though I have had some narrow escapes. Once I was on the look-out in the trenches and one of their snipers took a piece out of my cap. Sorry I could not find the man, as I should have returned the compliment. I was on the look-out and a shell burst within two yards of me. It killed two men and wounded twelve others. The force of the explosion knocked me into the trench. Never mind; it’s all in a day’s work. Their shell fire does a lot of damage, and their machine guns are not nice to face. Their rifle fire is rotten. Coombs Wood Ambulance are doing good work. I dropped across Dan Nock, one of Coombs’s. He is in the firing line and has not been hit yet.

““We know about the continual strumming of musical instruments; one knows what a perfect nuisance and nightmare it can be if you have got to live with it,’ commented Mr. C. C. Ladds, at Old Hill adjourned licensing sessions on Wednesday, when opposing an application for permission to have music and singing in public houses in Rowley Regis on Sundays.

Mr. Ladds who opposed the application on behalf of 10 people living near the HUNTSMAN INN, City Road, Tividale, said that music and singing in a public house attracted large crowds of young people, who often made their own music and took part in the singing. Making the application, Mr. A. Williams asked that the licensees be ‘given a fair crack of the whip.’ ‘If music and singing are allowed on six days a week, and in general there is no bother, it is not unreasonable to ask for music and singing on Sundays,’ he commented. The magistrates, after a 15 minutes retirement, refused the application.”

“A developer wants to transform a former pub in Cradley Heath into shops. Proposals have been submitted to convert the former JAY'S BAR in Graingers Lane, which has been empty for years, into three retail units. The plans, from Birmingham-based developer Abdul Ghafoor, have been welcomed by Cradley Heath councillor Julie Webb. She said, ‘I'm glad it's being brought back into use – we need shops to attract people to the area. It's nice to see something new being brought in rather than the site going to decay. It would be good if on. We have the new housing development in Woods Lane which will be finished hopefully by summer and will bring in hundreds of new residents who could be potential customers for these shops.’

It is believed JAY'S BAR closed in 2017.

Proposals, which were submitted to Sandwell Council last week, will be considered by Sandwell Council planners.”

“A former Cradley Heath bar looks set to be transformed into a flat after plans for three shops were dropped. JAY’S BAR, on Graingers Lane, which has been empty since 2018, will be converted into a three-bedroom flat, if plans submitted to Sandwell Council get the go-ahead. An application to convert the former bar into three shops was given permission last March. It was granted permission despite one objection raising concerns over rear access and a lack of parking. A report by a council officer at the time noted that, ‘The development would contribute to the vitality and viability of Cradley Heath town centre whilst bring back into use a currently empty premises.’ But now it looks like the shops plan, from Abdul Ghafoor, has been dropped, as Mr Ghafoor has submitted the new application to convert the ground floor of the former bar into a flat with three bedrooms, a lounge, kitchen, bathroom and shower room. The application states that the first floor of the property is already a flat. It will be considered by Sandwell Council planners.”

Wolverhampton Chronicle 9/2/1853

“An inquest was held on Friday last, at the KINGS ARMS INN, Rowley Regis, before G. H. Hinchcliffe, Esq, coroner, and a highly respectable jury, on the body of Edward Round, aged twenty-five years.

The first witness examined was John Baggott, who stated that on the 24th of January last he went to a place called Ganner Green, near Bromsgrove, as he heard there was going to be a prize fight. He arrived there about eleven o’clock, and saw a great number of people on a common there. A ring was formed and deceased and a man named Thomas Davis were both stripping; after they had stript a man called ‘Flesh’ (but whose proper name the witnesses could not tell) acted as Davis’s second. Davis and deceased then commenced fighting, and deceased was knocked down, but after waiting a little another round commenced. The witness then described twenty rounds which were fought, and stated that a man named Richard Taylor and ‘Flesh’ both acted as Davis’s seconds. Deceased’s nose was broken and he was cut under the eye. During the fight Taylor and ‘Flesh’ both encouraged Davis, and told him how to strike deceased. After the twenty rounds had been fought deceased sat down (as he had done between each round) on the knee of a man named Fox, and when the signal was given for the fight to be renewed deceased attempted to rise but appeared unable to do so, and fell insensible to the ground. Fox carried him on to the public road, but a cry of police being heard he dropped deceased down and left him. Witness shortly afterwards carried him to a cottage, where he remained in an insensible state until the following day, when he was conveyed to his residence in Rowley Regis, and attended by Mr. Beatty, surgeon, but he died on Wednesday last.

Other witnesses were examined, and confirmed the statement of Baggott.

Mr. James Beatty, surgeon, of Oldbury, stated that when called to the deceased he found him in an exhausted state and suffering from a low fever. Witness described his treatment of deceased, and stated that since death he had made a post mortem examination of the body; there was a fracture of the nose and a cut under the left eye, and injury on the ribs, one of which had been fractured. Mr. Beatty detailed the appearances he found in the body, and proved death had been produced by extravasation of blood upon the brain, and congestion of its membranes; that these appearances were the result of the violence to the nose and cheek, and that such injuries might be produced by blows or by deceased having frequently fallen down.

Subinspector Joynson stated that Davis was in custody, but very ill and unable to leave his bed, and that he believed 'Flesh' and Taylor had absconded.

The coroner said he thought it would be advisable before concluding the inquiry to have Davis brought before the jury, and as the surgeon had stated that Davis would be in fit state to leave home in a few days, he should adjourn the inquest for his attendance. The inquest was therefore adjourned until Thursday next, and the police will in the meantime endeavour to find 'Flesh' and Taylor."

Worcestershire Journal 17/2/1853

"An adjourned inquest was held at the KINGS ARMS, Rowley Regis, on Thursday evening last, touching the death of Round, alias Bladey, one of the principals in the late prize fight at Gannow Green, in the vicinity of Bromsgrove. Davis, 'the man wot won the fight,' was brought in; he appeared ill, his face and hands exhibiting marks of the contest. After hearing the whole of the evidence read over, the prisoner, being duly cautioned, said to the Jury: I did not challenge him (deceased); he came over to Oldbury and challenged me. He said, 'Davis, I'll fate yo' and I said, 'Well I'll fate yo.' The Coroner summed up, and explained the law as it bore upon the case. The Jury held a long consultation, which ended in a verdict of Manslaughter against Davis, and 'Flesh,' and Taylor, seconds. They expressed their regret that the law did not enable them to deal with the other parties concerned, and their opinion was that the authorities should take the greatest care to suppress the unseemly and demoralising system of prize fighting.

Davis was then committed for trial at the next Stafford Assizes; the seconds, with others, have absconded. The deceased is represented as having been a very quarrelsome man of bad character generally. He had been many times before the Wordsley Magistrates for assaults and was the terror of the neighbourhood. He has left a wife and child."

"His Lordship entered the court this morning at nine o'clock.

Thomas Davis, Samuel Instone, Jas. Reynolds, William Rudge, John Tracey, Joseph Walters, and Jacob Griffiths were indicted for the manslaughter of Edward Round, at Rowley Regis, on the 2nd February last.

Mr. Best was instructed for the prosecution; and Mr. Scotland appeared on behalf of Davis, Tracey, and Griffiths.

The prisoners, with the exception of Griffiths, pleaded guilty.

Mr. Best, in addressing the Court, said that inasmuch as the unfortunate fight out of which the present charge arose was not one of an aggravated nature, the prosecution was desirous of recommending the prisoners to the favourable consideration of the Court; but as far as regarded Griffiths, no evidence would be offered, owing to his having taken no part whatever in the affray.

After a few words from Mr. Huddleston, upon one or two points in the case which tended to palliate the offence against the prisoners, his Lordship remarked that this was not one of those degrading and brutalising exhibitions which had taken place near Tamworth, and in other localities, in the shape of prize fights. On the contrary, this was merely a contest which had arisen out of a challenge given by the deceased to the prisoner; but which had, nevertheless, ended in a distressing manner in the death of the former. The prosecution, however, had taken into consideration the extenuating circumstances of the case, and recommended the prisoners to mercy, of which he should give them the benefit, hoping at the same time that the lesson it was calculated to teach them would not be thrown away. He should, therefore, only require them to enter into their own recognizances in £100 each, to appear for sentence when called on, and in the meantime keep the peace towards all her Majesty's subjects.

The prisoners then entered into the required sureties, and, with the exception of Instone, against whom there was another charge, were released from custody."

[Samuel Instone and Thomas Round, charged with assaulting William Rockham, a policeman, at the fight, were found guilty; Round received nine months' and Instone six months' imprisonment.]

“John Tromans, landlord of the KINGS ARMS INN, Rowley Regis, was charged with allowing fighting and other disorderly conduct, to be carried on in his house, on Saturday, the 19th ult. Sub-Inspector Burton said that about half past eleven o’clock, on the above night, he was on duty, and heard a disturbance in defendant’s house. He went and found the two men, John Rollinson and Thomas Rollinson, as noted above, fighting. Defendant was doing all in his power to prolong the fight, and requested him (Burton) to let them have it out. Superintendent Mills, in reply to the Bench, said the house had been badly conducted for some time. Fined 20s with costs.”

County Advertiser 29/5/1858

“This case – in which William Harris, a respectable farmer of Rowley, was charged with allowing his waggon to obstruct the free passage of the turnpike road on the 5th inst, and also with assaulting the police in the execution of their duty – was adjourned for a fortnight on Monday, the 10th inst, in order to secure the attendance of Mr. Edward Bridgewater as a witness. Mr. Bridgewater attended to give evidence today, and Mr. Homfray again appeared for the defendants.

The facts of the case are briefly these: On the 5th inst, Harris had some business to transact at the KINGS ARMS, Rowley Village, and accordingly went there with his team, attended by his waggoner, Frederick Tuffley, who was also charged with assaulting the police. PS Burton stated that the waggon was standing in the road in front of the KINGS ARMS for an hour and a half, the front horses being in such a position as to cause an obstruction of the road; also stating that after waiting this hour and a half he went up to the waggoner and asked him for his name, which he refused to give. Witness accordingly threatened to take him into custody unless he complied with his request, whereupon the waggoner, Tuffley, commenced an assault upon him, his master, William Harris, also assisting him. Counter-charges of assault were brought against the police by Harris. The particulars of the case being fresh in the recollection of the Bench only the additional evidence was taken today.

Hannah Burton, wife of PS Burton, was first examined, and she deposed to seeing the horses stand across the road in the manner described by her husband.

Edward Bridgewater, who lived opposite the KINGS ARMS, and was the owner of the police-station in that locality, deposed that the horses were standing straight down the road, and that the waggon was close in the channel, thus leaving abundance of room for carts to pass and repass; but the time he saw the waggon was about ten minutes before the constable came up.

Richard Hinton, and inhabitant for 30 years of the parish of Rowley, corroborated the statement of Mr. Bridgewater.

The charges of assault were then gone into, and several witnesses were examined, PS Burton stating as above, and PC Dobson corroborating the statement.

Mr. Homfray then addressed the Bench for the defence, he said he scarcely knew what country we were living in that such charges as the present should be preferred. The Act of Parliament laid down the law very clearly on the matter, the offence consisting of causing an obstruction of the free passage of the road; while the evidence proved that there was plenty of room for other waggons to pass and repass, the road being 30ft wide. He also commented on the fact of the constable allowing the waggon and horses to stand for such a length of time without taking any notice, and then when he saw the horses standing across the road, laying the present information. He apprehended that it was part of a policeman’s duty to prevent if possible any breach of the law. The waggoner, he contended, was illegally taken into custody, inasmuch as he was not bound to give his name, the owner being responsible, and the name ‘William Harris, farmer, Halesowen,’ being painted in legible characters on the waggon. Under these circumstances he considered Tuffley was justified in resisting the police, and his master in assisting him so to do. The whole question turned upon whether it was not an illegal act to take him in custody, because if was, the assaults complained of arose was a matter of course. Harris saw his waggoner being dragged along the road, and beaten with handcuffs, and accordingly interfered, and was therefore also charged with assault. He had no doubt but that the whole affair had arisen from a mistaken interpretation of the law on the part of PS Burton, and that he was therefore not deserving of blame, but that if a superior officer had been in attendance all the evils complained of would have been prevented. Under these circumstances he submitted that the ends of justice would be best attained by the withdrawal of the whole of the summonses on each side.

The Bench stated that the law only required the owner’s name to be upon the waggon, and that there had been some mistake in the case, they should dismiss the whole of the charges.”

The evidence given by Police-constables Styles and Lightfoot was that on Sunday the 28th ult, they were near defendant's house. At about twenty minutes past ten pm, four men came from the house, and the landlady followed them carrying a tray containing four glasses of liquors.

Mr. Hayes, who defended, said no money was passed, and said that the glasses of liquor were only intended as a gift to the men. The Bench considered that an offence had been committed, and said it was especially important that the law should be observed on Sundays.

Mr. Hayes said there had been no charge against the house for thirty years.

The Bench said they should take that into consideration.

The defendant was fined 5s and costs."

"A curious incident occurred in a yard belonging to Mr. Isaac Whitehouse, landlord of the KINGS ARMS, Rowley, on Tuesday last, when a fight took place between a rat and a hen. The fight lasted for about ten minutes. The hen was walking about the yard with two chickens, when the rat suddenly pounced on one of them, apparently with the intention of carrying it away. His intentions, however, were frustrated by the mother of the chickens, which faced the rat and then flew at him causing him to loose hold of the chicken. The bird followed up her advantage, and caught hold of the rat by the jaw. After picking him up from the ground she dashed it down again with some violence. This she repeated until the rat was hors de combat. The owner of the fowl was attracted to the spot by the noise, and seeing how matters stood gave the finishing stroke to the rat which was all but dead from the heavy punishment he had received from the enraged mother."

"Joseph Sidaway, landlord of the KINGS ARMS INN, Dudley Road, Rowley Village, was charged with stealing a dog's collar, the property of Daniel Darbey, commercial traveller.

Mr. Jackson, of West Bromwich, who defended, informed the magistrates that the information was signed by Inspector Bishop, and not by the prosecutor. He should like to say that two men took to the defendant's house a dog valued at £5, which they said they had found. They left the dog, defendant promising to endeavour to find the owner. Defendant subsequently ascertained that the dog belonged to Mr. Darbey, and sent it to his house but omitted to send the collar. It subsequently transpired that the defendant's little boy had taken the collar from the dog's neck, without the knowledge of the defendant. The magistrates decided to adjourn the case for a fortnight."

"Joseph Sidaway, landlord of the KINGS ARMS INN, Rowley Regis, was charged with stealing a dog collar, value 1s 6d, the property of Daniel Darby, on the 6th of April. Mr. H. Jackson (West Bromwich) defended.

Complainant said that he missed the dog on the date named, and that it had a brown leather collar at the time. On the Monday following defendant asked him if he had lost a dog, and also to describe him. Defendant, from his description, told him that he had one answering the description at his house, which two men had brought in, and he gave them half a gallon of beer. Complainant told him that it had a collar on, describing the same. Defendant replied that it had no collar at all. Complainant meanwhile told the police, and in the evening defendant brought him the dog without the collar. Defendant afterwards produced the collar, and told him that he was very sorry for what he had done.

Police-constable Hyman said that he met Mr. Darby, who spoke to him about the loss of a dog with a collar. Complainant asked him to make inquiries, and he went to the KINGS ARMS INN, where he saw the dog with the collar round his neck. About 5.30 defendant came to him, and said he had got to settle with him (witness) for the half gallon of beer which the two men had for bringing the dog. Mr. Darby came in soon afterwards, and witness saw defendant run towards the back with the collar in his hand, and put it in a drawer in the kitchen. The officer told defendant he would be charged with stealing the collar, and he began to swear, calling him a liar. Defendant afterwards said that he was a 'd— fool,' that he would make a clean breast of it, and the reason why he took it was that he had told Mr. Darby that he had no collar, and he didn't want to be found out in a lie.

Mr. Jackson, for the defence, said that the affair arose out of an incident which was very trivial. While the dog was at defendant's house his little girl was playing with it, and the collar got lost.

The Bench allowed the case to be withdrawn on payment of costs."

"On Monday last the members of the Poor Man's Friend lodge, No.934 of the Rowley Regis Provincial Chapter of the Nottingham United Order of Oddfellows, held their annual meeting at Brother Joseph Sidaway's, the KINGS ARMS INN, Rowley. An excellent dinner was provided. Brother Eli Hackeson, PIF, was voted to the chair, and Brother George Malabone to the vice-chair. Brother Thos. Fletcher, PGI (secretary), read the yearly accounts, which showed the lodge to be in a flourishing condition. A vote of thanks to the secretary was carried, and 'Success to the Working Man's' Friend,' was proposed and responded to very heartily. Other toasts were given, and a happy evening was spent."

County Express 8/10/1890

"Mr. E. Hooper (coroner) held an inquest at the WARD ARMS INN, Tuesday, respecting the death of William Hackett (22), Hawes Lane, who was found dead in bed on the 2nd inst. The evidence showed that on Saturday the deceased was drinking at various public houses with a young man named John Parkes; but the latter did not consider he was drunk when he left the KINGS ARMS INN, where they each had four glasses of whisky, having previously had whisky and beer at other inns. Parkes, however, admitted to the coroner that he could not walk upstairs. When he left at closing time he fell in the street, and was carried home and put to bed, being found the next morning dead. The jury returned a verdict of Death from Suffocation caused by Excessive Drinking. The Coroner said he found the evidence of Parkes anything but satisfactory, and he would disallow his expenses. He also called the attention of Superintendent Woollaston, who was present, to the case, and expressed a hope that he would make enquiries and take action with regard to the supply of drink to the deceased."

County Express 13/12/1890

"At the Rowley Police Court on Wednesday, before Messrs. W. Bassano, H. A. Wiggin, J. Walker, A. H. Bassano, and G. H. Cloughton, Joseph Sidaway, manager of the KINGS ARMS, Rowley Regis, was charged with permitting drunkenness and also selling intoxicating liquors to a drunken person, on Nov. 1st. Mr. Waldron prosecuted, and Mr. Lawrence (Underhill and Lawrence, Wolverhampton) was for the defence.

Mr. Waldron said he was instructed to prefer these charges by the chief-constable of the county. The case was a very sad and serious one, because he thought the evidence would disclose, beyond all question of a doubt, that a young man of the name of William Hackett lost his life on the 1st of November through excessive drinking. Hackett was healthy and robust, and on the 1st ult he went about seven o'clock to the KINGS ARMS, perfectly sober, and remained drinking there until nine o'clock. He then proceeded to the SWAN INN, where he had some ale and also some whisky. At about 10.20 he returned to the defendant's house, accompanied by another young man. On this occasion he was supplied with a number of glasses of whisky and water. In the KINGS ARMS he had four glasses of whisky and one at the SWAN. At closing time Hackett left the house, but he was so drunk that the moment he got into the street he fell down twice, and was assisted home by his companions. The sister of the deceased would state that when her brother arrived home he was unconscious. He was taken up stairs and put on the bed, where the next morning he was found dead. It was a very sad and terrible tale, and he hoped that, if he satisfied the Bench on these charges, they would inflict a substantial penalty, so that publicans would not supply people in such a rapid manner as the defendant supplied the deceased.

Shadrack Hackett, Hawes Lane, Rowley Regis, blacksmith, said deceased, who was his son, was a boilermaker, 22 years of age. On 1st November he arrived home at 5.30 from work, sober, and went out about 7.30. He was a strong young man. At a quarter past eleven at night two men carried his son in as well as they could. His son was drunk. He was carried upstairs and laid on the bed with his clothes on. He was so helpless that he could not be undressed. A man named Parkes slept on the same bed. Next morning he was found on the bed dead. Cross-examined: Parkes seemed to be sober. Witness was in the SWAN at ten o'clock with the deceased, and he was not drunk.

Parthenia Hackett, daughter of the last witness, said on the 1st November she saw her brother brought home in a drunken unconscious state. They could not undress him because he was helpless. When Parkes came down the next morning, he said, 'I wish I could sleep like your brother.' She went upstairs and found he was dead. Cross-examined: They then sent for a doctor, and Dr. Beasley's assistant came in, but did not do anything except hold her brother's hand. No doctor was called at the inquest on her brother. Re-examined: She heard the doctor's assistant say in the bed room the stuff he had drunk had poisoned him. They could smell the whisky in the bed room.

Alexander Parkes, High Street, Rowley, quarryman, said on the 1st ult he was at the KINGS ARMS INN, and saw Hackett come in at 10.20pm. Hackett was not sober. Witness saw him supplied with four glasses of whisky in the bar. Cross-examined: Witness and the landlord drank one of the glasses of whisky. Deceased was standing at the bar counter all the time quietly. No one led him out at closing time. Hackett walked into the middle of the road and fell on his back twice. There was a great change in his condition afterwards, and he had to be taken home. Re-examined: When Hackett got outside the fresh air got over him. He did not reckon that three or four pints of ale would make a man drunk.

Police-constable Hyman said he was called to Hackett's house at 10.30am on the 2nd ult. Deceased was on the bed dead. A fluid was running from his mouth, and smelt very strongly of whisky. Witness accompanied Police-sergeant Salt to the defendant's house the same day. Sidaway, in answer to the sergeant, said he knew the man was dead. He said he only supplied him with one pint of ale that night. There was a club in the house, and he might have had some beer. They left at a quarter to ten, and returned at 10.20, and the wife supplied the deceased with some whisky. The defendant's wife said she supplied them with three or four whiskies. The night before the inquest he asked defendant to attend the inquest. Cross-examined: At the inquest he heard the Coroner say it was a case of excessive drinking, and it was one of the worst cases he had ever heard, and should bring it before the notice of the justices. When the Coroner said this he did not think it his duty to send for the publican. There was no post mortem examination, and Mr. Griffiths (Dr. Beasley's assistant) did not attend at the inquest. The Coroner did not suggest Sidaway should be called.

Police-sergeant Salt was called to corroborate Hyman's statement

Mr. Lawrence said he would postpone his remarks until he had called all his witnesses.

Mr. W. Bassano: Is it a fact that no medical evidence was taken at the inquest?

Mr. Lawrence: None. Sidaway was waiting all day dressed in his coat to go to this inquest, but never had the slightest opportunity of being present.

Superintendent Woollaston: I was present at the inquest, and the coroner's jury appeared to be perfectly satisfied, and the surgeon was not called. We never call surgeons unless the coroner desires it. We are not permitted to do it.

Mr. Lawrence: I am not complaining in the least so far as the police are concerned, as their evidence has been given very fairly.

Mr. Bassano: We are wondering at the extraordinary circumstances of a man who was found dead in bed, and a medical man called in who took hold of his hand, and yet no medical evidence was called at the inquest. It is simply wonderful; I never heard of such a strange thing in my life.

Mr. Wiggin: What was the verdict?

Mr. Lawrence: 'That the deceased died from Excessive Drinking of Spirits.'

Mr. Lawrence, in reply to a question, said Mr. Hooper was the coroner.

Mr. Bassano: I must say I'm very much astonished.

Mr. Waldron: I can only say this, that if the defendant had chosen he could have attended and given his evidence. He knew perfectly well that as a publican his conduct would be brought into question, and I submit it was his duty to have attended.

Mr. Lawrence: He held himself in readiness to attend all day.

Mr. Bassano: Having expressed our surprise at this, we have nothing else to say.

Samuel Blakeway said he was at the KINGS ARMS on the 1st ult, and saw the men go out and come in. They returned at half-past ten, and went to the counter, Hackett standing up. They had three glasses of something. At closing time Hackett walked out all right. Outside the house he fell twice, and could not stand afterwards.

Simeon Siviter, Rowley, said he was in the defendant's house when Hackett and Parkes were in, at twenty minutes past ten. Hackett walked out all right, and fell down outside twice. One fall was a fearful fall. Cross-examined: Hackett paid for six glasses of whisky, and Parkes had three of them. He did not know what made Hackett fall.

John Parkes, labourer, Rowley, said on the night in question he was with Hackett. At the KINGS ARMS they stayed for over an hour, and then went to the SWAN INN, and afterwards returned to the KINGS ARMS. On the first occasion they had a pint of ale between them; and at the SWAN they had two pints of ale and a bottle of ginger beer, and a glass of whisky each; and on returning to the KINGS ARMS, four or five glasses of whisky each. When Hackett got outside, he started up the road. Witness did not see him fall, but afterwards found him helpless, and in a shaky condition. Witness helped him home and slept with deceased. He left at 8.10 the next morning, and the deceased was then lying on the bed, witness thought he was sleeping. Deceased had been working overtime the same day. At the inquest, the Coroner said he did not believe witness was telling the truth when he swore that the man was sober when he left the house. Cross-examined: He told the coroner that they had four or five glasses of whisky in twenty-five minutes.

Mary Sidaway, wife of the defendant, said she saw the men come into the house at 10.20. Until closing time they had three or four glasses of whisky each – three-pennyworth at a time. Hackett was perfectly sober. It was not usual for her to supply four or five glasses of whisky in the course of half-an-hour.

Defendant was called, and said his wife supplied the men with the whisky. When Hackett had gone some distance up the street he had a bad fall. Sergeant Salt said he would call for them if they were required at the inquest, and they waited, but were not fetched. Hackett appeared to be perfectly sober.

Mr. Lawrence, for the defence, said he agreed with what Mr. Waldron said, that it was a sad and serious case, but it was serious for different reasons to what Mr. Waldron would have them believe. It seemed to him that Mr. Waldron wished to prejudice this case in the same way that the coroner prejudiced his jury, and wanted them to believe that, without a tittle of evidence, that the man died in consequence of excessive drinking. This amount of drink was not an extraordinary amount for strong man, nor would it be likely to kill a man. At the inquest statements were made as to what he had had to drink, and, without calling any medical man, the jury returned a verdict of Death from Excessive Drinking. The coroner had an opportunity of calling the doctor, and could have directed a post mortem examination, but did not do so. It seemed to him that the doctor jumped to the conclusion he did from what the mother told him. He was justified in speaking in the very strongest terms upon the conduct of the inquest, and he felt it most keenly. It was quite obvious that the man must have been seriously injured by the fall which was referred to, and he hoped there being a doubt in the case the Bench would give defendant the benefit of it.

The Bench fined defendant £5 and costs for selling to a drunken person, and for permitting drunkenness ordered him to pay costs, and the next time anyone was found dead in bed under such circumstances they hoped a post mortem examination would be made. Including solicitor's fee and costs, the penalty amounted to £12 7s."

"The annual licensing sessions for Rowley Petty Sessional Division were held last Wednesday.....

The magistrates said they were pleased to learn that there had been a decrease in the drunken cases. They then proceeded to consider the 'black list'.....

Mr. Lawrence applied for a renewal of the license of the KINGS ARMS INN, Rowley Village, on behalf of John Hartill. Inspector Bishop said that the late tenant was convicted on the 1st of December, 1890, for supplying ale to a drunken person, and fined £5 and costs. There was nothing against the present applicant. Mr. Lawrence said that the applicant managed the house, and the conviction against Joseph Sidaway, the previous tenant, did not affect him. Whenever the offence was committed Sidaway was requested to leave, and the house had been conducted satisfactorily since then Adjourned."

"Old Hill Adjourned Licensing Sessions.....

Mr. W. Bassano said the only case in which they proposed not to renew the license was in the case of the CROSS INN, Old Hill.....

Mr. Ward asked if all the other licenses were granted without any special application being necessary. Mr. Bassano said this was so. Of course they had, in the exercise of their discretion, thought there were several cases in which they might reasonably withhold the license, and the Bench had had a long discussion that morning before coming into Court as to whether they should do so in the case of a man fined £10 and costs. However, they had decided to grant the whole of the licenses this year, and they gave an intimation that in future the Bench would deal very stringently in cases of conviction under the licensing laws, both as regards the amount of fines and endorsements, and in the cases of endorsements they would deal more stringently. In plain English, this meant that a person with an endorsement against the house would in future have a very small chance indeed of getting his license renewed. They hoped the licensed victuallers and other licensed persons in the district would take a warning from that."

“On Sunday afternoon the annual friendly societies’ Sunday service, on behalf of the hospitals, was held in a field at the back of Mountford House, Siviters Lane, Rowley, kindly lent for the occasion by Dr. J. G. Beasley. The members of various societies met at their headquarters, and were formed into a procession as below. The Blackheath Village Band started from the WHEAT SHEAF INN, Turners Hill at one o’clock, with the Church of England Friendly Society, and proceeded through Portway and Perys Lake, calling at the BULLS HEAD INN for the Sick Club, at the WARD ARMS INN for Court Foresters’ Pride, at the KINGS ARMS INN for Lodge Working Man’s Friend. It then proceeded by way of Ross, Holly Road, Tump Road, and John Street, to the GEORGE AND DRAGON Ground. The Woodgate Brass Band had in the meantime covered its route from the OLD BUSH INN, Powke Lane, with Court Little Band of Hope, calling at the MALT SHOVEL INN for Lodge Lily of the Valley, the VINE INN for Court Mistletoe Bough, proceeding along Station Road to the RAILWAY INN for Court Britannia’s Pride, thence through Halesowen Street, Tump Road, and Hackett Street, meeting the other Courts at the GEORGE AND DRAGON Ground. A united procession was then formed, and marched to Siviters Lane, reaching the ground at three o’clock. The proceedings opened with the hymn ‘All people that on earth do dwell,’ after which the Chairman (Mr. E. Pewtress, CC) delivered a short address. The Rev. C. W. Barnard, MA, Rector of Kings Norton, then addressed the meeting, after which the hymn ‘Lead, kindly light,’ was sung. Addresses were also delivered by the Revs. W. Hall and N. Haigh, of Blackheath. At the close a collection was taken on behalf of the Dudley Dispensary and Birmingham Eye Hospital. It amounted to £11 9s 5d.”

“Mr. H. A. Pearson (coroner) held an inquest, on Wednesday, at the KINGS ARMS INN, concerning the death of Elijah Law (54), no fixed abode, who was found dead in a stable at Bell End, Rowley, on Sunday.

The evidence of the deceased’s brother was that Law had been of no regular occupation, and for the past three years had slept where he could. Witness had not been on the best terms with his brother, and when he last saw him alive (on Thursday) they did not speak.

The other evidence was to the effect that the deceased was drinking on Saturday night, and when they left at closing time deceased was the worse for drink. The following day he was found by a boy named Payne in the stable of his employer. He had slept in the same place on previous occasions.

The evidence of Dr. Beesley was that death was due to exposure. Deceased was of drunken habits, and had evidently fallen whilst trying to ascend the loft, and had remained there until death supervened.

The jury returned a verdict of Death from Exposure.”

“Yesterday, at Dudley County Court – before Judge Harrington – Thomas Gould Taylor, KINGS ARMS, Rowley, farmer, sued Thomas Frederick Holland, farmer, of Portway Road, Rowley, to recover £20 damages in respect of the alleged illegal seizure and impounding by the defendant of sixteen cows. There was a counter claim for £5, general damages for personal assault. The case for the plaintiff was that on November 16th last sixteen of his cows, which had strayed on to defendant’s field, were seized and impounded at Oldbury. On the application of the plaintiff fourteen cows were liberated, the other two being detained to cover the claim for damages and expenses. These two cows were sold by auction, and purchased by the plaintiff for £11 5s, of which £7 18s was handed over to the defendant in respect of the damages, the balance being retained to cover the charges for impounding the cattle. His Honour held that the damage claimed by the defendant must be confined to the day of the seizure, and that the amount of damage done by the cattle on that day was £1. He therefore gave a verdict for the plaintiff for £6 18s, the difference between £1 damages and the amount defendant had received as the proceeds of the sale of the cattle, with costs. The counter claim was struck out.”

Among the guests was the mayor of the borough, Alderman B. Hobbs, who, I gather from the chairman's speech of welcome, has been a good friend indeed to this society. Had it not been for his good services there is little doubt that the pool which the club rent locally would have been filled in some time ago and, of course, lost for ever to the members. Alderman Hobbs replied and said what great pleasure it gave him to be invited to this annual function and assured the members of his active support and encouragement in their healthy pursuit of angling. The chairman (Mr. T. Bennett) gave no room for complaint when it came to the explaining of the affairs of the club. This society, which is now in its sixth year, is in a favourable position financially. Besides renting a pool easily accessible to the members, it has a specimen fish preservation fund, which at present amounts to just over £10.....”

“References to a man's visits to public-houses before committing suicide were made at an inquest at Old Hill yesterday on Thomas Mansell, aged 56, 63, Mackmillan Road, Blackheath, a refuse collector, employed by Rowley Regis Town Council. The widow, Elizabeth Mansell, stated that her husband returned from work at mid-day on Saturday and left at one o'clock to have a drink at the SIR ROBERT PEEL INN. He returned at 1.35 and he had had a few drinks. He afterwards went out for a walk, and said he should be back at eight o'clock. William Dunn, licensee of the BRITANNIA INN, Rowley, stated that at 2.50 Mansell called at his house and asked for a gallon of beer, but he refused to serve him. He was too much over the mark. Walter Watts, landlord of the KINGS ARMS INN, Rowley, said that at about three o'clock Mansell asked for a gallon of beer, but he refused to supply it. Witness said he would not describe the man as drunk, but he had had enough. Other evidence showed that Mansell's coat, waistcoat, and cardigan were found by the side of Rowley Hall pool at 4.30. A verdict that Mansell committed Suicide while the Balance of his Mind was Disturbed was returned.”

The complainant stated that he came out of the KINGS HEAD INN, Old Hill, at one o’clock on Tuesday morning, when he was struck by Round, and knocked down. The other defendants were in the road, and they assisted in the assault, knocking the complainant down and kicking him. He had spoken to the defendants in the public house, but had not given them any provocation. Mr. Deakin, of Oldbury, who appeared for the defendants, elicited from complainant, in cross-examination, that ‘he was took up for dead’ after the assault. He had been having a few pints during the day, but was quite sober when the assault took place. A young woman, named Jane Willetts, said she heard the noise of the defendants and complainant quarrelling near her residence, when she was in bed. She went down into the street, and the defendants were saying that ‘they would kick complainant’s b— life out.’ She could swear to Round’s voice in particular. Evidence to rebut that of the complainant was adduced on behalf of the defendants, the result being that a penalty of 1s and the costs was imposed on each of the three men charged.”

“At the Old Hill Police Court on Wednesday, before Messrs. W. Bassano and C. Holcroft, William Ball, alias George Keel, Poplar Place, Bridge Street, West Hockley, Birmingham, pearl and stud turner, and John Johnson, 12, Eaton Street, Hockley, pearl turner, were charged with uttering and putting off counterfeit coins representing half-crowns, and one florin, at Old Hill and Cradley Heath, on the 8th inst. On the prisoner Ball was found 8s 9d and five coins, and on Johnson 29s 7½d and two coins.

Joseph Manning, QUEENS HEAD, Corngreaves Road, said on Monday evening last the prisoners came to his house while he was sitting at tea. Ball called for two drinks, and was served by his wife, who called him to look at the half-crown they had tendered for the drink. He looked at the coin and broke it in two. It was bad, and he sent for a police officer, and detained Ball, but Johnson would not stay, and went out because he said he had nothing to do with Ball.

Aquilla Parkes, landlord of the BIRD IN HAND, Spinners End, said Ball came to his house on Monday afternoon about 4.30 and called for a glass of ale, tendering the base half-crown produced, he filled the glass of ale and gave him 2s 4½d back. It rang well on the counter. Ball drank the ale and went out. The next morning a police officer came and asked if he had taken any bad money, and his wife examined the money they took on Monday and picked the half-crown out, it being the only one they took that day. He identified Ball next day.

Susan Harris, wife of Thomas Harris, licensed victualler, CROWN AND ANCHOR INN, Providence Street, New Town, said on Monday Ball came to her house and asked for a bottle of soda water, she had none and gave him a bottle of ginger beer, he tendered her half-a-crown, she gave him 2s 4½d in change and he went out. Next day she found that the coin was bad.

Louisa Nicklin said she was servant to Priscilla Foley, who kept the BRITISH OAK, High Street. On Monday afternoon both the prisoners came to the house and Ball called for a pint of ale. She filled it and Ball gave her half-a-crown which she took to her mistress who gave her change. She was quite sure that Johnson was with Ball. Priscilla Foley said when her servant brought the half-crown and she had given her the change she went into the shop and saw the prisoners standing by the counter. Two more men were with them. When she went into the bar Ball asked for the cup to be filled, and gave her a two shilling piece, she gave him 1s 9½d in change, they did not wait to empty their cup but said they must go so as not to be caught in the rain. Ball and Johnson then left the other men and went out. The two coins she received were bad, and she gave them to the police.

Emma Johnson (14), daughter of Samuel Johnson, the HEARTY GOOD FELLOW, King Street, Old Hill, said she saw the prisoners come into the house on Monday afternoon. Ball called for a quart of ale, she supplied it and Ball gave her half-a-crown in payment. She gave the change, Ball threw the drink down and both went out. Her father wanted some change and she took it to Chances for sixpences.

Hanna Webb, barmaid at Mr. John Foley's, the SWAN INN, Old Hill, said the prisoner came into the house and Ball asked for some ale and tendered her half-a-crown, she took the coin to Mrs. Foley and gave Ball the change. Hannah Foley said Hannah Webb brought her a half-crown which she put in her pocket with the other money. The same night she gave it to a police officer. PC Litherly said he was sent for to the QUEENS HEAD, Corngreaves Road, on Monday and received the half-crown produced, from Mr. Manning, who said in the presence of Ball, that he had received it from him. He took Ball into custody, and he at first gave the name of George Keel, Hart Yard, Hatton Garden, London, and said it was not half-a-crown but a two shilling piece which he gave. PCs Litherly and Lawrence proved receiving the base coins produced from the witnesses.

Inspector Walters said on Monday the prisoner Ball was brought to the station and gave the name of George Keel, Hart Yard, Hatton Garden, London. He declined to give any reference, and said witness might enquire about it. He took him to Birmingham to the detective department, where he saw detective Baker, who called Keel by his right name, and said, 'How do William Ball.' He then went to Ball's address in Bridge Street, West Hockley, and on going into the house he found the prisoner Johnson lying on a screen, he then gave the name of George William Hobson, No.13, Eaton Street, Abbey Fields, Hockley. He told him he would be charged with being in company with Ball the previous day at Old Hill, and passing counterfeit coins. He replied, 'I know nothing at all about it.' He searched him and found £1 9s 7½d all in small coins. He told him he would have to go with him to Old Hill, when he became very violent, and rushed to the table to get a knife, but he put the handcuffs on him and brought him to Old Hill. He was present in the office when Ball was identified, and he might add that he went to Eaton Street, Hockley, but no such person as the prisoner Johnson was known there.

Honor Chance, wife of John Chance, 2, King Street, underground manager for Messrs. Hingley, said she changed half-a-crown for Emma Johnson on Monday afternoon. Emma came and told her that it was a bad half-crown, and took it back.

Eliza Johnson, wife of George Johnson, publican, KINGS HEAD, Elbow Street, said four men came to her house on Monday, and Ball asked for half-an-ounce of tobacco and a pipe, and gave her half-a-crown which she changed. PC Rowlands came at night, and she found the coin was a bad one.

Mr. Henn, Cradley Heath, said PC Litherly showed him three half-crowns which he examined and found to be bad. They were made principally of lead. PC Rowlands also showed him four half-crowns, and one two shilling piece which were counterfeit. The half-crowns were all from the same mould, dated 1875, and plated.

Prisoners were remanded to Stafford to appear on Wednesday."

Dudley and District News 18/8/1883

"The third anniversary of the Old Hill Loan and Investment Society, which is held at the KINGS HEAD INN, Old Hill, was celebrated on Monday last. An excellent dinner was served up on the occasion by the host and treasurer (Mr. G. Johnson), and a good number of members attended. After the cloth was drawn Mr. Charles Lester was voted to the chair, while Mr. Isaac Hill occupied the vice-chair, and a very sociable evening was spent. Mr. Isaac Cashmore, the secretary, reported the society to be in a satisfactory condition. He stated that the number of members was 157. During the last three years the society had advanced £1,480 to members, while £196 (paid up shares) had been paid out. He also reported that the society had a reserve fund, which at the present time was worth £200, and a sinking fund worth £21 15s 0d."

"An inquest was held yesterday before Mr. E. Hooper, coroner, at the KINGS HEAD, Elbow Street, Old Hill, relative to the death of John Nayler (27), miner, who was killed whilst working in the Ridding Colliery, on the 7th inst. Mr. W. B. Scott, Government inspector, and Mr. Pickering, assistant inspector, were present. The colliery proprietors were represented by Mr. Waldron, of Brierley Hill.

Zachariah Harris deposed that he was in the employ of the Ridding Colliery Company Limited. He went down the pit where the accident happened on Monday night, in company with John Nayler. They were the only two at work in the pit. He saw Nayler lying on the ground 'holeing' when a great quantity of 'lomme' fell upon him, and completely covered him. He ran to the bottom of the pit and shouted for assistance, but failed to obtain a hearing. There was no signal bell, and had not been one since he commenced to work at the pit, which was on Friday last. It was about half-past two when the accident happened, and he remained at the bottom of the shaft until two of the miners came at seven o'clock the next morning. There was a banksman at the top of the pit when deceased and himself went down, but he did not stay there throughout the night. He thought at the time he went down that the engineer and banksmen would remain there. In reply to Mr. Scott, witness said Nayler had 'holed' under about three feet. He had been at work for three hours and a half, and during that time he had never put a tree up.

Thomas Priest stated that he was deputy at the Ridding Colliery. He left the pit on Monday night, and on Tuesday morning, when he descended again, he found that a great fall of clay had taken place. He had left a man named Westwood in charge of the pit on the Monday night, but it was understood that he would leave the place a few hours afterwards.

Mark Priest deposed to being on duty as watchman at the top of the pit from 6pm to 6am. He heard the boy shout up the shaft in the night, but could not make out what he said. In answer to the Coroner, witness said the signals had been broken for two or three days.

Mr. W. H. Pickering said he examined the pit on Wednesday, and found that earth had fallen through a slip. The timber was placed about 5 feet from the back of the 'holeing.' The Act of Parliament had not been infringed, but his opinion was that, owing to the nature of the roof, more timber should have been used.

In summing up, the Coroner said he had held office for more than thirty years, and he did not think he had come across a worse case. A more disgraceful occurrence had not been heard of for years. He hoped the inspector would take the most rigid steps he possibly could.

The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death, and added a rider to the effect that it was their opinion that the person in charge ought to have been down the pit when the man lost his life, and they considered the owners were most blameable in not providing sufficient signalling apparatus, and also for not having the engineer at his post. They requested the inspector to make the most stringent measures that the law allowed him to take.”

County Express 29/8/1885

“William Walter Homer and Jeremiah Skidmore, the proprietors of the Ridding Colliery, were summoned by Mr. Scott, Government Inspector, for a series of offences under the Coal Mines’ Regulation Act. Thomas Priest, the doggy, was also summoned at the instance of Messrs. Homer and Skidmore, for violating three of the colliery rules. It was explained by the Magistrates’ Clerk that in all twenty two summonses had been issued, and Mr. Waldron, who represented the defendants, applied for the summonses to be adjourned. The magistrates decided to adjourn the hearing of the case until September 23rd. Proceedings had been initiated in consequence of a man named John Nayler meeting with his death at the colliery on July 7th.”

[The adjourned hearing was again adjourned because the defendant solicitor could not attend. When the case was heard Jeremiah Skidmore was fined 10s and costs in several summonses, the other summonses were dismissed on payment of costs. Thomas Priest was fined 10s and costs.]

He urged upon all miners the absolute necessity of improving their organisation if they would improve their position. If nothing was done during good trade their position would be unbearable in depressed times. A resolution was unanimously passed in favour of better organisation.”

“On Monday night a large representative meeting of delegates connected with the Old Hill and District Miners’ Association, was held at the KINGS HEAD, Old Hill, a miner presiding. Mr. B. Winwood (agent) explained that the new Coal Mines Regulations Act would come into operation in July next. Regarding the explosives order, if this was not satisfactory to them, the miners’ options should be ascertained by means of open-air meetings held throughout the district with a view to claim exemption from it, and to send a deputation to the Home Secretary upon the question. A resolution was unanimously carried in favour of holding Sunday open-air meetings to obtain the men’s opinions on the question.”

“On Monday morning an inquest was held at the DUKE WILLIAM INN, Garratts Lane, Old Hill, concerning the death of Alfred George Foxall (42), blacksmith, of Bank Street, Old Hill, who died suddenly on Sunday morning. On Saturday night deceased returned home from the KINGS HEAD INN, where he had been playing the piano. He ate a good supper, and at 2-40 the next morning he was taken suddenly ill. Dr. Mitchell was called in, but deceased expired before his arrival. He was described by Inspector Given as a steady and sober man, and a verdict of Death from Natural Causes was returned by the jury.”

“On Monday night Mr. Joseph James, landlord of the KINGS HEAD INN, Elbow Street, died very suddenly at his residence. It appears that deceased went out to a birthday party, and immediately after returning home he was seized with violent pains near his heart, and expired before medical aid could be obtained. Death was due to heart disease, and, as Mr. James had been medically examined prior to his death, no inquest was deemed necessary. Much sympathy is felt for the relatives.”

County Advertiser 30/1/1904

“On Wednesday night a meeting of the miners who have been thrown out of employment in consequence of the stoppage of Rowley Hall and Yew Tree Collieries, was held at the KINGS HEAD INN, Old Hill. Mr. B. Winwood (miners’ agent) presided over a large attendance. At the outset it was resolved that a vote of condolence with the widow and family of the late Mr. James, landlord of the public house, and also treasurer of the miners’ lodge held there, be conveyed to Mrs. James. Mr. Winwood then pointed out that during the last two weeks, when he issued an appeal, their funds were increasing. The first week they were able to pay 6s each to all the men, and 3s to the boys. Last week, through a special effort made possible by Col. Webb, MP for the King-swinford Division, who had sent them a donation of £5 5s, they had been able to pay them 7s 6d each. Strong efforts were being made to re-start the collieries, and he expressed the hope that in the course of a few weeks all the men would resume work. Some of them had obtained employment, and their numbers were gradually growing less.

A resolution was passed thanking the subscribers to the fund.

The balance sheet shows that £27 9s 9½d had been collected, and that seventy men had received 7s 6d each, leaving a balance of 10s in hand, after paying some small expenses.”

“On Wednesday morning, Mr. H. A. Pearson (coroner) held an inquest at the KINGS HEAD INN, Elbow Street, respecting the death of Elsie Southern, aged five years, daughter of John and Ann Southern, of Elbow Street, Old Hill, who died under shocking circumstances on Tuesday. The mother of the child stated that on Monday afternoon she brewed a large quantity of beer and placed it in a bath. Afterwards she put the bath in the yard for the purpose of cooling the beer. Deceased was missed from the house and she (the mother) was subsequently informed that the girl had been found in the bath containing the beer.

Esther Ashman, a neighbour, deposed to finding the child in the beer on the date in question. She was in a conscious condition, and was crying for her mother. She had fallen backwards into the bath. Dr. Mackay said deceased sustained shocking scalds which proved fatal on the following morning. Police-constable Gratage also gave evidence and the coroner remarked that it was a very sad and extraordinary case. There was no doubt that the child in playing close to the bath had fallen into the beer. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

County Advertiser 10/9/1904

“On Monday afternoon, Mr. A. A. Betham (deputy coroner) held an inquest at the KINGS HEAD INN, Elbow Street, Old Hill, relative to the death of a child named Wilfred Baden Charles, aged three years and three months, whose parents reside in Elbow Street, Old Hill, who met with his death through being run over on the 3rd inst. Mr. Hollowell (from the office of Mr. Geo. Green, Cradley Heath) appeared for the relatives of the lad.

John Henry Charles, father of deceased, stated he last saw his son alive on Friday night, the 2nd inst, when he was in good health. On the following day he heard that he had been killed. Witness went home and found him dead. Deceased had always been strong and healthy. In reply to the Coroner, witness said he had a complaint to make against the driver of the vehicle which knocked his son down, as at the time of the accident he was thrashing the animal, and was also driving on his wrong side.

James Roberts, a miller, of Elbow Street, Old Hill, stated that on the afternoon of the 3rd inst he was passing along Elbow Street when he saw a horse and trap, driven by Joseph Rock, jun, of Halesowen Road, coming round the corner. The horse was trotting sharply, and the driver struck it with the whip. A number of children were running across the street at the time. Witness shouted to Rock, ‘Hello, where are you going to?’ Rock appeared to be driving carelessly, and continued to drive on after witness shouted to him. Witness saw the deceased lad start to cross the road, and four or five other children ran in front of him. When about three parts across the horse knocked down the lad. He rolled over two or three times, and the off wheel of the vehicle passed over the top part of deceased’s chest. After knocking the lad down the driver again struck the horse, and witness shouted to him, ‘You have got to come back.' Rock then stopped the horse, got out of the trap, and came to deceased. He said, 'Has it hurt the lad?' to which witness replied, 'You can see it has.' Deceased was carried home by some boys. In reply to Mr. Hollowell, witness said the driver was on the wrong side of the road. Replying to a Jurymen, the witness said he knew the horse, and he had never known it go along so fast as it did on this occasion. It generally took some trouble to get it along. The driver, in his opinion, had plenty of chance to see the children.

Frank Woodcock, of Elbow Street, Old Hill, corroborated the story of the last witness with regard to the accident. He also stated that the driver struck the animal with the whip as he was turning out of Elbow Street. The animal was travelling at the rate of about eight miles an hour. The last witness shouted to the driver as deceased was crossing the road, but he was knocked down by the horse. The driver went some distance away before he stopped the horse. In reply to questions, witness said he knew it was a slow horse, but the driver was making it go as fast as it could.

Joseph Rock, the driver, who was cautioned, next gave evidence. He stated that he was an assistant to his father, who was a grocer in Halesowen Road, Old Hill. On the afternoon of the date named he was driving his father's horse and trap, and when passing the bottom of Wagon Street, the animal shied at some water in the road. Witness gave him some cuts with the whip. The animal was trotting but was not going very fast. When witness got into Elbow Street several children started running across the roadway. Deceased was the last one, and before he could get clear the horse knocked him down. He was close to the middle of the road at the time. Witness shouted to the lad, and tried to pull the horse on one side, but the child appeared to stand still, and was knocked down. When the horse felt something touch him it went all the faster, and it ran quite thirty yards before witness could pull up. In reply to questions, witness said he had driven the horse four or five times weekly for eighteen months, and had no previous accident or complaint. The horse was not a fast one, but was given to shying, and witness whipped it on account of its shying. Deceased ran out of an entry almost as soon as he got to it. He ran straight up against the horse before witness could stop. Witness was driving on the proper side of the road. He denied having whipped the horse after he turned into Elbow Street. Inspector Gibbs pointed out the deceased's father had informed him that the lad had been run over twelve months ago through running out of an entry.

The Deputy Coroner re-called the father, who denied that the child had met with a serious accident, but stated that twelve months ago he ran out of an entry into a cart wheel and had to be treated by a doctor.

After a short deliberation the jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death, and attached no blame to the driver of the vehicle."

Black Country Bugle (April 1983)

“The original building on this site was Hackett’s Farm with lands which occupied the ground where Blackheath town developed after Rowley Church glebe lands were sold 140 years ago.

Joseph Hackett, the tenant farmer at that time, quickly calculated that selling ales and spirits would accrue far greater profits than the agricultural labours his ancestors had pursued for generations, but he retained a few acres of land at the rear of the house as a smallholding. This was known as Hackett’s Ground and later became the place where traveling fairs and theatre companies entertained Blackheath’s rapidly growing population.....

The GEORGE AND DRAGON was the local tavern mainly used by colliers and brickmakers in the town for Joseph Hackett had financial interests in both trades. It is said that he made a fortune and built Hackett Street (later named Heath Street) to commemorate his family’s long connection with the area, not to mention the rents which accrued from that long street of terraced houses.....

But around the turn of the century its licensee was another legendary local character – Sergeant Salt – a former policeman who had gained fame for decimating ‘The Smethwick Slogging Gang’ – a group of villains we would term muggers today.

.....Eventually the old farmhouse cum tavern was pulled down and replaced by the present building.....”

The spindle had caught his frock a short time before, and torn a piece from it, and he was desired and urged by William Wildsmith, the manager of the machine, to take his frock off, but deceased refused, and said he knew more about the machine than he (Wildsmith) did. Wolverhampton Chronicle 31/10/1860

“On Tuesday morning an accident occurred at the Bear Moor Colliery, belonging to the New British Iron Company, whereby three men, Josiah Chivers, Henry Smith, and Joseph Siviter, were buried alive. It appears that the three men had gone down to a worked-out portion of the pit to eat their breakfast, and had sat down a few seconds, when about 100 tons of earth and rubbish fell upon them from the roof of the pit, literally burying them alive. A lad had a miraculous escape. He was driving a horse close by the spot when the rubbish fell, the animal being buried, whilst the boy only received slight bruises. The most painful excitement prevailed in the locality during the day. Great difficulty was experienced in extricating the bodies, it being close to midnight before the last was recovered. On Friday, Mr. Edwin Hooper, coroner, held inquests upon the bodies of two men, namely Siviter and Chivers, the other being removed beyond his district. The inquest on Siviter was held at the GEORGE AND DRAGON INN, Blackheath, and that on Chivers at the BELL INN, Cradley. It was stated that the pit was considered quite safe, and that the proprietors were known to be particularly careful that all necessary works for the safety of the men should be performed. The father of the deceased Siviter gave evidence that he was at work in the mine at the time of the accident, and that he considered it quite safe. The accident, it was stated, arose from a bump in the coal. The Coroner, after a lengthened inquiry, left it with the jury whether they thought an adjournment necessary, but they expressed themselves perfectly satisfied, and a verdict of Accidental Death was recorded.”

“It will be recollected that on the 18th of January last, a terrible colliery accident occurred at Mr. Dawes’s Pits, at Blackheath, by which three men were entombed alive, a number of valuable horses burnt, and property to very considerable extent destroyed. The cause of the calamity was the breaking out of a fire in which the stables of the thick coal pit above the whitestone workings. The smoke produce filled up the stone pit and suffocated both men and horses. The flames extended up the shafts, burnt the ‘guides’ running up the sides, and cut off all possible communication with the sufferers below. The shafts had to be dammed up and covered over to prevent the draught feeding the flames. Notwithstanding this precaution the fire still continued to burn, and smoke to ascend through the rubbish with which the up-cast shaft was covered. The pit continued to be almost inaccessible until the 17th of February, when the bodies of the three men were recovered and brought to the surface. They were subsequently interred in the churchyard attached to the parish church of Rowley.

Yesterday, at the GEORGE AND DRAGON INN, Blackheath, E. Hooper, Esq (coroner), opened an inquest upon the bodies of the deceased men, whose names were Thomas Johnson, 20; Edward Hunt, 18; and William Hunt, 20. The Government Inspector of Mines was present during the enquiry, and the foreman of the jury was Mr. Thomas Darby.

The first witness was Richard Beddow. He said: I am in the employ of Mr. Dawes at the same pit as the deceased men. On the 18th of January I came up the stone pit at twenty-seven minutes past one, and I was the last person up before the accident occurred. I left the deceased man Johnson, and Edward Hunt, down the pit. William Hunt came up with me, but prepared to go down again immediately. The watchman, William Moore, called me about three o’clock on the following morning, and told me to go to the pit. On looking towards the pit from my window, I saw smoke coming out of the shaft, and its density concealed the pulleys of the pit frame. We then put two or three planks over the pit’s mouth and went to fetch other men to assist us. Plant and the doggy, Ashman, went down the coal pit after several trials, and remained down about ten minutes. When I came out of the pit, Johnson was reading a newspaper (Daily Post) at the engine, about twenty-five yards from the engine shaft, and six yards from the engine fire. There was no appearance of the fire when I left the pit. We shouted down both shafts, but received no answer. The signals were all right in the stone pit when I left, and the men could have communicated with the top of the shaft if they had come to the bottom and tried to do so.

By the Inspector: I have been a collier thirty years and when the winding machine has been out of order I have seen temporary measures resorted to to raise men out of the pit. I was once raised by horses myself. I had not presence of mind enough in this case to think of it, and besides there are difficulties about using horses. We had not sufficient rope, and we could not find a pulley suitable for the purpose. We went round the neighbourhood to get rope and a proper snatch.

By the Foreman: The ‘band’ was put down and lashed to the bottom, so that before it could be loosed some one would have to go down.

Thomas Llewellyn, being sworn, said: I am chartermaster at the Blackheath Colliery. I was at the pit on Friday previous to the accident, and remained there till Saturday night. Johnson had been down the pit during the day, and came up at six o’clock, and he, with the brothers Hunt, went down again. Johnson was engineer to the pit, and the Hunts went down to fetch some slack to supply the engine down the pit. The first intimation I had of the accident was the hearing of a rumbling noise about three o’clock on Saturday morning, while I was on the bank in the engine house. My impression at first was that it was a large iron drum being moved along the bank. The noise continued, but not so loud. I saw something which appeared to me to be steam and rubbish coming up the up-cast shaft. I then ran on to the bank, and found the steam still ascending fiercely up the shaft. I saw fire in small ashes and sparks playing about the top of the shaft. I sent off for assistance, and we immediately began to cover over the down-cast shaft. There were seventeen horses in the pit. We found in a few minutes, from the smell, that it was wood that was burning, and we could see that the guides were on fire down the sides of the shaft. We got the crossbar out, and sent the barrel down to see if the men would come to the bottom. Previous to that we had called down the down-cast shaft to the men twenty or thirty times, but received no answer. We ‘loosed’ the barrel down many times, and made a great noise, to attract the attention of the men, but could not; and when the barrel came up, the water in it which came out of the ‘sump’ was quite hot, and the rope as it went over the pulley frizzled with the heat. My opinion now is that the men, if they had been at the bottom, could not live in such a heat as must have then existed. We continued to pour water down the shafts until Saturday night. The manager (Mr. Whitehead) and the clerk (Mr. Dutton) were sent for about five o’clock in the morning, and they came as soon as possible. Mr. Baker, the Government Inspector, was also sent for, and he arrived about one o’clock. I went to several places to get a rope and pulley, but I could not get anything to suit the purpose. About twelve o’clock we put up some fresh framing with a rope over the up-cast shaft. No one ventured to go down, as all considered it unsafe. The shaft was then covered over again to await Mr. Baker.....

The Coroner enquired whether the jury wished any further evidence adduced, and also intimated that he scarcely thought any further light could be thrown upon the catastrophe.

The Jury assented, and were left to consider their verdict.

After a short deliberation the Jury returned a lengthy verdict, the effect of which was that the deceased Died from Suffocation produced by a fire in the pit, but what caused the fire there was no evidence to show. The Foreman also added that the opinion of the Jury was that everything that humanity could suggest for the rescue of the men was done, and the opinion of the neighbourhood was also the same.

“On Wednesday last an inquest was held by Mr. Phillips, at the house of Mr. Fullwood, Upper Gornal, on the body of George Smith, a blacksmith, residing at Blackheath. The deceased, it appears on the 16th inst, became very violent in a public house, occupied by Mr. Joseph Hackett, at Blackheath, and Police-constable Slym was called in to remove him. He struck the officer violently, and considerable force was of necessity used to get the deceased to the station. The staff used by the officer was brought into action consequent upon the violence of the deceased. The injuries inflicted were of such a nature that it was deemed advisable to convey the deceased to the Dudley Workhouse, where he died on Tuesday last. It was stated that the deceased was of violent character, and of unsound mind. The inquest was adjourned until Monday next. It does not at present appear that the officer acted with undue violence.”

[At the adjourned inquest the jury returned a verdict to the effect that death was by excessive drinking, but they censured the sergeant in charge of the station, and the officer Slym, for not having obtained medical aid sooner to deceased, it having transpired that he had been in custody thirty hours without any medical man being called in.]

“An inquest was held at Mr. Hackett's, the GEORGE AND DRAGON INN, before Mr. Hooper, Coroner, on Monday, on the body of Job Hiscock, aged 22.

It appears that deceased has been engaged at the Gawn Colliery, and whilst he was at work there on the 23rd, he was so badly bruised that he died from the injuries received on the 5th inst.

Mr. Malins, surgeon, attended deceased.

The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

Mr. Baker, Inspector of Mines, was present during the inquiry.”

“Robert Hackett, proprietor of the GEORGE AND DRAGON INN, Blackheath, was charged with being the occupier of certain fields, and permitting the same to be used for the purpose of betting. Mr. Addison appeared to prosecute, and Mr. Shakespeare of Oldbury, was for the defence.

Mr. Addison said that the prosecution was laid under sec.3 of the Act 16 and 17 Vic. He should call witnesses to prove that on the 27th November last the defendant, who was the occupier of a field about 200 yards from his house, opened it for a pigeon-shooting match, which a large number of persons congregated to witness. During the day betting transactions were taking place freely in the field, and as the defendant was watching the shooting, and marking down the result of the shots, he could not but have heard them. Under the section quoted the defendant was liable to a penalty of £100 on conviction.

Police-constable Parker said that on the 27th November he was sent on special duty in plain clothes to the defendant's field, where a pigeon-shooting match was being held. Police-constable Thorley accompanied him. They paid 6d each for admission into the field, and received a pint of ale in return for the check given them. There were some hundreds of people in the field, and the defendant was amongst them. He had a book in his hand in which he marked down the number of pigeons killed by each shooter. There was betting going on very generally, some persons betting half-a-crown to a shilling, and three shillings to one on the gun or the birds. Witness got upon the ground at about half-past two o'clock in the day, and remained there until about five o'clock, during the whole of which time betting was going on. He saw a police-constable named Himan on the ground. There was a refreshment booth on the ground.

Cross-examined: Defendant did not use his book to put down bets. Witness did not know that Police-constable Himan was sent to the ground by the chief-constable, at the request of the defendant, or that the latter paid him 5s.

Re-examined: There was a 'row' between some men about a bet which the looser refused to pay, and defendant called Himan to settle it.

Police-constable Thorley gave evidence of a similar character.

Police-constable Himan said that he was on the field in question on the 27th November last from about half-past ten o'clock in the morning.

In cross-examination he said he was paid 5s, the usual fee, by Mr. Hackett, for attending. He did not see any money passed on account of bets.

This being the case for the prosecution, Mr. Shakespeare proceeded to address the magistrates on behalf of the defendant. He first called their attention to the words of the Act applying to the case, which were that a penalty was incurred by any person who being the owner or occupier of a place, 'shall knowingly and wilfully permit the same to be opened, kept, or used for such purposes' of betting. He submitted prima facie the place was opened for the purpose of shooting pigeons, and if there were bets made afterwards against his wish, there was no permission on his part. The policemen who were called only said betting was seen to take place, they did not say that Mr. Hackett saw it, and was that to be taken as meaning, under that highly penal statute, a guilty knowledge and wilful permission? The Act, he reminded the magistrates, was intended to put down those places where persons were in the habit of meeting for the express purpose of betting. If Mr. Hackett had contemplated allowing anything illegal to take place he would certainly not have written to the Chief-constable stating his intention, and asking for an officer to be sent down, in order to convict him. If, however, the Bench thought defendant had committed the offence, he asked them to deal leniently with him, on account of the previous excellent character his house, which he had kept for 47 years, had borne.

The magistrates retired to consider the case. On their return into court Colonel Fletcher said they thought it their duty to convict the defendant. They did not intend to fine him £100, as they had power to do, but only 40s and costs. They had considered, in fixing this penalty, the good character of the defendant and the house he kept, and had decided in the event of another appearance for an offence of the same nature, to inflict a very substantial penalty.

Mr. Addison said he instructed to apply for the attorney's fees, £1 1s. the Magistrates granted the application.”

“The rivet makers of Blackheath and neighbourhood have struck against a proposed reduction of 10 per cent in wages. Since 1877 the men have been compelled to submit to reductions amounting, with one of 10 per cent, agreed on that year, to 25 per cent off the wages, and the masters now making a further proposal for 10 per cent drop, they have this week entered upon a strike without giving the customary fortnight’s notice. The leaders explained the steps which have led to the strike at a large meeting held on Tuesday, at the GEORGE AND DRAGON INN, Blackheath.....”

“A meeting of rivet-makers on strike was held on Monday, at the GEORGE AND DRAGON INN, Blackheath; Mr. John Bennett presiding. The Chairman said a few of the men had resumed work, but efforts would be made to induce them to turn out again. He also mentioned that the Blackheath masters were only paying 7s per cwt for gas rivets at Halesowen, while the Old Hill masters were paying 7s 6d per cwt. He urged the men to remain firm to the original resolution. Mr. Isaac Cashmore remarked that the men had entered upon the fifth week of the strike, and at present he regretted to say the masters did not seem disposed to meet them in a conciliatory spirit.....

A mass meeting of the rivet makers on strike in the Birmingham and Rowley districts was held at the GEORGE AND DRAGON INN, Blackheath, on Wednesday, under the presidency of Mr. John Bennett. The Chairman said the gloomy prospects under which the present week began led him to fear that the strike would be a failure; but the strike and co-operation of the Halesowen men were calculated to bring about the advance which was desired.....”

“Myra Handley, Causeway, Blackheath, was charged with inciting to steal three bottles of porter, the property of George Dexter, licensed victualler, Oldbury, and receiving the same knowing them to have been stolen. The case is a sequel to one which was before the Court a fortnight ago, in which a boy named Joseph Stewart was fined 20s for stealing the porter from Mr. Dexter’s cart whilst it was standing at Blackheath.

The boy Stewart now stated that he took a bottle of porter from the cart on the 3rd of April, and took it to the defendant. She drank the greater portion of it, and said, 'You young b—— you daren't fetch three more bottles, adding that if he would she would give him 1d. He and a boy named Israel Gould fetched three more bottles from the cart, and took them to the defendant, and she and her daughter drank the porter.

William Hackett, landlord of the GEORGE AND DRAGON, Blackheath, said the defendant brought three empty porter bottles back to him on the 3rd April. He told her they were not his, as he had sold no porter. She replied he could give her some ale for them.

Mr. Dexter was called, and identified the bottles as those stolen from his cart.

Defendant said she did not know the porter was stolen, and called her daughter in support of this statement.

A fine of 20s was imposed, in default fourteen days."

County Advertiser 14/3/1885

"On Monday evening a daring robbery was committed at the house of Mr. William Hackett, GEORGE AND DRAGON HOTEL, High Street, Blackheath. It seems that on Monday afternoon a stranger, dressed in a shabby-genteel suit went to Mr. Hackett's house and inquired if Mr. Hackett was at home. Receiving a reply in the negative, he left the house, and has not been seen since. On the same evening two strangers – one a well-dressed man with a bushy moustache and the other described as a low-looking character – entered Mr. Hackett's concert hall, and after being supplied with some liquor, remained standing at the end of the bar counter. Shortly after their entrance Mrs. Hackett went upstairs, and upon leaving her bed room locked the door, leaving the gas lit, and hung the key in the bar downstairs. While Mrs. Hackett was upstairs the two strangers left the house, but returned shortly afterwards. While the men were in the room their appearance excited the curiosity of some of the customers, who, in a conversation which ensued, made some speculations as to who they were. No one, however, had the slightest idea as to who they were and where they had come from, but it was generally agreed, after careful scrutiny, that the moustache of the gentlemanly stranger was too luxuriant to be real. Upon arriving at this conclusion the curious customers took no more notice of the two men, but turned their attention to the music which was at that time being given. The musical part of the programme, however, was brought to an abrupt termination shortly afterwards by a singular incident. It seems that one of the customers in the room called for a glass of spirits for the young woman who presided at the pianoforte. Mrs. Hackett filled the glass and placed it on the counter near the two strangers. It seemed that these men noticed for whom the glass was filled, and it is supposed that one of them, unseen, 'faked' the contents. Whether that was so or not no one knows, but shortly after taking a sip at her glass the pianist was suddenly taken ill and was carried out of the room in an almost insensible condition. This incident of course caused some confusion, and in the confusion the two strangers quietly slipped out of the room and have not been seen since. At eleven o'clock the house was closed, and Mrs. Hackett and her servant sat in the back room till twenty minutes past eleven, when Mr. Hackett returned home. As soon as he entered the house he enquired how it was the front bed room window was open and that the curtains were blowing outside. Mrs. Hackett denied that the window was open or that the curtains were blowing, and in support of this said that when she was in the room earlier the window was closed and everything was in perfect order. This aroused Mr. Hackett's suspicions, and he immediately went upstairs. Finding the bed room in darkness, he obtained a light, thinking that there might be someone in the room. He found, however, that the room had been ransacked, and that the thieves had entered and left by the front window, which was then wide open. Besides about £30 in gold and silver, a quantity of jewellery was missed, including a gold watch and chain, a pair of bracelets, a pair of ear-rings, two diamond rings, and two dress rings. The money was taken from a cash box, and the jewellery from another box in the room. As soon as it was found that a burglary had been committed, information was given to the police, but up to the present no clue had been obtained. It is a singular fact that at twenty minutes past ten in the evening Police-sergeant Hand went to the house, but he saw no traces of a burglary having been committed. Shortly after nine o'clock on the same evening, a little girl went to Mr. Hackett's house, and upon returning home, told her mother that although it was dark Mr. Hackett's man was cleaning the front bed room window. The girl's mother, however, thought she must have been mistaken, and took no notice of her story. It is stated that two men, who were unknown, took tickets at Rowley Railway Station for Birmingham by the 9.27 train. The thieves had every facility for carrying out their object at the time. Mr. Hackett was away from home, and in the confusion which existed while the pianist was unwell they had an opportunity of getting into the bed room. There is no doubt that they got on the bow window on the ground floor, and then through the bed room window. The burglary has excited a good deal of interest in the district, and on every hand the hope is expressed that the burglars will be brought to justice."

“Mr. Edwin Hooper (South Staffordshire Coroner) held an inquest on Saturday, at the GEORGE AND DRAGON INN, High Street, Blackheath, Rowley Regis, touching the death of John Samuel Bate (11), residing in Darby Street, who had been found drowned.

The evidence of the mother showed that the deceased had, through overstudy at school, recently complained of severe pains in his head, and during the last few weeks been very strange in his manner. Although he was only eleven years of age he had passed the fifth standard. On the 10th inst he had a dispute with his sister, and eventually struck her. Upon his mother remonstrating with him he said, ‘You shan't box my ears,’ and immediately ran out of the house without stopping to put on his coat or hat. On the 11th inst Joseph Bate dragged the basin of the Birmingham Canal in Waterfall Lane, Old Hill, and found the body of the deceased.

The Coroner said deceased was a very sensitive boy, and it was possible that he was himself responsible for his own death. There was a doubt in the case, and he thought it would be advisable to let the deceased have the benefit of it by returning an Open Verdict.

The jury concurred.”

“On Saturday a serious accident occurred at the Yew Tree Colliery at Rowley, belonging to Messrs. Cochrane and Co, which resulted in the death of two miners named Clifford Priest (23), of Darby Street, Blackheath, and Joseph Stringer (33), of Elbow Street, Old Hill. The deceased men had been working in No.6 stall at the colliery with another miner, William Stringer, of High Street, Old Hill, a brother of Joseph Stringer, but he left his fellow workmen for the purpose of obtaining a pick, which was in another part of the workings. He had not proceeded far when he heard a loud noise, and upon going back found that a large quantity of fine slack weighing something like ten tons had fallen from the roof in the vicinity of the place where he left his brother and Priest at work. Stringer searched for the missing men, but was unsuccessful, and, concluding that they were buried under the debris, raised an alarm. Rescue parties were organised by Mr. Meacham, the manager, but the work was fraught with considerable danger in consequence of frequent falls of slack that occurred. A road was cut to a part of the stall where it was thought the deceased men might possibly be alive, but without success, and eventually, after several hours' work, three of the rescue party discovered the dead body of Stringer, and an hour and a half later Priest's body was extricated. They were both found in a position which indicated that they had been buried whilst at work. Death was due to suffocation, for neither of the men had sustained any serious injury. The bodies were removed to Blackheath to await an inquest. Both men are married, and Priest, who was highly respected in the district and held a number of offices in connection with the Blackheath Methodist New Connexion Church, was married only fifteen months ago.

On Tuesday, Mr. H. A. Pearson (Coroner) held the inquest at the GEORGE AND DRAGON INN, High Street, Blackheath. Mr. R. H. Makepeace, the Government Inspector of Mines for the district, was present, and the manager (Mr. J. Meacham) represented the owners of the colliery.

William Stringer, a miner, of High Street, Old Hill, stated that on Saturday he was working with his brother, Joseph Stringer, and Priest. They were replacing a tree in No.6 stall, which had fallen during the night. Preparations had been made, and witness left the two deceased men for a few minutes in order to obtain a prop. He had not proceeded far when he heard a loud crash, and upon going back found that a quantity of fine slack had fallen, burying his two fellow workmen. Witness raised an alarm, and the deceased men were recovered, but the miners had to burrow through four yards of coal to reach them.

Thomas Hill, under manager at the colliery, who assisted in the search for the deceased men, said they were both dead when extricated from the debris. Stringer was kneeling down by the side of the road, and Priest was crushed between two trees. He estimated that about 20 tons of slack fell. He examined the place before the men commenced to work, and considered it safe.

Dr. Tebbetts said death was due to suffocation, neither of the men being injured.

Sergeant Bentley deposed to removing the bodies to the GEORGE AND DRAGON INN to await an inquest. As soon as the bodies were brought to the surface the relatives claimed them, whilst a large number of miners who had assembled objected to them being removed to the mortuary, and threatened the police that they would have a rough passage if they had attempted to do so. The miners said it was always a rule in the district for the bodies to be removed to their homes.

The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death, and attached no blame to anyone.”

“At Old Hill Police Court, on Wednesday, Mr. W. H. Turner (Dudley) made an application on behalf of the North Worcestershire Breweries Co. Ltd. Early in the year the justices approved plans for the rebuilding of the GEORGE AND DRAGON INN, High Street, Blackheath. Since that application there had occurred the introduction of the Licensing Bill, and though that Bill was dead, his clients considered they were not justified in spending £900 or £1,000 upon the improvement of the premises. They, however, recognised that something must be done to put the premises in a proper condition and he suggested that his clients should meet Supt. Johnson at the premises and decide what was required to improve the house.

Mr. A. H. Bassano (chairman) said the Bench considered the application should be made at the annual licensing sessions.”

“At Old Hill Police Court, on Wednesday, John William Beck, licensee of the GEORGE AND DRAGON INN, High Street, Blackheath, was summoned for assaulting Thomas Jones, fruiterer, of High Street, Blackheath, on Thursday week. Mr. R. Bate appeared to defend.

Prosecutor stated that at 9.30pm he went to defendant’s house to have a drink. Whilst he was there defendant came in and fell down. Beck then came up to witness, who was standing by the counter, and commenced an argument. Witness said to him, ‘I have not come to have a bother; I have come for a pint of ale, and to be still.’ Defendant said, ‘I will toss you for two glasses of whisky,’ and witness replied, ‘I have not come here for gambling.’ Defendant retorted, ‘You are like all the fruiterers in Blackheath.’ He continued to challenge witness, and at last witness tossed him for two glasses of whisky, and won. Defendant then took up a jug, and poured the contents over witness, afterwards striking him on the head with the jug. Beck also seized witness, dragged him into the street, and knocked him down. Witness got up, but defendant knocked him down again, and kicked and punched him, causing blood to flow from his right eye and left ear.

In reply to Mr. Bate, witness said he had no struggle with defendant for possession of the cup. Defendant pushed him out as soon as he had hit him with the cup. Witness was rendered partially unconscious. He denied that he was requested to leave the house, neither had the defendant had cause to get him out previously.

Herbert Parks, bricklayer, of Darby Street, Blackheath, stated that when passing by the public house, he heard a bump, and saw that prosecutor had been knocked to the ground. Prosecutor got up, and Beck knocked him down again. In reply to Mr. Bate, the witness said he thought Beck was pushing the man out when he heard the first bump. The second blow, however, was ‘no push.’ Benjamin Parkes, another witness stated that after Jones won when tossing for the whisky, defendant bundled him out of the house, and struck him. Defendant was not drunk, but he was under the influence of drink.

Mr. Bate, for the defence, gave a complete denial of the charge. He contended that the prosecutor visited the public house and created a disturbance. The trouble was caused through Jones interfering with an argument which was taking place between Beck and a customer. When ordered to leave the house he refused, and defendant put him out with no more force than was necessary. Defendant said that he been engaged at a party to old folks at the HANDEL Assembly Rooms. When he returned Jones was in the house, and soon after he had been in the prosecutor interfered with a conversation upon business between himself and a gentleman. He found it necessary to order Jones out of the house, but he would not go, and he had to put him out. He denied striking him. In reply to Jones, witness said there was no tossing for drinks. It was true that he fell as he entered the public house. He fell over someone’s foot.

Samuel Grove, of Powke Lane, Blackheath, spoke to seeing defendant and prosecutor wrestling for the possession of a pint cup. He did not see any blows struck.

David Rushton, of High Street, Blackheath, and Florence Giles, the barmaid at the public house, gave corroborative evidence. The Bench considered the case proved, and fined defendant 10s and costs, or 14 days’ imprisonment.”

“John William Beck, landlord of the GEORGE AND DRAGON, High Street, Blackheath, was summoned before Messrs. A. H. Bassano and J. W. Tilley, at the Old Hill Police Court, for being drunk on his own premises on the night of the 31st December. Mr. Bate appeared for the defence, Superintendent Johnson prosecuting.

Sergeant Bentley deposed that on the 31st December at 10.15pm he saw Beck in the passage at his house, the GEORGE AND DRAGON, Blackheath. He was drunk.

The Clerk: How did you happen to be on the premises? – I had received a complaint, and I went to the house.

Mr. Bate: What evidence of drunkenness did you see in Beck? – He was leaning on the bar counter and the partition. He also had to steady himself as he walked up the passage.

Proceeding, witness said he called at the house again at eight minutes to 11, when defendant was still drunk.

Mr. Bate: Why did you not state that in your evidence? – I have no answer.

Did you tell him he was drunk? – No; I had told him previously, and it was not necessary to tell him again.

Superintendent Johnson: It is not the duty of a policeman to be continually going into a man’s house and telling him he is drunk, and tantalising him? – No.

Witness went on to state, in answer to the superintendent, that he had no doubt that Beck was drunk. His speech was incoherent, and his voice low.

PCs Stevens and Munslow corroborated.

Thomas Jones, greengrocer, High Street, Blackheath, said that on the 31st December when the landlord entered the house he was drunk and fell twice. Asked by Mr. Bate, witness said he did not see anyone trip Beck.

Mary Jones, High Street, Blackheath, said that on the date in question she went to the GEORGE AND DRAGON and saw the landlord, who was drunk. She told him he was drunk and not fit to be in the place.

For the defence Mr. Bate said his client was not drunk. He had been assisting as a waiter at the old folks’ treat in the HANDEL Assembly Room, Blackheath, and had gone straight home afterwards.

Defendant said he left the dining hall and went into the HANDEL HOTEL, leaving there at 9.30 and going straight home. There was a disturbance in the house, and he put the witness Jones out. Then he left the house to go to a committee meeting. He saw Sergeant Bentley, PC Stevens, and PC Munslow, and watched them go into his house. He turned back, and some conversation took place on the disturbance. The sergeant then told him he had had enough, but he must keep quiet and he would hear nothing further about the bother. He was not drunk and his speech was not thick. He had held a license six years.

Answering Superintendent Johnson, witness said Mrs. Smets did not tell him to leave the house and that his conduct would not be tolerated there. It was true that he had words with a man named Wilkes, but he was not ordered out. He did not want to ‘toss’ anybody. It was not true to say that he fell twice in his own house. He fell once, when he was tripped. It was not true that a man named Wright had said he would not attend Court as a witness on his behalf as he would not commit perjury for him or anyone

Charles Hadley, Cakemore, said the defendant was sober at 9.00.

Superintendent Johnson: But you don't know what his condition was 10.30? – No.

Emanuel Parsons, of Gorsty Hill, also gave evidence.

John Jones, Powke Lane, Blackheath, said he was with the defendant in the HANDEL, and later he went with him to the DRAGON. There was no bother in the HANDEL, and Beck was not asked to leave. He signed a paper that Stevens had told him Beck was not drunk.

Mr. Bate: Did you say he was the worse for beer? – Witness: No, I did not.

The Clerk: Do you mean that the words were not in when you signed it? – Witness: I do not know. He did not read it over to me.

Superintendent Johnson: You say he was not drunk. Was he sober? – Yes.

In answer to further questions witness said defendant was not ordered out of the house.

Were you simple-minded enough to sign the paper before you read it? – I signed it – my name is there.

Mr. Bate: The police have not called you as a witness? – No.

The wife of the defendant – Ellen Beck – said her husband was not drunk. The sergeant told her husband that he had had enough. He was, in fact, as sober as she was.

Superintendent Johnson: I suppose you know what the sergeant meant when he said your husband had had enough? – No.

Now come along. You don't think he meant that he had had too much supper – He was excited.

He had too much excitement? – Yes.

You, a publican's wife, surely know what is meant when somebody says 'He has had enough.' – We are not supposed to know everything. He should have said what he meant.

Samuel Grove, of Powke Lane, said Beck was not drunk. He was perfectly sober, but very much excited. He did not see Beck fall, although he was in the room.

Thomas Windsor, High Street, Blackheath, deposed that although he was in the tap-room he did not see Beck fall.

PC Stevens, recalled, said Jones read the statement before he signed it. He also read it over to him.

The Chairman said there was no doubt at all about the evidence. Defendant would be fined 10s and costs.”

“At the Old Hill Police Court, on Wednesday, Mr. W. H. Thompson, of Dudley, appeared, and mentioned the case of the re-building of the GEORGE AND DRAGON, Blackheath. Last year, he explained, the Bench gave them permission to re-build, but owing to the introduction of the Licensing Bill the directors decided that it was not advisable to go on with the work. Later, however, it was agreed that the superintendent should meet the directors on the spot and see what could be done. They had met there, and found that nothing short of re-building would do. He now, therefore, wished to state that the work of re-building would be commenced.

The Clerk: You will refer to the question again at the licensing meeting?

Mr. Thompson: Yes, I will, if necessary.”

[It was granted at the Annual Licensing Meeting in February 1909.]

Tipton Herald 24/7/1909

“Thomas Taylor, of the GEORGE AND DRAGON, Blackheath, made an application before the Old Hill magistrates on Wednesday, for an occasional license for the ground behind the house, on the occasion of a brass band contest, &c, on the 31st July. Applicant explained that at present his house was being re-built, and that was the reason he was making the application.

The license was granted from 2.0 till 10.0.”

“A meeting of the rivet makers was held on Wednesday morning at the GEORGE AND DRAGON INN, Blackheath, when it was announced the strike had been settled in favour of the men. Mr. I. Cashmore (secretary) stated that the struggle had been proceeding four weeks, and the whole of the employers had now agreed to pay the 4s list of prices. He expressed satisfaction that the dispute had been settled in such an amicable way, and that the condition of the men would be more prosperous. The advance represented about 25 percent in the men’s wages.

A hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Cashmore for his successful efforts in bringing about a peaceful settlement. It was decided to resume work at once.”

Express & Star 12/6/2017

“A troubled pub has been ordered to tighten security after police said it has become a hotbed for crime and disorder over the last two years. Officers were called to 35 incidents at the KNIGHTS QUEST in Blackheath High Street, including ‘mass disorder’ which saw a man knocked unconscious when his head was stamped on during a brawl in the road outside the pub. West Midlands Police moved to take action against the venue over concerns young people were ‘drinking to excess’ into the early hours, often sparking violence. It must now close an hour earlier on Friday and Saturday nights, install more CCTV and have door staff wearing body cameras on duty from 9pm on Fridays and Saturdays.

The KNIGHTS QUEST was described as the ‘most problematic’ pub in Sandwell and was being monitored on a police watchlist. Ambulances were called to the Marston’s pub 12 times in the year to April 2017, 10 of those resulting in someone being taken to A&E.

Violence in March involving ‘20 or 30’ people, when the man was attacked and left unconscious having left the KNIGHTS QUEST, proved the final straw for the force which ordered a review of the licence.

Police licensing officer Mick Boyd told a Sandwell Council hearing there had been incidents inside and outside the pub and that police had been called more times to the KNIGHTS QUEST than eight other pubs in the area combined. He said the number of officers sent to the pub since 2015 was equivalent to that which would police a Premiership football match.....

Sandwell Council’s licensing panel was asked to consider removing the landlord Thomas Lloyd and suspend the licence for three months so new management could be arranged, but decided against this. But they did cut the opening hours to 1.30am on Fridays and Saturdays. It has previously been allowed to stay open until 2.30am, which police said meant young people could drink for longer, with a greater likelihood of trouble.

Ben Williams, a lawyer acting on behalf of Mr. Lloyd, who has run the pub with his wife for 14 years, argued changing the running of the pub would have made the situation worse. He said problems had only started over the last couple of years and that it had previously been trouble free. He said, ‘They have been there a heck of a long time. The problems are more recent. A lot of good has been done. More recently perhaps it is not as it ought to have been but it can get back to that.’

Michelle Hazelwood, representing Marston’s, said the pub had operated well but needed ‘a little bit of guidance at this time.’ She added, ‘This site is not a fundamental broken premises and operation.’”

“A serious alleged attack in the toilets at the KNIGHTS QUEST and a mass brawl in the street outside are among the ugly incidents West Midlands Police say are plaguing the pub in Blackheath. Pub bosses are now due to appear before a Sandwell Council licensing panel following a customer’s claim he was set upon by a gang of up to 15 people in the toilets last month.

The High Street pub had been due to appeal tightened security measures enforced by the police but are now thought to have backed down. It means the pub will have to close an hour earlier on Friday and Saturdays and have two door staff wearing body cameras on duty from 9.30pm on weekends. Senior officers said they will continue to monitor events at the pub and have threatened tougher action if the trouble does not stop.

The KNIGHTS QUEST has been on a police watchlist this year. Officers were called to 35 incidents over two years, including ‘mass disorder’ involving up to 30 people which saw a man knocked unconscious when his head was stamped on during a brawl in the road outside the pub.

A report from West Midlands Police to Sandwell Council ahead of next week's hearing said, 'They did not want the licensed hours reduced, they thought one not two door staff were required on a Friday and Saturday and thought the requirement that a personal licence holder be physically on the premises during all times the premises be open was too onerous.' It continued, 'Unfortunately, there was a further significant incident on October 7, 2017. There was also another incident on October 16, 2017. Should future incidents happen the responsible authorities can re-engage the review process with all possible sanctions open for consideration.' Licensee Gerald Lloyd said, 'Although we do not accept the detail of all the allegations levelled by the police, we have decided to effectively withdraw our appeal and to concentrate on working with the relevant authorities to ensure the safest possible environment for all of our staff and guests.'"

"Bottoms up! The winner of the Express & Star's most popular pub of the year for Sandwell has been announced. The BRITISH QUEEN, Birmingham Road, Oldbury, won the award after fierce competition.....

Gerald Lloyd, joint licensee of runner-up pub the KNIGHTS QUEST on High Street, Rowley Regis, said, 'We're absolutely delighted. We realised that out of the number of pubs that compete and the standard of the pubs that compete, it means something to become runner up to them. The winner is very well run and a prominent business and we feel honoured to have come second to them.'

Mr. Lloyd has been involved with the pub for 15 years, ever since he and his wife saved it from demolition. 'We were both born locally and so we're returning to our roots. We took on a pub that was very run down and was near demolition – they had planning permission to knock it down. We persuaded them to let us convert it into The KNIGHTS QUEST.'

“Bull-Baiting. To the Editor of Aris's Gazette.

Sir. Let me once more solicit your assistance in holding up to public view the conduct of the only two among the three score ale-sellers in this place who have dared openly to outrage humanity, and disturb the peace of the neighbourhood by having recourse to Bull-baiting.

First, James Adams, keeper of the ANCHOR public house, Gosty Hill. This man's premises stand on the boundary line between the counties of Salop and Stafford, and of this and the adjoining parish of Hales Owen, part being situate in both. Adams is the same individual who last year was noticed for having had a bull baited at his house. On Saturday the 13th inst he had one baited on the turnpike road, and also on the public highway in front of his house. Late in the evening one of this poor animal's horns was broken off, and next day he procured a fresh bull ready for Monday morning. The poor animal was then chained by the head to a stake fixed in the ground, and any miscreant, for the sum of sixpence, was allowed to set his dog to tear the skin and flesh off his head and face for the diversion of the mob.

The other Christian who afforded his customers the same amusement, was Thomas Darby, keeper of one of those public nuisances called Beer Shops, within a hundred yards of Adams's house. He also had a bull fastened in a similar way to a stake in one of his own fields; and throughout the whole of Monday and Tuesday the beast was worried and abused in a manner too shocking to describe, three, if not four dogs being turned upon him at once.

Many hundreds of the very lowest reprobates for miles round were collected, and their yells and roaring, together with the bellowing and groans of the two bulls whenever a dog more savage than ordinary could fix its teeth in their lips or faces and tear away the flesh, were most horrible and appalling. How long will such barbarity be tolerated by a Christian Government? I make no further observation, but thanking you for the attention you have paid to my communications, beg to subscribe myself

Very respectfully your's, The Inhabitant.

Rowley Regis, Sept. 20, 1834.”

County Advertiser 14/4/1877

“Mr. Docker, coroner, held an inquest on Saturday night, at the ANCHOR INN, Gorsty Hill, on the body of James Willetts (71), a brewer. The evidence went to show that on the 3rd inst the deceased was engaged in drawing some water from a well, and by some means undiscovered, got into it. His body was not recovered until twenty minutes after he got in, and he was of course dead. A verdict of Accidental Death was returned.

At the same place, Mr. Docker, afterwards held an inquiry touching the decease of William Goode (52), nailer, who resided at Causeway Green, Halesowen. At six o'clock in the morning of the 28th ult the body of deceased was found floating in the basin of the canal at Causeway Green. His hat and muffler, with a stone placed upon them were found on the bank nearby. The jury returned a verdict of Found Drowned.”

Joseph Harris was arrested here for triple murder, on 5th February 1878.

“James Adams, ANCHOR INN, Gorsty Hill, was charged with keeping his house open during prohibited hours. Police-sergeant Raybould stated that on the 16th ult he was on duty at Gorsty Hill in company with Police-constable Barley. He saw the defendant's house open. The house ought to have been closed at ten o'clock, and at that time it was twenty minutes past ten. Witness went into the tap room, and found five men sitting there, one of them very drunk. He mentioned the time to the landlady, and she replied that no drink had been filled since ten o'clock. The men were then got out of the house. Mr. Hayes, who defended, said it was not the defendant's fault that the house was open so late. He was eighty-seven years of age, and had been bedridden for a long time. Some time ago an ejectment order was made against him, and it was found impossible to execute it in consequence of the state of the defendant. The Bench imposed a fine of 1s and costs.”

“Last night a meeting of fitting and socket makers connected with the tube trade in the Old Hill and Hales Owen districts was held at the ANCHOR INN, Gosty Hill, and operative presiding. It was reported that a deputation from the Wednesbury Amalgamated Tubemakers' Association had waited upon the employers at the Coombs Wood Works. The employers contended that they could not make any different arrangements to those that were in force, as they had had no notice of any reduction in wages. This was considered satisfactory, and the operatives would remain at work. The men employed at the Lion Tubeworks had turned out on strike, no settlement having been arrived at. An operative said the men who were engaged in the trade and that were at work were anxious to give all possible assistance to those on strike. A resolution was passed deciding to remain out on strike until the demands were conceded. A further resolution was carried pledging the men at work to make weekly contributions for the support of the operatives on strike.”

“Mr. A. H. Hebbert (deputy coroner) held an inquest at the ANCHOR INN, Coombs Wood, Halesowen, on Wednesday, relative to the death of Walter Poole (8), whose parents reside at Halesowen Street, Blackheath, who was drowned in the Birmingham Canal, near Coombs Wood Works, on Monday.

Selina Poole, mother, deposed to having sent the deceased to school on the date in question.

Hannah Crumpton said she was walking along the canal side, when she heard cries for help, and saw a lad struggling in the water. Witness went for the assistance of a man named Wood, who recovered the body.

Caleb Wood said he was fetched to the canal by the last witness, and, after undressing himself, jumped into the water and brought the body to the surface, life was apparently extinct.

John Edward Broome said he endeavoured to restore animation by artificial respiration, but failed to do so.

Police-constable Harrison said the canal where the body was found was 4ft deep.

Dr. B. Young said he was called to attend the deceased, but upon arriving he found life had been extinct about half an hour. Death was due to drowning.

The foreman of the jury said he was of opinion that Wood ought to have jumped into the water before undressing himself, and a juror said he knew that Crumpton was getting coal out of the canal at the spot where the body was found, and she must have known the water was shallow, and ought to have endeavoured to recover the body.

The jury returned a verdict of Death from Drowning, and requested the coroner to disallow the expenses of Wood and Crumpton. This was done."

County Express 26/8/1911

"Quite a sensation was created in Halesowen district on Tuesday when it became known that the body of a newly-born female child had been discovered in the Birmingham Canal at Wells Bridge, Coombs Wood. It appears that a boatman named Wm. Rawlings, of Cole Street, Darby End, Netherton, was proceeding with a boat in the direction of Coombs Wood Tube Works, when his attention was attracted by something in the water, which subsequently proved to be a baby's body. George Shaw recovered the body, which was removed to the ANCHOR HOTEL, Gorsty Hill, by PC Emms, to await an inquest.

The inquest was held on Wednesday evening at the ANCHOR HOTEL, Gorsty Hill, by the deputy coroner (Mr. A. H. Hebbert). Mr. Lewis was foreman of the jury.

W. Rawlings, of Cole Street, Darby End, said he was going with a boat in the direction of Coombs Wood Works, when he saw something floating in the water. When witness got nearer he could see that it was a child's head. He tried to recover the body, but the water washed it away. It was not wrapped in anything and was quite naked.

George Shaw, of Halesowen Street, Blackheath, said the last witness called his attention to the child in the water. Witness got his shovel and lifted the body out. It was placed on the side of the canal and removed by PC Emms.

Dr. W. L. Freer said he had made that afternoon a post mortem examination of the body. It was a fully developed child. There was a wound partly incised and partly lacerated, two inches in length and one-eighth to one-quarter of an inch in depth, commencing in the centre of the neck and running just above the collar bone. There was no bruising or other mark of violence.

The Deputy Coroner: Do you think that wound was caused before or after death? – I think it was caused after death.

Continuing, Dr. Freer said the internal organs were more or less decomposed. The body had been in the water at least seven days, but he could not say how much longer. It was in his opinion put into the water after death. He considered death was due to hemorrhage, as a result of inattention at birth.

Inspector Pass said, in company with PC Emms, he carefully examined the body. There were some pieces of paper adhering to it, and on drying them witness found that they were portions of a Redditch paper for April 8th. There was nothing to lead to the identity of the child.

The jury returned a verdict of Found Dead in the canal."

Edward Lowe was the brother of Tom.

“While most children want the latest Play Station Jake Nicholls has a simple dream – being able to play football with his dad.

Jake has started an appeal to help his father, wheelchair-bound multiple sclerosis sufferer Ian Nicholls, raise £20,000 for revolutionary stem cell treatment. The 11-year-old has created a computer presentation asking schools to hold mufti-days to pull in funds in a race against time. Ian must raise the money by December to have the treatment, which has seen several patients walking again within hours, at a clinic in Holland. Titled My Dad’s Life, the presentation shows the days when Ian was able to walk in the park, and then charts how his condition deteriorated and he became confined to a wheelchair.

Ian, aged 48, said, ‘Jake did the Powerpoint presentation and sent it to schools so they might run a mufti day to help the appeal. I was absolutely touched. I didn’t know he was putting it together until he asked me to pose for a photo. It was awesome to see when he had finished it.’

Jake’s school, Newfield Park Primary, has already responded and is holding a dress-down week. So far the cash has been flooding in, with an array of fundraising events pulling in £5,100. Ian, of Radbourne Drive, has raised millions of pounds for charity through his role as an appeal organiser for the County Air Ambulance and was awarded an NHS Heroes Award for his efforts. He is married to Wendy and has another son, Todd, aged 12.

There are a string of fundraisers in the pipeline. Tonight (Thursday) there will be a musical evening at Cradley Heath Labour Club, entrance costs £2. This Saturday, July 15, there will be a quiz night at the LIGHTHOUSE pub, Gorsty Hill, Halesowen. Entrance costs £2 per person, for teams of four. On Saturday July 22 there will be a musical picnic in Hartlebury. Tickets cost £10 for adults and £5 for children. On Sunday July 23 there will be a five-a-side football match at the Powerleague ground on Stourbridge Road, Halesowen.

Ian is appealing for people to help organise events and needs someone to donate a hall with a bar for an evening so a band can perform.”

Halesowen News 24/5/2007

“A pub worker was helped to safety by two passers by as a fire ripped through the LIGHTHOUSE pub in Halesowen. Police are appealing for information following the suspected arson attack. Fire crews alerted officers to the incident at the LIGHTHOUSE public house in Coombs Road, which is believed to have started between 1.15am and 2.10am on Wednesday May 23. A member of staff was in the premises at the time but managed to escape from the first floor, with the help of two passers by.

Police are appealing for witnesses and would particularly like to speak to the two men who assisted the member of staff.”

“A ‘troubled’ 27-year-old man who set fire to the Halesowen pub where he was assistant manager causing more than £116,000 damage has been jailed for 15 months. John Woolley wore a hood when he poured petrol through the letterbox at the LIGHTHOUSE pub in Coombs Road – an incident caught on CCTV. He then disappeared only to return moments later and put a match to the petrol causing a fire that seriously damaged the ground floor area of the pub which had to close for more than two months. Recorder Simon Drew told Woolley, of Thorne Road, Rowley Regis, ‘I am none the wiser as to why you did it. It is suggested you were extremely upset and depressed and it might have been a suicide attempt. What I am more inclined to think is that it was a cry for help – a cry for attention. It could also have been a way for you not to continue working there in a job that was causing you stress.’ But he ruled it was a serious arson attack on the pub causing major damage and only a substantial prison sentence was appropriate.

Woolley, in an earlier incident, cut the fuel, brake and speedometer cables on his former partner’s car after he had left him rendering the vehicle immobile and preventing him from driving away. ‘This was rather silly and impetuous,’ added the Recorder at Wolverhampton Crown Court on Monday October 22 as he said he accepted it was never his intention to cause any danger to his ex-partner.

Woolley admitted criminal damage and arson at a time when, said Miss Elizabeth Power defending, he was in an emotional state. Miss Power said, ‘He cannot really explain why he set fire to the pub. He was in a troubled state and he accepts he needs some counselling.’ Miss Power said Woolley enjoyed his job but things had got on top of him. She said, ‘It was he who called the police when he saw smoke coming through the door of the pub.’

The Recorder told Woolley he had been trusted to look after the LIGHTHOUSE but stressed he accepted the arson was completely out of character.”

“Struggling traders face a bleak New Year after bombshell news that a Rowley Regis road is to be dug up for the second time in two years. Businesses are still recovering from 11 months of road works when water and gas pipes were replaced in Gorsty Hill Road. They were left reeling from the news of several weeks of disruption starting in January when National Grid will replace more pipes between the junctions of Coombe Hill and Cocksheds Lane. Jayne Leeson, of Fantasia Party Shop, who was forced to shed a full-time and two part-time assistants as trade was decimated during the earlier road works, said the news was ‘devastating.’ Initially, businesses were told the work to replace a low pressure main would start on December 11, but the date has been pushed back to January 19 at the request of Sandwell Council. Mrs Leeson said she and neighbouring businesses, including the Evergreen Pharmacy, Apex Wines and LIGHTHOUSE pub, were relieved disruption to the peak Christmas trading period had been avoided. But they are questioning why the work could not have been combined with the previous pipe relaying.

Mrs. Leeson said, ‘National Grid replaced medium pressure pipes two years ago and they want to replace low pressure pipes. We are still recovering from the devastating impact of the last lot of road works, although we got some compensation, it no where nearly made up for what we lost. It’s absolutely disgraceful and a waste of money digging up the road for a second time, so soon. Someone didn’t do their job properly and this needs addressing.’

A National Grid spokeswoman said when the work was done in 2012 it was not considered necessary to renew the low pressure main. She added, ‘However, since that time, there has been an increase in the number of gas escapes found on the pipe and so it has now become a priority to replace it. The new pipe will be made of hard wearing plastic which, once in the ground will need little or no maintenance and will keep the area’s gas supply safe and reliable for many years.’”

After hearing the evidence, defendant was sentenced to 14 days hard labour for the assault, and the other charges were dismissed.”

“John Darby, landlord of the MALT SHOVEL, Black Heath, was summoned for unlawfully and knowingly permitting drunkenness in his house. Mr. Hayes defended.

Sergeant Davies said that on the evening of the 26th ult he was called to defendant’s house to eject a drunken man named Fletcher, who was subsequently fined for the offence.

Benjamin Worton was also called for the prosecution. He swore that he was drinking in defendant’s house with Fletcher for four or five hours; and added that Fletcher created a disturbance, defendant asked him several times to desist, and eventually sent for the police.

The Bench said they did not consider defendant in fault, and accordingly dismissed the case.”

“On Saturday night the miners of the lodge held at the MALT SHOVEL INN, Blackheath, in connection with the Old Hill Miners’ Association, celebrated the anniversary of its formation by a supper. An address was delivered by the local agent (Mr. B. Winwood), who directed attention to the alteration in thin coal and stone miners’ wages effected at the last Wages Board meeting, and to the notice they had given for a re-consideration of the basis of wages. He concluded by urging them to induce all miners they possible could to join the lodge, as the special advantages of co-operation had been very effectually demonstrated by the work of the Midland Counties Trades Federation, of which the Old Hill district is a branch, during the last two years. The remainder of the evening was spent in a very enjoyable manner, the programme consisting of songs, recitations, &c.”

“Reuben Davies, landlord of the MALT SHOVEL INN, Blackheath, was charged with permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises, on the 24th ult. Mr. W. Waldron prosecuted, and Mr. H. Jackson defended.

In opening the case, Mr. Waldron said he prosecuted on behalf of the police. On the 24th ult, Police-constable Jewson heard quarrelling in the yard attached to the defendant’s public house. The officer went into the yard and saw eight men quarrelling, amongst them being a man named Bateman, who was drunk. He went into the house and told the landlord about this. In the kitchen he found a man named Adams, who was drunk, and had a pint cup containing ale, out of which he drank. Adams got up and staggered about. This was at 5.30. Jewson came to the conclusion that the man was drunk, and he went in search of another officer. At 6.30 he again visited the house, in company with Police-sergeant Salt, and they again saw Adams in the house with beer before him. Adams asked them to drink, but they refused. Salt called the landlord’s attention to Adams, and he said, ‘If the man is drunk, he is quiet.’ This clearly showed knowledge on the part of the defendant that he was drunk. He was instructed by the police to say that since there had been an increase of good trade, there was a corresponding increase of drunkenness in that and other parts of the country, to the extent of fifty per cent.

Police-constable Jewson bore out these remarks, and added that when the man was got out of the house he staggered along the street.

Police-sergeant Salt gave evidence as to visiting the house at half-past six, and finding Adams there in an intoxicated condition, with ale before him.

For the defence, Mr. Jackson said the Bench must dismiss from their minds the evidence as far as Bateman was concerned as there was no evidence that he was supplied with ale on the premises. With regard to Adams, a witness would state that Adams did not stagger, and he was sent to a doctor’s, but he was not in.

Defendant was called, and said Adams was not drunk, and did not make a noise. When the officers called his attention to Adams, he got him outside, and he walked off down the street.

Matthias Adams said he was not drunk, and did not stagger down the street.

Thomas Armstrong gave similar evidence.

Mr. Beach, Halesowen, said he saw Adams walk down the street, and did not stagger like a drunken man.

The Bench considered the case proved, but said it was not a bad one, and defendant would be fined 2s 6d and costs. Adams and Bateman were each fined 5s and costs.”

“Last night a largely-attended meeting of rivetmakers was held at the MALT SHOVEL INN, Blackheath, for the purpose of considering the wages question. Mr. Thomas Brookes presided, and explained that a dispute had arisen at the works of Messrs. Willits Brothers, and as a consequence the operatives had been called out. The firm had signed the agreement to pay the recognised list price, which was made five weeks ago, but they had not done so. (Shame.) It was decided support the men on strike until the employers conceded the proper prices.”

County Advertiser 24/11/1894

“On Monday night a meeting of rivet makers was held at the MALT SHOVEL INN, Blackheath, for the purpose of considering the wages question. A workman presided and stated that they had met together under very unfavourable circumstances. Through the action of some of the weak minded persons a portion of the operatives had been compelled to submit to a reduction in their wages. (Shame.) He mentioned that the wages of some of the rivet makers had been reduced to 4s per cwt. (Shame.) Mr. I. Cashmore addressed the meeting and said they were in very serious difficulty. The employers had signed the list agreeing to pay the price and after having kept their promise for six weeks they were endeavouring to reduce the operatives and thus bring about the old state of things. (Shame.) It was suggested that the only course to take to stop such practices was to declare a general reduction in wages. (Hear, hear.) Ultimately a deputation was appointed to wait upon those operatives who were working at a reduction, and request them to desist, but failing this, other steps should be taken.”

“On Monday night a meeting of rivet makers in the Blackheath, Rowley and Old Hill districts was held at the MALT SHOVEL INN, Blackheath, for the purpose of considering the new Truck Act. Mr. I. Cashmore said the Act came into operation last Friday. Several of the employers in the rivet trade were willing not to deduct any money for blast. The others, however, seemed to think the Act was a failure, and they appeared determined to adhere to the old arrangement. The Act, however, stipulated that no money must be deducted from the workmen's wages for blast unless they signed an agreement to allow it. He urged them not to sign any agreement with the masters, and if money was deducted from their wages they could recover it. A resolution deciding to adhere to the Act was passed. It was also decided that where masters would not provide the blast the men should remain out on strike.”

“On Sunday afternoon the annual friendly societies’ Sunday service, on behalf of the hospitals, was held in a field at the back of Mountford House, Siviters Lane, Rowley, kindly lent for the occasion by Dr. J. G. Beasley. The members of various societies met at their headquarters, and were formed into a procession as below. The Blackheath Village Band started from the WHEAT SHEAF INN, Turners Hill at one o’clock, with the Church of England Friendly Society, and proceeded through Portway and Perys Lake, calling at the BULLS HEAD INN for the Sick Club, at the WARD ARMS INN for Court Foresters’ Pride, at the KINGS ARMS INN for Lodge Working Man’s Friend. It then proceeded by way of Ross, Holly Road, Tump Road, and John Street, to the GEORGE AND DRAGON Ground. The Woodgate Brass Band had in the meantime covered its route from the OLD BUSH INN, Powke Lane, with Court Little Band of Hope, calling at the MALT SHOVEL INN for Lodge Lily of the Valley, the VINE INN for Court Mistletoe Bough, proceeding along Station Road to the RAILWAY INN for Court Britannia’s Pride, thence through Halesowen Street, Tump Road, and Hackett Street, meeting the other Courts at the GEORGE AND DRAGON Ground. A united procession was then formed, and marched to Siviters Lane, reaching the ground at three o’clock. The proceedings opened with the hymn ‘All people that on earth do dwell,’ after which the Chairman (Mr. E. Pewtress, CC) delivered a short address. The Rev. C. W. Barnard, MA, Rector of Kings Norton, then addressed the meeting, after which the hymn ‘Lead, kindly light,’ was sung. Addresses were also delivered by the Revs. W. Hall and N. Haigh, of Blackheath. At the close a collection was taken on behalf of the Dudley Dispensary and Birmingham Eye Hospital. It amounted to £11 9s 5d.”

“On Monday evening the rivet makers in the Blackheath, Rowley, Old Hill, and surrounding districts commenced the fifth week of the strike, and a largely-attended meeting was held at the MALT SHOVEL INN, Blackheath, no arrangement having then been come to. Since Monday the leaders of the operatives made another visit to the employers, and when the men assembled for another meeting at the MALT SHOVEL INN, on Thursday morning, the Chairman (Mr. J. Bennett) said they had better news for them, although one employer had refused to concede the advance.

Mr. I. Cashmore addressed the men and said in accordance with the desire of some of the masters they had slightly modified the list, and then submitted it for consideration. The result of their visit to the masters during the week was that the whole of the employers, numbering over twenty, with the exception of Mr. T. Williams, of Halesowen, had consented to give an increase of 12½ per cent. He hoped that now they had bettered their position the workmen would form themselves into a strong organisation.”

“George Gadd (26), labourer, of Mott Street, Blackheath, was charged with stealing 144 cigars and 13 boxes of cigarettes, of the value of 13s 1d, from the MALT SHOVEL INN, High Street, Blackheath, belonging to Messrs. Showells Brewery Company Limited, on the 18th inst; and George Hingley (29), Oldbury Road, Blackheath, was charged with receiving the goods knowing them to have been stolen. It was alleged that on the date in question the prisoner Gadd went into the public house, and after he had left the articles were missed. He was subsequently arrested by Police-sergeant Bentley, and at first denied the charge but ultimately said, ‘I will tell the truth. I had them.’ Hingley, when arrested, denied the charge, but afterwards admitted that he had bought them for 6d. The Bench committed Gadd for three months with hard labour, and Hingley for two months.”

County Advertiser 21/7/1906

“On Tuesday night a well-attended meeting in connection with the Blackheath nut, bolt, rivet makers’ branch of the National Union of gasworkers and general labourers, was held at the MALT SHOVEL INN, High Street, Blackheath, for the purpose of considering important business in connection with the new price list for rivet makers. Mr. I. Cashmore presided, and said they had met to receive a report from Mr. S. Lakin, the district secretary, with reference to his interviews with the leading masters in the trade. Since August last reductions in wages had been enforced amounting to between 10 per cent and 15 per cent. He felt that the time had come when they must make an effort to secure a return to the list of prices granted to them nearly twelve months ago. Mr. Lakin delivered an address. He explained that he had waited upon the principal employers in the trade, and all of them, with the exception of three, were in favour of paying the list prices adopted last August. There was no doubt that the operatives were entitled to an advance. It was decided to refer the matter to the Executive Council of the Union, with a view to an amicable settlement being arrived at.”

Tipton Herald 14/8/1909

“The rivet and stud makers of the district held a meeting on Monday in the MALT SHOVEL INN, Blackheath, to consider what action should be taken to secure an advance of wages. It was stated that in consequence of the wages having been reduced the majority of the operatives turned out on strike last week, and it was thought the remainder would cease work that morning. A number of the hands in Dudley and Halesowen, however, had gone to work as usual, and that had created an unfortunate and unpleasant difficulty. The situation was a serious one, and the meeting had to decide what was to be done.

The Hon. Secretary (Mr. Cashmore) said the trade had not occupied a worse position for 40 years than it did today. The men were paid the lowest wages in the history of the trade, and a fortnight’s notice had been given in order to secure a restoration of the 4s list. Some of the employees had expressed their approval of the men's action, but they were unable to grant the concessions unless the others did so also. He was surprised that the Dudley and Halesowen men had resumed work, though they were prepared to support the Blackheath men on strike. In other words they wanted the Blackheath men to fight the battle, and that was unjust and unreasonable. If the men had been united an increase of wages would have been granted.

A delegate reported that one rivet maker had had to go to the workhouse because he could not earn sufficient money at his trade. It was agreed that it was useless to continue the strike unless the whole of the hands were prepared to drop their tools."

"Three cakes which are lifesize replicas of Royal crowns and a fourth which is a model of the throne used for the crowning ceremony will be Coronation gifts from a Black Country woman to 100 children. The cakes – each weighing 10lb – took Miss May Cox (39), of The Crescent, Blackheath, several months to complete. She is to give them to two Coronation children's parties in the district.

The three crowns, finished in gold, white and purple and studded with coloured sequins, will be eaten at a party at the MALT SHOVEL HOTEL, Blackheath, on June 2.

Miss Cox's baking will also be a delight for the children of Clement Road, Blackheath, when the fare at their party on May 30 includes the 'throne', complete with a 'Stone of Scone.'

Each cake with its intricate decoration cost 13s. Miss Cox's baking has won her local fame, but her Coronation cakes recently drew criticism from Mr. Philip Harben, the television cook, when he was judging a competition at Birmingham's Bingley Hall. He said that because they were so elaborately decorated the 'crown' cakes 'did not look as though they had been made to be eaten,' but Blackheath children are hardly likely to agree with his verdict. Miss Cox's cookery received official recognition during the war. Because she was keeping house for her father and family of 10 after her mother's death, she was exempted from war work."

"A gambler who is thought to have enjoyed a £1,000 win at the betting office is believed to have fallen into a Cradley Heath brook and drowned whilst attempting to urinate. Alan Chapman, aged 64, had about £1,000 in cash in his pocket when his body was found in the brook off Bellevalle on December 29 last year. An inquest in Dudley today (Tuesday) heard that Mr. Chapman, described as a loner with no family or friends who liked to gamble, was found by a member of the public partially submerged in the water. PC Jo Morgan, from Halesowen CID, said his trousers were undone and there were slip marks on the bank, indicating that he may have been going to urinate. Mr. Chapman lived in a sparsely furnished ground floor flat in Victoria Road, Cradley Heath.

A neighbour told police that he had not been seen for a couple of days prior to his body being found.

In a statement, Sharon Tuohy, landlady at the MALT SHOVEL, High Street, Rowley Regis, said Mr. Chapman had been a regular for two years and had visited the pub every day for the previous ten months up until Christmas Eve. She described him as ‘a pleasant man’ who often fell asleep in the pub, because his bad back and legs kept him awake at night.

Black Country Coroner Robin Balmain recorded a verdict of Accidental Death, saying it was likely that he slipped and fell into the water and was unable to get out.”

“John Thomas Dixon, landlord of the MALT SHOVEL, at Rowley, was charged by Superintendent Mills with permitting drunkenness in his house, on the 12th inst. Mr. Hayes defended.

Police-constable Hume said he visited the defendant’s house at twenty minutes past four. He found from fifteen to twenty men in the kitchen, all of whom were drunk, making a great disturbance, and quarrelling. Defendant was not there at the time. Saw a female, and told her to get them out as soon as possible. He then went to the bar. Could not see defendant.

Cross-examined: I saw Police-constables Slinn and Jackson higher in the village. Did not ask for the defendant. One of the men named Smith asked me to drink out of a quart jug of ale. I refused.

Police-constable Slinn said he visited defendant’s house at 5.40, and again at half past six. Found a number of drunken men in the house. Told the barmaid he thought they had had sufficient drink, and asked for the master. She said he was not in. The last time he visited the house saw defendant, who, in answer to him said he did not see the men were drunk.

Cross-examined: I did see a number of men, from fifteen to twenty. I saw a man named Smith who was drunk. I did have a glass of ale with him. I did order the tap to be stopped.

Police-constable Jackson was in plain clothes. Police-constable Jackson said there were about twenty men in the house, and some women. They were causing a great disturbance in the house.

Mr. Hayes addressed the Bench for the defence, and contended that it had not been proved that the persons in the house were drunk, and called Emma George, barmaid, who said that the first time the police came in they said nothing; the second time there were about 12 in the kitchen. Slinn ordered me to stop the tap. I did so. None of the men were drunk. After the tap was ordered to be stopped Smith ordered a glass of ale for Slinn, and he paid for it.

Henry Smith, Joseph Churchill, and Isaac Cashmore were called to prove there were no men drunk, and that all were peaceable.

Mr. Barrs said he could not reconcile the conduct of Police-constable Slinn, who had stopped the tap because men were drunk and making a noise, and yet he accepts of a glass of ale from a man who is said to be drunk. The Bench thought such conduct bad, and should dismiss the case.”

“Joseph Westwood, James Fisher, Robert Jones, and Thomas Batty, were charged with being drunk and refusing to quit the house of Ann Cooper, landlady of the MALT SHOVEL INN, Rowley, on the 7th. Mr. Addison appeared to prosecute.

Complainant said that there was a dispute between two men, named Troman and Westwood, and they began to fight. Another man tried to part them, when the defendant began to beat that man, and became very abusive, and refused to leave the house. She stopped the tap. They still refused to go. Fined 1s each and costs; in default 14 days.”

John Morris was married to Tamar.

County Advertiser 28/4/1876

“John Siviter, a youth, was charged with being disorderly on the 11th inst, at the MALT SHOVEL INN, Rowley, which he refused to quit when ordered to do so by the proprietor. Tamar Morris, the landlady, and her son proved the case, and defendant was fined 2s 6d and costs.”

John Morris died in the 4th quarter of 1876.

“Henry Tromans, labourer, and Joyce Hackett, a young woman, were charged with refusing to quit the licensed premises of Tamar Morris, at Rowley, on 26th ult. Mr. Hayes was for the prosecution.

It was alleged that at about nine o’clock on the night of the date mentioned, the two defendants, with others, entered Mrs. Morris’s house and asked for ale, which she refused to supply in consequence of the disturbance they created. They then became disorderly, and would not leave when she ordered them. Police-constable Stiles came in and assisted in getting them out. A charge was preferred against the male prisoner of having assaulted the officer outside the house, in support of which Stiles said he was struck, knocked down, and kicked. Mr. Addison, who prosecuted in this case, called witnesses to corroborate the officer's evidence. The Bench decided to fine the woman 2s 6d and costs (or seven days) for the offence with which she was charged; and Tromans, for refusing to quit, 10s and costs, in default, a month; and for the assault on the policeman to send him to prison for another month's hard labour, without the option of a fine."

"David Tromans was charged by John Thomas Dixon with unlawfully withholding the sum of £30 15s 11d belonging to a Foresters' lodge of which he (Mr. Dixon) was the treasurer. Mr. Addison appeared for the prosecution, and Mr. W. S. Hayes for the defence.

It appeared that William Bennett, a member of the Foresters' Pride Lodge, No.5305, held at the MALT SHOVEL INN, Rowley, became disabled by accidentally breaking his arm in an ironwork, and the lodge started a subscription for his benefit in order to secure him a livelihood. Defendant and another man were deputed to attend the various courts and solicit help, and Tromans collected £42 0s 11d, which he refused to give up unless he was paid £9 for his work, the lodge being only willing that he should have £5.

Mr. Addison said he had collected £47 8s, but this was afterwards corrected, the proper amount being that stated above. He quoted the law to show that defendant had committed an offence by withholding the money.

Mr. Hayes said the whole matter of the dispute was £4, the question being whether defendant should have £5 or £9 for his trouble. He had 57 journeys, so that the latter amount would not over remunerate him.

Mr. Addison said that out of the £42 0s 11d collected, the lodge had agreed to allow to defendant's credit £8 for a cart; £5 for a set of harness (both for Bennett); £5 for his own trouble; and £3 5s he had paid over to the treasurer. The balance of £20 15s 11d they claimed from the defendant.

Mr. Bassano said he thought the best thing the defendant could do was to pay over the whole amount, and sue the lodge for the compensation for his trouble, if he thought he was entitled to more than the £5.

Mr. Dixon, who was the treasurer of the lodge in question, was then examined by Mr. Addison, and read from the court book minutes of resolutions starting the subscription for Bennett, and appointing Tromans and Edward Foster to solicit and collect subscriptions from other lodges in the district; also decreeing that Tromans should receive £5 for his work. The lodge advanced Bennett £20 on account of the fund, but Tromans refused to give up the money he had collected till he had £9.

In cross-examination he said there were about forty courts in the district, and defendant would have to visit each.

Isaac Cashmore, secretary to the court, was called to prove the resolution read by Dixon, and stated Tromans was present when they were passed.

Under cross-examination he admitted that there had been a difficulty at first in getting men to go round.

Mr. Hayes, on the Bench again saying they thought defendant must give up the money and get his commission how he could, submitted that the lodge was not concerned in the affair at all. The subscription was for Bennett, and not for the lodge, and the money was to be paid to Bennett.

The magistrates said there could be no question after the evidence of the starting of the fund and the resolutions passed, that the defendant was acting under the lodge.

Mr. Hayes then agreed to pay the £20 15s 11d, and the case so ended."

John Thomas Dixon was the son of John Thomas and Eliza.

"On Monday morning Mr. H. A. Pearson (coroner) held an inquest at the MALT SHOVEL INN, Rowley, concerning the death of Ann Heath (45), formerly residing at Siviters Lane, Rowley, and who died suddenly on the 2nd inst.

The husband, John Heath, stated that his wife, who was deaf and dumb, had enjoyed very good health. On the 1st and 2nd insts she had been engaged washing, and at seven o'clock on the night of the latter date his daughter called his attention to her mother. Witness saw his wife reel on to a chair, and immediately afterwards began twitching at the mouth. Dr. Beasley was called in, but found deceased unconcious. She died an hour later. Dr. Beasley deposed to make a post mortem examination of the body, and attributed death to apoplexy. The jury returned a verdict of Death from Natural Causes."

“On Friday morning in last week Mr. H. A. Pearson (South Staffordshire Coroner) held an inquest at the MANCHESTER INN, High Street, Blackheath, concerning the death of Arthur Golding (20), a pikeman, residing in Hackett Lane, Blackheath, Rowley Regis, who had been killed by a fall of coal at the Yew Tree Colliery, Rowley.

Mr. F. Meachem represented the owners of the colliery, and Mr. Makepeace (Assistant Inspector) attended on behalf of the Home Office.

The deceased commenced to work at the colliery on the previous Monday as a pikeman, and on Wednesday was instructed by the overmen to put a sprag in a working place near to a gate road in which he was engaged in getting coal. He neglected to obey the orders of the overmen, Alfred Fellows and George Carter, to set the sprag, with a result about 1cwt of coal fell on him, breaking his back and killing him.

It was stated that although the deceased was very young he was an experienced workman.

The Coroner said unfortunately the deceased was responsible for his own death by neglecting to obey orders.

The jury returned a verdict that the deceased met his death by accident, the result of failing to obey orders.”

County Advertiser 12/4/1902

“Yesterday morning, Mr. H. A. Pearson (county coroner) held an inquest at the MANCHESTER HOUSE INN, High Street, Blackheath, on the body of Benjamin Golding (60), colliery manager, Hackett Street, who had died from poison accidentally administered. It appeared from the evidence of Sarah Jane Golding that deceased was ill with bronchitis and rheumatism, and attended by Dr. Beasley and Dr. Freer. On Wednesday evening he asked for his medicine and she gave him some liniment in mistake for the bronchitis medicine. He vomited, and Dr. Freer attended and gave him an emetic. He died at four the following evening. Dr. Freer made a post mortem examination, and gave evidence that death was due to syncope, the results of sconeite poisoning. Deceased had a large heart, weighing 25ozs instead of 10ozs. The jury returned a verdict of Death by Misadventure.”

“Mr. A. A. Betham (deputy coroner) held an inquest on Saturday morning last at the MANCHESTER INN, Blackheath, touching the death of Sarah Ann Parkes (16), residing at Hackett Street, Blackheath, who died suddenly on the 7th inst, under peculiar circumstances.

Elizabeth Parkes, the mother of the girl, stated that her daughter had always been a healthy girl and on the 7th inst she went to work as usual and returned home at dinnertime and partook of a hearty meal. About five weeks ago Dr. Beasley attended the deceased for pains in the head.

Thomas Jones, hardware manufacturer, Halesowen Street, Blackheath, stated that the deceased had been employed as a blower at his hearth. On the 7th inst, when at work, he heard the deceased give a loud scream. He turned round and saw the deceased reel and fall down. He gave her some brandy and water, but she was unable to drink it. She did not make any complaint to him.

Dr. J. H. Beasley stated he had made a post mortem examination of the body and ascertained that death was due to a clot of blood in the left ventricle of the brain, as the result of natural causes.

The jury returned a verdict in accordance with the medical evidence.

As the mother was in poor circumstances the jury subscribed 16s 6d.”

County Advertiser 7/7/1906

“On Tuesday night Mr. G. C. Lewis (coroner) held an inquest at the MANCHESTER INN, High Street, Blackheath, on the body of Sarah Rollason (71), formerly residing in Hackett Street, Blackheath, who died on the 2nd inst from the effects of injuries sustained on the 28th ult. The evidence showed that on the last date named the deceased accidentally fell and fractured several ribs. She received medical treatment, but death soon took place on the 2nd inst from shock. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

“Mr. G. C. Lewis (coroner) held an inquest yesterday week at the MANCHESTER INN, respecting the death of James Crumpton (42), miner, formerly living at Hackett Street, Blackheath, who died under singular circumstances on the 14th inst. The evidence showed that on the 25th of January deceased was working at the Lye Cross Colliery, Rowley, when he sustained an injury to his right shoulder. He was medically attended by Dr. Tibbetts, and on Wednesday week died suddenly in bed. Dr. Tibbetts, who had made a post mortem examination of the body, said he found on the root of the tongue a large ulcer of cancerous nature. Death was due to weakness through the cancer. A verdict of Death from Natural Causes was returned by the jury.”

“The tragic death in the street of a Blackheath woman, on Friday night last week was inquired into by the coroner, Mr. Frank Cooper, at an inquest held at the BRITISH OAK INN, Old Hill, on Monday afternoon. The woman was Mary Rollinson (66), a widow, who lived at 47, John Street, Blackheath.

Evidence of identification was given by Ellen Wood, of Oldbury Road, Blackheath, a sister, who said she last saw Mrs. Rollinson alive at about 7.30pm on Friday, when she was at witness's house. She was then apparently in her usual health, and had never complained to witness about feeling ill.

Nellie Taylor, single woman, of 69, Beaumont Road, Blackheath, said that at 9.15pm on Friday, March 16th, she was walking across the bottom of Hackett Street when she saw a woman standing by the window of the public house on the corner of High Street and Hackett Street. Almost immediately upon witness seeing her the woman fell backwards on her head, and when witness went to her she found her to be unconscious. Water was obtained and an effort made to bring her round, but to no avail, and some bystanders carried her into the public house while witness went for the woman's son-in-law to an address given to her by someone who came on the scene, and knew the woman.

Dr. J. Howard Beasley, of Blackheath, gave evidence of being called to the MANCHESTER INN and examined Mrs. Rollinson, who was then dead. He had made a post-mortem examination, which revealed all the organs to be normal, with the exception of the heart, which showed marked valvular disease. Death was caused by syncope. The Coroner recorded a verdict of Death from Natural Causes."

"Rowley Regis licensing justices' adjourned meeting at Old Hill yesterday.....

'Wine licenses are of importance because it is common knowledge that at Christmas time a great deal of drunkenness was due to the terrible stuff which people were getting from cheap so-called British wines,' said Mr. W. H. Thompson, solicitor, when applying for a wine license for the VINE INN, High Street, Blackheath.

The application was granted, as was also a similar one in respect of the MANCHESTER HOUSE, High Street, Blackheath."

Staffordshire Advertiser 1/5/1937

"County justices attending a meeting of the Staffordshire Licensing Confirmation Committee at the Shirehall, Stafford, on Tuesday, had to deal with the heaviest agenda for many years, and it was found impossible to get through the whole of the business in the day. There were no fewer than 36 applications for the confirmation of either provisional licences or removal orders.....

Application was made for confirmation of the granting of wine licenses to the following beerhouses.....

MANCHESTER HOUSE, High Street, Blackheath, Rowley Regis.....

After hearing evidence by the individual applicants the justices retired, and on their return the Chairman said they had given careful consideration to the applications. It would be appreciated that it was their duty to see that the public were protected to a certain extent. They wished to give all the accommodation, comfort and satisfaction that they could, but at the same time they had to bear in mind their responsibility as a licensing authority. In some of the cases they felt the evidence showed the application was much more justifiable than in others, but they had decided that in all the cases there was sufficient evidence to justify the granting of the application. The licenses would, therefore, be confirmed in every case."

“On Thursday an inquest was held before the coroner, G. H. Hinchliffe, Esq, at the MINERS ARMS, on the body of a waggoner, named Richard Cross, who met with his death under the following circumstances. Deceased was in the employ of Messrs. Harper, iron merchants, Dudley, and on Tuesday last he left the Phoenix Works, Rowley Regis, with a cart load of iron. He then appeared to have been drinking. On his way he called at a public house, and had some more drink, and when he was about starting with the iron, a man offered to drive the horses if he would walk behind. Deceased refused to do so, and after abusing the man, started off with the iron himself, walking by the side of one of the horses. He had not got many yards, when he reeled against the animal and fell down, and the wheel of the waggon passed over his head and breast. He died in about ten minutes. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

beers from across the UK, which are not normally available in the area. There will also be two foreign beers.”

“Four people who brutally attacked police officers after a punch-up at a Cradley Heath pub have avoided spending time in prison because the prosecution took more than two years to get the case to court. Two officers were called to deal with trouble at the MOON UNDER WATER in the High Street and they were set upon by the four who were arrested after the use of CS gas and the arrival of police reinforcements.

Judge Nicholas Webb told the four, ‘Your behaviour was disgraceful. Police officers investigating yobbish violence in this pub were abused and set upon by you while they were doing their job. If you had come before a court within a reasonable time after this outrageous conduct each and everyone of you would be going into custody for between six and nine months. But that did not happen. This case lingered on for almost two and a quarter years and, in the meantime, you have all kept out of trouble.’

The Judge went on, ‘The court has to take into account the amount of time that has elapsed. The sentence will be reduced and suspended because of the delay.’

Wolverhampton Crown Court was told Sgt. Costas Cosman and PC Ben Dolan were attacked in the incident. One of them was punched and forced against a wall while the second needed an AIDS test after being smeared with blood by one of their attackers. They all admitted assault with intent to resist arrest and they were each given a four month jail term suspended for two years and told to carry out 150 hours community punishment. After the case Vinny Bolina for the Crown Prosecution Service said, ‘It is regrettable there were delays in this matter. The errors made were not all our fault and the situation was rectified as soon as we realised there were problems with the prosecution.’” “Wine lovers can tickle their tastebuds with a selection of award-winning wines at three local pubs taking part in a 19-day wine festival. The MOON UNDER WATER in Cradley Heath, the BRITANNIA in Rowley Regis and the WILLIAM SHENSTONE in Halesowen are all taking part in the wine festival which runs from September 17 until October 5.

Six new wines will be on offer, including a Cabernet Sauvignon Shiraz 2006 from South Australia and a German Naked Grape Riesling 2006, none of which have previously been served in the pubs. The wines will be sold at £2.20 for a 175ml glass, at £2.95 for a 250ml glass and at £7.69 for a bottle.

The MOON UNDER WATER manager Maxine Tolley said, ‘The wine festival will give people the opportunity to sample a range of award-winning wines at affordable prices.’”

“A money-spinning charity stunt at a Cradley Heath pub brought tears to the eyes of staff and customers, but raised more than £200 for young cancer sufferers. The MOON UNDER WATER kitchen manager Daniel Jones volunteered to have his chest waxed with colleagues and clients paying £1 a strip. Diners were also invited to buy tickets to win a meal for two in a VIP booth with the waiter of their choice reserved just for them. Tomorrow (Friday) staff at the High Street venue hope to add to their fundraising by wearing England football tops to work to mark St. George’s Day for which they will pay a ‘fine’ and encourage customers to contribute. Money raised will go to CLIC Sargent Caring for Children with Cancer, the charity supported by owners Wetherspoons.”

Halesowen News 19/5/2010

“A World Cup-themed wine festival kicks off at three pubs on Monday (May 24) to mark the run up to the biggest football tournament. Cradley Heath’s the MOON UNDER WATER, High Street, the BRITANNIA, Halesowen Street, Rowley Regis and the WILLIAM SHENSTONE, Queensway, Halesowen, will be serving five wines from World Cup winning countries, as well as the official FIFA wine from host nation South Africa. The festival runs until Thursday June 10 – the day before the opening game in the World Cup. The six wines from Argentina, Italy, Brazil, Germany, England and South Africa have not previously been served at the pubs and complement up to 16 additional wines available during the festival.

The MOON UNDER WATER manager, Gabrielle Livesey, said, ‘I am sure our customers will enjoy the six festival wines, which have all been sourced with the World Cup in mind.’” “International beers will be gracing the pumps of pubs in Halesowen, Cradley Heath, Rowley Regis and Oldbury during 17 day festival. The WILLIAM SHENSTONE, MOON UNDER THE WATER, the BRITANNIA and the COURT OF REQUESTS will have beers from South Africa, New Zealand, Sweden, Canada, USA, Belgium, Australia, Germany, Spain and Norway. The Wetherspoons beer festival runs from Friday, March 28 to Sunday, April 13 with all beers priced from £1.99 to £2.15 a pint. The MOON UNDER WATER manager, Gabrielle Livesey, said, ‘We are thrilled to be serving such a fantastic selection of beers from across the world as well as those brewed in the UK. The overseas beers have never previously been available as cask ales in the UK, which makes them even more special.....

Many of the beers are available in the pubs for the first time, having been brewed exclusively for the festival. Customers will be able to sample any three of the real ales in special third of a pint glasses for the price of a pint.”

“Four Wetherspoon pubs across Halesowen and Sandwell are dropping their prices by 7.5 per cent on Wednesday as part of the company’s ongoing tax battle with the Government. The MOON UNDER WATER, Cradley Heath, the BRITANNIA, Rowley Regis, the WILLIAM SHENSTONE, Halesowen, and the COURT OF REQUESTS, Oldbury are joining in national Tax Equality Day which is highlighting the benefit of a VAT reduction in the hospitality industry. The MOON UNDER WATER manager, Gabrielle Livesey, said, ‘We are proud to support the campaign to reduce the level of VAT within the pub industry. Customers coming to the pubs on Wednesday September 24 will find the price of their food and drink is lower than normal. We are keen to highlight the amount customers would save if VAT in pubs was lowered. So, for example, the total price of a meal and drinks for a customer at the pubs would be reduced from £10 to £9.25 on Tax Equality Day.’”

It was damaged by fire on 11th September 2015.

Closed.

It reopened a few days later.

Halesowen News 6/1/2016

“A boozy row has erupted between Sandwell Council and Wetherspoons after the authority officially called for residents to observe Dry January. The council ‘challenged’ residents to stop drinking alcohol for 31 days as part of the Alcohol Concern and Public Health England backed campaign.

Councillor Darren Cooper, leader of Sandwell Council, said, ‘Once the excesses of Christmas and New Year are over, many of us plan to start off the year in a healthy way. Dry January is something I like to do every year. It’s a good opportunity to give your body the chance to have a detox after the festive period. People who have taken part in previous years say after a month without alcohol they sleep better, lose weight and generally feel more energetic.’ He added, ‘Dry January isn’t about forcing everyone to give up alcohol for a month but remembering we all need to look after ourselves and live as healthy a lifestyle as possible.’

However, giant pub firm JD Wetherspoon, which runs the COURT OF REQUESTS in Oldbury, the BRITANNIA in Blackheath and the MOON UNDER THE WATER in Cradley Heath, blasted Cllr. Cooper and the council for being ‘nannyish.’ Wetherspoon’s PR spokesman Eddie Gershon said, ‘People enjoy going out for a drink in a local pub, if people decide to drink less in a particular time then that is a decision for them to make. We are not sure that a leader of a council needs to be endorsing something like Dry January and one could ask the council whether it would also put out statements about not having a fry up, having a takeaway or eating less during a particular month of the year. People who go to the pub are not stupid and can make their own decisions, it feels a bit nannyish, and it could lead to councils pontificating on a whole range lifestyle actions.’

However, Cllr. Cooper hit back, he said, ‘I don’t see anything nannyish about it – we’re not telling people they shouldn’t drink, but like many public organisations, we’re backing a national campaign that encourages people to think about their health. As the authority responsible for public health and alcohol treatment, of course we’re going to support public health campaigns that help tackle things like excessive drinking, obesity and inactivity.’ He added, ‘I am sure JD Wetherspoon’s profits will survive whether customers are drinking a pint of lager or a pint of lemonade.’”

It underwent complete refurbishment and redecoration in 2016, at a cost of £326,000.

Halesowen News 8/9/2017

“A trio of Black Country boozers are cutting prices to protest against tax rules they say are unfair. On Wednesday September 20 the MOON UNDER WATER in High Street, Cradley Heath, the BRITANNIA in Halesowen Street, Rowley Regis and the WILLIAM SHENSTONE in Queensway, Halesowen, will drop the cost of all food and drink by 7.5 per cent. The pubs are taking the action, which will last one day only, to support national Tax Equality Day, aimed at highlighting the benefit of a VAT reduction in the hospitality industry. All food and drink in pubs is subject to 20 per cent VAT while supermarkets have a zero VAT rate on all food. Publicans say the big retailers use that saving to sell alcohol at a discounted rate.

Gabrielle Tandy, manager of the MOON UNDER WATER, said, ‘We are keen to highlight the amount customers would save if VAT in pubs was lowered permanently. So, for example, the total price of a meal and drinks for an individual would be reduced from £10 to £9.25 on Tax Equality Day. A reduction in the level of VAT on a long-term basis will generate growth and create jobs in the important leisure and hospitality sector and help the high street of which pubs are an integral part.’”

“Dudley News Loos at five borough Wetherspoon pubs have been rated among the best in the country. The FULL MOON in Dudley, the ABRAHAM DARBY at intu Merry Hill, the CLIFTON in Sedgley were all given a platinum star rating in the Loo of the Year Awards 2017.

Inspectors also gave the top rating to the MOON UNDER WATER in Cradley Heath and the BRITANNIA in Rowley Regis. Meanwhile, gold ratings were given to the WATERFRONT INN in Brierley Hill and the WILLIAM SHENSTONE in Halesowen. The awards, celebrating their 30th anniversary this year, aim to highlight and improve standards of ‘away from home’ toilet provision across the UK. Loo of the Year Awards inspectors made unannounced visits to thousands of toilets at sites across the UK, in order to judge them. All of the toilets were graded from bronze to platinum – unacceptable toilets were not graded at all. The platinum rating was only given to outlets which offered ‘exceptional toilets.’

Toilets were judged against numerous criteria, including décor and maintenance, cleanliness, accessibility, hand washing and drying equipment and overall management.....

Mike Bone, managing director of the awards scheme, added, ‘The toilets at all seven pubs have been designed and fitted out to a very high standard and are both clean and well maintained. The pubs richly deserve their awards.’”

Dudley News 2/8/2018

“It will be gin o’clock at several pubs across the Black Country thanks to an 18-day festival paying homage to the tippie this month. Wetherspoons pubs in the area will each be serving up to 15 gins not previously available in the establishments. The MOON UNDER WATER in High Street, Cradley Heath, the BRITANNIA in Halesowen Street, Rowley Regis and the WILLIAM SHENSTONE in Queensway, Halesowen are among those taking part. Also genning up on their gin are the FULL MOON in Dudley High Street and the ABRAHAM DARBY at Merry Hill, the CLIFTON in Sedgley and the WATERFRONT INN in Level Street, Brierley Hill. The gin festival will run from Thursday, February 14 to Sunday, March 3 inclusive. There will be a number of flavoured gins among the selection including heather, dandelion, juniper, raspberries, vanilla, damsons, blackberries and rose petal. The festival gins include Aber Falls Orange Marmalade Gin, Adnams Copper House Pink Gin, Didsbury Gin Raspberry & Elderflower, Eden Mill Love Gin Liqueur, Greenall’s Wild Berry Gin and The Lakes Damson Gin Liqueur.

The MOON UNDER WATER manager Gabrielle Tandy said, ‘The festival will showcase some wonderful gins from across Britain.’

The FULL MOON manager Lee Cartwright added, ‘They have not previously been available in the pub and I am sure that our customers will enjoy drinking them.’

Tasting notes on all of the gins plus guidance on the best mixers – which are included free during the festival – for each gin will be available in the pubs. During the festival, the pubs will continue to serve their regular range of up to 12 gins.”

“William Smith, licensed victualler, Gorsty Hill, was summoned for having, on the 16th inst, unlawfully sold a quantity of ale on a race course without being duly licensed to do so. Defendant pleaded guilty, but urged that he had applied to the Excise for a license, and was informed that a license was not required, and that he might sell what he wished during the wake. The Clerk pointed out to the Bench that by the 25th Vic. chap.22, sec.13, the Commissioners of Inland Revenue could grant permission to licensed victuallers to sell on race courses after the consent of two Justice of the Peace had been obtained. He further suggested that as the Act was a new one, it could not be very well known, and that all purposes might be served if the defendant would plead guilty and pay costs. The defendant agreed to this course, and the case was dismissed.

John Wright and James Tromans, publicans at Gorsty Hill, were brought up on similar charges, and were dismissed under the same conditions.”

“The Explosion at the Saltwells Colliery

Mr. E. Hooper, one of the Coroners for South Staffordshire, yesterday concluded the enquiry respecting the death of James Stringer, one of the four unfortunate men killed at a pit of the above colliery, belonging to the Earl of Dudley, on the morning of the 30th of October. The adjourned inquest was held at the house of Mr. William Smith, the NAVIGATION INN, Gosty Hill. Mr. Owen (of the firm Bourne and Owen, Dudley) was present on behalf of the Earl of Dudley; Mr. J. P. Baker, the Inspector of Mines, attended officially. Mr. Fletcher, the manager of the colliery, was likewise in attendance.

It will be remembered that on Monday last the facts of the case were investigated by Mr. Robinson, one of the Worcestershire Coroners; and James Stringer, the subject of the present enquiry, having died within the jurisdiction of Mr. Hooper, the Staffordshire Coroner, it was requisite to pursue the investigation.

The Coroner said he had received a letter from Mr. Smith, Lord Dudley’s agent, announcing that, in consequence of a communication from him (the Coroner) he had determined to reward the man who had in such a praiseworthy manner attended to the deceased, Stringer.

Thomas Bunn, doggy of the pit, was called, and had the evidence given by him on Monday read over to him. The witness identified the lamp produced by the police constable, and said that the copy of his testimony just read over was correct. He did not know Stringer, but knew that he must have been at work that morning. Witness descended at half-past five that morning, before the workmen.

Mr. John Hughes, mining surveyor, handed in plans of the Saltwells Colliery, together with sections of the works, which were fully explained to the Jury by Mr. Baker, Government Inspector.

The witness Bunn continued: He did not see the men smoking that morning. After the occurrence all the powder in the can had been exploded. The can was usually put in a hole about the size of witness’s head, but could not say whether it was sulphur or powder which had caused the explosion. He had received the safety lamp from Ben Smith, the banksman, and felt certain that it was in perfect order. In reply to Mr. Owen, witness said that the men would, if they could, get powder from the can, for the purpose of facilitating their work.

James Knight, a sinker at the pit, was called, and had his evidence given before the Worcestershire Coroner read over to him. He said that the lamp was screwed up when it was given over to him.

Ben Smith deposed that, according to their common practice, the men went down smoking on the morning of the accident.

An additional witness, James Hodgkins, said: I am a miner, and have been employed at the Saltwells Colliery, where I was at the bottom of the pit on the morning of the 30th of October. I was blown over by the explosion, and fetched a lamp when I had recovered myself. I first saw Higgs in the east road. I found the deceased Stringer further up the gate road, a distance of about twenty yards. Stringer was lying on his back, his head being towards me. I helped to carry him out; he was badly burnt. I found Heeney on the other side of the road, some yards further on – a few yards from the ‘fault.’ Heeney must have been near the ‘fault;’ he told me so himself. I was under the impression that the explosion had arisen from sulphur.

By Mr. Baker: I heard but one report. Stringer said to me, ‘Oh, Jem, I’m smashed against that skip.’ I found the skip turned up. (This, as shown by the plan, would be but a very short distance from the spot where the powder was kept.)

Mr. Baker observed that this evidence threw more light upon the matter than any testimony yet adduced.

By Mr. Owen: I smelled the burnt sulphur.

Mr. Owen said that the agents of the Earl of Dudley were most anxious to afford every facility for soliciting the truth.

Richard Taylor, another miner, proved having brought up the deceased, and taken him home.

Police-constable Moss produced the remains of a pair of trousers belonging to the deceased man Higgs, and one of the pockets of which was entirely blown or burnt away. The theory sought to be founded on this fact was that Higgs had helped himself to some of the powder from the can, which had been ignited by a spark from his pipe, and thus occasioned the melancholy accident.

Mr. Baker then went minutely into the evidence, stating his opinion, as previously expressed at the inquest on Monday, as to the cause of the explosion.

The Coroner summed up, and the Jury found a verdict to the effect that the deceased had been killed by an explosion, the cause of which there was no evidence to show.

The Foreman of the Jury said he was thoroughly convinced that the ventilation of the pit was good, but that the Jury thought that increased care should be taken regarding the powder in the pits.

Mr. Fletcher observed that the powder was given out by the charter-master, but that so far as he was concerned, every effect should be given to the recommendation of the Jury.”

Stourbridge Observer 19/8/1865

“On Saturday last, an inquest was held at the house of Mr. W. Smith, NAVIGATION INN, before Mr. North, Deputy Coroner, touching the death of a man named David Law, aged 61 years. From the evidence adduced, it appears that the deceased left home on the Thursday night previous, for the purpose of going to his club, which was held at the PIG AND WHISTLE INN. He left the club house at ten o’clock, but not returning home, information was given of the fact to Police-constable Davies, who having got assistance, at once commenced searching the canal, which the deceased would have to pass on his way home. After dragging for some length of time, they found the body of the deceased in a basin of the canal called Collis’ Basin. The jury found a verdict of Found Drowned. The Coroner intimated that the basin of the canal in question, had better be a little more properly fenced, as its present fencing was in a shocking and defective state.”

“John Cory, William Munslow, and John Munslow were charged by Police-constable Hume with assaulting him whilst in the execution of his duty on the 27th ult. Complainant said that he had a warrant for John Munslow for bastardy arrears. He apprehended him near the NAVIGATION public house. There were some people outside, and he took prisoner into the house. William Munslow said that he (meaning the prisoner) was not going out of the house that night. Witness caught hold of the prisoner, and William Munslow seized witness by the collar. John Munslow offered his brother his watch. Witness told him to have nothing to do with it. All three of them fell on the floor together. William said he had got his watch, and dared witness to take it off him, and also told witness to loose him. William then again took hold of witness by the collar, and the two of them bent him over the beer machine. Witness held John with his left hand, and pushed William with his right hand. Witness got John into the passage, and Cory cried out 'Fasten the door.' Witness was then struck with a basin from behind, but at length got outside. Cory said, 'Now Jack don't be took,' and seized the officer by the collar, and struck at him, but he warded off the blow. The landlord then took hold of Cory and told him to be quiet. John Munslow said he would not be taken, and said to witness, 'Come into the cut,' and seized him round the waist, and tried to put him into the cut. With the assistance of the landlord witness got John to the station. William followed, and the officer locked him up as well. He afterwards apprehended Cory with the assistance of Police-constable Shenstone.

William Smith, landlord of the NAVIGATION INN, gave corroborative evidence as to the resistance made by the prisoner. The Bench did not consider the case proved against William Munslow, and discharged him. John Munslow was fined 2s 6d and costs, and John Cory 5s and costs; in default 7 days."

Complainant said defendant and some other men came into his house, and asked for some ale. He then called two men in who were drunk, and witness accordingly refused to supply the ale. On this defendant became disorderly, and would not go out of the house when ordered. Fined 2s 6d and costs, or fourteen days' imprisonment."

"On Thursday last an inquest was held at the NAVIGATION INN, Old Hill, on the body of Eliza Siviter, aged 18, late of Tower Street, Birmingham, whose body was discovered in the Birmingham canal, near Old Hill Railway Station, on Tuesday. The deceased left her home on Monday for the purpose of visiting some friends at Halesowen and Blackheath, and left her grandfather's house at the latter place shortly before nine o'clock at night, intending to proceed to Birmingham by the last train from Old Hill. There are persons who state that a young woman answering the description of the deceased was seen on Monday night inquiring the way to Old Hill railway Station, and as she would have to pass along the side of the canal for some distance, it is assumed that she fell accidentally into the water. There were no marks of violence on the body. The inquiry was adjourned until Tuesday next. On Thursday last the body of a newly-born female child was found in the Birmingham canal at Waterfall Lane, Old Hill. There were no clothes upon the body, or anything which might give a clue as to how it came there. The Coroner held a preliminary inquest upon the body, and adjourned it afterwards until Tuesday next in order that further inquiries might be made."

"On Tuesday afternoon Mr. Edwin Hooper (district coroner) resumed an inquiry at the NAVIGATION INN, Old Hill, touching the death of Eliza Siviter (18) warehouse-woman, Theodore Street, Birmingham, who was found dead in the canal the previous Tuesday The Coroner said when the inquiry was opened there was a doubt in his mind as to whether the child, found two days afterwards near to the same spot as was deceased's body, belonged to her, but the evidence had entirely cleared this up, and there was no connection between the two. The jury returned a verdict of Accidentally Drowned, and recommended that a fencing be erected to guard a spot where it is supposed deceased fell into the canal.

At the same time the inquest on the body of the child above referred to was resumed. The body, that of a newly-born female child, was found in the canal, at Waterfall Lane, on the previous Thursday morning.

Mr. Standish, surgeon, who made a post mortem examination of the body, said that it was a full-grown child, and had apparently been in the water some weeks. There was a large scalp wound, such as might be caused by passing boats. The umbilical cord was attached, and there was no ligature to it. All the organs were in a healthy state, and in witness's opinion the child was born alive and died from haemorrhage, owing to not having received proper attention at the time of birth. Believed the child died before reaching the water.

This was the only evidence, the police having been unable to ascertain anything further respecting the body.

The Coroner said there was not sufficient evidence to return a verdict of wilful murder, and the jury, under his direction, returned an open verdict of Found Dead."

“George Rivers, alias Smith (40), returned convict, and Thomas Warr, pensioner, who gave their addresses as Windsor Street, Birmingham, were charged on remand with uttering counterfeit coin at Old Hill and Blackheath.

On the 5th inst, William Andrews, keeper of the CROWN INN, Old Hill, noticed the two prisoners stop in front of his house and then part, Warr going down the road and Rivers going into the house. Rivers called for half a pint of ale, which the servant girl brought him, and in payment of which he gave her a florin. Andrews looked at the coin and discovered it was a bad one. He asked the prisoner how many more he had like it, and he made no answer. A policeman was then sent for, and the prisoner was given into his custody.

Evidence was then given by Martha Smith, whose father keeps the NAVIGATION INN, Old Hill, showing that Rivers called at the house on the same date and asked for half a pint of ale, tendering a two-shilling piece in payment. Upon sounding it she found it was a bad one, and she refused to take it in payment or to supply the ale.

Eliza Wright, wife of John Wright, landlord of the SPORTSMAN INN, Old Hill, stated that Rivers called in the house on the 5th and asked for half a pint of ale, in payment of which he tendered a florin. She did not notice that it was a bad one, and she gave him change.

The same prisoner also passed a coin at a public house at Gorsty Hill.

The whole of the coins were examined by Mr. Henn, jeweller, of Cradley Heath, and were found to be composed chiefly of lead. Upon being apprehended 10½d of good money was found upon Warr, and eight bad two shilling pieces. About 9s good money was found upon Rivers.

PC Varrily, of the Birmingham force, gave evidence showing that the prisoner Rivers was committed at the Northampton Assizes in 1877, and sentenced to five years penal servitude.

The Bench remanded the prisoner for seven days.”

“Stafford Assizes.

George Rivers (35), labourer, and Thomas Warr (40), labourer, were charged with uttering several bad half-crowns at Old Hill. Mr. Todd prosecuted. It appeared that Rivers on the 5th of December went to the CROWN INN, Old Hill, and asked for a pint of ale, tendering half a crown. The servant, doubting its genuineness, went in search of the landlord, William Andrews, outside the door. Andrews seeing it was bad, gave prisoner in charge of a policeman. He then remembered seeing the prisoner Warr talking to Rivers before going into the house. With a policeman he followed Warr, and arrested him at Hales Owen Bridge. In his possession were found eight counterfeit half-crowns, which he said he had been given him to carry by Rivers. Prisoners were found guilty. Rivers was an old offender, and having on three previous occasions been convicted for uttering base coin, he was sentenced to ten years' penal servitude. Warr was ordered to be imprisoned for a month.”

In 1972 an article appeared in the Black Country Bugle relating that Jack the Ripper arrived at Old Hill Station in November 1888 and went to the NAVIGATION INN, where he obtained a night's lodging. During the night the stranger arose from his bed and rushed from the inn, over the rear courtyard wall and into a drainage marlhole, his body never being found. The landlord and his wife were named as Jethro and Eliza Jane Homer, and the top hat left behind was displayed at the inn.

It transpires that this story was a work of creative fiction written by Harry Taylor, the original proprietor and editor of the Black Country Bugle.

The article was reprinted in the Black Country Bugle of 20th May 2020.

"At the Old Hill Police Court, on Wednesday, before Messrs. W. H. Wiggin, A. H. Bassano, and W. Holcroft, Charles Cowton, occupier of the NAVIGATION INN, Old Hill, and holder of the license of the NEPTUNE INN, Powke Lane, Old Hill, was charged under the Licensing Act with permitting drunkenness in the NEPTUNE INN, on the 20th and 21st insts.....

Inspector Bishop stated that Cowton had kept the NAVIGATION INN twelve months in a very satisfactory manner....."

[The account of the charges appears in the NEPTUNE.]

County Express 29/8/1891

"The annual licensing sessions for the Rowley Regis division of Staffordshire were held at the Police Court, Old Hill, on Wednesday.....

Mr. W. Waldron (Brierley Hill) appeared in support of the application of Charles Coulton for the renewal of the NAVIGATION INN. Inspector Bishop deposed to the holder of the license, Thomas Weston, on the 11th of March this year being fined £10 and costs for permitting drunkenness. Mr. Coulton left the NEPTUNE INN, Garratts Lane in March, and went to reside at the NAVIGATION INN. Whilst there he neglected to get the transfer to the then occupier, and thereby committed two offences, for which he was fined £10 and costs and £5 and costs. In answer to Mr. Waldron the Inspector said Mr. Coulton kept his house as well as any licensed victualler in the district. The house adjoined several works, and was frequented by boatmen. Mr. Waldron said no doubt the Bench were aware and would consider that the requirements of the district desired the house to be kept open. The house had been a licensed house for eighty years, and having regard to this fact alone, he hoped the Bench would not cause Mr. Coulton to be immolated. Adjourned."

County Advertiser 29/8/1891

"The annual licensing sessions for Rowley Petty Sessional Division were held last Wednesday.....

The magistrates said they were pleased to learn that there had been a decrease in the drunken cases. They then proceeded to consider the 'black list'.....

Mr. Waldron applied for the renewal of the license of Charles Cowton, landlord of the NAVIGATION INN, Old Hill, who had been convicted of two offences against the Licensing Act, for which he was fined £10 and £5, in neglecting to have the house properly transferred to him. The previous tenant, Weston, was fined £10 and costs for permitting drunkenness on the 11th of March this year. Inspector Bishop said that Cowton, who kept the NEPTUNE INN, Garratts Lane, Old Hill, neglected to take out a transfer when he went to occupy the NAVIGATION INN.

Cross-examined: He had conducted the house in an excellent manner, and there was no better landlord in Rowley.

Mr. Waldron said the NAVIGATION INN was near collieries and works of various descriptions, and also close to the canal. He did not think the Bench would take away the license which had been in existence for 80 years, and especially when they have heard the character which the applicant possessed..... Adjourned."

County Express 3/10/1891

"Old Hill Adjourned Licensing Sessions.....

Mr. W. Bassano said the only case in which they proposed not to renew the license was in the case of the CROSS INN, Old Hill.....

Mr. Ward asked if all the other licenses were granted without any special application being necessary. Mr. Bassano said this was so. Of course they had, in the exercise of their discretion, thought there were several cases in which they might reasonably withhold the license, and the Bench had had a long discussion that morning before coming into Court as to whether they should do so in the case of a man fined £10 and costs. However, they had decided to grant the whole of the licenses this year, and they gave an intimation that in future the Bench would deal very stringently in cases of conviction under the licensing laws, both as regards the amount of fines and endorsements, and in the cases of endorsements they would deal more stringently. In plain English, this meant that a person with an endorsement against the house would in future have a very small chance indeed of getting his license renewed. They hoped the licensed victuallers and other licensed persons in the district would take a warning from that."

County Advertiser 30/7/1898 - Notice

"To the Overseers of the Poor of the Parish of Rowley Regis, in the County of Stafford, and to the Superintendent of Police of the District in which the House hereinafter mentioned is situate, and to all whom it may concern.

I, William Pearson, Licensed Victualler, now residing at the NAVIGATION INN, Granville Road, Gorsty Hill, Old Hill, in the Parish of Rowley Regis, in the County of Stafford, Do Hereby Give Notice that it is my intention to Apply, at the General Annual Licensing Meeting for the Division of Rowley Regis, to be holden at the Public Office, at Old Hill, in the said County, on the 24th day of August, 1898, for an Order sanctioning the Removal of the License now held by Frank Gadd, of and at the HORSE SHOE INN, Waterfall Lane, Old Hill, aforesaid (authorising him to Apply for and Hold Excise Licenses to Sell by Retail Beer and Wine, to be consumed on or off the Premises, in pursuance of the Acts 11 Geo.IV and Will.IV c.64, and 23 Vic. c.27 secs 7 and 8, and all other Acts amending the same), to the Premises now occupied by me at Granville Road, Gorsty Hill, Old Hill aforesaid, and known by the sign of the NAVIGATION INN, and that such License may be granted and continue in respect of such last-mentioned premises in pursuance of the Licensing Act 1872, and all other Acts thereto enabling, of which said premises Atkinsons Brewery Limited, of Aston Park Brewery, Queens Road, Aston, in the County of Warwick, are the owners, and the same are of the annual value, and are otherwise qualified as required by law, and are now in my occupation.

Given under my hand this 27th day of July, 1898.

William Pearson.”

Dudley Herald 27/8/1898

“The annual Licensing Sessions of the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division was held at the Old Hill Police Court on Wednesday.....

Mr. Cartland, Birmingham (instructed by Messrs. Redfern and Company) applied for the transferring of a full license from the NAVIGATION INN to the HORSE SHOE INN, Old Hill, and also for the beer license of the HORSE SHOE INN to be transferred to the NAVIGATION INN.

Mr. B. Shakespeare opposed on behalf of Mrs. Foley, of the THREE FURNACES INN, and Mr. McWinter, of the CROWN INN. Mr. Clulow also opposed for Mr. McWinter.

Mr. Cartland thought that this exchange would be one which would be for the benefit of the district. The HORSE SHOE INN was situated, as the Bench knew, on the main road near to the station and was in every way suitable for a fully licensed house. The tenant, Mr. Gad, provided an ‘ordinary’ for the travellers within the district and they required something stronger than beer with their dinner. The opposition was made upon selfish grounds as the CROWN INN and the THREE FURNACES were also near to the railway station.

Mr. Bassano said the NAVIGATION INN would probably have to be given up. He said the Bench knew most of the circumstances in connection with the houses and they were of opinion that the NAVIGATION INN was a house where a license ought not to be held.

Mr. Cartland: I understand that the house does a great deal of business.

The Chairman: You never knew a house that did not – (laughter).

Eventually the consideration of the matter was adjourned to the Adjourned Sessions.”

“The adjourned licensing sessions for the Rowley petty sessional division were held on Wednesday.....

Mr. Cartland, of Birmingham, applied for a full license on behalf of Mr. Gadd, in respect of the HORSE SHOE INN, and also for the renewal of the license of the NAVIGATION INN. He might say in his opening remarks that Messrs. Atkinson and Co. had thought over the advice given by the magistrates at the last meeting, and they had acted very wisely. They could see that there were a considerable number of houses in the district, and they were willing to surrender the license of the NAVIGATION INN if the application for the full license of the HORSE SHOE INN was granted by the Bench. The NAVIGATION INN was a valuable property, and they consented to surrender it with reluctance.

Mr. Bassano said the Bench knew the district very well, and the opinion of the Bench was that they would grant the license of the HORSE SHOE INN, but it would have to go to Stafford for confirmation.....

The renewal of the license of the NAVIGATION INN came up for consideration, and it was stated that the tenant of the house was now William Pearson.

Inspector Given produced the notice of objection to the renewal of the license.

Mr. Cartland said the objection was altogether out of order. It was not a legal notice, and there had not been any objection to the license by the Bench.

Mr. Bassano said he thought he said at the last licensing meeting that the house was not a suitable one, and that, in his opinion, amounted to an objection.

Mr. Cartland said there must be a final objection.

Mr. Cooksey (magistrates’ clerk) said he should advise the Bench that the words of the Bench were a sufficient objection.

Inspector Given then stated the condition of the premises of the NAVIGATION INN was very bad and they were quite dilapidated. The roof of the house had nearly fallen in, the plaster was coming off the walls, which were without any paper, and the rain poured through the roof in places. The house was much below the level of the canal, and was so situated that no conveyance could get down to it. In four years there had been three drowning cases in which people leaving the house had fallen into the canal, and on a dark night it was a regular death-trap. There was no fencing between the house and the canal. There was a cottage adjoining the house which was in communication with the public house, and there was a wash-house common to both houses. It was a house which was very difficult for the police to have anything like proper supervision over, and it was totally unnecessary for the requirements of the district. He knew of his own knowledge that during the previous occupier’s tenancy the Sanitary Authority served the occupier with a notice to have the house put in habitable repair, and nothing had been done.

Cross-examined: The license had been renewed year by year. He had not seen a customer go into the house for six months.

(Laughter.)

Mr. Cartland said he wished to appeal to the Bench to meet the owners of the house this far that they would hold the license in abeyance until they went to Stafford to have the granting of the full license to the HORSE SHOE INN confirmed. Otherwise the owners of the house would be placed in an awkward position in the proceedings at Stafford, as if the full license was not confirmed, they would lose both licenses.

After some argument Mr. Bassano said the Bench would accede to the proposition of Mr. Cartland, and the certificate of the license of the NAVIGATION INN would remain in the hands of the Court.”

County Advertiser 8/10/1898

“The annual meeting of the Licensing Committee of the county of Staffordshire was held at the Shire Hall, Stafford, on Saturday.....

HORSESHOE INN, Old Hill. Frank Gadd, landlord of the above-named public-house, applied for the confirmation of the grant of a full license to the house by the licensing justices in petty sessions. Mr. Cartland and Mr. Parfitt supported the application, and Mr. Vachell (instructed by Mr. J. W. Clulow) opposed, on behalf of the North Worcestershire Breweries Limited and others..... The house was the property of Messrs. Atkinson, brewers, and they had given an undertaking to the Court below, that should a full license be granted to the HORSESHOE and confirmed, they would allow the license of the NAVIGATION INN, also owned by them, to lapse.....

Mr. Vachell contended that the applicant had no interest in having the license enlarged, it being a pure case of a brewery company seeking to improve their property He asked the committee to consider the case on its merits, and regretted that the practice was springing up of bolstering up a case by offering to give up a license belonging to some other house. In this case the brewery company were not offering much, as the NAVIGATION INN had been soundly condemned by the police and was of no value. Mr. Cartland said the license to the NAVIGATION INN had been renewed, but he was instructed to give an undertaking to the committee that in case the full license to the HORSESHOE was confirmed the other license should be given up immediately. The Chairman said that on that undertaking, and that undertaking only, the committee were willing to confirm the grant of the Court below.”

“An inquest was held on Monday morning, before Mr. Edwin Hooper, Coroner for South Staffordshire, at the NEPTUNE INN, respecting the death of William Rock (59), a wagoner, late in the employ of Mr. John Knight, Worcester Wharf, Birmingham. The deceased on the 24th inst was driving a wagon laden with timber on a road near Old Hill, when some of the timber, which was not securely chained to the conveyance, fell, and caused the horse in the shafts to kick. Deceased was cautioned by a passer-by to see that the timber was made secure, but he took no notice of the warning, and shortly afterwards a portion of the timber fell on to the shafts of the wagon, causing the horse to kick so furiously that the deceased fell from his seat on to the road, and one of the wheels of the wagon passed over his thigh. He was picked up and conveyed to the nearest public house, where some brandy was administered to him, and he was then conveyed on the way to Birmingham, with the intention of being taken to the General Hospital; but on his arrival at the BEAR INN, Smethwick, he died, and was removed back to Old Hill. The jury found a verdict of Accidental Death, and expressed a hope that the road on which the accident happened being in a dangerous condition for traffic, should be repaired.”

“Last week the Rev. W. A. Newman gave his tenants an excellent dinner, at the house of Mr. Thomas Lowe, NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill. After dinner Mr. N. H. Chavasse was called to the chair, Mr. T. “A young man, named John Payne, was charged with committing an assault on Mrs. Sarah Lowe, landlady of the NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill. Mr. Addison defended. The prosecutrix stated that on the 7th of February the defendant and a number of other persons were drinking at her house. She was told that defendant had upset a table and broken some jugs and glasses, and on her going to the room she met the defendant rushing out. She attempted to stop him, whereupon he assaulted her in a most brutal manner by striking her on the head and shoulders. The husband of the prosecutrix gave corroborative evidence. For the defence, witnesses were called who swore that the amount of the damage was offered to the prosecutrix, and that Mr. Lowe violently assaulted the defendant, who only struck in self-defence. The Clerk said that when Mrs. Lowe applied for a summons she was almost blind from the blows she had received; and Police-sergeant Powner proved that defendant had been several times convicted of violent assaults. The Bench imposed a fine of 5s and costs, or twenty-one days.”

“Josiah Robinson, landlord of the NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill, summoned William Robinson for being disorderly on his premises, and refusing to leave when ordered to do so. Mr. Addison defended. The prosecutor gave evidence in proof of the offence, and against defendant was sworn, stating that he was not disorderly, but was ordered out of the house by the landlord and refused to go until he had drunk the ‘stuff’ he had before him. He was fined 5s and costs.”

“James Marsh, furnace labourer, and Ezekiel Blaydon, labourer, were charged with assaulting Thomas Fletcher, of Dog Lane, a labourer in the employ of Mr. Lowe, of Old Hill. Mr. W. S. Hayes prosecuted, Mr. Waldron defending. The prosecutor alleged that on the night of the 16th inst, the two defendants were drinking at Robinson’s, the NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill, and left there about ten o’clock. They went across to Mr. Lowe’s timber-yard, and as they were trespassing the watchman came up and informed them of the fact, on which they used threats towards him. Fletcher hearing the altercation then came up, and defendants also threatened him. He went towards Mr. Lowe’s house for assistance, and was then knocked down by Marsh, and afterwards kicked by Blaydon. Evidence to this effect was given by Fletcher, by a servant at the NEPTUNE INN, by the watchman, and Mr. Lowe, who termed Marsh ‘as mad as a March’ with drink. He was attracted to the place of the alleged assault by hearing a disturbance created.

There was a charge preferred against Fletcher of having assaulted Marsh, in support of which defendant alleged that he was walking across the timber yard, as was the custom, not knowing that he was doing wrong, and Fletcher met him, telling him he would set a dog on him. He did this and the dog flew at him, without his having refused to go back the way he came. Fletcher also knocked him down, and the dog bit him. Blaydon never interfered with Fletcher, and he denied that he was requested to leave the yard by the watchman before Fletcher set the dog on him.

The Bench heard several witnesses, and decided to fine Blaydon and Marsh for the assault on Fletcher 10s and costs each, in default a month, the case against Fletcher being dismissed.

There was a further charge against Marsh of assaulting the watchman, Thomas Cooper, by striking him. It resulted in a fine of 2s 6d and costs, with the alternative of fourteen days being inflicted on the defendant.”

“An inquest was held by Mr. E. Hooper, coroner, at the NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill, touching the death of William Sands (12), a boatlad from Oldbury. On Friday evening deceased’s boat was standing near the gas works on the Birmingham Canal, and the boy was sent by his sister to fetch some bread. Less than an hour afterwards his body was found in the water by a witness named Blaydon, about 150 yards from where the boat was stationed. There was no evidence to show how deceased came to get in the canal, but it was thought he had fallen in by accident. An open verdict of Found Drowned was returned.”

“At the Police Court, on Wednesday, before W. Bassano and B. Hingley, Esqrs, Richard Pugh was charged with being disorderly and refusing to quit licensed premises of Ann Eliza Hadley, NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill, on the 6th inst. Prosecutrix stated that on the day in question defendant was in her house and using very bad language. She ordered him out, but he refused to go. With the assistance of her husband she got him out. Defendant was fined 1s and costs.”

“On Wednesday Mr. E. Hooper (district coroner) held an inquest at the NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill, on the body of Uriah Darby (39), single, labourer, Blackheath. On the Tuesday, the 28th ult, the deceased left Old Hill to go to Windmill End, and was not seen again by his relatives. On Sunday, the 3rd inst, his dead body was found in the canal at Old Hill. It had been ascertained that the deceased was drinking at Windmill End until closing time on the 28th ult, and started from there in a state of intoxication, and it is supposed that in walking along the canal side to reach Old Hill he fell into the water and was drowned. A verdict of Found Drowned was arrived at by the jury.”

“Joseph Dudley, Kate’s Hill, Dudley, was charged with having, on the 19th inst, stolen a pair of boots, value 9s, the property of Haden Hadley, landlord of the NEPTUNE INN, Powke Lane, Old Hill. The prisoner was drinking at the house on the 18th inst, and made himself obnoxious on account of his bad behaviour. In the room he sat, a pair of boots were lying under a screen, and these were missed after he had left. The same night the prisoner told a man named Thompson that he had a pair of boots from Hadley's, and Thompson advised him to return them. Prisoner was quite drunk at the time. He did take the boots back to Hadley's, and whilst there he was arrested by Police-constable Wickstead, who charged him with stealing the boots. He replied that someone had put them in his pocket, and he could prove it. There was no previous charge of felony against the prisoner, and he was discharged."

"Mr. E. Hooper, coroner, held an inquest at the NEPTUNE INN, Powke Lane, Rowley Regis, respecting the death of Edward Pike (46), who was killed on the 26th ult, at the Haden Hill Colliery. Mr. W. Bassano, the proprietor of the colliery was present; and also Mr. W. B. Scott, the Government Inspector of Mines; and Mr. W. A. Pickering, the assistant inspector.

Whilst the deceased and a number of other men were engaged in erecting trees in a working on Thursday afternoon a 'bump' occurred, and immediately afterwards a great mass of coal fell and buried the deceased. Upon a portion of the coal being removed, deceased was found shockingly crushed, and quite dead. Two loaders would have met a similar fate had they not been sheltered by some trees. In reply to the Coroner, Mr. Scott stated that he had examined the workings, and was of opinion that everything possible had been done for the safety of the men engaged in the pit. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death."

Dudley and District News 18/8/1883

"A serious accident occurred on Sunday at Halesowen Station, on the Great Western Railway.

Alterations are now being made on the main line, and upon a passenger train being signalled from Old Hill the home signal was left at danger. On the train nearing the signal, the guard Creswell slipped a carriage and the engine went on. Upon the station-master, however, giving the signal of caution the engine driver applied the brake, the result being that the slipped coach came into violent collision with the engine, and on the arrival of the train in the station it was discovered that seven passengers had been seriously injured, and some of them are now said to be in a precarious state, most of them suffering from contusion and shock.

The injured persons are Adin Hadley, of Old Hill.

Mr. Hadley, landlord of the NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill, said he was tossed violently from his seat to the opposite side of the carriage, but, fortunately for him, he had a hat on which prevented his head from being cut. He was so shaken that he was unable to attend to his business, and was then suffering from pains in his left side."

West Bromwich Weekly News 24/12/1887

"Charles Henry Price, landlord of the NEPTUNE INN, Powke Lane, Rowley Regis, was charged with defrauding the revenue by adding a larger quantity of sugar than was entered in his brewing book. Mr. Davis appeared to prosecute.

Charles Cruikshank, Inland Revenue officer, stated that on the 13th September he visited defendant's premises and found entered in the brewing book 10 bushels of malt and 20lbs of sugar. In the evening of the same day he again visited the premises, and took samples of the wort, and sent them for analysis to Somerset House. On the morning of the 14th September he again visited defendant's premises, and he at once told him that there had been a mistake made, and that the servant girl had bought another 20lbs of sugar, and it had been placed in the brewing, but the working brewer told him that he had stated that 56lbs would be required for the brewing.

Henry William Davis deposed to analysing the worts and grains, and said that 48½lbs of sugar must have been used in the brewing.

Defendant was fined £20, or in default two months' imprisonment."

"Thomas Wells, George Hubble, and John Thomas Portman, boatmen, of Netherton, were charged with stealing a window blind, value 1s, on the 18th ult, the property of Caroline Green, landlady of the NEPTUNE INN. The prosecutrix said the defendants came to her house on the morning in question, between nine and eleven o'clock. Inspector Bishop came in and ordered the men out, but Wells refused to do so, and was arrested. After the men had gone she missed the blind (produced) from the bar window. Inspector Bishop said he went to the house and found the defendants in the tap room, drunk. Mrs. Green ordered the men out, but Wells refused to do so, and witness arrested him, and conveyed him to the police station. At the station he was searched, and the blind was found in his pocket. When charged Wells said, 'My mates took it down, and threw it on the table, and I put it in my pocket.' The same night he arrested the two other defendants, and in answer to the charge Hubble said, 'I undone one corner,' and Portman said, 'I shall say the same as my pals.' Wells also said it was a drunken spree. Defendants were each fined 2s 6d and costs, or seven days."

County Express 22/3/1890

"Arthur Hodgetts, proprietor of the NEPTUNE INN, Powke Lane, Old Hill, was charged with permitting drunkenness on the 18th ult. Mr. W. Waldron said he appeared for Hodgetts, who was a large brewer, and the charge was in respect of one of his houses. Inspector Bishop said that at 12.30 on the morning in question he visited the NEPTUNE INN in company with Police-constable Wickstead. In the tap-room he found Emanuel Wells, Joseph Hubbold, and John Thomas Portman. They were all drunk. In answer to questions the manageress (Mrs. Green) said the men had been in there about half an hour at that time. They came into the house at eight o'clock that morning, but they had been out a time or two. Portman had a glass of rum hot, and the other men had pint cups before them, which he thought contained ale.

Cross-examined: He did not know whether the rum was supplied in the house or not. Mrs. Green told him she had asked them to leave, but they would not go.

Police-constable Wickstead gave similar evidence.

A witness, named Wood, said he was in the public house about eight in the morning, and the men had had half a dozen glasses of rum each in no time. It was only like water to them. At ten o'clock they were drunk.

Arthur Wood also gave evidence.

For the defence Mr. Waldron said he desired to confine the case to the point as to whether the men were or were not drunk when the inspector went to the house. Although the word 'knowingly' was struck out of the Act when it passed through the House of Commons, before any conviction could be made the offence must have been known to the manager or the person in control. It was no offence against the person in control if a drunken man went into a house, and was not supplied with anything to drink. He was bound to admit that the liquors were supplied by a little girl, as the manageress was ill. If the Bench thought this was an offence he would not take the case further.

The Bench regarded it as an offence, and inflicted a fine of £1 and costs.

The three men were brought up and charged with being drunk on licensed premises, and were each fined 1s and costs."

"At the Old Hill Police Court, on Wednesday, before Messrs. W. H. Wiggin, A. H. Bassano, and W. Holcroft, Charles Cowton, occupier of the NAVIGATION INN, Old Hill, and holder of the license of the NEPTUNE INN, Powke Lane, Old Hill, was charged under the Licensing Act with permitting drunkenness in the NEPTUNE INN, on the 20th and 21st insts. Mr. Waldron prosecuted for the police authorities, and Mr. Beauchamp (Worcester) appeared for defendant, and, on behalf of his client, pleaded guilty. Mr. Waldron said there were really more charges against defendant, but he only preferred these two. On the 20th inst, at 12.30, a man named Priest went to the NEPTUNE. While there he went into the back yard. He went from the yard into the front place in consequence of something being said to him by the servant about a woman being very drunk. Priest went into the room, and there saw a woman named Tromans, who, he considered, was helplessly drunk. Afterwards he went out into the kitchen, and whilst there he heard Tromans commence to sing. He went again into the room where the woman was sitting, and she had a pint cup containing ale before her. When she had finished that pint she rapped the table with the cup, and called for another pint, at the same time placing threepence on the table. The servant brought in the beer, but only picked twopence up, saying it was only fourpenny. The woman drank from the cup, and immediately she had finished it fell back with her head against the wall, helplessly drunk. The landlord, a person named Beaumont, who had the control of the house as manager, then locked the woman in the room until three o'clock. At this hour, Beaumont, with the assistance of Priest and the other men, carried the woman out of the house into an outhouse or shed in the back yard of the public house. He (Mr. Waldron) didn't know whether Beaumont became frightened that something would happen to the woman, but he thought the better course would be to communicate with the police, and he thereupon wrote a letter to Inspector Bishop, asking him to send an officer to remove a woman who came into the house drunk, but stating that she had had nothing to drink there, and had refused to leave. A policeman was sent to the house, and the woman was found to be so drunk that she was incapable of making any movement, and the police had to bring her to the Police Station on a wheelbarrow. These were the facts of the case on the 20th inst.

No doubt Mr. Beauchamp, who appeared for the defence, would, if he could in law, have raised a very important point, viz, that although this drunkenness took place in this house, the present defendant, Cowton, was not liable, inasmuch as he had handed over the business to Messrs. Hodgetts and Cooper, who had put in as manager a person named Beaumont, and that the defendant, not being upon the premises, and not, as it were, having control of the house, was not liable. The cases, however, bearing upon this important point were too strong. It was perfectly good law that the holder of a license, whether he was on the premises or not, was responsible for the persons who had control of the house, otherwise no offence, however bad it might be, could be brought against the holder of the license. This was not an offence, as it were, personally against the defendant, but the punishment was against the license.

The second offence occurred on the following day. Inspector Bishop went to the house to inform the landlord of what had occurred in his house the day previous, and as to the condition of the woman who had been brought to the station. Upon going into the bar he saw a man named Joseph Wothers, who was drunk and drinking some porter out of a pint cup. He called Beaumont's attention to this, and he replied, 'Well, he's not beastly drunk.' From this remark it appeared Beaumont must have very peculiar and queer ideas of what drunkenness was. When request Wothers left the house and went home.

Jos. Priest, Police-constable Wickstead, and Inspector Bishop gave evidence bearing out this statement. The latter stated that Cowton had kept the NAVIGATION INN twelve months in a very satisfactory manner.

Mr. Beauchamp, addressing the Bench on behalf of the defendant, said from this last statement the defendant had a good character, and came before the Court with a clean sheet. Defendant had held this house under a yearly agreement, and his year's tenancy expired about the 9th inst; but he continued to hold the tenancy until another tenant could be got, and he held the license. The defendant continued to do so at the request of the proprietors. Defendant continued the tenancy until the 15th inst, and handed over the possession of the premises to Beaumont, who was put in as manager. Defendant ignorantly thought he had given up possession of the license as well, and was no longer responsible in the matter; but he had not divested himself of that responsibility, as he was still holder of the license, and liable in law. He thought he might say that Mr. Tanfield, who represented the owners of the house, Messrs. Hodgetts and Cooper, of Halesowen, did not intend to apply for transfer of the license to Beaumont, and he therefore would have nothing to do with the business in the future. The defendant had been led into this by not being sufficiently cautious to divest himself of the license. The Bench would see that, personally, his client had done nothing that was wrong or improper in the matter. However, he was legally responsible, and he asked the Bench, in view of the circumstances of the case, to inflict a small penalty only. A conviction against the defendant would be a very damaging circumstance against him when he applied for a new license at any time.

The Bench said in this case it seemed a very difficult task to get the right person, and under the circumstances Cowton was in a very unfortunate position. They recognised that he had a good character given him by the police. The understood he was likely to apply for a license before long, and the conviction they were about to make would not be taken into consideration as affecting the defendant personally in the event of his applying for a license. They considered the offence committed on the 20th was unpardonable, and they imposed a fine of £10 and costs. In the second case a fine of £5 and costs would be inflicted, including solicitor's costs."

"The annual licensing sessions for the Rowley Regis division of Staffordshire were held at the Police Court, Old Hill, on Wednesday.....

Mr. W. Waldron (Brierley Hill) appeared in support of the application of Charles Coulton for the renewal of the NAVIGATION INN. Inspector Bishop deposed to the holder of the license, Thomas Weston, on the 11th of March this year being fined £10 and costs for permitting drunkenness. Mr. Coulton left the NEPTUNE INN, Garratts Lane in March, and went to reside at the NAVIGATION INN. Whilst there he neglected to get the transfer to the then occupier, and thereby committed two offences, for which he was fined £10 and costs and £5 and costs. In answer to Mr. Waldron the Inspector said Mr. Coulton kept his house as well as any licensed victualler in the district. The house adjoined several works, and was frequented by boatmen. Mr. Waldron said no doubt the Bench were aware and would consider that the requirements of the district desired the house to be kept open. The house had been a licensed house for eighty years, and having regard to this fact alone, he hoped the Bench would not cause Mr. Coulton to be immolated. Adjourned."

AND

"The application of Caleb Price for the renewal of the license of the NEPTUNE INN was made by Mr. Waldon. Inspector Bishop said the house was transferred to Mr. Price in June last. The previous holder of the license was fined 20s and costs in March for permitting drunkenness, and Charles Coulton was fined on the 27th of May last £5 and costs and £10 and costs. Mr. Price was a new tenant. The offences of the two last fines were committed whilst a manager was in the house. Mr. Price had a good character. Adjourned."

"Old Hill Adjourned Licensing Sessions.....

Mr. W. Bassano said the only case in which they proposed not to renew the license was in the case of the CROSS INN, Old Hill.....

Mr. Ward asked if all the other licenses were granted without any special application being necessary. Mr. Bassano said this was so. Of course they had, in the exercise of their discretion, thought there were several cases in which they might reasonably withhold the license, and the Bench had had a long discussion that morning before coming into Court as to whether they should do so in the case of a man fined £10 and costs. However, they had decided to grant the whole of the licenses this year, and they gave an intimation that in future the Bench would deal very stringently in cases of conviction under the licensing laws, both as regards the amount of fines and endorsements, and in the cases of endorsements they would deal more stringently. In plain English, this meant that a person with an endorsement against the house would in future have a very small chance indeed of getting his license renewed. They hoped the licensed victuallers and other licensed persons in the district would take a warning from that."

"Henry Bradley, Bank Street, Old Hill, was charged with stealing a dog, the property of Oliver James Deeming, on the 5th inst. It appeared complainant, who kept the NEPTUNE INN, had his dog, a spaniel, chained up in the yard, about 10.30, when he saw it safe. A person came to his house about half-an-hour afterwards, and the dog was then missing. Witness gave information to Police-constable Insley, who went with him to defendant's house, where they saw the dog. He did not wish to press the case against defendant, who took the dog for a joke. The case was withdrawn on payment of costs."

“On Tuesday morning Mr. Hooper, coroner, held an inquest at the NEPTUNE INN, Powke Lane, Old Hill, upon the body of Elijah Poole (21), labourer, Churchbridge, Oldbury, who was drowned in the Birmingham Canal on Sunday evening, close by the NEPTUNE INN.

Bennett Lowe, labourer, Oldbury, said deceased was his step-son, and worked at Albright and Wilson’s. About 10.30 on Sunday last he went in company with a neighbour named Arthur Pearson to Old Hill on a visit to some relatives of Pearson. Deceased said they should be back by dinner time, but he did not come. Pearson came back about a quarter to twelve at night, at which time witness was in bed, and he heard his wife ask Pearson, ‘Have you bought Elijah back?’ Pearson replied, ‘No, he is drowned.’ Witness then got up and went to Pearson’s house. Pearson, who had different clothes on to what he had in the morning, told him that they had walked into the ‘cut,’ and he had got out the other side; that when he got out he shouted for Elijah, but could get no answer. The two men were on good terms with each other.

William Pearson said he asked deceased on Sunday morning to go with him to his mother’s at the Saltwells for a walk. Deceased refused at first, but afterwards consented. They called on their way at his sister’s, where they had some porter. After a quarter of an hour’s stay they proceeded to his mother’s where they had dinner and some ale mixed with ginger beer. They stayed about twenty minutes there, and afterwards went to the MAYPOLE INN at Cradley Forge. There they had five or six jugs of ale, two or three of which were had after half-past two o’clock – closing time. They paid for them between them, and the landlord paid for some. At closing time witness walked out of the house and walked in again. He told the landlord they had come the three miles and were travellers. They took away from the house a pint of rum.

In answer to Inspector Bishop witness said they were not much the worse for what they had had, but he did not think they were sober.

Witness, continuing his evidence, said they reached his sister’s house about four o’clock, and had tea. They mixed their tea with the rum which they had brought from the MAYPOLE.

The Coroner: How many partook of the tea? – Witness: About five or six.

Witness said they remained at his sister’s house till about a quarter to six, and then proceeded homewards. On the way home they called at the BRIDGE INN, where they were joined by a man named Henry Homer. Here they had about three quarts between them, and left about seven o’clock. They were then much the worse for beer, and Poole ‘showed it more than he did.’ They afterwards went into the QUEENS HEAD INN, kept by Mr. Joseph Foley, where they were refused liquor, for which they asked, and they were refused at another public house. They had in their possession a pair of pigeons, and as they were coming up Powke Lane, deceased was talking about putting up a pen for them. They walked straight into the canal instead of keeping to the road. Witness swam across to the far side and scrambled out. He then shouted ‘Elijah’ several times, but could not get any answer. He was dazed, and could not find Poole, who he thought might have got out.

The Coroner: Yes; you were dazed through drink.

Witness, continuing, said he lay down under a hedge, and subsequently was taken to a house, where he changed his clothes.

In reply to Inspector Bishop, witness said that after he got out of the water and lay down, afraid to get up in case he should roll into the canal.

The Coroner: Through having too much to drink? – Witness: Yes, and the cold. I did not know whether Poole was in or out of the canal.

A Juryman: You are in the habit of getting drunk? – Witness: Yes.

And you have been convicted by the magistrates many times? – Yes.

And fining you has not done you any good? – This job will, for I will never taste drink again.

Did you say to the deceased, ‘You can’t stand any more drink, I will drown you?’ – No, I did not. It was not the first time Poole had got drunk.

Police-constable O’Leary deposed that at 9.45, on Sunday night he heard that a man was in the canal at Jones’s Bridge, and with the assistance of Police-constable Wickstead and four other men he dragged the canal and found Poole’s body. Pearson, who was taken into a private house to have his clothes changed, was drunk. He saw him there, and he asked how Poole got into the water, and Pearson said, ‘We walked into the canal by accident, and Poole was too drunk to get out.’

The Coroner said there could be no reasonable doubt that the deceased died from drowning, and there were many serious matters connected with the affair. The two men undoubtedly went into various public houses, and had such a quantity of drink that both of them must have been in a beastly state of intoxication when they got into the canal. The question of any breach of the law having occurred would be inquired into by another court. The evidence showed that deceased got into the canal, and they had to consider whether he got there by accident.

The Jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death, and that the deceased was intoxicated when he got into the canal.

The Jury wished the Coroner to reprimand Pearson on his drunkenness, and on his being called into the room, Mr. Hooper said to him that the jury considered he was in a great measure responsible for his companion’s death. It was a very serious matter, as Pearson induced the deceased to go with him. It appeared to him that he (Pearson) was considerably addicted to drink, and if he was again brought before the justices, and he (the Coroner) knew of it, he would get the magistrates to inflict a heavy penalty on him. The only way he could mark his sense of such conduct as Pearson’s was by disallowing his expenses, and he should take that course. He hoped the occurrence would be a warning to him for the rest of his life.

Pearson said he would never touch drink again.”

“Mary Connelly and William Davis, tramps, were charged with stealing a quantity of wool, knitting pins, and other goods, the property of Moses Cutler, landlord of the NEPTUNE INN, Rowley, on the 28th inst.

Prisoners, it appeared, went to the public house on the Tuesday night and asked to be supplied with some refreshment, at the same time saying that they had no money. Mary Hartshorne, the servant, refused to do this, and the male prisoner said he had travelled for three years with Sanger's Circus. He said he could also perform for the customers, and performed some tricks. Prisoners afterwards left, and the wool and other articles were missed. Police-constable Reynolds afterwards arrested the prisoners, and the male prisoner denied stealing any wool, whereupon his companion said, 'Why you gave it me when you were outside.' The wool was thrown away, and found on the road by Reynolds.

The male prisoner denied the charge, and both prisoners were remanded for a week."

County Advertiser 9/11/1895

"William Davis, of Cardiff, and Mary Connolley, of London, tramps, were charged with stealing a quantity of wool, knitting needles, and knitting, value 6d, the property of Moses Cutler, landlord of the NEPTUNE INN, Powke Lane, Rowley, on the 29th ult. The evidence showed that the prisoners came into the house on the night in question, and Davis asked Mary Hartshorne, a domestic servant, if she would give his 'dearly beloved' (referring to his companion) some whiskey. She replied that she could not, as she was only a servant there, and Davis then asked her for some beer, which she refused to draw, prisoner having no money. The servant went away to fetch the landlord, leaving some knitting on a table in the room. When the landlord came, Davis said to him, 'I am a detective, and I advise you to get the slops removed from under the taps.' He afterwards saw a quantity of wool in the female prisoner's bosom. The prisoners afterwards went away, and the wool was missed. Police-constable Reynolds was informed of the robbery, and arrested the prisoners in High Street, Blackheath. When they were charged with the theft, Davis denied it, and said he knew nothing of the knitting until after they left the house. The woman then said to him, 'You know you gave me the knitting.'

Davis said he was quite innocent, and the woman would tell them the same.

Mr. Bassano: I believe you are a detestable creature. You want to screen yourself and put the blame on this woman. Inspector Given, do you know anything of this wretched man?

Inspector Given said he had made inquiries in Wales, but could hear nothing about him, except that he had undergone seven days for drunkenness. He believed he had made the acquaintance of nearly every gaol in England.

Mr. Bassano said he wished they could have the prisoner flogged.

Davis: I have been in gaol seven days.

Mr. Bassano: You are a contemptible creature; trying to screen yourself at the expense of a woman. You will have to go to gaol for seven days with hard labour. The woman will be discharged."

County Advertiser 4/9/1897

"Henry James, landlord of the SPORTSMAN INN, Blackheath, was charged with being drunk on his own licensed premises, on the 27th July. Mr. S. Sharpe, of West Bromwich, defended.

Police-constable Beech stated that at about 10.40pm on the evening of the date in question he visited the SPORTSMAN INN.

Defendant was sitting in the bar, and witness at once saw he was drunk. He asked defendant to follow him into another room.

Defendant could scarcely get off his chair, and he staggered as he came across the room. Witness told him he was drunk, and he replied, 'I have had some beer, but I am not drunk.' He then asked witness to send for Dr. Mitchell, but witness told him that if he wished for a doctor he must send for one himself, as he was satisfied that defendant was drunk. Defendant then called a man named Booth, and witness asked Booth's opinion as to defendant's condition. He replied, 'He has had some beer, you can see, but he is not drunk.'

Cross-examined: He had had some communication made to him by another publican, but that was not the reason he said defendant was drunk. Defendant did not fall down. He denied being drunk, and at once spoke of sending for a doctor.

Police-constable Plant, who accompanied Police-constable Beech to the house, corroborated.

Moses Cutler, a publican, stated that on the evening named he went to the SPORTSMAN INN about six o'clock. Defendant came in at about twenty minutes to seven, and witness stayed in the house until nine o'clock. During that time defendant had had something to drink, and was in a drunken condition. There was a disturbance between witness and another publican, and as a consequence witness left the house at the request of the defendant. He went to the police station, where he informed Police-constable Beech that defendant was not sober.

Inspector Given said that in consequence of information received he went up to defendant's house on the night in question at 11.45 and overheard the wife of defendant say to him, 'Harry, you know you have had too much; it is your own fault.' Witness then went into the house, and could see from the defendant's manner that he was quite drunk. Witness mentioned that he had overheard the remarks of the defendant's wife, and then left. He subsequently heard through the window a further conversation, in which defendant told his wife she ought not to have told witness that he was drunk. He then said, 'Fill me another glass,' and she replied, 'No, you have had quite enough; you are quite drunk.' Witness then tapped the window and said, 'You are quite right, missis; he is quite drunk; that is perfectly true.' Defendant then said, 'Oh, you have done it this time,' and witness came away.

This closed the case for the prosecution, and Mr. Sharpe said that if defendant had consulted his own pocket he would not have defended the case, as the maximum fine was 10s, but he was so conscious of his innocence that he decided to defend it. It was the first time he had been summoned. A rival publican went to the house on the night in question, and in consequence of some strong language used by this man, Perry [sic], in the exercise of his discretion and the conduct of his business, ordered him out of the house. The man went back and asked to be supplied with some drink, but was refused, and he then went to the police station, and stated that defendant was drunk. Defendant's actions were those of a sober man, and he asked that the incident after closing time might be dismissed as having no weight.

Defendant was called, and said that on the date of the charge he went to Birmingham. He had four or five glasses of ale in Birmingham, and reached home about 7.30. Cutler and another publican were there, and there were some words between them. He told Cutler that if he used bad language and insulted his customers as he was doing, he should not have him in the house. He requested him to leave, and he did so, but afterwards came back and asked for a bottle of stout. This defendant refused, and Cutler then said he would go down to the police station and tell them that he (defendant) was drunk.

Dr. Thomas Ellis Mitchell said that at about ten minutes past eleven on the 27th ult, defendant came to his surgery and gave him an account of what had taken place in his house that night. From the fact that when defendant came into his house he was able to walk steadily and to give a coherent account of his doings during the night, witness would say he was not drunk.

Cross-examined: He was not prepared to give a definition of drunkenness or sobriety. Defendant was not so sober as he appeared in Court at that time.

Sir Benjamin Hingley: Under the influence of drink, but not incapable? – Witness: Yes.

Charles Booth and Alec Hughes corroborated defendant's statements.

After a short consultation Sir Benjamin Hingley said that the Bench were of opinion that although it might have been very unkind on the part of the other publicans, they believed defendant was drunk and incapable of carrying on his business, and he would be fined 10s including costs."

"Jonathan Sefton, Cherry Orchard, Old Hill, and William Blakeway, of Netherton, boatmen, were charged with being drunk and disorderly on the licensed premises of the NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill, and refusing to quit the same when requested to do so, and further with assaulting the landlady, Selina Wothers, on the 20th ult, and Jonathan Sefton was also charged with assaulting Sarah Jane Howard, the landlady's daughter, on the same date.

Selina Wothers said the defendants came into her house about half-past seven at night, in a very drunken condition. Upon seeing their state she ordered them out several times, but they refused to go. Witness refused to supply them and they stopped for half an hour. Blakeway got up to light his pipe, and she again asked him to go out. He refused and pushed her. Witness tried to prevent him sitting down again, and he then struck her a violent blow in the mouth. Sefton also struck her and she sent for the police.

Sarah Jane Howard said she went to take her mother's part, and Sefton struck her on the face, causing her to have two black eyes.

Police-constable Beach said he went to the public house on the date named. Blakeway went when he told him, but Sefton said he would not — well go. He had to be ejected. Witness prevented him striking the landlady with a bottle.

Defendants alleged that Sarah Jane Howard got a poker which she intended to use on them.

Each of the defendants was fined 10s and costs for refusing to quit. Blakeway 40s and costs for the assault on Mrs. Wothers, and Sefton 20s and costs on the same charge. Sefton was also fined 20s and costs for the assault on Sarah Jane Howard."

"An inquest was held on Wednesday evening, at the BRITISH OAK INN, by Mr. H. A. Pearson (coroner), concerning the death of Allan Brookes (49), ales fittings maker, who had resided at Birmingham Road, Blackheath, and whose body was found in the Birmingham Canal, near Powke Lane Bridge, Old Hill, on Tuesday morning. Mr. G. Green was present, representing the deceased's relatives.

Edith Brookes, deceased's daughter, who identified the body at Old Hill Mortuary, said they last saw her father alive on Monday morning, when he left Blackheath Station by the 10.19 train to Windmill End. He had never threatened to make away with himself, and when he left home on Monday he was all right. He was of a cheerful disposition.

Albert Sidaway, landlord of the BRITISH OAK INN, deposed to deceased calling at the house shortly before eight o'clock on Monday evening. When he left just after eight, he said he was going to do other business. He appeared to be in his usual state of mind. Replying to Mr. Green, witness said he knew the spot where the body was found. It was, in his opinion, and unsafe place, and a regular death trap. Several persons had got into the canal there during the last few years, and he believed some had been drowned. Deceased would be going in the direction of home that way.

John Halebond, a boatman, of Yew Tree Lane, Netherton, deposed to finding the body of deceased in the canal, at 5.30am on Tuesday morning. He obtained the assistance of John Stafford, of the NEPTUNE INN, Powke Lane, to get the body out.

Police-constable Horne deposed to removing the body to the mortuary. He found £4 12s 6d in money upon the deceased. He considered the place where deceased was found very dangerous, and it should be protected by a gate. Dr. T. V. deDenne, who had made a post-mortem examination, said death was due to drowning.

A Juryman said he has passed along this road on many occasions at night, and although accustomed to it, he had fallen into the canal.

A verdict of Accidental Death was returned."

“The annual licensing sessions for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held on Wednesday.....

Thomas Hackerson, of the NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill; George Payne, of the PLOUGH AND HARROW INN, Cradley Heath; and William Titus Smith, of the RAILWAY TAVERN, Cradley Heath; on the ground that the premises are structurally deficient and unsuitable.....

Superintendent Johnson opposed the renewal of the license of the NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill, and urged that what he objected to was the opening of a door at the back of the house, which led on to the canal side. This enabled boatmen to have an easy access to the premises, whilst they could also get into them by scaling the wall, which was not high enough. He wished for the wall to be built higher.

Mr. Thompson, who appeared for the owners of the house, the North Worcestershire Brewery Company, said the doorway had been there for a long time, and the plans of the premises had been passed with the door shown upon them. It was a great convenience to the boatmen, and he did not think the company should be called upon to close it, as Superintendent Johnson made no suggestion of secret drinking having taken place upon the premises.

The Chairman said it was a means of access to the public house, and thought it ought to be closed.

Mr. Thompson said it was an important matter to his clients, and he urged that it should be allowed to stand over until the adjourned sessions. This was agreed to by the Bench”

County Advertiser 11/3/1905

“The adjourned licensing sessions for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held on Wednesday, at the Police Court.....

Mr. Thompson referred to three objections made by the police at the annual licensing day for certain alterations which were deferred. The houses in question were the NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill, the RAILWAY TAVERN, Cradley Heath, and the PLOUGH AND HARROW, Cradley Heath. Superintendent Johnson raised certain points, and he asked them to be deferred because they were of considerable importance to his clients. Since then he had consulted with his clients. With regard to the NEPTUNE INN, the police objected to a door which led out of the licensed premises on to the canal side. His clients would give an understanding that this door would be closed altogether excepting to allow horses to be taken to the stables. Otherwise it would be necessary to take the horses a considerable distance round. With regard to the RAILWAY TAVERN they had consented to close the back entrance to these premises and also to close a doorway leading from the back premises of the PLOUGH AND HARROW INN to public passages, after sunset each evening. This was a matter of considerable importance to them inasmuch as the passages were public ones, but his clients had decided to close the doorway at night and he believed this would meet with the wishes of the police.

Superintendent Johnson said he should be willing to withdraw his objections to the renewal of the licenses providing the conditions named by Mr. Thompson were given in writing and carried out by the owners. Mr. Thompson agreed to these conditions, and the renewal of the licenses was granted.”

“At Old Hill Police Court, today, Thomas Hackerson, landlord of the NEPTUNE INN, Powke Lane, Old Hill, was charged with keeping open his premises during prohibited hours, and also with permitting intoxicants to be consumed upon the premises.

Mr. J. W. Clulow, who prosecuted, explained that Inspector Gibbs and Police-constable Bridgewood heard voices in the house at 12 o'clock on the night of the 21st of last month, and also heard the drawing of corks. They watched for a time, and eventually a man named Thorne came out of the side entrance of the yard. He was detained, and Inspector Gibbs, who went into the house, found five other men in the kitchen drinking.

Defendant pleaded that he had read in the Licensed Victuallers' Official Annual that he could entertain his friends after closing time. He did not believe he was infringing the law at the time.

Mr. A. H. Bassano (presiding magistrate) said if the defendant's version of the law was correct, public houses could be kept open all night.

Defendant was fined £5, including costs.

Six men, named James Henry Hackerson, George Thorne, Lewis Hyde, Henry Neale, Charles Newman, and James Danks, of Rowley and Old Hill, were each fined 15s for being upon the premises during prohibited hours.”

“The annual licensing sessions for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held yesterday.....

The Superintendent objected to the renewal of the licenses of.....

NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill.”

County Advertiser 10/3/1906

“The adjourned annual licensing sessions for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held on Wednesday.....

Mr. Bassano said the bench had under consideration the nine houses, five of which were objected to on the ground of convictions and four others on the ground of redundancy. It had raised a very large question, and the magistrates had had before them the consideration of the parish as a whole. He threw out a suggestion to the trade and owners that the matter should be considered from their point of view during the next twelve months. The magistrates would be prepared to consider any counter proposition that might come from the brewers which could be laid before them next year.....

The last of the objections, that of the NEPTUNE INN, Powke Lane, Old Hill, was then gone into. Mr. W. H. Thompson (Dudley) represented the owners of the house, the North Worcestershire Brewery Company.

Inspector Gibbs said there had been three convictions against the house since 1890. The house was badly constructed for licensed premises. There were four small rooms downstairs, and the house was in a very dilapidated state, due to mining operations. It was difficult to get at, being much below the roadway. There was a wall close to the towing path of the canal, and people could get over this into the premises. There was also a gate leading to the canal side, which on one occasion he found open. The house was very difficult for police supervision.

Mr. Thompson explained that the last conviction in 1905 took place when a previous tenant was under notice to leave. He submitted that having regard to the circumstances it would be unfair to refuse the license. He recognised that the premises should be altered, and had deposited plans. The house was at present below the road, and it was proposed to raise it to the level of the road, and also to cut off the access to the canal side, thus making the premises self-contained.

Mr. Bassano said a committee of justices had inspected the premises, and they were in a bad state. The case did not come before them on the question of redundancy, and they did not feel justified in refusing the renewal. They expressed the hope, however, that the plans for the improvement of the house would be submitted to the justices at the earliest moment."

County Advertiser 14/4/1906

"Mr. W. H. Thompson, of Dudley, applied on behalf of the North Worcestershire Brewery Co, for sanction to re-build the NEPTUNE INN, Powke Lane, Old Hill. He mentioned that the house was in a very dilapidated condition through mining operations, and had sunk several feet below the main road. The magistrates approved the plans subject to several minor alterations being made."

County Express 3/7/1909

"At 9.45pm on Saturday Benjamin Bradley, of Tibbetts Gardens, Cradley Heath, was in the vicinity of Powke Lane when he heard a splash in the Birmingham canal close to the NEPTUNE INN. Proceeding to the spot he saw a young woman, and with assistance rescued her. She subsequently gave her name as Lizzie Blakeway residing with her brother at the KINGS ARMS INN, Rowley Village. It was alleged that after being rescued she made efforts to again jump into the canal, but was prevented from doing so by Bradley. She was taken to the NEPTUNE INN, and afterwards removed home."

The child was dragged with it, and her brother jumped in to rescue her. He was in difficulties when *J. Black Country Bugle (February 1984) - Pub of the Month

“Many of the local pits were sunk on the Whiteheath side of the town and young Charles Cox of Endless Orchard, Old Hill, saw the need for another tavern in that area. He built the NEW INN in the early 1840s calculating that it would not be short of custom, for some 40 coal pits and 10 brickyards lay within a two mile radius of its location With pits like ‘Blackbat’, ‘Ramrod’ close by, the NEW INN became a favourite colliers pub where the blood sports practiced by that brethren were popular diversions from a stint at the coal face. Dog and cock fighting ledgers were regular events at ‘Cox’s House’ – also famous for its fist fights on Saturday nights.”

“Inquests Before George Hinchliffe, Esq, Coroner.

On Wednesday last, at the NEW INN, Rowley Regis, on the body of William Norton, aged 27 years. The deceased was at work at Mr. Hackett’s coal-pit, at Rowley, on Monday last, and, in company with two other men, ascended from the pit in a skip. On arriving at the top, there was no person in attendance to push the waggon over the pit mouth (the regular banksman not attending on Mondays) and instead of waiting until the engineer came, the unfortunate deceased jumped out, and his foot catching the side of the pit, he fell backwards to the bottom, a depth of 150 yards. Verdict, Accidental Death.”

“On Thursday last, an inquest was held at the NEW INN, Rowley Regis, to enquire into the circumstances attending the death of John Pearson, a miner, 44 years of age. The deceased was employed at the Eagle Pits, Rowley Regis, and was buried by a fall of three or four tons of earth from the roof. He was dead before his body could be extricated from the mass of rubbish which covered it, and which took two hours’ incessant exertion to clear away. It was proved that the workings had been examined that morning, and found to be in a satisfactory state.”

“At the Police Court, on Wednesday, before Messrs. F. D. L. Smith and F. W. G. Barrs, the following persons were charged at the instance of Mr. William Tullet, district inspector of weights and measures, with having in their possession insufficient and unjust weights and measures.

Charles Clift, licensed victualler, Blackheath, was summoned in a charge similar to those above recorded. Mr. Shakespeare appeared to defend him, and when the case was called on said that he had had some conversation with Mr. Tullet on the case, and it had been arranged between them to withdraw it. The question was whether when liquor was sold in the jugs seized by the inspector it was sold by the defendant as representing a certain quantity. He could call evidence to prove that the defendant charged ½d less for these jugs, which were used in his bar. In a recent case the Solicitor-General gave it as his opinion that the law did not apply unless the jugs were to represent imperial quarts and imperial pints.

Mr. Barrs observed that that would open a very wide door.

Mr. Shakespeare said that if his client had not charged ½d less he would have been amenable, but whenever customers asked for pints or quarts he measured the quantity, but when they asked for jugs he gave them jugs and charged ½d less.

Mr. Oldershaw (Magistrates’ Clerk): It is very dangerous for a licensed victualler to have measures of that kind. He lays himself open for these jugs; and it might be very awkward for him.

Mr. Shakespeare: He does it at the request of his customers, in order to keep his bar more respectable.

Mr. Oldershaw: I fancy he must sacrifice the idea of respectability on that point.

Mr. Shakespeare: Well, if he takes my advice, he will never use them again.”

“Charles Clift, of the NEW INN, Old Hill, was summoned for having his house open on Sunday the 20th inst, during prohibited hours for the sale of ale and beer. Mr. Hayes defended.

The defendant was represented by his wife.

Police-constable Slynn was called to prove the case, when Mr. Hayes said that the defendant admitted the offence which was a very trivial one, and expressed her sorrow for it. It occurred about a quarter of an hour before the proper time for opening, and she would not have done so, but a woman who lived near went and begged hard to her to let her have some ale, as one of her neighbours had got some friends who had walked from Smethwick. She had since been told that it was a plan adopted to catch Mr.

Clift.

Police-sergeant Powner said he should press the case, and asked for a conviction, as it was stated that it was a plan used for the purpose of catching a publican. If the defendant was convicted he should summons the woman, but if the Bench merely ordered payment of costs, he could not summons her. He would as soon summons the woman as the defendant.

Mr. Hayes said the ale was for travellers.

The Bench ordered her to pay costs.”

“Thomas Bond was charged by Charles Clift with having on the 22nd inst, knowingly uttered one counterfeit shilling, and also with having in his possession 52 shillings and 6 florins, well knowing them to be base.

Miss Edith Clift said she was neice of the prosecutor, of the NEW INN, Blackheath. On the 22nd inst the prisoner called at their house, and asked for a bottle of ginger beer. He gave her a shilling. She gave it him back and told him it was a bad one, and he then gave her a good sixpence. She told her uncle and Sargeant Davis who were talking together in the house.

Sargeant Davis proved apprehending prisoner, and finding 52 shillings and 3 florins (base coin) all wrapped in fresh tissue paper singly. He also had 5s good money, and 4½d in copper. He said he had bought them of a navvy at Bilston, and had given him 15s for the coins.

Superintendent Mills said he was formerly a jeweller and silversmith. The coins produced were all base, and were a mixture of tin and lead.

Prisoner said he was out of work, and poverty compelled him to do it.

He was committed to take his trial at the Stafford Sessions.”

“Samuel Smith (18), labourer, Blackheath, and William Read (19), labourer, Cakemore, were charged with breaking and entering the dwelling house of Sidney Smith, Causeway Green, and stealing therefrom one silver lever watch, one silver chain and locket, £1 10s in gold, two 5s pieces, three shillings in silver, one twopenny piece and some coppers, on the 29th ult. Mr. Hughes (West Bromwich) defended the prisoner, Read.

Sarah Jane Smith, wife of prosecutor, said that at eight o'clock on the morning in question she left her house, leaving all the doors and windows locked. When she returned at half-past eleven, she found the back door opened. She went to one of her dresses downstairs, and found that the money had been extracted from her purse, and the, and the purse put back again. Upon going upstairs she found that her husband's watch, chain and locket had been taken from under the bed pillow. The articles in a clothes-box had also been turned out, and two 5s pieces and an old twopenny piece extracted. On the same day she gave information to Police-constable Bayliss.

Cross-examined: The prisoner Smith is my nephew, but I do not think he had ever been in any other room than the kitchen in my house.

A boy named Joseph Denson said that on the morning in question he saw two men near prosecutor's house. One was near the dog kennel, and the other at the back door. Witness could not identify the two men.

Mrs. Clift, NEW INN, Blackheath, said that between ten and eleven o'clock on the morning in question the two prisoners came to her house and had a pint of ale, two glasses of rum, bread and cheese, two other glasses of rum, some tobacco, and a cigar, for which the prisoner Smith paid. Smith also asked her to change a 5s piece, which she did. The prisoners remained in her house about an hour.

Police-constable Lavin said that on the day in question he received information of the robbery, and went to the house of the prisoner Smith, and charged him with committing the robbery. Witness saw that Smith had something in his hand, and found it full of money. Smith said, 'I have done no work for the last eighteen months, and thought I would have some.' Smith's mother, who was standing by crying, said, 'Here is the watch,' and handed it to him. Smith had in his possession £1 16s 4d. Police-constable Bayliss came up at the time and took charge of the money and the prisoner.

Police-constable Bayliss said he charged the prisoner Smith with committing the robbery, to which he replied, 'I own all that.' Witness subsequently received a five shilling piece from Mrs. Clift. When at the police station Smith said, 'Read told me to go. He stopped in the yard and minded the dog while I went. I gave him a shilling and a twopenny piece of the money.' On the same night witness arrested Read, who said he knew nothing about the robbery, and added, 'If you had asked me when I saw you before I should have told you all I knew.' Witness locked Read up, and charged the prisoners jointly with committing the robbery. Read said, 'I found a twopenny piece by the garden gate, and gave it to my mother.' Read said he would tell witness all about it, and made a statement to the effect that he knew nothing of the robbery, but that Smith paid for the refreshments they had at Mrs. Clift's. When searched a key which would unlock prosecutor's back door was found in Smith's pocket.

Polly Read, sister of the prisoner Read, deposed to receiving a twopenny piece from her mother and leaving it at the house of Police-constable Bayliss on the 30th ult.

Cross-examined: On the previous day witness saw her brother pick up a twopenny piece in the lane where the prisoner Smith had been dancing.

For the defence Jemima Read, the mother of the prisoner, was called, and said that her son left home about nine o'clock on the morning in question.

A witness named Thompson said the prisoner was at the Cakemore Brickworks at ten o'clock on the morning in question. Smith came to the brickyard about a quarter past ten and had a lot of money in his possession.

Similar evidence was given by Rachel Parkes and William Dunn.

The prisoners were committed for to take their trial at the Sessions.

The Bench allowed bail for Read."

Charles Clift died on 7th February 1886.

County Express 9/6/1888

"Mr. Edwin Hooper (South Staffordshire Coroner) held an inquest on Tuesday at the NEW INN, Whiteheath, Rowley Regis, touching the deaths of William Franks (30), miner, Ross, and John Robinson (32), miner, Mincing Lane, who were killed by the fall of coal at a Rowley Hall Colliery. Mr. Scott (Government Inspector) and Mr. Pickering (assistant-inspector) were in attendance, and Mr. North represented the Rowley Hall Colliery Company.

Evidence of identification having been given, Thomas Siviter said he was at work in a place near to where the deceased were employed on Thursday. Shortly after twelve o'clock a heavy fall of coal occurred and the two men were buried. He certainly was of opinion that the stall where the accident occurred was inadequately timbered.

Christopher Bateman, stallman, said he considered the place to be safe, and that there was no necessity for extra timber.

In reply to the Coroner, witness said he could not account for the coal falling, as it was very firm when examined.

Joseph Baugh, underground manager at the colliery, said John Robinson (one of the deceased men), examined No. 14 stall, and witness was told the place was safe.

The Coroner: To the best of your judgement do you consider there was sufficient timber set for the safety of the men? – Witness: They told me the place was safe.

The Coroner: That is not an answer to my question. – Witness: A shot had been fired.

The Coroner said he should decline to ask the witness another question. He evidently wanted to shirk his responsibility.

In reply to a Juryman, witness said he considered there was sufficient timber.

A Juryman said he considered that Baugh was to blame for the accident.

The Coroner: There is no doubt that had Baugh examined the workings he would have found a faulty place, and the lives of these unfortunate men might have been saved.

After other witnesses had been called, Mr. Pickering, assistant-inspector, stated he examined the workings on the 1st inst. The place was not sufficiently timbered, there being no tree under the coal which gave way. The accident, in his opinion, was due to the want of timber.

The Coroner, in summing up, said the evidence showed that Robinson and Baugh were greatly to blame for not having done their duty. Baugh was very much to blame for not having examined the place, and it would be for the jury to say whether he had been guilty of culpable negligence.

The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death, and added that Baugh was deserving of severe censure for neglect of duty.

Baugh was called into the room and the Coroner informed him of the decision of the jury. He added that he had narrowly escaped a committal for manslaughter, and he trusted what had taken place would be a warning to him, and that he would in future do his duty.

Baugh: I won't rely on the workmen in future."

Sarah Clift married Enoch Hadley in the 4th quarter of 1888.

Birmingham Daily Post 21/2/1889

"Last night a meeting of the employers in the rivet trade at Rowley, Blackheath, Old Hill, and surrounding districts, was held at the NEW INN, Oldbury Road, Blackheath, for the purpose of considering the application made on behalf of the operatives for an advance of wages. Mr. T. W. Lench presided.

The meeting unanimously decided to offer to concede the list issued in June, 1887, representing an advance ranging from 5 to 15 per cent upon the prices paid at present.

A deputation, consisting of Messrs. I. Cashmore, T. Brookes, and other delegates, representing the operatives was called into the room and informed of the decision of the employers. Mr. Cashmore took exception to one item in the list, and Mr. Brookes argued that the advance should be based on the 3s 9d list. He said it was impossible for the men to maintain themselves and families at the present low rates.

The Chairman said the employers considered that the state of trade did not warrant them in offering more than the list mentioned. It would be better for the men to accept a small advance now with the promise that if trade improved that employers would then consider the claim for the 4s list.

After further discussion, the masters agreed to offer the list of June, 1887, in its entirety, with the exception of $\frac{3}{8}$ in and gas rivets. For the $\frac{3}{8}$ in rivets they would pay 3s 8d per cwt in, and 4s 2d out, and an increase of 6d per cwt on gas rivets.

This was accepted by the representatives of the operatives, and they agreed to do their utmost to maintain the new list."

"Thomas West, landlord of the NEW INN, Oldbury Road, Blackheath, was charged with selling intoxicating liquors to drunken persons on the 19th inst, and further, with permitting drunkenness on the same date. Mr. Waldron prosecuted, and Mr. Thompson (Warmington and Thompson), Dudley, defended.

Mr. Waldron said the circumstances out of which the cases arose were as follows. Two young men named Priest and Sturman, on Sunday, the 19th March, went from Old Hill to West Bromwich for a drive, and, in the course of their journey, as far as the evidence showed, they imbibed rather freely of port and brandy at several public houses. They started early in the afternoon, and ultimately got to defendant's house about 7.30. There they had some more port and brandy, Priest having four glasses, and Sturman six glasses of the liquor. Sturman, in consequence, was helplessly drunk, and had to be carried out of the house by defendant, and placed in the trap.

Mr. Bassano: Were the port and brandy drunk together? – Mr. Waldron: I don't know, but it used to be drunk years ago for a specific purpose, pain in the stomach. (Laughter.)

Continuing, Mr. Waldron said the result was that Sturman was taken home and had to go to bed. Sturman afterwards found that he had lost his watch, and though they did not impute anything to defendant in regard to that, it showed that Sturman was so drunk that he could not take care of his own property. He wished to say that the police did not ask for a conviction in both cases, and would be content with one conviction, and having regard to all the circumstances, and the evidence he would call, he asked the Bench to say the case was fully made out.

Fredrick James Priest (18), Halesowen Road, Old Hill, bore out Mr. Waldron's statement, and deposed to calling at three public houses and having a mixture of port and brandy before they called at defendant's house where they stayed half an hour. During this time he had four glasses of brandy and port, and Sturman had six.

Mr. Waldron: I suppose you were not sober? – Witness: Well, I was not drunk. (Laughter.)

Mr. Bassano: What proportion of brandy was there in the glass? – Mr. Thompson: A little under a teaspoonful of brandy, and the rest port.

Samuel Evans and Thomas Sturman also gave evidence in keeping with Mr. Waldron's statement, and said he did not recollect anything after the first glass.

Inspector Bishop deposed to going to the house on the 24th ult and making inquiries. Defendant said Sturman had four glasses, and upon having the fourth suddenly fell forward with his head on the table. Defendant thought Sturman had a fit, and said he never saw a man go so quickly.

Cross-examined: The house had been well conducted.

Mr. Thompson, for the defence, admitted that Sturman was drunk, but urged that there was nothing to induce defendant not to fill the liquor the young men asked for. They were sober when they reached defendant's house, and Sturman was only supplied with four glasses. The quantity supplied would come to only a quarter of a pint, and under the circumstances, and bearing in mind the good character of the house, he asked the Bench not to convict.

Defendant was called, and deposed to these facts, stating that Sturman walked out of the house with his assistance.

Charles Deakin corroborated.

The Bench considered the case proved, and fined defendant 40s and costs."

County Advertiser 13/5/1893

"Frederick James Priest, a young man of respectable appearance, residing at Old Hill, was summoned at the instance of Mr. J. Bracken (Supervisor of Inland Revenue) for using a gun without a license on March 20th.

Thomas West, landlord of the NEW INN, Oldbury Road, Blackheath, said he saw defendant shoot at two pigeons when liberated from a trap. The defendant did not hold a license for the gun he used.

Mr. Bassano (the presiding magistrate): To whom did the gun belong? – Witness: It belongs to me.

Mr. Bassano: And you do hold a gun license? – Witness: Yes, I do.

Defendant: You asked me amongst others to have a shoot, and I accepted your offer. – Witness: That is so.

Defendant said West had asked him to use the gun, and afterwards gave information to the Excise authorities. Some weeks ago he had to give evidence against West in a licensing prosecution.

Mr. Bassano said it had not been customary for the Inland Revenue to prosecute and ask for fines.

Mr. Bracken said the information having been forwarded to the Inland Revenue authorities, a prosecution was ordered.

Mr. Bassano: The magistrates are of opinion that it looks very much like a trap. We think the case should be withdrawn on payment of costs.

Mr. Bracken: A fine to include costs.

Mr. Bassano: We do not think it is a case in which a fine should be inflicted. The case will be withdrawn on the defendant paying the Court costs, 10s.

Defendant: Thank you, gentlemen."

"On Monday evening, Mr. Edwin Hooper held an inquest at the NEW INN, Oldbury Road, Blackheath, Rowley Regis, relative to the death of the female child of Hannah Poole, a single woman, residing in Oldbury Road.

The mother stated that the child was a fortnight old, and had been healthy from its birth. On Sunday morning she found it dead at her breast. Her mother, who was in the house, was sent for. No medical man was called in, and no attempt was made to restore animation by placing the child in a bath.

The Coroner: What did your mother do for the child? – Witness: Nothing.

The Coroner: Do you suppose that children can be allowed to die in this way? If you do you are greatly mistaken. A child is allowed to die on its mother's breast and nothing is done for it, although there are three women in the house. – Witness: I did the best I could for the child.

The Coroner: You allowed the child to die, and you deserve a long term of imprisonment.

Two other women gave evidence, and admitted that they did not do anything for the child or trouble about a doctor.

The Coroner said a great deal had been said at times about infant mortality in the Black Country, and he did not wonder at it. In the present instance the child's life had been thrown away.

A Juryman: The women acted through ignorance.

The Coroner: Ignorance is no excuse.

The jury returned a verdict of Died from Natural Causes.

The Coroner called all the witnesses before him and severely censured them, remarking that if he had had the power he should have committed both the mother and grandmother for manslaughter as they were undoubtedly guilty of culpable negligence. The jury had, however, taken a merciful view of the case. He should order them to be watched as to how they treated other children."

"Edward Harris, of Hadleys Buildings, Whiteheath, was charged with stealing a rabbit, some sugar, one pound of pork chops, and a pocket handkerchief, the property of Fred Cooper, on the 28th ult.

Complainant stated that on the 28th of last month, he was in the NEW INNS, Oldbury Road, Blackheath. There were some other people there, including the prisoner. As soon as he went in he placed a bundle, which he had in his hand, on the table. The bundle contained sugar, a rabbit, and a pound of pork chops. Complainant then went out into the yard, and on returning missed the bundle. He estimated the value of the bundle at 2s.

Philemon Jones, carter, of Oldbury Road, corroborated, adding that he saw prisoner take up the bundle and carry it away. Witness informed complainant about it as soon as he returned.

Police-constable Dale said at 11 o'clock on the 28th ult, from information he had received, he visited the house of defendant, and after a careful search, found the rabbit and the pork chops on separate dishes on a shelf at the top of the cellar. The handkerchief was stuffed in a hole in the head of the sofa. Upon again visiting the house next day witness found the sugar. When witness charged defendant with the theft, he replied, 'I found them up the road, I shall say no more.'

Defendant pleaded guilty, but said he had not taken the articles with any intention of stealing them, but was the worse for drink at the time and did not know what he was doing.
Defendant was fined £1 and costs."

Mr. S. Ward prosecuted, and Mr. J. S. Sharpe defended. Mr. Ward explained that the parties were in the NEW INNS, Oldbury Road, Blackheath, when a heated discussion took place respecting various businesses, and defendant alleged that complainant's mismanagement had landed his company into bankruptcy. The complainant repudiated, and defendant struck him in the mouth, chest, and eye, and knocked him into a window, smashing it. Complainant gave evidence in support of this statement, and in cross-examination he admitted striking defendant in self defence. The Bench fined defendant £1 15s, including costs."

"Mr. G. C. Lewis (coroner) held an inquest yesterday week at the NEW INN, Oldbury Road, Blackheath, concerning the death of John Henry Goodwin (51), loader, formerly residing at Oldbury Road, Blackheath, who died on Wednesday week from the effect of injuries sustained whilst following his employment at the Rowley Station Colliery on the 7th inst. Mr. R. H. Makepeace (Government Inspector of Mines) was present, Mr. W. I. Smith represented the proprietors of the colliery, and Mr. R. Bate the relatives of the deceased man.

The evidence showed that on the afternoon of the 7th inst deceased was working in a roadway with another man named Benjamin Westwood, when a bump suddenly occurred and nearly two tons of coal fell upon Goodwin. He was partially buried, and when rescued he was found to be badly crushed.

Dr. J. G. Beasley found that deceased had sustained a fracture of four of his ribs on the left side, death being due to shock following the injury. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death."

“A new hair salon could be for the chop as trade has plummeted by 80 per cent due to the closure of a main road through Rowley Regis for five weeks to allow the replacement of a burst water main. Hair Professionals opened last month in Oldbury Road, but owner John Tsang said he was ‘absolutely devastated’ by the loss of passing trade when South Staffs Water started digging up the road 10 days ago.

‘It’s like a ghost town and as a new business, I’m worried that we may not survive this,’ he said. Other businesses are also suffering as motorists avoid the road works, although there is access to frontages and an ‘open for business as usual’ sign has been displayed.

Toucan Car Spares boss Ron Spencer, who is also losing passing trade said, ‘Motorists are put off by the barriers and think the road is closed completely so are not coming to us.’

NEW INN landlady Angela Pepperell, said the pub was very quiet and mechanic Amin Navab who runs Green’s Garage, just off Oldbury Road, described business as ‘dead.’

Mr. Tsang said there had been little notice of the road closure from the water company and he had received no guarantees of whether – or when – he would receive compensation for loss of income. He was also concerned that his business would suffer if water supplies were cut off for any length of time in order for the works to be completed.

Most of the businesses said they would hope to claim compensation for loss of trade from South Staffs Water and a company spokesman said claims would be considered by loss adjustors from their insurers. He added that the work was essential to replace an 800m length of water main which had burst and flooded two homes three times in the last two years. ‘This work was scheduled for later this year, but when the Highways Authority gave us this window of opportunity we brought the work forward. We apologise for any inconvenience and hope to have it completed within five weeks. If there are delays, we will have to return in August. A customer liaison officer will visit the businesses to see if there is anything we can do to help,’ he added.”

He and his family came to Britain in 1993.

Ian Keeling was married to Stacey.

“Alarming Subsidence at Cradley Heath.

There is perhaps no district in the Black Country whose inhabitants have suffered so much as a community during the last two years as the people of Cradley Heath. Strikes and disastrous fatal accidents have followed each other with startling rapidity, and accompanied by the most severe trade depression, have brought about very great distress among the poor people living in the district. The last of this series of disasters is an alarming subsidence, the result of mining operations, the extent of which has never been equalled within the memory of the oldest inhabitant. The area of land affected by the subsidence is more than three acres, and the damage is estimated at £10,000.....

The subsidence which has occurred during the past week is much more alarming than any which have preceded it, the locality affected being covered with houses and chain and nail shops. The locality may be described as bounded in front by Graingers Lane, in the rear by King Street, and at the sides by Tibbetts Gardens and Cokeland Places. In addition to the hundred houses and their outbuildings which are included in this area, there is the Primitive Methodist Chapel, a blue-brick building, with a tower. Some of the houses are comparatively new, having been but recently built, but all have equally suffered The Primitive Methodist Chapel was erected in 1841 and enlarged in 1858, and the tower was built by Mr. William Tibbetts and others in 1860.....

Mr. William Tibbetts, of the NEW INN, has twenty-three houses besides the one he occupies, and he has been apparently the principal sufferer in the matter. His malthouse floor has been cracked in one part by the movement of the ground, and the quarries have been thrust upwards. There has been a good deal of damage done to the house he occupies, as well as mischief to those he owns. There was, on Thursday, only a few feet of water in his well, which is thirty-two yards deep, and which used frequently to have twenty-six yards of water in it.....

A meeting of property owners interested in the matter was held A resolution was passed as to the desirability of united action with regard to any steps to obtain compensation for the damage that has been occasioned. A deputation [including William Tibbetts] was appointed to wait on the colliery proprietors who have been alleged to be responsible for the damage.....”

“At the County Court, on Tuesday, before Sir Rupert Kettle, a claim was made by Mrs. Margaret Adams, wheelwright, of NEW INN, Cradley Heath, against Mr. William Willetts, builder and contractor, Old Hill, to recover £4 7s 0d for work done. Mr. W. O. C. Addison, appeared for plaintiff. The defendant admitted the plaintiff’s claim but counter-claimed for £4 7s 6d in respect of some wagon wheels and hand cart wheels, and for the cost of re-painting a lorry which he alleged had been improperly painted by the plaintiff. In cross-examination, the defendant admitted that the transaction as to the wheels was with the plaintiff’s late husband, and the lorry had not been re-painted, and that he had paid the plaintiff for the painting of it. The Judge disallowed the defendant’s counter-claim, and gave the plaintiff judgement with costs of four witnesses and solicitor’s fees.”

William Tibbetts was also a maltster. [1892]

“On Wednesday morning at the Police Court, Old Hill – before Messrs. W. Bassano, G. H. Claughton, and W. Holcroft – William

Foley, mineral water manufacturer, Tibbetts Gardens, Cradley Heath, was summoned, at the instance of the Birmingham and District Mineral Water Trade Protection Society, for nine offences under the Merchandise Marks Act by filling bottles on which there were the trade marks of Mr. Charles Grove, mineral water manufacturer, Princess End; Mr. Trentham, of Great Bridge; and Mr. William Pain, of Brierley Hill, and with selling the same to William Tibbetts. Mr. Jesse Herbert appeared to prosecute, and said he appeared to prefer a number of charges against William Foley, and he proposed to take three of the charges out of the nine which stood against defendant. The facts were these.

This man Foley had some mineral water in his possession which he sold to one man whom they had chosen in the case, viz, William Tibbetts, of NEW INN, Cradley Heath. When the inspector of the Association went to Mr. Tibbett's house on the 27th of January he found there bottles of ginger beer which had been supplied by defendant. Mr. Tibbetts said he had his mineral waters only from Foley, and there were a number of cases which were supplied by defendant in a wholesale way, and the bottles in these bore the mark, among others, of Mr. Charles Grove, Princes End; of Mr. Trentham, Great Bridge; and Mr. William Pain, of Brierley Hill. The bottles had on them Mr. Grove's own registered trade mark, 'C.G.' as plain as a pikestaff, and there could be no doubt, therefore, with regard to that point. The label, which was placed on the bottles, was put there by the inspector of the Association for the purpose of identification, so that there could be no mistake about it. Foley knew perfectly well that he ought not to have committed the offence, because no longer back than 1890, he was found out doing the same thing. Letters had been addressed to him pointing out his offence, and cautioning him. He had replied to these communications, asking them not to proceed against him, and he would not transgress again. But numerous complaints had arisen, and they were compelled to institute proceedings. He should put in evidence the last letter that was written by defendant, in which he said he was sorry they were going to put him to so much trouble, and whatever had occurred was through no fault of his. He (the speaker) might say that defendant was given every opportunity of purchasing and acting in good faith. The letter went on to say he hoped they would see their way clear to stop any proceedings. The association had a great deal of experience in this matter, and a large number of mineral water manufacturers, who had a considerable number of cases, hardly ever found one bottle go astray. These bottles went to the Exchange in Birmingham, and were returned to the proper quarters again. Defendant, having been forgiven in the past, made the case all the more a gross case under the Merchandise Mark Act, of 1887. Passing on to the question of law, Mr. Hebert quoted a case of a precisely similar character, in which the offence was proved, although the defendant did not intend to defraud. He, therefore, asked for a conviction in the present case.

Alexander Nasmyth, inspector to the association, and formerly in the police force for twenty-six years, said he lived at Handsworth, and on the 22nd of January visited the NEW INN, Cradley Heath, kept by William Tibbetts. He asked for a bottle of ginger beer, which he drank, and noticed Mr. Pain's name on it. He then asked to see the landlord, who produced the case at his desire. He took nine bottles from the case, which held ten. He produced those that were found, and every one bore the trade mark of other people. He put labels on the bottles for the purpose of identifying them.

William Tibbetts, who had been subpoenaed, said he remembered the inspector calling on him, and the bottles were supplied by Mr. Foley's man. Defendant's firm supplied him with mineral waters. Witness did not order any particular make, and they supposed that the mineral water supplied by Foley was manufactured by himself. The latter had a trade mark of his own, either a ram or a sheep.

Charles Grove, mineral water manufacturer, Princes End, said the bottle produced was his, and his trade mark on it was registered. He had no dealings with the defendant, and neither bought from him nor sold to him. He did not deal with the witness Tibbetts. He had had numerous complaints against the defendant. After the bottles came to his premises all stray ones were sorted out and put aside until the association cart came round and took them to the Exchange, Birmingham. Here they were sorted, and each man's bottles put in a box and sent on to its destination.

Mr. Bassano: That is the function of your association? – Witness: That is its function. There was a fixed charge for the collection of bottles, but non-member paid more for his bottles.

Charles Cox Smith, secretary to the association, said it was not an association for the pecuniary benefit of its members but simply for the protection of the trade and to ensure honest dealing.

Defendant said that he could not attend to his business at the time as he was ill with rheumatism and his man was ill at the same time. It happened entirely by mistake.

Joseph Coley employed by defendant deposed to this being the case.

Mr. Bassano said they believed defendant had no intention to defraud and they should therefore not inflict the maximum penalty, but a fine of £5 and costs.

Mr. Hebert asked for the other cases to be withdrawn, and defendant to pay the costs.

Defendant accordingly paid costs, and the total amount of fine and costs was £16 3s."

“Bankruptcy Proceedings. Re Frederick Arthur Tibbetts, licensed victualler.

At the Dudley County Court, yesterday, Frederick Arthur Tibbetts, of the NEW INN, Graingers Lane, Cradley Heath, came up for his examination. Debtor’s liabilities amounted to £278, the deficiency being £166.

Replying to Mr. Jobson (official receiver), debtor stated that he commenced trading in 1892 by taking the above named public house, the business of which had previously been carried on by his father. No valuation was made, and bankrupt had paid nothing for the effects. When he acquired the business his capital was 25s and the stock he took to consisted of one barrel of ale. He had frequently been in financial difficulties, and from time to time had been relieved by his father. In June 1894 he gave a bill of sale upon his effects to secure £70. After a period of four months the holder of the bill of sale pressed for payment, and in November following the claim was paid by debtor’s father, who took an assignment of the bill of sale. He attributed his failure to losses in brewing, bad debts, and law expenses. The examination was concluded.”

“Yesterday at Dudley County Court before Mr. Deputy-registrar Walker, Thomas Adams Tibbetts, maltster, 33, Graingers Lane, Cradley Heath, came up for his public examination.

Mr. Raybould, from the office of Mr. T. Cooksey, Old Hill, represented the debtor. In reply to Mr. E. P. Jobson (official receiver), he said he filed his petition about 18 years ago. He was then a miner. Subsequently he went to Canada, and on returning kept a butcher’s shop. It was five years ago last September that he took to his father’s business. The stock was valued, and he agreed to pay for it in half-yearly instalments. In the following October his father gave him a cheque for £500, a portion of which he put in the bank, and the other he utilised to pay bills which were then due. He was born and bred in the malting trade, but during the last three years there had been a lot of competition. He had lost money owing to the inferior quality of barley supplied to him, and gave instances of transactions which left him the worse for having entertained them. He had lost a considerable amount of trade owing to public houses which he supplied with malt having been purchased by brewery companies. When he started business he had quite thirty customers, but they had gradually dwindled down to one. Since he knew trade had been going from him he had only spent about £1 a week in going round trying to get orders. He had had to borrow 5s to come to the Court that day, and he believed if he had not been so hard pressed that he could have carried on and have come out all right. The examination was concluded.”

“Nelson Clift (22), Cradley Heath, was charged with being drunk and disorderly, and also with maliciously damaging a window to the extent of 3s, the property of Caroline Tibbetts, landlady of the NEW INN, Graingers Lane, Cradley Heath, on the 29th inst.

Police-constable Dale said that about five o’clock on the date in question he was on duty at the Five Ways Cradley Heath, when prosecutrix complained to him of defendant’s conduct. Witness visited the public house, and there saw the damage which defendant had caused.

Inspector Given and Caroline Tibbetts also gave evidence as to the damage, the latter stating that defendant threw a paving brick through the window.

Defendant was fined £1 11s 6d including costs.”

Private Will Morris, from Cradley Heath, writing recently to Mrs. Tibbetts, NEW INN, Graingers Lane, Cradley Heath says: ‘We are at Norvals Pont now, so we shall be in the Orange Free State in a day or two; but we shall have to wait for the bridge to be placed across the Orange River, for the Boers have blown it up. Our troops have repaired two bridges here that they have blown up. The railway, however, is down again. The rain is worse than the war, for we get drowned now and again, and it isn’t nice to march the next day after lying in water all night or standing in the rain. I saw a peculiar sight last night. It rained heavens hard for about an hour, and when I had a look there was every man standing like monuments with blankets round them. There was not a murmur all round, all the men taking it in good part. I suppose you have read about our bit of a battle at Slingsfontein, when the Boers attacked our regiment. I thought I had got to have a pill when a few shots dropped round me when we fetched Captain Thomas, who was surrounded, out on the hills. He has since died. We are beyond there now, and shall soon be further.”

“Mr. H. A. Pearson held an inquest at the NEW INN, Graingers Lane, Cradley Heath, on Saturday, touching the death of Samuel Weston, aged two years and seven months, the son of Samuel and Martha Weston, 27, Tibbetts Gardens, who died under singular circumstances.

The mother stated deceased fell into an ash-pit on the night of the 26th ult, and his head lay in the contents for some time. He was got out by his father, and washed under a tap. He was seen by Dr. Fry, who gave him an emetic, and he vomited the following day. On the 31st ult deceased visited his grandmother’s house, where he got possession of a can containing paraffin and drank a small quantity. He was seen by Dr. de Denne and died the following day.

By the jury: She did not know whether there was a cork in the bottle.

Dinah Weston stated that on the 31st ult deceased came to her house and asked for some dinner. She went into the pantry to get some, and she was followed by the deceased, who picked up a bottle containing a small quantity of paraffin and drank it. Remedies were at once applied. In her opinion, he suffered very much as the result of his fall into the ash-pit.

Samuel Weston also gave evidence, and stated that when he heard that the deceased had swallowed paraffin oil he administered salt and water.

Dr. Tibbetts stated that on the 1st inst he found deceased in a state of collapse, and in his opinion death was due to drinking the paraffin, accelerated by the fall into the ash-pit. He did not see deceased a second time, as he was rendered unwell owing to inhaling a bad smell.

Inspector Given said he had every reason to believe that the child had been properly attended to since the accident. The midden heap was in a very unsatisfactory state, and should be remedied.

A juryman said Tibbetts Gardens were in a most disgraceful state, and he questioned if there was another place in such a bad insanitary state in the county of Stafford. The sanitary authority ought to take immediate steps to bring about the necessary improvements.

The Coroner said he quite concurred. He was surprised the sanitary authorities allowed such a state of things to exist.

Inspector Given said ashes for some reason were not mixed with the excrement.

Dr. Tibbetts said the place in its present condition was a veritable death trap.

The jury returned a verdict to the effect that the deceased had been accidentally poisoned, and requested the coroner to communicate with the Rowley Regis Council with a view to the districts of Tibbetts Gardens being put into a better sanitary condition.

The Coroner said he would communicate with the sanitary authorities, as it was necessary some improvements should be forthwith carried out.”

“William Brookes (30), of Kidderminster, but formerly residing at Tibbetts Gardens, Cradley Heath, was charged with being drunk and disorderly and assaulting Police-sergeant Wood on the 13th inst.

Sergeant Wood stated that on the night in question he saw the prisoner drunk and creating a disturbance in the NEW INNS, Cradley Heath. He was ordered out of the house, but subsequently witness found him in the CROWN INN, where the landlord was trying to eject him. Witness locked him up, but prisoner behaved in a violent manner. He struggled with witness, and kicked him on the legs and in the back. They were on the ground struggling for over twenty minutes, when Police-constable Horton came to his assistance, and prisoner was brought to the Police Station. They placed him on the tram-car to Old Hill, but it took six men to remove him to the station in consequence of his violence.

Inspector Gibbs said prisoner was simply mad, and he had not seen a more violent man for some time. They were compelled to go into the cells and pull off his shoes.

Prisoner was sent to gaol for a month with hard labour for the assault, and the other case was dismissed.”

County Advertiser 16/9/1905

“An alarming conflagration, involving heavy loss to the owner of the buildings at which it occurred, and threatening for a time even more ruinous consequences, occurred on Thursday evening at the NEW INN, Graingers Lane, Cradley Heath. At about a quarter past five, a young man named Walter Knott, who is employed as maltster on the premises, was in the yard, when the proprietor, Mr. William Tibbetts, called and asked where his son was. Knott replied, ‘I have seen him not a minute ago,’ and, thinking he had gone into the malthouse ran up the steps on to the first maltings floor to try and find him. ‘When I got there,’ Knott says, ‘I noticed a smell of burning, and all of a sudden the flames leaped up towards the centre of the malthouse. I at once ran to give the alarm.’ That is the simple story of the outbreak, for which no other cause can be assigned than either spontaneous combustion or overheating of the malt.

The wrecked malthouse is a large, oblong building forming the further wing of an extensive block at the rear of the NEW INN, a large double-fronted public house standing nearly opposite Sykes’s chain works. A cart road to the left of the inn leads to a fairly large yard. To the left of the yard is the brewery, and parallel with the main road is a two-storey building in which hops and barley are stored. The malthouse itself is about 80 feet long, 30 feet wide, and 40 feet high. There were three storeys above the basement. On the ground or ‘working’ floor was the machinery, some of it new including the malt-screen, crushers, and other fittings.

The second floor, where the fire originated, bore from £300 to £400 worth of malt, and on the third floor was the kiln. Of course the whole of the building was kept very warm by the malting operations, and the outburst is thought to have been spontaneous. Mr. William Tibbetts has for three or four years been the proprietor of the business, which was established by his father; and he was fortunately on the premises when the alarm was given.

At first the seriousness of the position was not apprehended, and Mr. Tibbetts and his staff set themselves to quench the flames by the usual methods. Fire amongst grain is always a very difficult trouble to deal with, however, as the fuel goes off in a series of explosions which makes for the speedy extension of the area of flame, and it was soon seen that the fire was gaining the mastery. When this was realised, the alarm was given to the local section of the Rowley Regis Brigade, by the blowing of Messrs. Holt and Willetts's steam whistle. The response was very prompt, and in a very few minutes Superintendent Tustin, with Firemen E. D. Round, W. Denning, W. Deeley, Jenks, and Harris, were on the spot with their hose-reel and quickly got to their work. They found a hydrant almost opposite the house, with a splendid pressure of water, and by means of their new two-way breeching coupling, they were able to get two jets to work on the flames. With the other buildings crowded round its front the seat of the fire was somewhat difficult of access; and it was seen almost from the first that the malthouse would have to go. Before the firemen had been long at work, the interior became a roaring furnace, the glow from which could be seen for miles. The Old Hill section quickly made its appearance, Superintendent Ashman being accompanied by Firemen F. Salt, J. Cook, H. Fendal, and J. Page. Captain E. T. Barnsley, who was in the office making arrangements for the fire brigade dinner today, also hurried down, and two members of the Blackheath section, Firemen T. Smith and J. Smith were on the scene when the outbreak was notified, and took part in the work. Mr. Caleb Woodhouse, the chairman of the Fire Brigade Committee, was present during the progress of the operations, and will be able to testify to the excellent work the local brigade are able to do with their present equipment and with the splendid supply of water given to them by the South Staffordshire Company. In the meantime the Stourbridge Brigade had been telephoned. They got the call at 3-53, and did a grand turnout, reaching the fire at twenty minutes to six, via Cradley, with the steamer and manual. Lieutenant Walker was in command, with Lieutenant Trow, Firemen Bingham, Canadine, Abel, Weaver sen, Weaver jun, Berry, Owen, Wall, Trow, and Dalloway. On account of close quarters and the efficient work already done by the local men they did not find it necessary to put on any more water, but they assisted and relieved the local brigade very materially. Shortly before their arrival there was a fear that the whole of the front buildings, including the brewery, would become involved, and some £40 or £50 worth of hops stored there were removed in haste, but from that time the men had the measure of the fire and gradually beat it back. The fall of the roof was a striking spectacle, and increased the fierceness of the flames, which now roared up and cast a vivid glare on the darkening sky. The crisis might have been a serious one for Firemen Abel, Owen, Trow, and Dalloway, who noticed the impending fall of the roof just in time to escape. As it was they sustained a few cuts. The fact that the malthouse adjoined the other buildings necessitated continual vigilance lest there should be a further spread of the flames, but by half-past seven all apprehension was removed, and the Stourbridge brigade packed up and left; another hour's work remaining to the local brigade before the place was considered safe.

An inspection of the place afterwards showed how fierce had been the fire and how clever had been the work which prevented its extension. The top storey, reached by way of the brewery, showed its full length open to the sky, bulging walls, and beams which though they remained in place was scorched to a cinder. This was the case with the floor next below, and all which had occupied this wing was completely destroyed. All the windows are gone, and only the skeleton of the malthouse remains. As usual, there was some cause for congratulation. A large consignment of barley was on order, but it had not arrived, or it would probably have been destroyed with the rest. It should be mentioned that the police under Inspector Gibbs rendered excellent service, both in coping with the early stages of the fire, and in keeping order amongst the crowd of over 1,000 people who gathered at the front of the house. The officers present were Sergeant J. Wood, Constables Donellan, Turner, and Orton.

In addition to the slight casualties to firemen mentioned above, two accidents happened. The first was to Mr. Tibbetts himself, who in the haste and flurry of the alarm and subsequent effort, fell against a crusher, and cut the inside of his ear. Lieutenant Walker also met with a slice of ill-luck mixed with good fortune. His ill-luck was to slip through the damaged floor of the malthouse to the working floor below, and the fortunate thing was that one of the Rowley Regis firemen was near to assist him, for the water had been pouring on to this lower floor from the two storeys above, and as the drains had not been opened a foot or more of water had accumulated. In thanking Mr. Barnsley, the Rowley Regis captain, for the assistance which was promptly given by the local firemen, the lieutenant said that but for that he should very likely have been 'done for.' Yesterday, we heard that Mr. Walker had suffered nothing beyond a severe shaking.

When our reporter saw Mr. Tibbetts he was too much perturbed to have estimated the damage caused by the fire, but it will probably amount to £1,000 or £1,500. The buildings are partly insured, but not the stock, and the proprietor will be at serious loss. At the same time he appreciates the strenuous and well-directed efforts without which his loss would have been much greater."

Cradley Heath speedway fans from the NEW INN, Graingers Lane, Cradley Heath, are planning a 140-mile walk over Easter weekend from Bradford to the Dudley Wood stadium. They are hoping to raise thousands of pounds in sponsorship for the Stepping Stones appeal at Pinderfields Hospital in Wakefield, where Gundersen fought for his life after the crash at Bradford last September. The Stepping Stones appeal aims to raise more than £1 million to expand and modernise the hospital’s specialist spinal injury unit.

Speedway fan Mr. Colin Scott, licensee at the NEW INN, said that he and five regulars planned to finish the walk on the morning of Easter Monday when Cradley ride against Coventry. He went on, ‘Support has been promised from other speedway clubs on or near to the route of the walk. Collections will be taken at speedway meetings at Stoke, Long Eaton, Bradford and Belle Vue.’

Mr. Scott said Erik, former skipper of Cradley, intended to take part in the walk himself as far as he could.

Erik suffered a broken neck and severe spinal injuries in the crash during the World Team Cup Final.”

“A notorious Cradley Heath eyesore could finally be bulldozed for flats after more than five years of planning wranglings. Plans submitted to Sandwell Council could see the boarded-up former NEW INN, Graingers Lane, transformed into 24 one and two bed apartments.

The latest application comes after three failed applications for 11 houses on the site, from two different developers. Previous proposals have been met with concerns from opposite factory Premier Stampings, who said noise from their work would be too much for nearby residents. They feared complaints could affect the business, resulting in job losses. But Cradley Heath councillor Ann Shackleton said she is hopeful the application will be approved. She said, ‘We have been identifying grot spots in the town and that was one of the major concerns. Yet again it will mean an increase in the number of flats but I am in favour of these plans. I think all the councillors would be because we need to try and get rid of this eyesore. We will just have to watch this space and if it is refused again, try and work out why.’

Work at the site of nearby Graingers Lane Methodist Church is already well underway with 21 houses in the pipeline. Plans for the church were approved at Sandwell’s Planning Committee in April, despite objections from Premier Stampings.”

“John Maloney, a nailer, of Rowley, was charged on Monday, at Wordsley, before C. E. Swindell, Esq, and the Rev. F. J. Clarke, with stealing one shilling, the property of Samuel Bennitt, also a nailer, of Rowley. The circumstance were somewhat singular. On the previous Tuesday night the parties were at the house of Mr. James Pearson, publican of Rowley, and the prosecutor placed a shilling upon the table to pay for a pint of ale, but before it was taken up he was called out of the house, and on his returning it had disappeared. Another man was in the room, but both he and the prisoner denied any knowledge of the shilling. Suspecting that the prisoner had it, the prosecutor and a policeman followed him to the CROSS INN, kept by Mrs. Tromans, at Old Hill. Here the prisoner called for a pint of ale, and in payment gave the landlady a shilling, which, on being examined, turned out to be the one lost by the prosecutor, the latter having positively identified it by a mark. The defendant, for whom Mr. Burbury appeared, was committed to hard labour for fourteen days.”

"An inquest was held on Friday last, before Mr. Hooper, coroner, at the NEW INN, Old Hill, in the parish of Rowley, touching the death of Sarah Parkes, aged 65 years. It appeared from the evidence of Thomas Parkes, a nailer, the husband of the deceased, that on the previous Sunday night they both retired to rest about half-past nine o'clock. About half an hour afterwards the deceased got out of bed, and presently the witness heard a noise as of a person falling down the stairs, which were situated close to the foot of the bed, and without any door or other protection. He immediately got up, and on procuring a light, found the deceased at the bottom of the stairs in a state of insensibility. Parkes at once called in some neighbours to his assistance, when it was ascertained that the woman was quite dead, having broken her neck in the fall. She had been subject to fits, and it was supposed that during one of those periodical attacks the occurrence took place which resulted in her death. Verdict, Accidental Death."

"On Saturday, an inquest was held at the house of John [sic] Pearson, NEW INN, Old Hill, before Mr. E. Hooper, Coroner, on the body of Edward Howell, collier, aged 52, who was injured on Saturday, the 31st ult, while at work in the pit, and who died from those injuries on Thursday, the 5th inst. Mr. Baker, Her Majesty's Inspector of Mines, was present.

The first witness called, who was the eldest son of deceased, stated that on the morning of the accident he was at work with deceased, who left him, saying he would remove some stuff from under coal which had been cut a short distance from where they were at work. He wished his father not to go, as the spot was dangerous, and there was not a sufficient quantity of timber under to support the coal. Deceased persisted in going, and was preparing to put up a tree, when about half a ton of coal fell on his shoulder and head, which eventually caused his death.

On being questioned by Mr. Baker, witness said he had never read the rules published according to Act of Parliament, nor had they been read to him. He knew there were some rules, and that if he broke them he would be sent to prison, but what special rules they were he did not know.

[This was often the case with illiterate miners, and the owners seemed merely to stick the rules to a wall, and do no more.]

Another witness corroborated the statement of the former, and exonerated the doggy, John Bunn, from any blame, as he knew that timber had been ordered to be put in that spot by him.

A verdict of Accidental Death was returned, after which Mr. Baker said he wished it to be distinctly understood that it was the duty of the doggy not only to order a thing to be done, but see that it was done; for unfortunately so reckless are colliers that between the giving an order and the doing it serious consequences sometimes ensue."

Stourbridge Observer 8/5/1869

“An accident, unhappily attended with loss of life, occurred early on Thursday morning, the 29th ult, at Messrs. Dawes and Sons’ pits, at Blackheath.

It appears that the deceased, Samuel Weaver and George Green, went to work on the previous night, and about two o’clock in the morning they were at work in the gate road when a ‘bump’ occurred, and a fall of several tons of coal took place, burying the deceased and killing them instantly.

An inquest was held on the bodies on Friday, the 30th ultimo, at Mr. Pearson’s, the NEW INN, Old Hill, before E. Hooper, Esq, Coroner, and after hearing the evidence of several witnesses, the jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

Mr. Baker, Government Inspector of Mines, was present, and said that such an accident could not be prevented, but recommended them to put the trees and other materials used in stacking, in as safe a place as possible.”

“At the Police Court, on Wednesday, James Pearson, beerhouse-keeper, Old Hill, was summoned for having his house open during prohibited hours. He was ordered to pay costs.”

County Advertiser 27/11/1869

“On Friday an inquest was held at the NEW INN, Old Hill, on the body of a young woman named Louisa Gill, wife of Thomas Gill. The deceased was seized with violent vomiting and purging in the night time, and died in about two hours afterwards. Dr. Morrow was called in, but not till after death. The Jury returned a verdict to the effect that deceased Died from Natural Causes.”

“Before the canals came in 1800, Powke Hillock was a sleepy farming hamlet of a dozen or so families who mostly worked on the land. Farmer Higgs employed a good number of the villagers and the rest earned a scant living from the nail making trade. The tiny community’s focal point was the OLD BUSH, a beerhouse cum tavern, owned by Farmer Higgs. It had no competition The construction of the nearby canal which bisected Higgs Lezzers in 1800 brought increased custom for the Powke Hillock tavern. Rough navies, many of Irish descent, invaded the area They were a thirsty crew, prone to drunken sprees and fist fights which began to involve Powke Hillock men who resented the newcomers. Farmer Higgs was troubled by the situation and sold the tavern to an enterprising Birmingham man who was better equipped to cope with its rowdy clientele. The OLD BUSH proved a profitable acquisition until Rowley Church sold its glebe lands in 1841 and the red brick canyons of Blackheath rose rapidly on it Many Powke Hillock customers flocked to the new tavern (GEORGE AND DRAGON) and the OLD BUSH virtually withered.

It was kept, at that time, by ‘Nobby’ Clarke, a well known bare knuckle fighter with Birmingham connections. He became alarmed at the drop in trade He sent for three ‘painted ladies’ from his old Birmingham haunts to act as barmaids and hostesses. Their presence, though resented by local womenfolk who dubbed them shameless hussies, had the desired effect – attracting custom to the place and reviving its fortunes. ‘Nobby’ Clarke had a new sign painted over his front door THE OLD BUSH REVIVED.

He was still an active pugilist and a close friend of Bill Perry, the Tipton Slasher, who often called at the BUSH to wet his whistle. In 1846, Clarke was matched to fight Tom Paddock of Redditch on January 27th. Perry backed him heavily and lost a packet, Clarke failing to come up for the 42nd round. That was the end of a fistic friendship ‘Nobby’ Clarke came back to the BUSH with his tail between his legs and did not stay in Powke Hillock much longer. The tavern changed hands several times in subsequent years until Decimus Gaunt took over in the early 1880s Decimus Gaunt lived a long and happy life at the OLD BUSH REVIVED – passing away in 1937 at the age of 77 In the old days the OLD BUSH REVIVED was strictly male territory, famous for its Saturday night suppers, sports like whippet racing, hare and rabbit coursing and beer barrel racing, when mighty casks were rolled drunkenly down Powke Lane.....”

“The second anniversary of Court Little Band of Hope Lodge of the Ancient Order of Foresters took place on Monday last, at Rowley. The brethren met at the meeting house, OLD BUSH, Powke Lane, and formed in procession at eleven o’clock, accompanied by the Spinners End Sax Horn Band, and headed by the officers of the court mounted and dressed in full uniform, representing Robin Hood, Little John, Friar Tuck, and Will Scarlet. In the procession was a waggon decorated with evergreens, and in it twelve little girls in white. They proceeded through Blackheath to the village church where an excellent address was delivered by the Rev. F. Ward, vicar. After leaving church, the procession moved through the village by Ross to the meeting house, where an excellent dinner was served by the host, Mr. Thomas Gaunt. After dinner the procession again sallied forth, and after a considerably long round returned to the club house to supper. A pleasant day was spent.”

“The members of Court Britain’s Glory (No.4821) of the Ancient Order of Foresters celebrated their first anniversary at their court house, Brother T. Gaunt’s, OLD BUSH REVIVED, Powke Lane, Rowley Regis, on Monday, when upwards of 30 members sat down to an excellent dinner and supper provided by the host, Thomas Gaunt. Brother H. Whittall, secretary of the court, took the chair, and Brother Cornelius Parsons, the vice-chair. The room was handsomely decorated for the occasion. The usual loyal toasts having been given, the chairman addressed the members on the benefits received by joining Foresters’ societies, and said it was the best thing a working man could do to join a society of this sort. The members formed themselves into a procession, and marched through the village to pay a visit to Court Robin Hood’s Cave, No.4737, BRITISH OAK, INN, Garrets Lane, Old Hill, who were celebrating their anniversary on the same day, and after refreshing themselves they re-formed, and returned to the court house, where the evening was enlivened by a variety of songs, glees, and recitations, by Brothers Heber, Whittall, G. Firkn, W. Edwards, and Curtis. The conviviality was kept up to a late hour, when the members separated, highly gratified with the events of the day.”

“Forestry. On Monday last the members of court 4598 were entertained to a good substantial repast provided for them by their worth host, Mr. T. Gaunt, OLD BUSH REVIVED, Powke Lane, Rowley. After the cloth was withdrawn the chair was taken by brother W. Webster, and the vice-chair by brother T. Cashmore, PCR, the respected secretary of the Court. The usual loyal and patriotic toasts were given and responded to; success to Forestry in general and Court 4598 in particular was proposed by the chairman, and ably responded to by T. Cashmore, and the health of the host and hostess was drunk with great applause. The host in responding thanked them for the manner in which they had received his health and hoped they would enjoy themselves. In entertaining them that day he had fulfilled a promise he had made to them some time ago, that when their number reached one hundred he would entertain them. Songs, toasts, and sentiments went the round of the evening, and they parted at an early hour having thoroughly enjoyed themselves. Votes of thanks to the chairman and vice-chairman for presiding were given at the close.”

The members of the above court, in conjunction with Court Foresters Pride and Miseltoe Bough, presented to their medical officer a very handsomely framed emblem of the Order, on which was the following inscription: ‘Presented to Bro. J. G. Beasley by the members of Courts 4598, 4305, 5366, for his valuable services rendered to them as their medical attendant.’ And also a splendid sash specially made by Mr. Hemming, of London. The presentations were made by Past Chief Rangers Bro. Samuel Grove and Benjamin Lowe, in appropriate speeches, who were ably supported by Past Chief Rangers Bros. John Hingley and George Taylor. Bro. Beasley, in reply, thanked them very heartily for their splendid gifts, and also for the sentiments entertained towards him. He could assure them that they would always be looked upon with pleasure by him and he should endeavour, by continuing to do his duty to the best of his ability, to merit the same appreciation of his services in the future as in the past. “Decimus Gaunt, Powke Lane, Rowley Regis, was charged with, on the 26th November, keeping two carriages without having a license for the same.

Mr. J. Blake Davis, who appeared on behalf of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, stated that on the 26th December, 1885, a declaration was forwarded to defendant upon which he only mentioned one carriage. On November last the officer saw the defendant using on various occasions two vehicles, and knowing that he was only licensed for one asked for an explanation. Defendant then admitted that he had two carriages, but had never used them at the same time. He subsequently altered his statement and said one had been lent him by a friend whilst his own was undergoing repairs. Under the section 27, Mr. Blake said the defendant had thus rendered himself liable to a penalty of £20.

The statement was substantiated by the evidence of a witness named Cruikshank.

Defendant, in reply to the charge, stated that the one vehicle was lent him by a friend, whom he called to bear out his statement.

The witness, however, stated that in July last he disposed of his trap to the defendant, and the latter had since been in possession of two vehicles.

The magistrates thought that only a technical offence had been committed and that the payment of the costs would meet the case.

Upon the application of Mr. Davis the duty was also allowed, the Bench expressing a view that the defendant had laboured under a misapprehension.”

“Decimus Gaunt, landlord of the BUSH INN, Powke Lane, Rowley, was charged with committing a rape on Ellen Minett, a domestic servant in his employ, aged 17, on the 6th inst.

The prosecutor said she was in defendant's employ about five weeks. On the date in question defendant came down to brew early in the morning, and complainant upon coming down about a quarter to seven went to take the cotter out of the shutter. Defendant then came behind her and pulled her on to a table before she had time to unfasten the shutter. The room was dark and defendant who had shut the door committed the offence charged against complainant's will, and in spite of her screams and struggling.

Defendant used violence, and threatened to murder her if she complained to any one of what had been done to her. A man named Lyons was in the brewhouse, and defendant's wife and children were asleep upstairs. She went to Dr. Walker's at Blackheath on the Friday following with her father, and on the following day took out a warrant against the defendant. Witness went home the same day of the assault.

Cross-examined: Defendant had taken liberties with her before. She didn't speak to the person in the brewhouse about it. Defendant denied the charge when spoken to on the matter. She did not know that her sisters had received sums of money from two persons for bringing a charge of this kind.

Mr. James Walker, surgeon, of Blackheath, said that on Friday night, the 9th inst, the girl was brought to his surgery by her father, and he examined her, and found marks of violence on her. He expected from her story, however, to find more than what he did.

Elizabeth Minett gave evidence of her daughter coming home about eight or nine o'clock in the morning, and complaining of the assault.

Charles Minett deposed to calling on defendant on the Friday night about the affair. Defendant then grossly insulted him. Witness asked him what he meant by taking liberties with the girl, to which defendant replied by cursing and swearing at him. Witness told him it was not settled, and then went into the house which defendant ordered him to leave.

After some further evidence the Bench dismissed the case.

Defendant was further charged with indecently assaulting Annie Palmer on the 1st of August. Prosecutor, it appeared, lived now with her parents at Tory Street, Blackheath, and was employed by defendant about three months ago. She got up about 6.30 on the date named and soon afterwards defendant acted indecently towards her. She complained to a neighbour named Lees, who brought her mother in, to whom she told what had taken place. Her mother then went to defendant's place and complained to him about what he had done, but he indignantly denied having done anything.

Further evidence was given in support of the charge.

Inspector Bishop said that on the 10th last he had defendant in custody on another charge, when he told him he would be charged with indecently assaulting a girl named Palmer at Blackheath on the 1st of August. Defendant simply replied, 'Yes.'

Cross-examined: Defendant was a very respectable man.

Mr. Shakespeare in defence said there was only the girl's statement which did not tally with her mother's in all particulars in support of the charge. Defendant was a thoroughly respectable man, and he had a testimonial as to his character, signed by men who would not sign it unless they firmly believed him to be innocent.

The Bench considered the case proved and fined defendant £10 and costs, or two months."

Police-constable Rixson deposed to visiting the house in disguise, and seeing the game played for a pint of four-penny. The landlord soon after came in and stopped the gaming.

Mr. Sharpe, who appeared for defendant, pleaded that the draught-board belonged to one of the players, and that defendant was not aware of what was going on. When he did, he at once stopped it. The case was dismissed."

“On Sunday afternoon the annual friendly societies’ Sunday service, on behalf of the hospitals, was held in a field at the back of Mountford House, Siviters Lane, Rowley, kindly lent for the occasion by Dr. J. G. Beasley. The members of various societies met at their headquarters, and were formed into a procession as below. The Blackheath Village Band started from the WHEAT SHEAF INN, Turners Hill at one o’clock, with the Church of England Friendly Society, and proceeded through Portway and Perys Lake, calling at the BULLS HEAD INN for the Sick Club, at the WARD ARMS INN for Court Foresters’ Pride, at the KINGS ARMS INN for Lodge Working Man’s Friend. It then proceeded by way of Ross, Holly Road, Tump Road, and John Street, to the GEORGE AND DRAGON Ground. The Woodgate Brass Band had in the meantime covered its route from the OLD BUSH INN, Powke Lane, with Court Little Band of Hope, calling at the MALT SHOVEL INN for Lodge Lily of the Valley, the VINE INN for Court Mistletoe Bough, proceeding along Station Road to the RAILWAY INN for Court Britannia’s Pride, thence through Halesowen Street, Tump Road, and Hackett Street, meeting the other Courts at the GEORGE AND DRAGON Ground. A united procession was then formed, and marched to Siviters Lane, reaching the ground at three o’clock. The proceedings opened with the hymn ‘All people that on earth do dwell,’ after which the Chairman (Mr. E. Pewtress, CC) delivered a short address. The Rev. C. W. Barnard, MA, Rector of Kings Norton, then addressed the meeting, after which the hymn ‘Lead, kindly light,’ was sung. Addresses were also delivered by the Revs. W. Hall and N. Haigh, of Blackheath. At the close a collection was taken on behalf of the Dudley Dispensary and Birmingham Eye Hospital. It amounted to £11 9s 5d.”

“An application was made by Decimus Gaunt, landlord of the BUSH INN, Powke Lane, Blackheath, in respect of certain alterations at his premises. Applicant, in reply to Mr. Cooksey (magistrates’ clerk), said his application that day was not of a similar character to the one made at the licensing sessions. Mr. Bassano (presiding magistrate) said there was no reason why the application should not be granted, but if it was intended to obtain a reversal of the decision given at the licensing sessions applicant would run a risk of losing his license. The Bench would not consent to be humbugged and hoodwinked. As far as it went the application would be granted.”

Defendant said he would kill him. Thomas Brooks corroborated. Mr. Tinsley said that defendant was a most respectable man, and denied threatening defendant in any way. He would call defendant, and he submitted to the Bench that the summons had been take out for spite. Defendant said on the date named he went to the house of witness Brooks, and saw Burton there. In consequence of a statement made to witness by his wife, he asked complainant what he had been annoying his wife for, and told him he had better not do it again. Defendant did not put himself in a fighting attitude and use threatening language. The Bench dismissed the case.”

County Advertiser 5/9/1903

“An application was made by Decimus Gaunt, landlord of the OLD BUSH INN, Powke Lane, Blackheath, for an occasional license to sell intoxicants at the annual sports promoted by the Coombs Wood Tube Works Football Club on the 14th inst. Applicant explained that the proceeds from the sports would be devoted to improving the new ground that the club had secured. Sir Benjamin Hingley said that the Bench sometime ago decided not to grant occasional licenses to football clubs, but as this was a special application, it would be granted.”

County Advertiser 19/9/1903

“The first annual athletic sports promoted by the Coombs Wood Tube Works Football Club were held on Monday afternoon on the new ground, Powke Lane, Blackheath, in the presence of about 3,000 spectators.....
The officials were secretaries, Messrs W. Salt and D. Gaunt.....”

Decimus Gaunt was also a furniture dealer. [1904]

County Advertiser 28/5/1904

“On Tuesday, the second annual sports in connection with the Coombs Wood Tube Works Football Club were held at the football ground, Powke Lane, Blackheath, in the presence of about 4,000 spectators. The attendance was unfortunately affected by the wet weather.....
The officials were hon. secs, Messrs G. Siviter and D. Gaunt.....”

County Advertiser 18/6/1904

“Decimus Gaunt, landlord of the OLD BUSH INN, Powke Lane, Blackheath, applied for an occasional license to sell intoxicating liquors at the Coombs Wood Tube Works Football Ground on the 25th inst, on the occasion of the sports arranged by the friendly societies of Blackheath. There was no objection, and the license was granted.”

County Advertiser 16/7/1904

“The annual dinner in connection with the Coombs Wood Tube Works Football Club was held at the BUSH INN, Powke Lane, Blackheath on Saturday night. About 50 were present, and the host, Mr. D. Gaunt, provided an excellent repast. Mr. Wainwright was in the chair, and Mr. Aitcheson in the vice-chair. After the loyal toasts, Mr. G. Keiling proposed ‘The Coombs Wood Tube Works Football Club,’ and spoke of the difficulties the club had had to face during the past season. He was sure the committee had worked very hard, and he hoped that the heavy debt which the club had incurred – chiefly through having to spend such a big sum on the new ground and the wretched weather of the past season – would be soon wiped off.

Mr. W. Salt (secretary), in responding to the toast, congratulated the players on their work during the past season. Their record was – Played 41, won 23, drawn 8, lost 10, scoring 100 goals against 71. They also reached the semi-finals of the Birmingham Junior Cup and the Birmingham Charity Shield, and occupied fifth position in the Birmingham Junior League. The balance sheet adopted at the annual meeting showed a deficiency on the year’s working of £60, accounted for by the sum of over £40 being spent on the ground, and the bad weather had also made against good gates. The loss in many cup-ties accounted for the remainder of the debt. Given fine weather another season, and having no further expense on the ground, the debt should be considerably reduced.

Mr. J. H. Henderson proposed ‘The Host and Hostess,’ and Mr. G. Keiling seconded. Mr. D. Gaunt, in acknowledging, said he hoped to be able to do as much for the club in the future as he had done in the past.

During the evening songs were rendered by Messrs. D. Darby, J. H. Henderson, T. Rose, and T. Lowe. A hearty vote of thanks to the chairman brought a pleasant evening to a close.”

County Advertiser 6/8/1904

“On Saturday night a concert was given by the Old Hill Brass Band upon a piece of land close to the OLD BUSH INN, Powke Lane. There was a good audience, and the concert was much appreciated. A collection was made on behalf of the funds of the band.”

County Advertiser 1/7/1905

“The annual dinner of the Coombs Wood Tube Works Football Club was held on Thursday evening at the clubhouse, Powke Lane..... The club started the season with a deficiency of £63, which they had succeeded in reducing by one-half. The very successful season was celebrated by a most enjoyable evening, and great credit is due to Mr. and Mrs. D. Gaunt for their admirable catering for the company.”

County Advertiser 16/12/1905

“Licensing Business.....

Mr. Thompson applied for permission to make alterations at the OLD BUSH INN, Powke Lane, Blackheath, kept by Decimus Gaunt. He mentioned that the back portion of the premises were in a very bad condition as the result of mining operations, and that it was absolutely necessary that this portion should be rebuilt. At present it was only propped up, and if it was not rebuilt would probably all have to come down. Mr. Bassano said there were certain points which the justices wished to consider, and they would adjourn the application until the licensing sessions. Mr. Thompson asked if the justices would inspect the house, but Mr. Bassano said they would take some action upon the matter.”

County Advertiser 10/2/1906

“The annual general licensing sessions for Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held on Wednesday.....

Mr. W. H. Thompson made an application for permission to make structural alterations to the OLD BUSH INN, Powke Lane, Blackheath, kept by Decimus Gaunt. He explained that on the last occasion when he made the application the proposed alterations were in respect of a small bar that at the present time was a very dark place, and practically of little use except for keeping beer in. The smoke room was very small, and had no light whatever except of an artificial character. The room was also very low, being about 7ft 3in high, and was quite inadequate for the business that was done, with the result that a lot of business had to be done in the kitchen. It was proposed to do away with the small bar, which would be called a serving room. It was also proposed to do away with the present dark smoke room and substitute a light and lofty room. The front of the premises would not be altered, and the licensed area would not be increased in any way. It was absolutely necessary that some repairs should be made to the premises, because they had been badly pulled about by mining operations.

The Chairman said the justices had inspected the house, and had found an open door which led into a field at the back of the house. He felt sure the police would not like that door to be open.

Mr. Thompson said this door was shown upon the old plan.

The Chairman said the police would like that to be done away with. There was also a wall round the premises which the justices desired to see raised to a proper height. The Bench had more than once objected to entrances to club rooms being mixed up with entrances to bed rooms. There certainly ought to be an independent staircase from the ground level to the club room. The conditions existing at present were about as unsatisfactory as they could be. Subject to those conditions being satisfactorily carried out the plans would be approved."

County Advertiser 10/3/1906

"The adjourned annual licensing sessions for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held on Wednesday....

Mr. Thompson asked the Bench for sanction to proposed alterations at the OLD BUSH INN, Powke Lane, Blackheath. He mentioned that the plans were brought forward on 7th of February, and they were then approved subject to three alterations. One was that a door leading into a field at the rear of the house should be closed, another that a wall should be of a uniform height, and another that a staircase to the club room should be provided independent of the private staircase. The magistrates sanctioned the proposed alterations."

"On Monday evening the officers and members of Court Little Band of Hope, No.4598, entertained the members of the juvenile branch to dinner at the court house, OLD BUSH INN, Powke Lane. In addition to the juveniles about 25 of the adult society sat down to a capital spread. The chair was taken by Bro. G. Parkes, CR, and a most enjoyable evening was spent. After the toast of 'The King,' which was loyally honoured, songs were given by Bros. Sam Parsons, W. Nock, Jas. Parkes, T. Powell, and Mater Allen Gaunt, and recitations by Bro. W. Bennett, and Masters Charlie Nock and Tom Gadd. Mr. Tinsley delighted both young and old with his funny humorous songs, and Mr. Hackett was a capable pianist. The juvenile society is in a flourishing condition, having funds amounting to over £3 per head, and great hopes are entertained of its future in supplying members to the adult court. A vote of thanks to the host (Bro. D. Gaunt) concluded a delightful evening."

"Decimus Gaunt, licensee of the OLD BUSH INN, Powke Lane, Blackheath, applied for a license to sell intoxicants at the Coombs Wood Football Ground, on the 22nd inst, on the occasion of a comic football match and sports. Inspector Gibbs opposed the application, and pointed out that these special facilities were an inducement for men to drink, and afterwards the publicans were troubled with them. The application was refused."

"The Licensing Sessions took place at Rowley Regis yesterday, when it was reported that there had been a decrease of 39 in the convictions for drunkenness.

The police objected to the renewal of the license of the OLD BUSH INN, Blackheath, on the ground that rabbit coursing was carried on there, and that large crowds of disorderly people assembled in the neighbourhood. The Bench renewed the license on the understanding that the rabbit coursing was discontinued."

“Walter Seaton Sykes, the OLD BUSH INN, Powke Lane, Blackheath, pleaded not guilty to supplying intoxicating liquor after permitted hours on January 24th, and the following pleaded not guilty to consuming the liquor in non-permitted hours on the same date: Job Allen (30), 366, St. Paul’s Road, Smethwick; Bert Robinson (24), 69, New England, Cakemore; William Love (29), 23, Simpson Street, Oldbury; Bernard Simcox (26), 8, Unity Place, Oldbury, and Fred Windmill, 10, Canal side, Oldbury.

Mr. J. T. Higgs, for the police, said that according to the Licensing Act, 1921, section 4, beer should not be served outside permitted hours, which, in that district, ended at 10pm. In this case beer was consumed at 10.55pm, and was undoubtedly permitted by the landlord, in the presence of two policemen. When PS Perkins and PC Eke went to the house on January 24th, a room at the back was fully lighted up, and contained six men and the landlord. The officers looked through a window which was not covered by a blind, and saw drinks brought in and placed in front of the customers, one of whom paid money. The policemen entered, and statements were made by Sykes, the men and the landlady. Sykes said ‘They are friends of mine, and I am entitled to have them here if I like.’ A licensee could not turn men into friends after 10 o’clock.

After evidence had been given by the officers, Mr. Millichip (West Bromwich) addressed the Bench for the defence, which was that the men were servants and friends.

The Chairman said that the licensee was found guilty of a technical offence, and would be dealt with leniently with a fine of £2 with £5s 5s costs. The opinion of the Bench was that such a conviction would not jeopardise the renewal of his license. Jones, Allen and Robinson would be dismissed on payment of 4s costs each, and Love, Simcox and Windmill would be fined 10s each.”

Decimus Gaunt died in the 1st quarter of 1937.

“How a film so gripped him that he enlisted in the French Foreign Legion was related at Old Hill Police Court, yesterday, when a 22-year-old lorry driver, Richard James Harvey, a native of Newport, Mon., but of no fixed abode, was sent to prison for six months, with hard labour, for stealing £96, the money of Sarah Jane Glaze, with whom he lodged at the OLD BUSH REVIVED INN, Powke Lane, Blackheath.

To PC Simonds, who took him into custody at Newport, after he had absconded from Blackheath with the stolen money, Harvey admitted the theft, and said that he had flown to Paris in the Imperial Airway liner Horatio. ‘I would have gone to Spain, only I had no passport,’ he added. He had only a penny in his possession when arrested.

PC Simonds said Harvey had been a source of constant trouble to his parents, who kept a second-hand shop in Newport. He was the only child and was spoilt. He had twice joined the Army, but on each occasion was discharged for having given a false age. In April 1936 he joined the French Foreign legion in the name of James after having sold his parents’ motor-car, which he took without their consent. A few months later his parents bought him out of the Legion at considerable expense. Harvey, continued the officer, was a young man of highly imaginative mind. Films excited and impressed him greatly and he visited a local cinema time and time again to see a film entitled ‘Legionnaire,’ which so gripped him that finally he joined the Legion.

It was reported that Harvey had been previously convicted and at the age of 18 was sentenced to 12 months for housebreaking and larceny.

In the case before the court yesterday he was stated to have taken the £96 from a drawer in an upstairs room during a few weeks that he was lodging at the inn. His wife, who had been staying with him, left before Harvey disappeared.

Harvey pleaded to be given a chance. ‘I am not asking it for myself but for my wife and kiddie,’ he said, adding that he would do any sort of work in order to get money with which to repay every penny to Mrs. Glaze.

‘It is a very bad case. There does not seem to be any hope for you at all,’ said the chairman, Mr. A. H. Bassano, who said six months was the maximum they could sentence him to.

Harvey, who was wearing a mackintosh which he had bought with some of the stolen money, took it off before being taken to the cells and handed it to Mrs. Glaze.”

“At the Petty Sessions, held at Old Hill, on Wednesday, before Messrs. F. W. S. Barrs and C. Cochrane, William Baker was brought up on remand, charged with stabbing William Wood, on the 30th ult. Mr. Addison appeared for the prosecution. The circumstances as related by the prosecutor and several men who saw the occurrence were as follows. About half-past ten o’clock on the night of the 30th ult, the prisoner, prosecutor, and half a dozen others were in a beerhouse called the OLD CROSS GUNS, at Cradley Heath, in this parish. The prisoner is a shoemaker, and had just come from work, bringing with him a knife and several other tools used in the trade. In the course of the evening one of the men gave the prosecutor a rasp, which he handed to another man. The prisoner, on seeing the rasp in the hand of the third man, said it was his, and snatched it from him. Prosecutor upon this demanded the rasp back, but the prisoner refused to give it. Some words ensued, and prisoner lifted a jug from the table and threatened to strike prosecutor with it. One of the men took the jug from him, upon which the prosecutor pushed him down on the seat. The prisoner then took a knife from his coat pocket, and stabbed prosecutor in the abdomen. The prosecutor shortly became insensible, and the prisoner left the house at once. He was apprehended on the same night.

Mr. Hodgson, surgeon, who was called in to the prosecutor, stated that the wound was on the left side, at the bottom of the abdomen. The cavity of the abdomen had been penetrated, but the instrument it had been inflicted by had not touched the intestines. The wound was of a very dangerous character. He had attended the man since the time he received the wound.

The prisoner made no defence, but called the man with whom he went to the public-house to state what took place. According to this man’s statement he was not there all the time, and consequently did not see the end of the affair. The prisoner was committed to take his trial at the next Stafford Assizes.”

[At the Stafford Summer Assizes on 20th July 1864, William Baker was charged with feloniously cutting and wounding, he was found guilty and sentenced to nine months’ imprisonment with hard labour.]

“On Tuesday afternoon last a serious explosion of gas took place, at the house of Mr. Willetts, CROSS GUNS INN. It appears that one of the main pipes in the street had, by some means, cracked, and the gas escaping found its way into Mr. Willetts’s cellars. On Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Willetts being out, Mrs. Willetts being afraid of the gas, which was almost enough to suffocate any one in the house, a neighbour, Mr. Hampton was called in. He immediately went down into the cellar No.1, with a candle in his hand. He found no gas there. He then proceeded to No.2. Immediately upon his entering this cellar, the gas, which had congregated, exploded with a loud noise, knocking Mr. Hampton down, and severely burning his hands and face. The gas then proceeded through the cellar No.1, up the steps, and sent Mrs. Willetts, who was standing near the door, up to the ceiling, knocking off the plaster with her head. Glasses, jugs, plates, and windows were all broken into pieces. The parlour floor was blown up, and the building damaged very much. The gas then proceeded along the side of the pipes into the house rented by Mr. Allen, where another explosion occurred, doing considerable damage to the clothes &c in the shop. In consequence, the inhabitants of Cradley Heath were deprived of the cheerful light of the gas.”

I, Daniel Willetts, Licensed Victualler, now residing at the CROSS GUNS, Cradley Heath, in the Parish of Rowley Regis, in the County of Stafford, Victualler, Do Hereby Give Notice that it is my intention to apply to the Adjourned General Annual Licensing Meeting for the Division of Rowley Regis, to be holden at the Public Office, at Old Hill, in the said County, on the 30th day of September next ensuing, at the hour of Eleven o’clock in the forenoon of the same day, for a Seven Days’ License to hold any Excise License or Licenses, to Sell by Retail under The Intoxicating Liquor Licensing Act, 1828, and the Acts amending the same, all Intoxicating Liquors to be consumed either on or off the Premises, situate at Cradley Heath, in the said Parish, and known by the sign of the CROSS GUNS, which said premises are of the annual value by law is required, of which House and Premises I am the Owner, and the same are now in my occupation.

Given under my hand this 31st day of August, 1885.

Daniel Willetts.”

County Advertiser 3/10/1885

“Mr. Waldron, on behalf of Daniel Willetts, of the CROSS KEYS [sic], Cradley Heath, applied for a six days’ license to be extended to a seven days’ license. In support of the application he urged that unless it was granted applicant would not be on an equal footing with his fellow publicans, and was already losing custom through having only a six days’ license. The application was granted.”

“At the Old Hill Police Court, at a special sessions, John Bishop (56), a tradesman, residing in Graingers Lane, was remanded on the charge of stealing a cask containing nine gallons of ale, the property of Thomas Charles, landlord of the CROSS GUNS INN. It was alleged that the prisoner took the cask and placed it on his cart. Prisoner stated that he took the cask for a lark. He was admitted to bail.”

“John Bishop of Graingers Lane, Cradley Heath, was charged with stealing a cask of ale, value 10s or 11s, the property of Thomas Charles, on the 26th ult. Mr. Waldron defended.

Complainant, who is the landlord of the OLD CROSS GUNS, Cradley Heath, had employed defendant on the day in question to fetch a load of lime to his house. He arrived at the inn about three o’clock, and emptied the lime at the top of the yard. Defendant afterwards stayed in the house for about two hours, and then went into the yard to take away his horse and cart. Complainant followed him and saw him put the barrel into the cart and drive away with it. Complainant went after the defendant without being perceived, and saw him in his yard. Complainant said to him ‘What game do you call this?’ to which defendant replied ‘I have not put it in.' Complainant said 'Put what in?' and defendant said 'That barrel.' Complainant then went away, and defendant brought back the barrel about twenty minutes after.

Mr. Waldron said his instructions were very simple. His client, instead of going about his business of fetching this load of lime, called at two public houses. He also had some liquor at complainant's house, and by the time he was ready to go away was 'pretty mellow.' He stumbled over the barrel when he went into the yard, and in a moment of irritation put it into the cart. There was no felonious intent whatever, and this fact was, he (Mr. Waldron) submitted, borne out by the whole of the surrounding circumstances. Defendant was a decent working man, and he asked the Bench for leniency on his behalf. Defendant was fined 20s and costs."

County Advertiser 4/8/1894

"Thomas Charles, landlord of the CROSS GUNS INN, Cradley Road, Cradley Heath, was charged with being drunk and disorderly on the 24th ult.

Police-constable Brindley deposed to seeing defendant drunk and making a disturbance in the highway early in the morning in question

Mr. Ward, who defended, said defendant had been at a friend's house, and had had too much to drink. It was not a serious offence, however, like being drunk on his own licensed premises, or in any licensed premises. He was annoyed at the policeman watching the house.

It was stated that defendant had been previously convicted for a similar offence, and the Bench fined him 20s.

Mr. Bassano said as defendant was a publican he must be careful."

"Small Anchor Smiths.

On Wednesday evening last a crowded meeting of the members of the above trade was held at Mr. Charles's, CROSS GUNS INN, Cradley Heath. The rules, as drawn up by the committee appointed for the purpose were read, and after a short discussion, it was resolved that they be passed, and placed in the printer's hands, with a view to having them registered directly. The question was then discussed as to the advisability of asking for an advance, seeing that the trade was improving, and that they had suffered several reductions during the late depression. It was eventually resolved that the secretary visit the employers, asking them to meet representatives of the men in conference, with a view to discussing an advance in wages."

Thomas Charles was also a brewer. [1896]

County Advertiser 1/8/1896

"Thomas Charles, landlord of the CROSS GUNS INN, Cradley Road, Cradley Heath, was charged with assaulting Police-constable Herbert John Hughes, on the 30th June, and further with being drunk on his own licensed premises on that date; the summons stating that he had been twice convicted of drunkenness within twelve calendar months. There were a cross-summons against the constable for assaulting Charles. Mr. J. W. Clulow (instructed by the chief constable) prosecuted, and Mr. Foster (instructed by Mr. S. Ward, Dudley) defended.

Mr. Clulow stated that on the night of the 30th June, at about 9-45pm, Police-constable Hughes visited the premises of the defendant in order to make inquiries as to a box of pipe cleaners which had been found on the defendant's yard, and which it was thought had been stolen. He went into the kitchen, and asked the defendant's daughter, who was in at the time, where her father was. The daughter went into the bar, and the defendant soon came out of the bar into the kitchen. As soon as he saw the officer he ordered him off the premises. The officer said, 'I found a box of instruments in your yard, and I have come to make inquiries about them.' Charles replied, 'It is a lie; you have been sent to catch me.' He then threatened that if the officer did not go out, he would put him out. The officer was about to go, when Charles struck him on the nose. He followed that up by another blow, which knocked off the officer's cap. They fell down several times together, and later on defendant tore the tunic of the officer. Of course there was a struggle, and there was no doubt that, either by a blow from one of his own customers, or by falling down on the bricks in the yard, defendant received an injury to the back of his head. Several of the customers came out and took Charles into the house, and the constable went away. Shortly after leaving he met Police-sergeant Newman, who visited the house with Police-constable Wynne. Defendant then said that the officer had been to the house and asked for some whiskey, and because he would not supply it, Hughes had struck him with his staff. The cross-summons against the policeman had been issued since the adjournment of the charge against Charles.

Police-constable Hughes said that at about 9-45 on the 30th June, he went to the OLD CROSS GUNS INN, by the instruction of his sergeant to make inquiries about some articles that had been found on defendant's premises that morning. When defendant came into the kitchen out of the vaults he was drunk and staggering. Upon witness stating what was his errand, defendant said, 'You have been — well sent here to catch me; go out of my — house.' Witness said he would go, and backed towards the door. Defendant rushed at him, and struck him on the nose, as a result of which both his eyes had been discoloured. When he reached the door the defendant struck him again on the side of the head, knocking him against the stairs-door. Out in the yard defendant again struck witness, knocked his hat off, and challenged him to fight. He rushed at witness, who caught hold of him, and put him on the floor. Defendant then tried to bite and kick. Witness allowed him to get up several times, but on each occasion defendant rushed at him, and witness put him on the floor again, and held him. Witness did not hit defendant, nor draw his staff. Defendant struck John Parkes, one of the customers who came out, and Parkes retaliated with a blow on the mouth, which knocked defendant against the wall. Witness afterwards reported the matter to the sergeant, whom he met in the street. Cross-examined: He did not ask for twopenny-worth of whiskey, nor did he draw his staff and strike defendant.

Police-sergeant Newman said that on the night in question he saw Police-constable Hughes in the street. His mouth was bleeding, and his coat sleeve was torn, and on the following day his two eyes were discoloured. In consequence of his report, witness, accompanied by Police-constable Wynne, visited the defendant's house, and found the defendant in the kitchen, drunk. His mouth and the back of his head were bleeding. Charles's daughter said that Hughes had been to the house, and said her father was drunk. Defendant said that Hughes had been in and asked for some whiskey, and when he would not fill it, the officer struck him on the head with his staff, and had crippled him for life. When witness afterwards served the summons on defendant, he said it was his own fault.

Police-constable Wynne corroborated.

Sarah Homer and Annie Homer, servants at the defendant's house, and John Parkes, one of the customers, also gave corroborative evidence.

Mr. Foster said the case for the defence was a complete contradiction of the other story.

Mr. Bassano said the Bench were doubtful whether the defence should be proceeded with after the character of the evidence for the prosecution.

Mr. Foster, after consulting defendant, said the case must go on.

Defendant was called, and said that Hughes came to his house on the night in question, and asked for twopenny-worth of whiskey. Witness refused to fill it, and Hughes then drew his staff, and struck witness three times on the back of the head. Then they went into the yard and there was a fight. Witness hit Hughes several times, and Hughes hit him. As Hughes went away he said that nothing would come of it if his tunic had not been torn. When Sergeant Newman visited the house nothing was said by the officer about witness being drunk. He had had nothing to drink that day. Cross-examined: He rarely went without beer for a whole day. He had been charged four times, since he had been a publican, with being drunk. The reason he struck Parkes was that he was aggravated with him for assisting the officer, when the latter was holding him by the throat.

Joseph Mallen, James Hill, and other witnesses were called in support of the defendant's statement as to what happened in the yard, but there was no evidence for the defence as to what happened in the kitchen.

After a short consultation, the Bench dismissed the charge of assault against Hughes. They considered the charge of assaulting the officer was fully proved, and as it was an unprovoked assault on a police-constable in the execution of his duty, in the house of the defendant, they thought it called for a very considerable fine. As the costs were somewhat heavy, they would fine the defendant 40s and costs, and in the case of being drunk on his licensed premises, 10s including costs.

Further charges of allowing drunkenness, and of selling beer to a man named John Morgan, while in a drunken condition, were heard against the defendant. He was fined 10s including costs in the one case, and ordered to pay costs in the other, which was withdrawn.

The fines and costs in all cases, including solicitor's fees, amounted to £10 12s."

County Advertiser 17/10/1896

"At the Dudley County Court, on Tuesday, Thomas Charles, recently landlord of the OLD CROSS GUNS INN, Cradley Heath, was publicly examined in bankruptcy before Mr. Registrar Kettle.

Debtor, who is charged with being an absconding bankrupt, attended in custody with two of the warders from Worcester gaol. Mr. Tinsley represented the bankrupt, and Mr. W. H. Thompson appeared on behalf of the petitioning creditors.

In reply to Mr. Jobson (Official Receiver) debtor stated that he had been a miner, and about six years ago he borrowed £200 and took the RED LION INN, Five Ways, Cradley Heath, where he remained for about three years. He repaid part of the money, and whilst at the public house he ran up an account with a firm of brewers. He was paid a sum to leave the RED LION in December, 1893, but could not remember the amount.

Mr. Jobson: Have you from that date up to the present time been able to pay your creditors in full? – I think I have been; sometimes I have been level, and sometimes I have been behind.

He took the OLD CROSS GUNS in December, 1893, and remained there until last August. The in-going valuation was £140.

Of this sum he only paid £80, some of which he borrowed, and the remainder being the money he had received in respect of the valuation of the other public house.

Mr. Jobson: Do you suggest that you were robbed whilst at the CROSS GUNS? – Debtor: I do. There was £65 10s in cash taken away at once. We tried to discover who took the money, but we could not find it.

You have suggested that it was members of your own family? – Well, I could never find it out.

How many sons have you? – Four or five.

Has there been a prosecution against you? – Yes.

When was that? – About two months ago.

What did it cost you? – About £30.

Where did you get the money from? – From my mother.

Did your creditors come down upon you when they saw that you had been convicted? – They did not interfere with me.

Do you want the Court to understand that at that time you could not pay 20s in the pound, but that if you had sold the lease of the house you would have had sufficient to have done so? – Yes.

What was the amount of the lease? – £170.

He believed this sum would have paid them all. He had the BLACK BOY, at Oldbury, which he carried on at the same time he was landlord of the RED LION. He took the BLACK BOY on behalf of his son Thomas, who went to India, taking with him some of the money. About nine months ago he took the OLD ENGINE HOUSE, Wagon Street, Old Hill, for his son John. He paid part of the money for the license and his son the remainder, the amount being £50. His son had repaid the money, with the exception of about £7.

Mr. Jobson: Where did you get the money from? – Debtor: From a club conducted by teachers and scholars.

Why did you leave the neighbourhood? – I went out for my health.

And whilst out for your health did you spend any of the takings from the house? – I did not see a penny.

Replying to Mr. Tinsley, debtor stated that he had about £19 or £20 when he went away.

Mr. Jobson said that certain proceedings were yet to be taken against the debtor.

The Registrar said that he did not think the bankrupt would have to appear in that court again, but he would adjourn the case sine die.”

Afterwards the auditors (Mr. A. Barnbrook and Mr. J. Jacks) presented the report and balance sheet, the members expressing satisfaction at the manner in which the books had been kept. Hearty votes of thanks were passed to the host and hostess, and the singing of ‘He’s a jolly good fellow’ for the chairman, ended a very pleasant evening.”

Birmingham Daily Gazette 29/1/1903

“At the Rowley Regis Police Court yesterday, a case which had aroused considerable interest was heard in which Job Dunn, the landlord of the CROSS GUNS INN, Cradley Road, Cradley Heath, was charged with permitting drunkenness on the 10th inst. Mr. Clulow, who prosecuted on behalf of the police, stated that the case was the first under the new Licensing Act in the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division.

On Saturday night, the 10th inst, when making an inspection of the licensed houses in Cradley Heath, the police found a man named Arthur Banks drunk in the defendant’s tap room. It was not suggested that Banks was supplied with drink on defendant’s premises, but under the new Act it was for the defendant and his assistants to prove they had taken all reasonable steps to prevent a drunken man remaining on the licensed premises.

Police-constables Foulkes and Turner proved to finding Banks drunk on the premises.

Mr. W. H. Thompson, who represented the North Worcestershire Brewery Company, the owner of the defendant’s house, said Banks entered the house at the back without the knowledge of the defendant and his assistants. He was not supplied with drink, and when he was found by the defendant’s son in the bar, was ordered to leave, but he was stupid and would not do so. The defendant’s attention was called to him, and he asked him to go, but he would not, and shortly afterwards the police arrived. He submitted that all reasonable steps were taken to get rid of the man, and hoped the magistrates would not hold that the defendant was to blame.

After hearing a number of witnesses who bore out Mr. Thompson’s statement, the magistrates came to the conclusion that an offence had been committed. They did not regard it as a serious offence, but they wished it to be known that drunken persons must not knowingly be allowed to remain on licensed premises for a single minute. Defendant was fined 10s and £2 14s 6d costs.

Banks, for being drunk on licensed premises, was fined 10s.”

“The following licenses of public houses in the district were transferred.....

CROSS GUNS INN, Cradley Heath, from John Dunn to John Edward Trench. In this latter case it was explained that the out-going manager was not present, and an application was made to the magistrates to excuse his absence. Mr. T. Cooksey (magistrates' clerk) said it was necessary that the out-going tenants or managers should be present to consent to the transfer of the licenses. This kind of thing was becoming too frequent, and if the out-going managers would not attend the Court the brewery firms had the remedy in their own hands, and they could obtain their presence by summoning them. Eventually the Bench granted the transfer, but Mr. A. H. Bassano intimated that in future no application would be considered unless the out-going manager or tenant was present to consent to the transfer of the license."

"For years he worked as a chainmaker and smith (retired 1960) at William Griffin's Triton Works. But it was his fame as a breeder of Staffords It was here that he founded the Staffordshire Bull Terrier Club in 1935."

"In some quarters 'Staffordshire' suggests knots; in other, pots – or Toby Jugs; but in a select yet growing circle 'the Staffordshire' is the bull-terrier. It is a circle whose centre is Birmingham and the Black Country. There was the cradle of the breed about a century ago, and there it has been saved from extinction and remarkably revived within the last ten years. The tale of the Staffordshire is told with authority and with entertaining detail by Mr. H. N. Beilby in a newly-published book, 'The Staffordshire Bull Terrier.'

Glamour is not peculiar to blonde young women; it attaches also to bad old sports. When bull-baiting, once a Royal sport, declined and was finally made illegal, it was replaced by dog fighting. This required a lighter and quicker breed of dog than the mastiffs and bull-dogs of the bull ring; so the bull-dog was crossed with the old English terrier. From this alliance, which took place very early in the nineteenth century, sprang the Staffordshire. When dog fighting and kindred blood sports fell under the ban, the Staffordshire, Mr. Beilby recalls, came to be 'regarded as a disreputable tyke with a murky past.' But the coal-miners and ironworkers of his own county cherished the Staffordshire – for ratting, if not for less laudable pursuits. And when, recently, distance began to lend enchantment, however spurious, to the dog-fight, the breed was still in existence and capable of revival. Most appropriately the hub of the revival was Cradley, and the headquarters chosen by the Staffordshire Bull Terrier Club was the OLD CROSS GUNS, Cradley Heath. If one can judge a race by its founders, it will be hard for the most eccentric breeder to undermine the Staffordshire's historic character; the four patriarchs of the race were Fearless Joe, Game Lad, Brindle Mick and Rum Bottle. The Club, however, appears determined to protect the breed from debilitating deviations from standard. Mr. Beilby gives an exact description of the approved type. But it is a relic of Cradley parochialism that he places first among faults the 'Dudley nose'?"

At the Birmingham 77th National Dog Show in December 1949, a Staffordshire bull-terrier named Tyke from the OLD CROSS GUNS was placed in the final of the breed.

“.....A character references provided by Wolverhampton and Dudley Breweries reads, ‘Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Mallen took over the management of the CROSS GUNS INN, Cradley Heath, on the 11th July, 1921, and remained there until November 1950. They went through the difficult period of the slump of 1929-30-31. They were a very popular couple and Mrs. Mallen was mainly responsible for the managing of the affairs of the Company, as Mr. Mallen combined his work as a shackle-maker.

There were rumours that cock-fighting and dog-fighting used to take place in the CROSS GUNS cellar during the early hours of the morning.

Mr. Mallen became a breeder of Staffordshire Bull Terrier dogs for which he became well known, and this drew trade to the house. Mr. Mallen was a great sportsman and a very popular licensee. His wife looked after him well and also took care of the public house.

We were sorry when they decided to retire from the CROSS GUNS INN but we were sure that they both deserved a rest.”

“.....Eighty years old Joe [Mallen] can look back on a lifetime amongst the folk lore and customs of one of Britain’s most fiercely individual areas.

For more than 29 years he was gaffer at the CROSS GUNS INN – a famous Black Country hostelry which stood at the Five Ways in Cradley Heath.

But pulling pints was only a part time occupation for Mr. Mallen; for 54 years he worked as a chainmaker and smith at William Griffin’s works in the town.

And when Joe entered the licensed trade, he was already well known for his interest and experience with the Staffordshire bull terrier.....

After film star Tom Walls managed to get the breed recognised at Crufts Joe won the first ever diploma for the best in the show with his dog ‘Cross Guns Johnson’.

That was in 1936, but three years later ‘Gentleman Jim’, the dog Joe named after the fighter James John Corbett, became the first champion Staffordshire bull terrier of the world.....

Nowadays Mr. Mallen lives on his own at Kinver. But he can be found most nights in one of the inns of Cradley Heath.....”

“Mr. E. Hooper, District Coroner, held an inquest on Saturday, at the DUN COW INN, Blackheath, on the body of Joseph Newton, aged 64, who met with his death under the following circumstances. Deceased was a resident in the neighbourhood, and had for some time complained of shortness of breath, and on Tuesday last he started to walk to the residence of Mr. Moore, of Hales Owen, his club surgeon. Whilst on the way he was seen by a Mrs. Lowe to stagger and fall. He was taken up and placed in a cart with a view of being conveyed to his residence, but he expired before arriving there. The jury thought it unnecessary to take medical evidence, and returned as their verdict, Died from Natural Causes.”

County Advertiser 12/10/1867

“On Wednesday morning an inquest was held by Mr. E. Hooper, at the DUN COW public house, Gorsty Hill, on view of the body of Joseph Parsons, aged 31, miner, residing at Rowley Regis. The deceased was injured by a fall of coal as far back as the 9th of June last, while working at the Tump Colliery. He lingered until the 7th inst, on which day he expired. No blame was attached to the managers, and a verdict of Accidental Death was returned.”

Stourbridge Observer 15/2/1868

“An inquest was held at the DUN COW, Gorsty Hill, before E. Hooper, Esq, Coroner, touching the death of Sarah Whittall (82). From the evidence it appeared that deceased was in her house alone, when her clothes caught fire, on Monday week last, and she was so injured that she died on the following day.

Verdict, Accidental Death.”

“Benjamin Smith, collier, Blackheath, was charged with being drunk, on the 4th of July.

PS Cooper said he saw him being led out of the DUN COW public house, in an intoxicated state. He was also charged with refusing to quit the same premises at the same time, but there being only one magistrate on the bench, this charge was adjourned till next week.

He pleaded guilty to being drunk, and was fined 2s 6d, with the alternative of seven days in prison.”

“Eliza Cartwright, landlady of the DUN COW INN, at Gorsty Hill, Blackheath, was summoned for permitting drunkenness upon her licensed premises, on the 4th inst.

It appears that on the evening of the day mentioned PC Cooper visited the defendant's house in company with PC Brown, and they saw a man named Benjamin Smith being led out of the house, drunk, by two men. Inside the house they found six more men nearly drunk.

Mr. Shakespeare, who defended, stated that there was a club feast going on in the house that evening, and it was impossible on such occasions to keep an eye on every one in the room.

The Bench remarked that as it was festival time there ought to be some little latitude, and dismissed the case.”

Dudley and District News 6/8/1881

“Benjamin Smith, recently liberated from prison, for being drunk on the same date, pleaded guilty to refusing to quit the DUN COW INN, Blackheath, on 4th July. The Bench, remarking that he had been already punished for the offence, dismissed the case.”

Dudley and District News 8/3/1884

“Elizabeth Cartwright, of the RED [sic] COW INN, Gorsty Hill, was charged with making an untrue entry in the brewery book, thereby defrauding the Inland Revenue to the extent of 6s 3d. Mr. J. B. Davies, supervisor, appeared in support of the summons, and Mr. Holberton was for the defence.

Mr. W. H. Stevenson, excise officer, stated that from an examination that he made on the 18th November last, he found that the grain and wort did not correspond with the entries in the book, to the extent of 56 and 46 per cent respectively, thus defrauding the Revenue of 6s 3d.

Arthur Aston, Inland Revenue officer, said he was directed to visit the house occupied by Mrs. Cartwright. Upon examination he found that there were six and a quarter bushels more grains in the mash tub, that being two bushels more than the quantity entered in the book. Four bushels would be rated at 12s 6d, while six bushels would be 18s 9d. By the untrue entry the Revenue had been defrauded out of 6s 3d. He had visited the house for three months and had not found a wrong entry before.

Mr. Holberton urged that the defendant’s son, who is now dead, used an extra quantity of malt in mistake, for which Mrs. Cartwright was sorry.

Defendant was fined £10 and costs.”

“Yesterday afternoon Mr. E. Hooper (coroner) held an inquest at the DUN COW INN, Gosty Hill, respecting the death of Alice Turner (4). It appeared that on Saturday last the deceased’s nightdress caught fire during her parents’ absence. She was severely burned, and died on Monday. The Coroner thought there was great neglect on the part of the parents, for letting the child go down alone. Had there been a fire-guard the child might now have been alive. It was stated that the parents had since provided one. A verdict of Accidental Death was returned.”

County Advertiser 27/11/1897

Edwin Flowers, son, stated that deceased was a nail caster by trade, and he last saw him alive at 1.30 on Monday afternoon, when he left to go to Birmingham. He said he should return by the six ‘clock train, but did not, and witness stayed up till late at night for him, and he at last thought that on account of the denseness of the fog he might stop at his father’s house. Deceased was a temperate man.

In reply to Inspector Given witness said his father worked for Mr. G. B. Parkes, nail manufacturer, of Gorsty Hill, who also rented a coal wharf near the place where deceased was found. There were several chains near the wharf which bordered the towpath. He had heard that other persons had walked into the canal in consequence of the fog. One man named Christian James Allen fell in at the place where deceased was found, but he got out. The chains were not hanging up at the time. He considered that his father would not have fallen into the canal had the chains been up, but he could easily have walked into the canal when the chains were down. Witness had been told that the chains were not up. Deceased had never threatened to commit suicide. He left a widow and ten children.

Samuel Harris, of Tory Street, Blackheath, said he worked at the wharf. On Monday night he left at 4.30 and put the chain where he had been working at up. All who worked there should fasten the chains, and he believed they were all fastened. They were all fastened when he went to work early the next morning, when he saw the body floating in the water, and, with assistance, got it out and removed it to his home.

Inspector Given said the wharf belonged to the Canal Company.

Upon witness being asked whether he knew all that all the chains were fastened, a juryman interrupted, and said he saw one of the servants of the Canal Company fastening them at about seven o’clock.

Police-constable Mycock also gave evidence.

Inspector Given said the chains were, as a rule, fastened.

A juryman asked whether the police could visit the manufacturers using the wharf, and ask them to see that the chains were fastened.

Inspector Given: A representation from the jury would have more weight.

The Coroner said there was no doubt that by some means the deceased fell into the canal accidentally. There were no marks of violence on the body, so they could safely say that deceased had lost his way and tumbled into the water, and was drowned. They had got to consider whether there was sufficient safeguards to the public at the spot. There was a road running near the canal, and it was the duty of the Canal Company to fence their property. It was their duty to see that the place was protected so that the public did not lose their lives.

A jurymen said whilst there was not sufficient fencing, he considered that the road ought to be lighted. He knew there had been a good many persons drown at the spot. He thought, also, that the road was dangerous, but there were no lights.

Inspector Given said in 1895, from the month of May to December, there were no less than three persons drowned near the wharf. At that time representations were made to the Canal Company, and they made some alterations. The fencing was very low, but it was raised. These alterations were examined by the late coroner, Mr. E. Hooper, and he pronounced them satisfactory. Inspector Given suggested that the chain should be padlocked, as children might play near them and unhook the chains.

A jurymen said the road was a very dangerous one.

Inspector Given: There are scores of roads in the parish which are not lighted.

The Foreman of the Jury said he thought the road ought to be lighted from Old Hill Railway Station to the top of Gorsty Hill, as in the darkness anybody might walk into the canal before being aware of it.

The Coroner said it was a matter for the District Council.

The Jury eventually returned a verdict of Accidentally Drowned, and the Coroner said he would write to the Rowley Regis Rural District Council urging them to light the road, especially near the canal, and also ask the Canal Company to see that the chains are fastened and padlocked.

Inspector Given said the case was a distressing one. He understood that several clergymen were taking up the matter of behalf of the widow and family, and a subscription list had been opened.

The Coroner gave a donation of 2s 6d. Subscriptions for the widow will be thankfully received by Rev. W. B. Cheshire, The Manse, Old Hill. The case is a most deserving and distressing one. Deceased was a member and teacher in the Primitive Methodist Society, Gosty Hill. Ten children are left, two partially and seven entirely dependant upon the widow.”

“Blackheath police are anxious to trace the occupants of a car which, it is alleged, collided with three pedestrians, seriously injuring two of them, late on Saturday night.

Fred Rollason (50) and his wife Frances (49) of Hillwood Road, and Mrs. Lizzie Joan Bannister (45) of Coombs Wood Buildings, Hill and Cakemore, were talking on the footpath outside the DUN COW INN, Gorsty Hill, Blackheath, when a car travelling towards Blackheath is stated to have swerved to its nearside and collided with the three.

Mr. Rollason had his skull fractured and his wife suffered from concussion and shock. Both are detained in Dudley Guest Hospital. Mrs. Bannister received slight bruising of the right arm.

A front nearside door handle which is thought to have been broken off by the impact was found on the scene. It has enabled the police to identify the car as a pre-1938 Ford saloon. The driver did not stop.

The police would also like to interview anyone who saw the accident.”

“The licensee of a public house where food is not prepared or served is not entitled to sell ice cream.

This was decided at Old Hill yesterday when Rowley Regis Corporation summoned Alfred J. Bounds, licensee of the OLD DUN COW, Gorsty Hill, Blackheath, for storing ice cream with the intention of selling it without being registered for the purpose.

It was stated that although the Council had refused to grant Bounds a license he had continued to sell ice cream on the advice of his solicitors. For Bounds, Mr. F. H. Grove submitted that the Corporation’s permission was not needed.

The Town Clerk, Mr. J. Hilton, claimed that the only places entitled to sell ice cream were restaurants and licensed houses where meals were prepared.

The magistrates found that the premises were not a catering establishment within the meaning of the Act. Bounds was fined £5. Mr. Grove intimated that an appeal would be made.”

“On Saturday morning last an inquest was held at the WHIMSEY INN, Garratts Lane, before G. H. Hinchliffe, Esq, coroner, on the body of Thomas Edwards. The deceased was a miner, aged thirty years, and worked in one of the British Iron Company’s pits. On the previous day he placed a shot (1lb of gunpowder) in some ironstone for the purpose of blowing it down. He had his face near it, and it exploded before he could get away, most severely injuring and cutting his head and face, and killing him on the spot. The deceased had been in the habit of firing shots, and the witnesses could not account for his mismanagement. As no person appeared to be blameable except deceased himself, a verdict of Accidental Death was recorded.”

County Advertiser 3/4/1858

“Nathaniel Upton, landlord of the WHIMSEY INN, Rowley, was charged with keeping his house open for the sale of liquors at illegal hours on Sunday, the 7th ult. Emma Sleeman stated that about two o’clock on the morning of the above-named day she went to the defendant’s house in search of her husband. She found him in the house in company with a woman named ‘Brown Ann,’ and there was a gallon of ale and half-a-pint of rum upon the table. Witness stated that defendant’s house harboured women of bad character. Defendant made a rambling defence, stating that the witness was totally unknown to him, and that what she had stated was quite untrue; but the Bench accredited her statement sufficiently to fine defendant 10s and costs.”

“William Tucker was charged with assaulting Joseph Norman on the 6th inst. It appeared from the evidence of plaintiff and a witness, Joseph Round, that the plaintiff and defendant were in the WHIMSEY INN, Black Wagon Street, at half-past ten o’clock at night, and that after using threatening language defendant struck plaintiff.

Defendant said there was a pigeon club held at this public house, of which plaintiff was a member, and if anyone looked at them they would fetch a summons. He did not strike plaintiff.

The Bench were however of opinion that he did, and fined him a shilling and costs, in default of which he would be detained a fortnight.”

Upwards of seventy were present. Mr. Daniel Blunt was then called to occupy the chair. The secretary, Mr. John Smith, stated that the court had been opened about two years, and the number of financial members was 75, the average age of the members was 22 years, and the court was in a very prosperous condition. A vote of thanks was unanimously passed to the host and hostess of the house, and also to the chairman and secretary. This concluded the business, and during the remaining part of the day the members enjoyed themselves in various ways.”

Dudley Herald 29/4/1876

“On Wednesday evening a mass meeting of colliers from Old Hill, Rowley, and Blackheath was held in the large room attached to the ENGINE INN, Wagon Street, Old Hill. After a chairman had been elected, the meeting was opened with an address, delivered by Mr. Breakwell, upon the necessity of union among colliers to maintain their present rights, and to prevent encroachments upon them. The speaker concluded by moving ‘That the steps taken by the employers in reducing the men’s wages without notice is not in accordance with the Birmingham agreement as stated by the masters at the Dudley meeting.’ This was seconded and carried unanimously. A collier moved ‘That in the opinion of this meeting the men are entitled to fourteen days’ notice of the drop, and that at the next pay day they demand fourteen days’ notice if it is not given.’ This was also carried unanimously, with applause.”

County Advertiser 29/4/1876

“George Thompson was charged with being disorderly upon the licensed premises of Enoch Westwood, ENGINE INN, Old Hill, and refusing to quit when ordered to do so. Mr. Hayes prosecuted.

Enoch Westwood said that defendant came to his house on the 12th inst, drunk, and caused a disturbance. Witness ordered him to leave the house, but this he refused to do; and instead became very abusive. After ordering him to leave several times without effect witness told him he would put him out, on which defendant picked up a poker and threatened to cut his b— head off with it. The Bench said defendant was evidently a bad character, and they would endeavour to teach him a lesson. They fined him 20s and costs, or in default a month’s imprisonment.”

“Enoch Westwood, landlord of the ENGINE INN, Old Hill, was charged with having opened his house for the sale of ale during prohibited hours on Sunday, the 16th inst. Mr. Hayes appeared for the defendant.

Police-constable Himan said he visited defendant’s house in company with Police-constable Wickstead at about 10am. He again went at about a quarter-past twelve o’clock in the day. He found about ten men in the house, who had ale before them. He asked defendant how it was that he opened so early, and he replied that it was opening time, or else his watch was not right. Witness showed him his watch, and defendant pulled out his which showed the time as twenty-five minutes to one o’clock. The time by the witness’s watch was twenty minutes past twelve, and he afterwards compared it with others, which showed it to be the right

Cross-examined: Defendant told him that he closed the house the previous night when it was eleven o'clock by his watch. Mr. Hayes, in defence, said he should not deny any of the facts stated by the officer, but submitted that defendant acted in a bona fide manner. He was not aware that his watch was slow, and closed his house the night previous, turning out about seventy people, when his watch indicated closing time. Mr. Hayes was proceeding to call a witness to this statement, but Mr. Hingley said it had nothing to do with the case. Defendant was fined 5s and costs."

"Daniel Williams, Thomas Bagley, Joseph Round, Joseph Southall, David Price, Samuel Williams, John Nailor, Joseph Hancox, Josiah Cooksey, and Samuel Tucker, were charged with drinking in the ENGINE INN, Old Hill, kept by Enoch Westwood, on the 16th April, during prohibited hours. Police-constable Himan proved seeing the defendants in the house, and they had several cups of ale before them. They pleaded guilty, and were each fined 5s and costs."

"The Proposal to Lengthen Colliers' Working Hours.

On Tuesday night a mass meeting of colliers was held at the ENGINE INN, Old Hill. After addresses, the meeting unanimously agreed (1) 'That, in the opinion of this meeting, eight hours is long enough for the miners to work in the mines, and that we pledge ourselves to maintain the eight hours principle.' (2) 'That, in the opinion of this meeting, the change sought by the masters in our working hours is unreasonable and unjust, and that we pledge ourselves to resist any encroachment in our working hours, and we ask the other districts to co-operate with us.'"

County Advertiser 9/9/1876

"Eli Bagley, a youth, charged Samuel Willetts, alias the Lawyer, with stealing 1s, his property.

The complainant said he lived at Old Hill, and worked under 'Noah,' meaning Mr. Hingley. On the 2nd inst he was at the ENGINE INN, Black Wagon Street, and the defendant was also there. He asked for a pint of ale, and offered a shilling in payment. Defendant snatched it out of hand and refused to return it. Supporting evidence was given. The defendant said that he and the prosecutor had been gambling, and the latter had lost 3d to him. He picked up the 1s to take out the 3d.

There was a further charge of being drunk and disorderly against the defendant, which was proved by Inspector Price.

The Bench considered the evidence on the first charge unsatisfactory, and discharged the defendant. They remarked that there was a good deal of gambling at public houses, which wanted sifting. They fined defendant 5s and costs for being drunk and disorderly."

County Express 16/9/1876

"Enoch Westwood, landlord of the ENGINE INN, Old Hill, was charged with having permitted drunkenness in his house on the 2nd inst. Mr. Stokes defended.

It will be remembered that last week a man named Samuel Willetts was charged at this court with having stolen 1s from the defendant's house, and it appeared from the evidence of a policeman that when apprehended Willetts was drunk; hence the charge.

The defence now set up was that Willetts feigned drunkenness immediately he was accused of theft, and that the landlord gave instructions for a policeman to be sent for, which he certainly would not have done had Willetts been really drunk, because he would have rendered himself liable to a charge.

Police-constable Sylvester was called, and he now stated that Willetts was drunk when apprehended on the charge of theft, and that he remained helplessly drunk until four o'clock the next morning.

Mr. Stokes said, assuming the man really was drunk the Bench could not convict unless there was evidence to show that his client knowingly permitted it. The Bench considered the case proved, and fined defendant £2 and costs."

"On Wednesday the District Coroner (Mr. E. Hooper) held an inquest at the OLD ENGINE INN, Black Dragon [sic] Street, Old Hill, on the body of Rowland Astbury, a boy four years of age.

It appeared that on Thursday the lad upset a quantity of paraffin oil down his clothing. The spirit afterwards caught fire from the flame of a lamp from which the oil was spilt, and the poor lad was burned in a most shocking manner.

A verdict of Accidental Death was returned.

Two jurymen named Morris and Weston, who had been summoned to attend the inquiry failed to put in an appearance when their names were called, whereupon the Coroner remarked that he had been frequently inconvenienced at that place by householders not attending when summoned as jurymen, and he felt it to be his duty to endeavour to put a stop to such neglect. He then fined the two absentees in the sum of 40s each."

Dudley and District News 13/5/1882

"Enoch Westwood, ENGINE INN, Wagon Street, Old Hill, was charged with unlawfully permitting drunkenness upon his premises on the 1st inst. Mr. Cooksey defended.

PC Rowlands said on the day mentioned about 7pm he visited the defendant's house and found a number of people upstairs drunk. He went again at 7.50 and found a man named William Pugh, of Wagon Street, Old Hill, drunk in the tap room. He called the landlady's attention to him, and she replied 'she did not know he had come back again after going to his tea.' Pugh had some drink in a cup before him. The landlady told him to go, and Pugh got up, but fell forward on to the seat. The landlady's son, John Westwood, kept him from falling and helped to take Pugh home.

PC Wickstead corroborated the evidence of Rowlands.

Mr. Cooksey said he admitted the facts given in evidence by the police, but he would not admit that his client was guilty because he did not know that Pugh was in the house and there was no proof that he had been served in defendant's house. He then quoted a decision which stated that if a man was drunk on licensed premises and had not been served on the premises when he was found, the landlord could not be convicted.

For the defence Ann Westwood, wife of defendant, said on the day mentioned a man named Pugh was in her house and went away about five o'clock; he was perfectly sober. She did not see him again until the police called her attention to him in the kitchen.

Witness had no occasion to go into the kitchen, but the girl Barber attended to the customers there. In the kitchen there were Walker, Perkes, Skitt, and others sitting at the table near Pugh.

By Superintendent Woollaston: Pugh came in about three pm and left at five, and was perfectly sober.

By Mr. Cooksey: There were about 14 persons sitting in the kitchen, and it was possible that she could not recognise all.

Sarah Ann Barber said she waited in the kitchen and saw Pugh there. He went out and came in again afterwards, but she did not supply him with any drink. She supplied a man named Benjamin Walker with a cup of ale. There were a number of men sitting at the table by Pugh. When the police came the second time and pointed out Pugh to the landlady he was sober.

Benjamin Walker said he was in defendant's house and saw Pugh there. When Pugh came in he did not ask to be served with ale, but he drank out of witness's cup. When he came in he walked quite steady, and was not noisy. He had been in about a quarter of an hour before the officers came in and called attention to him.

By Superintendent Woollaston: When the officers came in Pugh was sober. She saw him fall on the table, and she thought he fell because perhaps he could not find his legs. (Laughter.)

By the Bench: She saw Pugh led out of the house, but could not say from that circumstance that he was drunk.

John Perkes said when the police came in he heard the landlady tell them that she had not served Pugh with anything to drink.

Witness sat next to Pugh, who did not ask for any ale, but drank out of Walker's jug. William Wellings said he saw Pugh at Red-dall Hill at 6.30pm, and he was then sober.

Defendant having been convicted in 1866 and 1876, the Bench said they would take into consideration his good behaviour during the past six years, and fine him £5 and costs."

Enoch Westwood, OLD ENGINE INN, Wagon Street, Old Hill, open during illegal hours, fined 5s and costs; permitting drunkenness, fined 40s and costs; permitting drunkenness, fined £5 and costs."

Dudley and District News 30/9/1882

"This being the Old Hill adjourned licensing sessions the Bench granted a renewal of the licenses which were suspended at the last annual general sessions. The Chairman stated that the magistrates had very carefully considered each case, and they had decided to renew the licenses on the understanding that some assurance was given on the part of each defaulter, that their respective houses should be better conducted in the future. The Bench were determined that the law should be enforced, and if the defendants were guilty of any further offence against the Licensing Laws they would be severely punished and their licenses forfeited. The Chairman added that Henry Heath, who was convicted for selling ale during prohibited hours on Sunday, was now taking out a six days' license instead of a seven days', and his license was renewed on that condition; and if any of the others wished to have six days' licenses the Bench would be pleased to grant them."

"Enoch Westwood, landlord of the ENGINE INN, Waggon Street, Old Hill, was summoned by the Inland Revenue authorities for mixing sugar in nine gallons of wort after an account of the wort had been taken and the duty charged thereon. Mr. Davies, of the Inland Revenue, appeared to prosecute, and Mr. Cooksey defended.

Evidence given by Robert Collins, officer of the Inland Revenue, stationed at Old Hill, went to show that on the 22nd June the defendant made an entry to mash on the 23rd 12 bushels of malt at six am, and to dissolve 24lbs of sugar at eleven am, and a similar quantity at one. Witness examined the quantity of the products in the two vats, and found it to correspond with the entries. On the following day the supervisor and witness visited the brewery and found a quantity of sugar on a cask. Witness heard defendant say he had put about a pound of sugar into a cask into which wort had been running from out of the second vat. Samples of the wort were taken, and it was found to contain sugar, which had increased it considerably in gravity. The quantity was also increased. Loaf sugar was found in the cellar.

Arthur Aston corroborated.

Mr. Cooksey admitted that the defendant had used one pound of sugar in the racking of the beer. It was the custom, he believed, to use loaf sugar for the purpose of refining the beer. It had been defendant's custom to enter so many pounds of sugar, but not use the whole in the mashing. Whatever defendant had done he had done in ignorance of the law.

John Westwood, son of the defendant, said he did not mash the 48lbs of sugar entered, but only 42lbs. He always kept back 6lbs for racking purposes.

Mr. Davies stated that the defendant had not the slightest right to adopt such a course. The reserve sugar to put it in afterwards was to commit an offence under the Act.

The Bench thought they must convict in this case, to show the trade that they could not act the same as the defendant had done. Fined 40s and costs."

Dudley Mercury 4/1/1890

"Eli Westwood, landlord of the OLD ENGINE INN, Waggon Street, Old Hill, was charged with permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises on the 7th ult. Mr. Waldron defended.

Police-constable Ingley said he visited the house on the day in question, and found a man named Nock drunk in the club room. When spoken to Nock struck witness.

Two witnesses stated that there was a meeting of the Foresters' Club in the club room, and Nock drank out of the same can as the others.

Mr. Waldron submitted that there was no evidence that the landlord knew that Nock was there. The members were only entitled to a pint of ale, and the landlord would not think that any man would get drunk.

Defendant said that he had no control over the room whilst the Foresters' meeting was being held. Only the members were allowed in the room. Nock was perfectly sober.

By Inspector Walters: He was a member of the Club.

Thomas Rollinson, rivet maker, said that when he saw Nock he was sober.

Rueben Bagley said that Nock was sober.

William Cusac swore the Nock was sober.

The Bench said that they had no doubt as to the drunkenness of Nock, but the question was whether the circumstances were such that the landlord knew that he was drunk. The Bench had decided to dismiss the case."

County Express 17/5/1890

“The home of a working man named John Darby, in Waggon Street, Old Hill, was the scene of a fire on Saturday night, which resulted in two children being suffocated. Darby, his wife, and five children have resided for some time past at No.10 Waggon Street. About eight o’clock on Saturday night Mrs. Darby put the three youngest children – John, aged six years; Joseph, aged three years; and Ann Maria, seven years old – to bed. All three of the children were placed in one bed in a back room upstairs. The other two children – James and Mary Ann, aged thirteen and nine years respectively – were afterwards left with a neighbour, and the parents then locked up the house and went to Cradley Heath market. During their absence nothing appears to have been heard by the neighbours of the children who were locked inside the house. When the parents returned home about 9.40 the father, upon opening the door, discovered that the house was filled with dense smoke. An alarm was raised, and several of the neighbours ran in. Upon going upstairs it was found that the bed on which the children had been placed two hours before by their mother was on fire, but the children were missing. A few minutes later the three were found lying upon the floor of a small room adjoining the bedroom, apparently dead. Joseph Aspbury, Joseph Naylor, and Lavinia Thompson, assisted by the father, immediately carried the children into a neighbour’s house, when it was found that Joseph was dead, while John died shortly afterwards. Dr. Key, assistant to Dr. Standish, was called, and rendered what assistance he could in the case of Ann Maria, who after a time recovered consciousness.

Police inspector Bishop and four constables were promptly upon the scene with their fire appliances, but the flames had in the meanwhile been subdued by buckets of water. The police ascertained that after their parents left the house on Saturday night the deceased child John obtained some matches, and, striking one of them, he threw it at his sister, the result being that the bedclothes caught fire, and the children were quickly enveloped in flames. The girl ran into the small room adjoining followed by two boys; and it is thought that, the house being a small one and the smoke so dense, the children were overcome before they could raise an alarm or escape from the house. There were no marks of burns upon either off the bodies. The melancholy occurrence caused a painful sensation in the district.

On Monday morning Ann Maria Darby, aged seven years, died from the effects of injuries received on Saturday night at her father’s house, Old Hill. The child was found in an unconscious state at the top of the stairs. Restoratives were applied, and with difficulty she was brought back to consciousness. During Sunday night the poor little girl frequently complained that her brother John ‘did it,’ meaning that he set the bed on fire, and that she told him he ought not to have done it.

On Tuesday afternoon Mr. F. W. Topham (Deputy Coroner) held an inquest at the OLD ENGINE INN, Old Hill, respecting the deaths of the three children.

The father of the children, John Darby, said on Saturday evening his wife put the three children to bed, after which he and his wife locked up the house to go to market. They left about eight o’clock, and returned home about half-past nine. Witness then described finding the house full of smoke and breaking the bed room window. He said they had been in the habit of leaving the children in bed whilst they went to market.

The Coroner said it was a very unwise thing to do, although he believed it was customary in that district.

Witness, continuing, said when he could not find his children he raised an alarm, and Joseph Aspbury ran upstairs and found them. Ann Maria informed him on Sunday that the bed was set on fire owing to John throwing a lighted match on to it. He could not say where the match was obtained from.

Joseph Aspbury, miner, said that on going into Mr. Darby’s bed room he found the two boys on the floor in their night dresses.

The youngest was dead, but the other groaned once. He found one of the beds smouldering.

Inspector Bishop said the bed linen was badly burned. Ann Maria told him on Sunday that her brother John got out of bed and obtained a lighted match and threw it at her and her little brother when in bed. The bed linen became ignited, and she took the boys into her father’s bed room, where they were overcome by smoke.

A juryman said he could not help thinking that the parents were to blame for leaving matches within the reach of young children.

The Coroner expressed the hope that the parents in that and adjoining districts would discontinue the practice of locking their children in the house on Saturday nights unattended. It was very sad that three children should have lost their lives in the manner described.

The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Deaths.”

Debtor, who is charged with being an absconding bankrupt, attended in custody with two of the warders from Worcester gaol. Mr. Tinsley represented the bankrupt, and Mr. W. H. Thompson appeared on behalf of the petitioning creditors.

In reply to Mr. Jobson (Official Receiver) debtor stated that he had been a miner, and about six years ago he borrowed £200 and took the RED LION INN, Five Ways, Cradley Heath, where he remained for about three years. He repaid part of the money, and whilst at the public house he ran up an account with a firm of brewers. He was paid a sum to leave the RED LION in December, 1893, but could not remember the amount.

Mr. Jobson: Have you from that date up to the present time been able to pay your creditors in full? – I think I have been; sometimes I have been level, and sometimes I have been behind.

He took the OLD CROSS GUNS in December, 1893, and remained there until last August. The in-going valuation was £140. Of this sum he only paid £80, some of which he borrowed, and the remainder being the money he had received in respect of the valuation of the other public house.

Mr. Jobson: Do you suggest that you were robbed whilst at the CROSS GUNS? – Debtor: I do. There was £65 10s in cash taken away at once. We tried to discover who took the money, but we could not find it.

You have suggested that it was members of your own family? – Well, I could never find it out.

How many sons have you? – Four or five.

Has there been a prosecution against you? – Yes.

When was that? – About two months ago.

What did it cost you? – About £30.

Where did you get the money from? – From my mother.

Did your creditors come down upon you when they saw that you had been convicted? – They did not interfere with me.

Do you want the Court to understand that at that time you could not pay 20s in the pound, but that if you had sold the lease of the house you would have had sufficient to have done so? – Yes.

What was the amount of the lease? – £170.

He believed this sum would have paid them all. He had the BLACK BOY, at Oldbury, which he carried on at the same time he was landlord of the RED LION. He took the BLACK BOY on behalf of his son Thomas, who went to India, taking with him some of the money. About nine months ago he took the OLD ENGINE HOUSE, Wagon Street, Old Hill, for his son John. He paid part of the money for the license and his son the remainder, the amount being £50. His son had repaid the money, with the exception of about £7.

Mr. Jobson: Where did you get the money from? – Debtor: From a club conducted by teachers and scholars.

Why did you leave the neighbourhood? – I went out for my health.

And whilst out for your health did you spend any of the takings from the house? – I did not see a penny.

Replying to Mr. Tinsley, debtor stated that he had about £19 or £20 when he went away.

Mr. Jobson said that certain proceedings were yet to be taken against the debtor.

The Registrar said that he did not think the bankrupt would have to appear in that court again, but he would adjourn the case sine die.”

County Advertiser 22/5/1897

“Hannah Westwood, married, Garratts Lane, Old Hill, was charged with unlawful and disorderly conduct on the licensed premises of Frederick Weston, at the ENGINE INN, Wagon Street, Old Hill, on the 16th May.

Mr. Ward prosecuted, and said that on Sunday last Westwood’s husband went for a walk with the complainant, and in the evening, at about nine o’clock, defendant went to the WAGON [sic] INN. She said something to her husband, who went out of the house.

Defendant then turned to the landlord and used a very vile expression with regard to him, and upon that complainant ordered her to leave the premises. She refused to leave, and went towards the kitchen. She found a couple of respectable women there, and she used practically a similar expression towards them. Subsequently she did go out.

Complainant substantiated the statement of Mr. Ward, and Mrs. Allport, Wellington Street, Old Hill, Joseph Adams, and George Goode also gave evidence in support of the charge.

No evidence was given in defence.

Frederick Weston was charged with assaulting Hannah Westwood on the 16th May.

Complainant said her husband was out with the defendant on the date in question. He took some money with him, and when he returned he had made away with £11. In the evening she went to the ENGINE INN and found her husband there. He was not sober, and she said to him, ‘You had better come out of it.’ She had reason for going there, as her husband had been out of work for the last eight weeks, and had made away with over £30. He sat at the public house for eight or ten hours at a time, and she had found him playing at tippet and cards. It had almost been the ruin of her home. She asked her husband to come out. He drank threepenny worth of whiskey and a bottle of lemonade, and left, and she followed her husband away. Immediately her husband got home he left again, and she went to Weston’s, and said she would see who was there if it cost her her life. It would be about five minutes past nine when she went to the kitchen door, and she asked whether there was anybody there who belonged to her. No one spoke beside Mr. Allport, and he called her a soft ——. She accused him of getting money from her husband. She then went away, Weston followed her up the street. He called her some vile manner, and she then struck him in the face. He caught hold of her by the throat, and struck her a blow on the jaw. Several women broke his hold, and he caught hold of her again in the same place. When he loosed her she fell on the door step, and was unconscious. She went back again to the ENGINE INN, and told Weston that she should make him pay for it.

Mr. Ward: Did you give him two black eyes? – Witness: One.

Mr. Ward: He has two. – Witness: I would have given him three if I could.

Mr. Ward: You struck him a violent blow? – I did.

Complainant said she was first cousin to the defendant.

Maria Stringer, Wagon Street, said she was at her door on Sunday evening, and she saw complainant in the street. Weston followed her up the street in his shirt sleeves. Weston called complainant bad names, and she struck him. He then struck her, and caught hold of her throat, and they had to pull him off.

Elizabeth Thompson corroborated.

Mr. Ward submitted for the defence that the defendant went outside to order the complainant off, and she struck him violently, and then he pushed her away.

Samuel Thompson said he saw Mrs. Westwood deliberately strike Weston before Weston struck her.

Enoch Hadley corroborated.

Frederick Weston was then charged with being drunk and disorderly in the public highway on the 15th inst. Mr. Ward defended.

Mrs. Hannah Westwood gave evidence that Weston was drunk when she went into the house.

Inspector Given and Police-constables Wickstead and Buckler gave evidence in support of the charge.

The Bench said that there was some difficulty in arriving at the real facts of the case. They had no doubt in the charge of assault that Mrs. Westwood, under great provocation, struck Weston, and they regarded the other charges as not proven. The three cases would therefore be dismissed.”

County Advertiser 29/5/1897

“Frederick Weston, landlord of the ENGINE INN, Wagon Street, Old Hill, was charged with permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises on the 8th inst. Mr. Ward defended.

The evidence for the prosecution was that some time after seven o’clock at night on the date named George Hickman, who lived in Wagon Street, saw Noah Brettell in charge of a float containing pigs, which he was taking to defendant’s house. Just as Hickman got near him he fell off the float, and Hickman, going to his assistance, saw that he had had beer. Brettell then went up the entry with the float. About half-past ten the same night Inspector Given visited the house, and upon going in saw Brettell standing up against the counter, to which he was holding for support. The Inspector at once saw Brettell was drunk. The landlord was behind the bar by the beer machine, and there was another man standing by the side of Brettell. Between the two on the counter there was a pint cup full of ale, which had just been drawn. The Inspector drew the landlord’s attention to the man, and said to him, ‘That man is drunk, anybody can see that,’ going immediately afterwards into the passage. The landlord followed him, and said, ‘Well, he is not all that drunk. He can stand.’ Brettell then went away from the house. The next day Inspector Given went to the house in company with Police-constable Buckler, and cautioned defendant about harbouring a man named Westwood, and said to the landlord, ‘You know the reason.’ Defendant replied, ‘Do you think anything will come of this job last night?’ The Inspector said, ‘I am really surprised at you asking such a question. There was a man quite drunk, with only the width of the counter between you and him, with a pint of ale in front of him which had just been drawn. Any person with half an eye could see that he was drunk.’ Defendant replied, ‘I really did not think he was so bad. I will tell you the truth about it. We had been out all day together to Bewdley, to buy some pigs. We did not come back till nearly eight o’clock. You know how it is when there is a deal. Brettell stopped to finish the business, and I did not think he was so bad. I hope nothing will come of it. It is the first stain I have ever had on my character.’

A little girl who went into the house stated that Brettell was drunk.

Mr. Ward, for the defence, contended that the charge had not been fully made out. Defendant and Brettell had been out during the day on business, and he should call witnesses who would say Brettell was sober.

Defendant and three witnesses were called, who deposed to the man Brettell being in a sober condition.

The Bench fined defendant 20s and costs, and Brettell 10s and costs.”

“On Sunday afternoon the annual hospital parade and open-air service, arranged by the various friendly societies in Old Hill and the surrounding district took place. Processions were formed at different points of members of the Foresters, the Free Gardeners, and provident societies, numbering altogether about 1,000, and these, accompanied by the Blackheath, Halesowen Temperance, and Old Hill Bands, paraded the principal streets of the locality, after which they marched to a field in Garratts Lane, lent for the occasion by Mr. A. Sidaway, where a special service was held. Addresses were delivered by the Revs. E. Brewer, MA (vicar of Old Hill), and W. B. Cheshire (Primitive Methodist). A collection was made along the route and at the service in aid of the Guest Hospital, Dudley Dispensary, and Birmingham Eye Hospital, this realising £25 14s 5³/₄d.

The following was the order of procession issued by the committee. The Blackheath Village Band will start from the WHITE LION INN, Powke Lane, at 1-45 prompt, proceed down Garratts Lane, calling for societies at the BRITISH OAK INN, Tabernacle, DUKE WILLIAM INN, and VINE INN, turning across Queen Street on to the old football ground (by kind permission of Mr. W. H. Jarvis). The Halesowen Temperance Band will start from the PRINCE OF WALES INN, Wrights Lane, at 1-45 prompt, proceed round Cherry Orchard Street, into Wrights Lane, turning down Wagon Street, calling at the OLD ENGINE INN, proceeding down Elbow Street and King Street, across Halesowen Road, to the old football ground. The Old Hill Band will start from the CROSS INN at 1-45 prompt, calling for societies at Trinity Schools and GEORGE HOTEL, proceed across Lawrence Lane, turning up New Street, Ridding Street, Pear Tree Street, Pear Tree Lane, thence into Reddal Hill Road, calling at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, and proceeding to the old football ground. A grand procession will be formed as follows.....”

“The annual dinner of the Old Hill Friendly Societies Service Committee was held at the ENGINE INN, Old Hill, on Monday evening, and advantage was taken of the occasion to make a presentation to Mr. L. Hall Flemings, who for four years was hon. secretary to the movement. Mr. D. Blaunt, chairman of the committee, presided, and Mr. P. Simpson (vice-chairman) was in the vice-chair.

Mr. B. Bennett, of Netherton, proposed the toast of ‘Success to the Old Hill Friendly Societies’ Service.’ The toast was warmly received, and Mr. G. Cresswell, the secretary responded. Following this came the chief item of the evening – the presentation of a handsome marble timepiece to Mr. L. Hall Flemings. Mr. E. H. Boilstone made the presentation, and in doing so referred to Mr. Fleming’s connection with the service since its inauguration, and to his excellent work as secretary during the four years he held the office.

The clock bore the inscription ‘Presented to Mr. L. Flemings in recognition of his past services as hon. secretary of the Old Hill Friendly Societies’ service. February 1902.’ Mr. L. Hall Flemings, in thanking the committee for their handsome gift, said from the commencement of that combined effort by the friendly societies in Old Hill to help forward the work of the Hospitals, for four years he had worked hard to bring each year’s service to a successful issue, and with the aid of hard-working committees, success had been achieved, and the amounts they had obtained compared favourably with those obtained in other districts, and in fact exceeded many of them. They could look back with pride and satisfaction on the work that had been accomplished. When he resigned he had not the faintest idea of receiving anything at their hands, and the value of it had amazed him. He gratefully accepted it, as a reminder of the many happy hours he had spent among them. He would continue to do his utmost for the annual service, and in conclusion again thanked them for their present. During the evening a musical programme was gone through Mr. L. Burgess presiding at the piano.”

“On Thursday night Mr. H. A. Pearson (coroner) held an inquest at the ENGINE INN, Wagon Street, Old Hill, touching the death of William Priest (57), miner, formerly residing at Wagon Street, Old Hill, who died under singular circumstances on Tuesday night. It appeared from the evidence that on the night in question, deceased visited the ENGINE INN, but left about 9-30. He was walking near his home when he suddenly fell backwards to the ground, and injured his head. He was picked up in an unconscious condition, and removed to his house, but died about two hours later without regaining consciousness. Dr. Mitchell, who was called in, attributed death to the rupture of a blood vessel, caused by the fall. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

“On Sunday afternoon the eighth annual parade and service arranged by the various friendly societies in the Old Hill district took place under favourable circumstances. The proceedings commenced with a large procession.....

The Cradley Heath Salvation Army Band started from the ROSE AND CROWN INN, proceeded down Reddal Hill Road as far as the BRIDGE INN, turning across Plant Street, Lawrence Lane, Trinity Street, picking up another society. Afterwards they marched by way of Elbow Street and Wagon Street to the field, calling at the KINGS HEAD INN and ENGINE INN for societies.....

Upon arrival at the field a grand procession was formed..... This paraded the principal streets of the locality for some time, after which they proceeded to a field in High Street, kindly lent for the occasion by Mr. A. E. Sidaway. Here a service was held, the chair being occupied by Dr. T. E. Mitchell. Notwithstanding the threatening state of the weather there was a large attendance..... A collection was made upon the route, and at the service, on behalf of the Dudley Guest Hospital, Dudley Dispensary, Birmingham Eye Hospital, Birmingham General Hospital, Birmingham Ear and Throat Hospital, and the Old Hill Nurses Fund.”

“Friendly Societies Parade. It is proposed to hold the annual parade on Sunday, August 19th.....

The courts are hoping to secure greater success this year than before, as the claims for notes for the various hospitals are almost greater than the funds will allow, and they sincerely hope the public will rally round them and give them all the support possible. The next meeting will be held at the ENGINE INN, Wagon Street, on Wednesday next, at 7-30, and all those who are interested are cordially invited to attend.”

“The annual meeting of the Perseverance Sick and Draw Club, held at the OLD ENGINE INN, Old Hill, took place on Tuesday, when about 40 members sat down to an excellent repast given by the host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Bellfield, after which the usual business was gone through. Mr. Samuel Edwards was elected secretary, with Mr. H. Bellfield treasurer. There was a big addition of new members. The rest of the evening was taken up in harmony.....”

“Mr. R. Marshall (coroner) held an inquest at the Dudley Town Hall on Tuesday morning, relative to the death of William Belfield (65), of 20, Queen Street, Quarry Bank.

Harry Belfield, licensee of the ENGINE INN, Wagon Street, Old Hill, son of the deceased, said his father had been an inmate of the Guest Hospital for about a week, he had been a sufferer of sciatica. A few days ago he saw his father in the hospital, when he seemed much concerned because the doctor had told him he would have to undergo an operation.

John Avey, of Chapel Street, Netherton, a fellow patient of the deceased at the Guest Hospital, said that about half past four on the afternoon of the 19th inst he went round to the back of the coal shed of the hospital buildings. He heard groans, and upon going round a corner saw the deceased on his knees with a pool of blood in front of him. Witness ran for a nurse, and eventually the deceased was taken into the hospital. It was found that he had cut his throat, and though then alive he soon expired.

The Coroner: Did he ever say to you that he was in dread of an operation? – No, sir.

Edith Riglands, a nurse at the Guest Hospital, deposed to being called to the deceased by the last witness. She found him in the state described. Deceased had been told that an operation upon him was contemplated.

Another nurse named Kate Conwell said that she noticed that the deceased was strange in his manner. He seemed frightened of an operation, although she told him that it would be all right and that he would be a better man after.

Inspector Burford said that he received a telephone call from the Guest Hospital on Monday evening, and upon arriving at that institution he was conducted to the rear of the building, where he saw a pool of blood, in which there was a table knife. Belfield was lying dead in one of the wards.

Dr. Kelly said that deceased had cut his windpipe, and therefore there was no hope of recovery.

A verdict of Suicide whist of Unsound Mind was returned by the jury.”

“At Old Hill Police Court, on Wednesday, Elon Turner, licensee of the ENGINE INN, Wagon Street, Old Hill, was charged under the liquor Control Order with supplying intoxicants which had not been ordered and paid for by persons, with supplying intoxicants during the period his premises should be closed, with permitting intoxicants to be consumed on his premises during the time they should be closed. Three Old Hill men, Joseph Smith and Charles Parish, Wagon Street, and Joseph Patrick, High Street, were charged with consuming intoxicating liquors which had not been ordered and paid for, and with consuming intoxicants during a period when the premises should be closed. Mr. J. Walter Clulow appeared to prosecute instructed by the chief constable, and Mr. Waldron defended.

Mr. Clulow said under the Defence of the Realm Act the King in Council had power during the continuation of the present war to issue regulations for securing public safety and defence of the Realm, to take effect in any area for the purposes of the control by the State of the sale and supply of intoxicating liquor within the area, and for increasing directly or indirectly the efficiency of labour in such areas and preventing the efficiency of labour in such areas from being impaired by such sale and supply. The defendant was charged with three offences under the Central Control (Liquor Traffic) Order of 11th November 1915, and the Prosecution proposed to proceed first on the charge against the landlord of ‘treating’. At 10.30 on the 11th inst Inspector Myatt went to the public house, and in the tap room he saw defendant and three men, the latter having two pint cups, both of which were partially filled with beer. When asked why the men were allowed on the premises, Turner said ‘I am sorry; they have not been in long. It should have been cleared away.’ Parish said ‘I have been to the pictures, and I have just called in to have a drink. You haven’t much time to drink up when they come out.’ The men drank up the ale, and went away. The other men said that when the landlord was turning them out at 9.30 they commenced a conversation about pigs, and they remained there till 10.30, when the inspector called. Turner told Inspector Myatt that he gave them some ale for which he did not charge them. They were all customers and he did not think he was doing wrong. He was sorry, but he would plead guilty, and he hoped the fine would not be heavy. Inspector Myatt gave evidence in support of this statement. Replying to Mr. Waldron, witness said Turner had been in charge of the house for over two years, and had wrought a great improvement in the conduct of it.

For the defence Mr. Waldron pleaded guilty. After closing time there was a conversation over some pigs, and Turner rather foolishly allowed the men to remain, and gave them a pint of beer. There had been no wilful breaking of the law, and it was only goodwill on the part of the licensee, which had got them all into trouble. In a great many towns the order was regarded as a dead letter, and he thought a reasonable penalty would meet the merits of the case.

The Chairman (Mr. C. W. Bassano) said the Bench believed it was due to want of thought, but they must mark the seriousness of the offence, and impose a penalty which would deter other people. Turner was fined 40s in the first case with special cost of £4 4s 0d, and the other two cases would be withdrawn on payment of costs. The three men would each be fined 15s 6d in the first case, and the second would be withdrawn on payment of costs.”

“Cradley Heath’s Hospital Carnival week concluded on Saturday in brilliant weather with a streets parade. It was probably the most spectacular the district had witnessed, and it was estimated that over 30,000 people lined the route of the procession. The heat during the afternoon and evening was so oppressive that scores of people were overcome, and had to receive treatment, while there were two or three cases of sunstroke which necessitated medical attention.

Included in the procession were 24 jazz bands, made up of nearly 2,000 performers, their picturesque attire providing a remarkable spectacle. They came from all quarters of the Black Country, and the first prize, which carried with it the Price Challenge Cup, was won by the OLD ENGINE, Old Hill.

One of the most novel and interesting of the tableaux was entitled ‘From Childhood to Age,’ and was entered by the residents of Tibbetts Gardens, one of the poorer quarters of the district. Its central figure was Mrs. Round, who is 99 years of age.....”

"Michael Cockin was charged with, that he, being a person duly licensed to sell beer by retail, did unlawfully permit drunkenness in his house, on the 15th inst, at Cherry Orchard. He was further charged with having his house open for the sale of beer during prohibited hours.

Police-constable Cox said on the above date he visited defendant's house at 3.30pm. He saw a man come out of the front door, who, when he saw witness, turned back, and kicked the door. Witness found the front door fastened, and heard footsteps in the house. The landlady said, 'Make haste out the back. They are at the front door.' She then opened the door, and on the officer going in he found a man named Ezekiah James in a back room, quite drunk. A jug containing about half a pint of ale stood on the table in the same room. The landlady said she did not fill any drink to James. He had it before he got to her house.

Defendant said he was sorry it happened; but he was from home.

Fin'd 20s and costs for opening the house, and the other case was withdrawn."

Stourbridge Observer 4/11/1871

"Thomas Perks was charged with being in a beerhouse kept by Michael Cockin, at Cherry Orchard, on the 15th ult, during prohibited hours. Police-constable Cox said on the above date he saw defendant come out of Cockin's house during prohibited hours. The case was dismissed."

"Mr. E. Hooper, coroner, held an inquest on Monday, at the OLD HOUSE AT HOME, touching the death of James Smith (30), labourer, of 52, Cherry Orchard. Fanny Smith, wife of the deceased, stated that on the 12th of October her husband met with an accident whilst employed at Mr. Bassano's Colliery, Haden Hill. George Willetts said the deceased was pushing an iron boat with a shaft, when it slipped, and he fell across the boat causing serious injuries to his stomach, from the effects of which he died on Friday last. A verdict of Accidental Death was returned."

"On Monday afternoon Mr. Edwin Hooper (South Staffordshire Coroner) held an inquest at the OLD HOUSE AT HOME INN, Cherry Orchard, respecting the death of William Price (54), miner, who had been killed by a fall of coal at the Haden Hill Colliery, belonging to Messrs. Bassano and Co. Mr. B. Scott (Government Inspector of Coal Mines) was in attendance.

The evidence showed that deceased was an experienced workman, and on Friday morning he was engaged with other workmen in a stall in getting coal. After removing a tree a lump of coal fell from the roof, and whilst deceased was in the act of removing the lump of coal several other lumps of coal fell from the roof on to the deceased, breaking his neck and also one of his legs.

Mr. Scott said the colliery was well managed, and no other person was to blame but the deceased himself, as he should have got out of the place after removing the tree.

“On Wednesday evening, Mr. A. A. Betham (deputy coroner) held an inquest at the OLD HOUSE AT HOME, Cherry Orchard, Old Hill, concerning the death of Robert Edward Feakes, aged three months, whose parents reside at Cherry Orchard, Old Hill, and who died on the 10th inst. Mr. S. Farmer was foreman of the jury. The jury, having been sworn, went to view the body, and upon their return Inspector Given pointed to one of them and said he had not viewed it. The Coroner then ordered him to do so, and remarked that he must not try to evade viewing the bodies; as long as the law remained in its present state he should have to enforce it. The Juryman expressed his regret but said he had a strong objection to viewing bodies.

Pamela Feakes, wife of Alfred Feakes, identified the body, and said the child had been healthy from birth. On the 9th inst he was put to bed at eleven o’clock, and at 9-15 the following morning she left him lying in bed asleep. About 10-30 witness went upstairs again and found deceased still fast asleep. Upon going up three quarters of an hour later she found him dead in bed. A doctor was called in. Deceased had not suffered from fits.

Police-constable Edwin Wynn said he had made all necessary enquiries into the case and found no suspicious circumstances connected with it. The parents were respectable persons.

“Reuben Walker, Clifton Street, Old Hill, was charged with maliciously wounding Zachariah Harris, a miner, of Cherry Orchard, Old Hill, on February 1st.

Mr. Cooksey explained to the Bench that inspector Hodgkinson had ascertained there was no evidence of a knife having been used, and suggested the charge should be reduced to one of common assault.

Harris told the Bench that he went to the OLD HOUSE AT HOME INN with a friend and found defendant there. Defendant accused witness of being too idle to work, and on account of his conduct the landlord had to eject him. About five minutes later witness went out to go home, when defendant called to him, and upon going to defendant he struck witness a blow in the chest. Witness struck back in self-defence. They closed together and fell down, and while on the floor defendant struck him with something in the ribs, causing a wound four inches long, which was, however, not very deep. Witness also received three wounds in the back and the thigh, the one in the thigh also being some four inches long. Witness did not see any knife.

Defendant denied using any knife, and said any injuries complainant received were got by his falling on some cinders. The Bench fined defendant 40s and costs.”

“On Wednesday night last, at the Public Office, a man named John Harris, was charged by Joseph Sidaway, of OLD HOUSE AT HOME public house, Old Hill, with stealing a pig’s foot out of his house.

From the evidence adduced, it appears that on the 6th instant the prisoner went to Sidaway’s house, and represented himself as destitute and in want of food. His tale roused the sympathies of those present. The landlady gave him something to eat, and some of the company present gave him some ale. After having partaken of these, he became very abusive, so much so that the landlord was obliged to turn him out. When he had gone the pig’s foot was missed.

Mrs. Sidaway then in company with police-constable Daulmen went in search of him. They found him at the CROSS public house, just in the act of cooking the stolen pig’s foot. Upon Daulmen searching him, 4s 8d was found in his possession.

The magistrate said it was a very bad case, and in compensation for the heartless conduct he had displayed, they should sentence him to fourteen days’ imprisonment.”

“Joseph Sidaway, landlord of the OLD HOUSE AT HOME public house, Reddall Hill, was charged with permitting porter to be consumed on his premises during prohibited hours. Mr. Stokes defended.
Police-constable Cooper said that about half-past twelve o’clock on the night of the 26th ult, he visited the defendant’s house in company with Police-inspector Price, and there found two men named Johnson and Andrews drinking. He requested them to leave, but the defendant tried to prevent them going out. The defendant was also charged with having been previously convicted. Mr. Stokes said he would plead guilty to that charge, but not guilty to the present one.
Police-inspector Price corroborated the evidence of the other officer.
In defence Mr. Stokes, in defence, said that Andrews was a traveller, and was staying at the house for the night. Johnson being an intimate friend of his, asked permission of the landlord to spend the night there with him. This the landlord consented to allow. “On Thursday a meeting of operatives in the chain trade was held at the OLD HOUSE AT HOME, Reddall Hill, Old Hill, for the purpose of considering the best means of putting down a new kind of truck which had arisen on the trade. It appears that some of the masters are in the habit of forcing the men (though perhaps not directly) when they come to work to buy from them a quantity of gledes at the most exorbitant price. The men are compelled to accept the gledes under fear of losing their future orders, and pay the master 50 or 60 per cent more than the proper prices. It was urged that a load of gledes purchased from a master cost 18s 6d, while the same could be obtained for 9s or thereabouts. A petition to the Government was suggested, but it was thought advisable not to adopt this until other proceedings had been taken. Circulars will be sent round the district to explain what is intended to be done, and the masters refusing to abolish the ‘glede system,’ as it is called, will be served with notices, prior to stronger measures being resorted to. A committee to carry out the work was formed.”

“Edward Johnson, coal-loader, was charged with having assaulted Harry Stevens on the 11th inst, at Reddall Hill. The complainant deposed that on the 11th inst the defendant assaulted him in the OLD HOUSE AT HOME public house by striking him without provocation. Defendant in reply to the charge informed the Magistrates that the defendant and some others were playing a game called 'tippet,' complainant losing, refused to pay the amount he had lost, and made use of an argument why he should not. He (defendant) then told complainant that if he had been playing he should have given him a 'smack;' complainant then rose from his seat, and he (defendant) gave him a 'box.' Fined 2s 6d and costs."

"William Tilley, William Garratt, and Joseph Sidaway, were charged with having assaulted Jos. Riley on the 24th ult. Mr. Roskell, of Stourbridge, appeared for the complainant, and Mr. Hayes defended Sidaway.

Complainant said that on the day in question he went to the OLD HOUSE AT HOME public house, kept by the defendant Sidaway, about two o'clock in the afternoon. Whilst he was there one of the defendants challenged him to fight. He refused to do so and a brawl then commenced. Complainant left the house and left his coat behind him. He walked back to the house and asked the landlord Sidaway for the coat. The landlord refused to give it to him and then struck complainant. Five or six men, defendants among the number, then rushed to the complainant, and he was assaulted and bruised very severely. He would not swear that Garratt assaulted him. The police afterwards came to the house, and the men endeavoured to escape.

Corroborative evidence was given and Mr. Hodgson, surgeon, gave evidence showing that the complainant had received very serious injuries.

Mr. Hayes urged in extenuation that though complainant had been assaulted he had provoked the assault. He denied his client's participation in the offence. He called witnesses to prove that the landlord was not in the house at the time of the assault.

Riley was then charged with being disorderly and refusing to quit the house of Joseph Sidaway on the 24th ult.

The landlord said the defendant Riley came into his house and asked for some 'gloves' to box with. Witness then told him he had none. The defendant afterwards became disorderly and challenged several men in the house to fight. Witness then requested him to leave, and Riley refused to do so. Complainant then went out of the house, and the assault which Riley had complained of commenced.

Mrs. Sidaway gave confirmatory evidence.

The Bench considered the case against the three defendants very clearly proved, and as there had been previous convictions against the landlord, they fined him £3 and costs, and Garratt and Tilley 20s and costs. The charge of refusing to quit was dismissed."

County Advertiser 3/5/1879

"Joseph Sidaway, landlord of the OLD HOUSE AT HOME, Reddall Hill, was charged with being drunk and disorderly at the Cross, Old Hill, on the 24th ult. Police-constable Wickstead proved the offence, and Mr. Hayes pleading guilty on behalf of the defendant, and fine of 5s and costs was inflicted."

“At the Old Hill Police Court, yesterday, a nailer, named Thomas Hackett, was brought before Messrs. Barrs and Hingley, for cutting and wounding Samuel Priest. No evidence was taken, on account of the inability of the injured man to attend, and the prisoner was remanded for three weeks. It appears that a day or two ago Priest and Hackett were drinking together at the LION INN, Old Hill. They were referring to the depression of trade, and Priest was very dejected, and expressed a wish that he was dead. At length he urged the man Hackett to cut his throat, and, we are told, paid for a pint of ale as an inducement. The request being repeated, Hackett took up a knife which lay on the table, and inflicted a serious wound in the throat of Priest. When apprehended by Police-constables Robinson and Parkins, Hackett said he had only did it for a lark. Mr. Bennett, an assistant of Mr. Malins, surgeon, has twice been in attendance on the injured man, who remains in a dangerous condition.”

"On Monday, the district coroner, held an inquest at the OLD LION INN, Old Hill, touching the death of Thomas March, three years and four months old, the son of a miner living in Old Lion Road. It appeared that on the previous evening the mother of the deceased went from home, leaving him in charge of an elder brother about 13 years old. The latter, during his mother's absence, had occasion to leave the house for a short time, but hearing his brother screaming he ran back into the house and found him in flames. Before they could be extinguished the deceased was severely burned on different parts of his body, and succumbed to his injuries somewhat later. Before his death he told his mother that he was playing with a lighted spill, and that his clothes caught fire. A verdict of Accidental Death was returned."

“John Knight, miner, Wagon Street, Old Hill, James Powell, Waterfall Lane, Old Hill, and William Powell, labourer, New Street, Old Hill, were charged with stealing two cwt of coal belonging to the Birmingham Canal Company, and Henry Heath, landlord of the OLD LION INN, with receiving the same, knowing it to have been stolen, on March 19th. Mr. Barrow (Messrs. Wragge & Co.) Birmingham, prosecuted, and Mr. A. E. G. Pritchard defended Heath on behalf of Mr. W. Waldron.

A discussion took place on an application for an adjournment by Mr. Pritchard, on the ground that Heath was only served with the summons on Monday night, and no time had been allowed to get up the defence.

The application was ultimately refused.

Mr. Barrow said the two Powells and Knight were in the OLD LION INN on the day named, and asked Heath if he could do with a bit of coal. The latter asked where they would get it from, and they said out of the canal. The landlord lent them his wheelbarrow, and they brought the coal from the canal, for which he paid 1s, which they spent in beer. The proceedings were instituted more in the interests of traders than the canal company, because not unfrequently boatmen acted in complicity with such men as the prisoners, and threw the coal into the canal, out of which it was subsequently fished. Police-constable Insley, William Green, and Thomas Nock gave evidence in support of the charge, and Mr. Pritchard for the defence, urged that Heath had no felonious intent whatever in purchasing the coal for which he paid the full market price. The Bench fined the defendant Heath 40s and costs, and the other three defendants 10s and costs each.”

“On Monday morning the lifeless body of a boy named James Bennett, aged 8 years, was found in the Birmingham Canal in the Lion Road, Old Hill. The deceased was last seen alive about five o’clock on the Sunday afternoon, and was then playing with other boys on the towing path, and the body was not found till Monday morning, when an uncle saw a hat floating on the water and recognised it. A search followed, and the body was found close to. The deceased was subject to fits. An inquest was held on Wednesday evening, by Mr. Edwin Hooper (district coroner), at the LION INN, Lion Road, near Rowley, when the jury returned a verdict of Found Drowned.”

Witness ordered them to leave, but defendant refused to go. Defendant was fined 20s, including costs."

"Mr. G. C. Lewis on Monday morning held an inquest in the OLD LION INN, Lion Road, Old Hill, on the body of Emily Turley, of that vicinity, who died last Friday morning, after having given birth to a child. Mr. A. E. Sidaway was the foreman of the jury. Charles Turley, Lion Cottages, Lion Road, Old Hill, blacksmith, told the court that his wife was 44 years of age. He knew she was to give birth to a child, but not when. He had made no arrangements about a doctor or a midwife. He had been at play three months. He sent for the midwife, Mrs. Moy, on the Thursday, and she remained in the house from 9.30 to 12. Shortly after one o'clock, however, deceased appeared to have a fit, and when he spoke to her she did not reply. Then he sent for Mrs. Moy again, and she sent him for the doctor. His wife, however, died before the doctor arrived. She had had 21 children altogether, but only nine had been born alive.

Mary Jemima Moy, certificated midwife, said she was sent for to attend Mrs. Turley shortly after 9 on Thursday night. The child was born at 10 minutes to 10, but it was dead.

The Coroner: How was the mother? – She was all right, but very cold. Shortly after two o'clock they sent for me again. The woman was then 'all of a ruck' as if there had been a struggle. She had no convulsions while I was there.

Dr. T. M. Tibbetts said the husband sent for him about 2 on the Friday morning. The woman was then dead. He thought she died from puerperal convulsions.

The Coroner: There was no neglect on the part of Mrs. Moy? – Oh no, there can be no reflection on her.

A verdict was given in accordance with the doctor's evidence.

Dr. Tibbetts remarked that the great pity was that owing to poverty people were afraid of engaging a nurse or a doctor. They did nothing until the climax, when they knew somebody would go."

"Forestry. A meeting was held at the PACK HORSE INN, Old Hill, on Monday, to establish a new court in connection with the Dudley and Cradley Heath district. Bro. Thomas Homer, DS, presided, and opened the proceedings with a few pertinent remarks on Forestry. There were between 30 and 40 present. After the cloth had been withdrawn the usual loyal and patriotic toasts were duly honoured. The health of the host and hostess were heartily drunk. Bro. F. Neale, PCR, responded. Bro. John Owen, PCR, livened the meeting with songs and harmony which was indulged in until eleven o'clock, when the singing of the National Anthem brought the proceedings to a close."

"Mr. E. Hooper held an inquest on Monday, at the PACK HORSE INN, upon the body of Amos Tromans (3), whose parents reside in Pear Tree Lane. The mother of the deceased said on the 26th ult she placed a pot containing boiling water near the fireplace. The child fell backwards into the pot. The usual remedies were applied and a doctor was sent for, but the child died on Friday. The Coroner said it appeared strange to him how such a large child could fall into such a small pot. A verdict of Accidental Death was returned."

"Some further Privy Council orders have been issued for the prevention of cattle disease in Staffordshire, the most recent declaring an infected area in the parishes of Croxall and Elford. Only two outbreaks of foot-and-mouth disease have been reported to the Chief Constable this week. One of these has occurred at Birchfield, Handsworth, among cattle belonging to Mr. James Lake, this being the second outbreak among Mr. Lake's cattle within a short period. The outbreak occurred at Shut Lane End Farm, Whitmore. Cases of Pleuro-pneumonia have been reported from Hare House Farm, Bradney; Abbey Grove, Wetley Rocks; and Marl Pit House Farm, near Uttoxeter, one animal having been slaughtered in each case. Similar outbreaks were reported from Marl Pit House Farm, in September and October. A serious outbreak of swine fever has occurred at the PACK HORSE INN, Old Hill."

“Benjamin Fellows, Hampstead, West Bromwich and Daniel Weaver of Cradley Heath, were charged with being drunk and disorderly, and they were further charged with assaulting John Tibbetts. Both defendants had their faces marked. The evidence showed that they were drunk outside the PACK HORSE. They wanted to re-enter the PACK HORSE, but were prevented by the landlord because he thought they had had enough to drink. Weaver struck the landlord on the mouth, cutting his lip through; and Tibbetts knocked Weaver down ‘because he was obliged to.’ The other defendant then struck Tibbetts who retaliated. From the appearance of Fellows’ features Fellows appeared to have got the much worse of it. Weaver pleaded he had never been there before.
Mr. Bassano: It has been a long time since that you have forgotten; you were here in 1876.
Weaver: Well, I’ve never been in this place before. (Laughter.)
Defendants were each fined 5s and costs for the assault, and 2s 6d and costs for being drunk.”

“A well attended meeting of miners was held at the PACK HORSE INN, Old Hill, on Friday night, to consider the wages question and the attitude assumed by the employers with reference to the notices for an advance. Mr. H. Southall presided. Mr. B. Winwood (agent) having addressed the meeting, the following resolutions were unanimously passed: ‘That this meeting strongly condemns the threatening attitude evinced by the coal-masters at their meeting on Thursday as unjust, cruel, and tyrannical in the extreme, in wanting to ignore the legal notice issued to them on behalf of the working miners by the duly authorised agents of our association.’ ‘That we come out on strike unless the employers concede us an advance of 10 per cent on the present rate of wages, at the expiration of the fourteen days’ notice.’”

“On Tuesday afternoon Mr. Edwin Hooper (South Staffordshire Coroner) opened an inquest at the PACK HORSE INN, Old Hill, respecting the death of Henry Stringer (40), miner, Plant’s Green, Old Hill, who had died from the effect of injuries received through an explosion of gunpowder at No.23, Saltwells Colliery, belonging to the Earl of Dudley. Sylvia Stringer, the widow, stated that the deceased was an experienced miner, and he left home on the morning of the 10th inst at five o’clock to go to his work at the colliery. He returned at half-past seven o’clock, and remarked, ‘I have got it.’ She afterwards saw that he was shockingly burned about the face, chest and arms. Dr. Higgs, of Dudley, the colliery surgeon, was sent for, and he arrived at about one o’clock. In the meantime she dressed the burns with oils.
The Foreman of the jury: Did your husband come by himself in such a state? – Witness: He did.
A Juryman: He ought not to have been allowed to go home in such a state.
The Coroner said he should not call any further evidence that day, because as death had been caused by an explosion it was his duty to report the death to the Home Office.
The injuries were described by the jury as being of a shocking character, and the Coroner said the deceased must have endured great agony.”

County Express 31/1/1891

“Mr. Edwin Hooper (Coroner) held an adjourned inquest at the PACK HORSE INN, Old Hill, on Monday, respecting the death of Harry Stringer (40), miner, who died from injuries received through an explosion of gunpowder at the Saltwells Colliery, Cradley Heath, belonging to the Earl of Dudley. Mr. W. B. Scott (the Government Inspector of Coal Mines) represented the Home Office. Harry Shilton stated that he was employed as a loader at No.23, Saltwells Colliery. On the 10th inst, the deceased commenced to work in a gate-road. Witness received from the underground manager (Mr. Bayliss) a quantity of powder, which he handed to the deceased, who was standing in the working place. He saw the deceased move away, and immediately afterwards heard an explosion. Deceased said, ‘I have got it,’ and witness said, ‘How did you do it?’ and he replied, ‘It is through hurry and bustle.’ The deceased at the time held a lighted candle in his right hand.
By Mr. Scott: The powder was in paper. Usually the powder was in canisters. It was not customary to carry it about in a loose fashion.
Joseph Haywood, miner, said, he saw the deceased with a ‘bobbin’ of powder and a lighted candle in his left hand, and immediately afterwards heard an explosion. He went into the working place, and saw deceased lying on the ground. Witness helped him up, and deceased said, ‘I am done for.’
The Coroner: Didn’t it occur to you that it was a dangerous thing to carry the powder and the candle in the same hand?
Witness: It did, but I did not have the opportunity of telling him to put the candle in the other hand.
Thomas Bayliss, underground manager, said the powder was conveyed into the pit in an iron box. When in the workings he took it out of the box and forwarded it to the blowers in the paper.
The Coroner: Which is the same as being loose. – Witness: I do not think so.
Mr. Scott: But you know it is wrong to carry to carry gunpowder about the pit in a loose fashion. The law provides that it shall be carried in a case or canister.
Witness: I have only done what is customary. The blowers are experienced men, and they know how to deal with gunpowder. The Coroner said he should have to send on the evidence to the Home Office. He considered that the deputy-manager was very blameable, he having disregarded the regulations. Men’s lives were not to be trifled with in this way, and those holding responsible positions were expected to observe the law.
In reply to Mr. Scott, witness said he did not know that the rules provided that the powder must be taken to the blower in a can.
The Coroner: This only shows that you have not read the rules as you should have done.
Witness: I have ben connected with mines for forty-three years, and this is the first accident I have had.

Dr. Higgs, of Dudley, described the injuries which resulted in deceased's death.

The Coroner, in summing up, said the jury would have to decide whether there was culpable negligence or not. It had been clearly proved that the rules had been disregarded, and it would be his duty to report the fact to the Home Office, and he had no doubt Mr. Scott would also take some action in the matter.

The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death, and the foreman added that they were of opinion that the under-manager was greatly to blame for giving the powder out in the way he did, and requested the Coroner to censure him.

The deputy-manager was called into Court, and the Coroner informed him of the decision of the jury.

The deputy-manager said in future he would always have the powder carried to the men in cans.

Mr. Scott remarked that he had no idea that at the present time gunpowder was carried about in a loose fashion in pits."

"On Thursday morning Mr. E. Hooper (coroner) held an inquest at the PACK HORSE INN, Lawrence Lane, Old Hill, respecting the death of George Birks (37), a bricklayer, residing in Lawrence Lane, Old Hill, who died suddenly whilst following his employment on Monday afternoon last. Mr. E. B. Marten represented the Mines Drainage Commissioners under whom deceased was employed.

Before the inquiry commenced, the coroner called the attention of the jury to the fact that the body was in a very bad state, and considering the smallness of the room in which it was lying he thought it would be well for them to dispense with the practice of viewing it. He had seen the body himself, and he considered there was sufficient evidence of identification without troubling the jury to see it. He pointed out that in an adjoining room to where the body was lying, his wife was very ill, and he thought what he had suggested was the wisest course to pursue. A mortuary in that district was most necessary. He had been in communication with the local authorities with regard to the erection of such a building, but up to the present nothing had been done in the matter. It was very unsafe for a body to remain in such a small house.

The jury decided not to view the body.

Edward Tranter, a foreman in the employ of the Mines Drainage Commission said he had known the deceased ten years. He was a bricklayer by trade. On Monday, the 3rd inst, deceased commenced work about six o'clock in the morning. Everything went well until about a quarter past four in the afternoon, when deceased was engaged putting some timber in a trench, when he gradually fell forward. He was employed in a trench eleven feet deep. When witness saw the deceased fall, he ran to his assistance and conveyed him into the cabin. Witness had heard deceased complain of a pain in the chest, which he thought was indigestion. For this complaint deceased said he had taken some Mother Seigel's Syrup. He sent for two medical men, but neither of them appeared, and deceased shortly afterwards expired. Deceased's wife had only recently been confined, and there were altogether six children left fatherless.

Police-constable Wickstead said the death of the deceased was reported to him about ten o'clock on Monday night. He had made every enquiry respecting the matter and had found no suspicion of any kind connected with the man's death. He had known deceased for many years, and had always considered him a healthy man. There was no mortuary, and the body had to be taken home where there is a widow and six small children. There were only two bedrooms in the house. Witness examined the body but found no marks of violence upon it.

The jury returned a verdict of Death from Natural Causes.

The Coroner intimated that he should again communicate with the District Council asking them to build a mortuary."

“Mr. H. A. Pearson (coroner) held an inquest yesterday at the PACK HORSE INN, Pear Tree Lane, Old Hill, regarding the death of Henry Homer (47), chainmaker, formerly living at Lawrence Lane, Old Hill, who committed suicide by hanging himself at his home on Thursday morning. The evidence showed that for several years past deceased had suffered from severe pains in his stomach, and had been heard by his step-son (William Davies) to say that he wished he was dead. Recently he had not followed his usual occupation, and on Thursday morning a neighbour named Ellen Birks discovered deceased hanging from the bedsteads in his bedroom, a silk handkerchief being tied round his neck. Deceased was quickly cut down, but death had taken place. The jury returned a verdict of Suicide whilst of Unsound Mind.”

“Joseph Davis, of the PEACOCK INN, Cradley Heath, was charged by Superintendent Mills with refusing to admit the police on the night of the 30th ult. From the evidence of Police-constables Shenstone and Marriott, they heard a noise in the defendant’s house of some persons talking. Witnesses rapped at the door, and were refused admittance. They went away and returned in ten minutes, and the door was then open. Fined 10s and costs.”

“Joseph Davis, landlord of the PEACOCK INN, Cradley Heath, was charged by Superintendent Mills with refusing to admit the police on the night of the 1st inst.

Police-sergeant Powner said that he was at the defendant’s house after one o’clock at night. He heard voices, and rapped at the door. They refused to let him in. He afterwards saw seven persons get over the wall at the back of the house, and the door was then opened. When witness rapped at the door, he cried out, ‘Police.’ Defendant has been fined 10s and costs for a similar offence within the last six months.

Defendant, in answer to the charge, said that he opened the door in less than a minute after the officer rapped. Fined 40s and costs.”

County Advertiser 7/12/1867

“At the Police Court, Old Hill, on Wednesday, before Messrs. Moore and Barrs, a young man named John Siviter, a collier, residing at Reddal Hill, was charged with unlawfully assaulting Hannah Bridgwater, with intent to commit a rape. The complainant, who is about twenty years of age, stated that she lived with her stepfather, at the PEACOCK beerhouse, Cradley Heath. On the previous Saturday night, about twelve o’clock, she left her father’s house to go to Old Hill in search of her brother. She did not find him, and in about half an hour started home again. When near the Four Ways, the defendant jumped suddenly upon her, caught hold of her round the neck, and attempted to throw her down. After a short struggle, witness was thrown to the ground, and the defendant then attempted the serious offence with which he was charged. Prisoner several times told her that he would take her life if he failed to effect his purpose. Witness struggled to the best of her ability, and screamed ‘Murder.’ The struggle lasted about a quarter of an hour, when a watchman, named Clarke, came up and pulled prisoner away from witness. Some of the underclothes witness wore at the time were produced in Court, and their torn condition unmistakably showed that the struggle was of a very severe nature.

The Bench asked if Clarke was in attendance to give evidence.

Sergeant Powner replied that he (Clarke) had been threatened with violence if he gave evidence.

An officer was sent in search of Clarke, but as he was not forthcoming, the Bench ordered a summons to be issued to warrant his presence in Court.

The case was then adjourned till next week, prisoner being admitted to bail.”

County Advertiser 14/12/1867

“At the Police Court, on Wednesday, John Siviter, collier, of Reddal Hill surrendered to his bail on a charge of unlawfully assaulting a young woman named Hannah Bridgwater, on the morning of the 1st inst. Mr. Burbury was for the defence.

The circumstances of the case, which were of a very aggravated nature, were detailed in the columns of the Advertiser last week, and it is therefore unnecessary to recapitulate them here. The adjournment was made in order that a man named Clarke should be summoned to give evidence. On Wednesday Clarke deposed that he heard screams of ‘Murder’ at the time in question, and on running to the spot from whence they proceeded, he found the prosecutrix on the ground, and the prisoner beside her.

Police-constable Shenstone also gave evidence to the effect that when he apprehended prisoner he made a statement tantamount to an admission of his guilt.

Mr. Burbury cross-examined the prosecutrix and the other witnesses with considerable skill, but did not shake their testimony in any material point.

Witnesses were heard for the defence, whose evidence principally went to show that prosecutrix and prisoner had previously been on intimate terms. This, however, was stoutly denied by the prosecutrix.

John Siviter (20), miner, was sent to prison for three months, for criminally assaulting Hannah Bridgwater, on the 1st of December, at Cradley Heath.”

“On Wednesday night a representative meeting of colliers was held at the PEAR TREE INN, Old Hill. After several speeches, the following resolutions were unanimously carried: ‘That in the opinion of this meeting the masters have dealt unjustly with the miners of the district, in not giving them the advance asked for.’ (2) ‘That in the opinion of this meeting the colliers should pledge themselves in connection with other districts, to agitate until they have the advance.’ (3) ‘That the meeting pledges itself to carry out the above resolutions.’

On Thursday night there was a similar meeting at Great Bridge.”

“Worcestershire Easter Quarter Sessions.....

Albert Wheeler was charged with stealing 19s in money, on the 15th February, the property of Isaacher Allfot and others, and on the same day stealing £1 0s 2d, the money of Isaacher Allfot. Mr. Streeten prosecuted; Mr. Selfe defended.

In November, 1878, the men of the New British Iron Company, Old Hill, were out of work, and the members of the Miners' Union of the Old Hill district determined to raise a fund for assisting them by subscriptions. A meeting was held at the PEAR TREE public house, Old Hill, which is kept by Mr. John Pearson, who became treasurer of the fund. Persons were appointed to visit different collieries in the district and receive subscriptions. The prisoner, who was one of the men out of work, received a collecting book on the 6th February, and he visited several pits where he received the money he was now charged with stealing, he not having paid it over to the committee or anyone else.

Mr. Selfe, for the prisoner, contended that there was no case to go to the jury if they took it in the terms of the indictment.

The Chairman said that embezzlement could be substituted for larceny. A long legal argument ensued as to whether prisoner was a servant in the employ of the prosecutor, Mr. Selfe contending he was not, but a member of the committee exercising certain functions. On the other hand Mr. Streeten maintained that he was a servant of Mr. Pearson.

Prisoner was found guilty of embezzlement as a beneficial owner, and he was sentenced to six months' hard labour."

“.....Despite such intensive farming activity, Mr. Edward Harrold, born at Holt Farm, 74 years ago, still remembers hay making and other rural activities there. One of his earliest tasks was to fetch cider from his aunt Martha at the OLD PEAR TREE to quench the thirst of field labourers at harvest time. In his mother's time, Holt Farm possessed no running water and she had the daily task of carrying whatever was needed in the household from Mincing Lane Wells (opposite the PEAR TREE).....”

“A fatal accident occurred on the 2nd inst, to a youth named Thomas Robins, aged fifteen. It appears that deceased was a collier, and worked in the Rowley Hill Colliery. On the above date he was at work down the pit, when a fall of coal took place, and so injured him that he died in ten minutes after the occurrence. The poor fellow was got up out of the pit and taken home. An inquest was held on Monday last at the PEAR TREE INN, Mincing Lane, on the body, before W. H. Phillips, Esq, Coroner. Mr. Baker, the Mining Inspector, was present in consequence of having received an anonymous letter, as to the state the pit was in. He said that he had been down the pit in consequence of receiving that letter, and found that the contents of that letter were untrue. He considered the pit to be in proper working order. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

“An inquest was held on Wednesday, by Mr. E. Hooper, at the PEAR TREE INN, Mincing Lane, Rowley, touching the death of a pikeman, named Edward Robinson, aged 38. Deceased was employed at the Yew Tree Colliery, and on Monday night, a little before eight o’clock, he was engaged with another miner, named Perks in excavating a small ‘inset’, 75 yards below the surface of a water pit, a cage being hung from the top on a level with the place. In order that descent might be made into another shaft the cage was drawn up, and the deceased and his companion being busily engaged with their work apparently forgot this fact. They pushed a tub laden with earth to the cage as they thought, and the deceased, who was nearest, before he could recover himself, the tub over-balanced and fell, carrying him with it. Deceased fell a distance of more than two hundred yards into a deep ‘sump’ filled with water. It was some time after the accident before the body could be recovered. After hearing the evidence, the jury were satisfied that no blame attached to anyone but the deceased himself, and a verdict of Accidental Death was returned.”

“Considerable excitement and curiosity have been occasioned lately in the neighbourhood of White Heath, Black Heath, and Rowley, owing to the spreading of a report that claimants to the Shenstone estates have been discovered in the humbler walks of life in that locality. The story, which certainly has a touch of romance about it, is to the effect that recently, owing to certain information which was published concerning the Court of Chancery, some important documents have been discovered in the possession of a descendant of the renowned Shenstone family. A number of people, living at the present time at White Heath and Rowley, claim relationship to Phillis Shenstone, who resided many years ago at the PEAR TREE, in Mincing Lane. A notice in the Daily Post respecting the Court of Chancery, in which it is said the name of Shenstone appeared, was the cause of the enquiry being instituted. According to the family legend a Mr. Isaac Parkes, who died at Rowley about fourteen years ago, told some of his relatives immediately before his death that the Shenstone Walks were left to them, and that they would find the will and deeds of the property in a family Bible. Mr. Joseph Parkes, of Rowley, appears to have been in possession of this family Bible, which on being searched recently yielded up some rather curious documents, and which are now forming the subject of a strict investigation. Sewn up between the title page and the cover of this Bible were found what is supposed to be a copy of this will and two sheets of old parchment. The writing is almost obliterated, and although various means have been tried it cannot be deciphered. Mr. Joseph Hadley, nailer, of Rowley, and Mr. Samuel Dingley, labourer of White Heath, whose wife is interested in the matter, are making enquiries, and efforts are being put forth to obtain an interpretation of the mysterious writings. A Birmingham solicitor has been consulted, and the Rev. F. Keatch, vicar of Black Heath has also taken great interest in the case, and has been to London for the purpose of investigating it. Efforts are now being made to procure the certificates of the birth and marriage of Phillis Shenstone, and it is expected that these will prove valuable in tracing the lineage. The parties concerned are very sanguine that the strange documents just brought to light will turn out to be authentic.”

A girl named Sarah Cole stated that she went with deceased to Whiteheath. When coming back she seemed to be very ill, and stopped to rest twice, the last time on a doorstep. “Mr. H. A. Pearson (South Staffordshire Coroner) held an inquest at the PEAR TREE INN, Whiteheath, Rowley Regis, relative to the death of Thomas Carter (61), who had died from injuries received at the Rowley Hall Colliery.

The deceased had for some time past been employed as a banksman in the colliery, and on the 14th ult he assisted several other men to remove a boiler plate weighing about 5cwt. He subsequently complained that he had strained himself, and made a remark to the effect that he did not consider some of the boiler men free from blame. On the 17th ult he was attended by Dr. Freer, who found him bruised about the shoulders and suffering from spinal meningitis and paralysis. He died on the 23rd inst.

In reply to Mr. Atkinson, the Government Inspector of Coal Mines, Ricard Stokes, a boilermaker, stated that there was no doubt the deceased from the position in which he stood had to bear a large proportion of the weight, and if he had ‘let go’ it would no doubt have fallen on his feet. The men were not to blame for the accident.

The jury exonerated the men who assisted the deceased in removing the plate, and returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

“It is no use, if you happen to be pursuing a definition of grorty pudding, asking Winifred Southall if it looks like stew and hoping to get away with it. ‘Stew? Oooh, no! Sometimes it’s so thick you can cut it with a knife!’ My question, tendered in a spirit of innocent inquiry, yielded a harvest of consternation. For Winifred Southall, genial priestess of the grorty puddin’ revival, such a comparison was not to be contemplated.

At the PEAR TREE INN, Blackheath, near Birmingham, where her husband has been the licensee for the last 16 years, tonight is Grorty Puddin’ Night. From all over the Black Country, 100 citizens with a taste for tradition will be arriving to sample a dish of which very little has been heard for something like 40 years. Winifred Southall is in charge of the preparations, which she is carrying out on behalf of the Black Country Society.

Grorty puddin’ is a matter of minced beef, breast of lamb, onions, parsnips and leeks. And, of course, the groats which give it its name. With 100 grorty puddin’ fanciers poised to swoop, you enlist the services of the biggest cooking pot you can lay your hands on, feed it the mixture, bring it to the boil and keep it simmering as long and as slowly as you can. Then, having spent most of the day stirring it with a wooden spoon which is longer than your arm, you serve it virtually red hot. Winifred Southall’s grorty puddin’ will have been cooking for about 11 hours by the time tonight’s investigators are poised behind their sampling bowls. Grorty puddin’ goes deep into Black Country history, but changing times have made it one of life’s imponderables as far as anybody under 40 is concerned.

Winifred Southall’s early memories are of grorty puddin’ on Bonfire Night every year at home in Stourbridge, where she was one of a family of 13 children. ‘It’s nice,’ she says, ‘It’s different.’ Nobody, I imagine, is arguing.”

allowed the show to go ahead last September, said Jeremy Swift prosecuting. But the police and Sandwell Council found he did not have an entertainment licence. Mr. Swift said police saw the drag artist perform in front of 30 women. An officer invited to perform with him declined. Magistrates issued a warrant, backed by bail, for Mr. Burke's arrest. He will be sentenced on August 2.”

“A Christmas street fair is set to be a roaring success on Oldbury’s Lion Farm estate tomorrow (December 7). Santa will be in his grotto at the estate’s action centre and there will be a mini funfair on the shoppers’ car park. Carols will be sung at St James’ Church, there will be a fete at St James’ Primary School and refreshments, mince pies and a chocolate fountain will be at the library. The PHOENIX pub is joining in the festivities with hot food stalls on the car park, the Unicorn Nursery will be having dance lessons and craft stalls and many Lion Farm traders will be staying open for the event which runs from 5pm until 7pm. Bridge Radio is providing musical entertainment and celebrity fundraiser ‘Blind’ Dave Heeley has been invited to open the fair and countdown to the switching on of lights across the various venues. Cabinet member for neighbourhood services Councillor Ian Jones said, ‘It is wonderful to see people getting together to organise an event that is for the whole community. It should be a great build-up to Christmas.’

Organisers are hoping the evening will be the first of many.”

“A pub has risen from the ashes and is hoping to attract new customers after a major revamp which has involved the refurbishment of all the rooms and bar area, as well as the introduction of a new food menu. Landlady Lisa Snookes bought the PHOENIX pub in Martley Road, Oldbury in March, the day after it closed down, because she had been a regular at the pub and felt the business could be a success if it was refurbished. She said the pub had become rundown and so she decided to renovate it by providing a new bar and toilets, as well as moving the door, while recently the pub also started serving food, with a carvery menu on a Sunday. ‘It has been totally refurbished. The only thing I did not do was knock the building down. We took everything out of it and replaced it. Everything in it is brand new, including the toilets and a log burn fire, while there is also disabled access, which there was not before, including a ramp for wheelchair users,’ Miss Snookes said. She runs the pub, which reopened in July, on her own, though she has a cleaner and also receives help from her family, who live nearby in Oldbury and Rowley Regis. Miss Snookes has worked in pubs since she was 18, but said she relished the chance to run a pub of her own so decided to buy the PHOENIX when it became available.”

“Big-Hearted boxer Jason Welborn will be bringing a bit of Christmas cheer to deprived children in Rowley Regis this week. The former British middleweight champion will be donning his Santa outfit and dishing out presents around his local Lion Farm Estate. It’s Welborn’s way of saying thank-you for all the support he’s received over the past year, which has seen the 32-year-old both win and defend his British title while also boxing in America. Welborn will be joined by his wife Rachel and daughter Demi-Rose on his goodwill tour which takes place this Wednesday, starting at 4.30pm in Martley Road and finishing up at St James’ Church.

Welborn said, ‘We must have accumulated well over 100 presents, some big, some small, most of which are designed for children under the age of 10.’

The presents will be distributed from one of Welborn’s own skips as he has only recently set up a skip hire business in Dudley. Welborn has paid for the presents himself and said, ‘It’s my way of saying thank-you for all the support I’ve received from people on the Lion Farm Estate and from pubs like the PHOENIX and the FOUR WAYS. It’s just nice to give something back. I’m grateful, because boxing has kept me on the right path. It’s just two hours out of my day to give something back and everyone’s happy. It was just an idea at first, but I’m glad we’ve gone ahead and done it. I’m taking the rest of December off, but it’s back to training in the New Year and I’m hoping to have something lined up for March or April. I think I opened a few eyes boxing in Los Angeles, so we will have to wait and see what develops.”

“An Oldbury pub which was discovered breaking Covid rules by police who were investigating a fight in which a man suffered serious head injuries, has been told it can reopen. The PHOENIX in Martley Road had its licence suspended after a man suffered serious head injuries in an incident outside the pub on October 24. In their investigations police uncovered evidence that the pub was ignoring social distancing. Councillors have now imposed strict conditions so it can reopen its doors, including enforcing Covid rules.

A licensing officer for West Midlands Police said CCTV footage showed the bar had flouted restrictions on social distancing and the ban on people from different households meeting. Telling members of Sandwell’s licensing committee that there had been two fights on the same day, she said, ‘What became apparent was a complete disregard for any of the Covid measures that should have been in place.’ Saying during October the pub was under tier 2 measures she added, ‘What we gauged from the CCTV footage in this case was what you’d call normal times. We had people walking around the premises, we had people being served at the bar and we had groups mixing. Some of the statements we gathered during the criminal investigation confirmed it was groups of friends meeting in the pub.’ She said the images had been leaked to the public, adding, ‘We don’t know how it has happened, whether it was carelessness or if someone was able to access it but again in the middle of criminal investigation into a serious incident it raises real concerns from a policing perspective. In this case it could have proved catastrophic in us detaining an offender.’ In response to councillors’ questions, she said the PHOENIX didn’t have a history of serious complaints or incidents.

David Craig, on behalf of the license holder Mr. Amritpal Singh, accepted social distancing and licensing rules had ‘fallen short.’ Saying a risk assessment had been conducted to make the pub Covid safe he said his client had agreed to new conditions to allow it to reopen. Stressing the police were not asking for the suspension to continue or for the license to be revoked, he told councillors, ‘What you have here is an agreed position between the parties. So in these circumstances I would say that is something you can give a significant, and I would add, an overwhelming, amount of weight to.’ He assured councillors Covid restrictions would be followed and door staff would help ensure rules were followed. Lifting the license suspension, the committee said the PHOENIX can only reopen if and when coronavirus restrictions are lifted. Councillors ordered a doorman must be employed on Friday and Saturday nights. They also required the pub’s CCTV to be kept under lock and key and be password protected while staff had to undergo additional and ongoing training. Police have said that following the assault a Halesowen man has been arrested and charged with grievous bodily harm.”

“Plans for a barbers shop next to an Oldbury pub have been submitted to the council. The application is for a barbers shop with a flat above next to the PHOENIX INN on Martley Road. Plans show the flat would have three bedrooms, a bathroom and a lounge. The barbers would be built on a section of the car park at the pub and would front onto Wolverley Road. The proposal is from Mr. A. Pal, Mrs. J. Kaur, Mr. S. Singh. A spokesman for the pub said it has plenty of parking spaces to allow room for the barbers. The application will be considered by planners.”

“An inquest was held yesterday before W. W. Ward, Esq, (acting for Mr. Hinchliffe) at the PLOUGH AND HARROW INN, Cradley Heath, on the body of Charles Moore, aged nine years, who came to his death under the following circumstances. The deceased was bathing in the pool at the British Iron Works there, and having got upon a plank that was in the water and ventured some distance towards the middle of the pool, the plank gave way, and the deceased consequently fell into the water, and being unable to swim, was drowned, there being no person there at the time who could render him assistance. A man who was at work at the iron works hearing some children, who were some distance from the pool, say that a boy was drowned, immediately went into the pool, and found the deceased at the distance of about thirty-seven yards from the side, and where the water was about five feet six inches deep. The Jury, after a little consultation returned a verdict of Found Dead.

It was suggested by one of the Jurymen that the fact of planks being in the water in a pool like that, where bathing is constantly practiced by young boys, was a very dangerous temptation for such children, and a request was made by the Jurymen that Mr. Thompson, the manager of the iron works, should be spoken to upon the matter, in order that means should be taken to prevent similar occurrences.”

“Yesterday an inquest was held at the PLOUGH AND HARROW INN, Cradley Heath, before E. Hooper, Esq, district coroner, touching the death of a youth, named Thomas Etherton, who was drowned in a whimsey pool whilst bathing.

A youth named Richard Sykes stated that he saw the deceased in company with some other boys bathing. Witness also saw the deceased spring upon the back of a youth named Hodgetts. When deceased sprang upon Hodgetts's back they both went down, soon afterwards they came up again, and the deceased had hold of Hodgetts's neck. They both sank again and Hodgetts came up without the deceased. Witness raised an alarm and then some men from Beardmore Colliery came, but they would not get in. Witness begged of them to get in, but they said they could not swim. A young man named Berks came and got him out.

By a juror: Hodgetts did not ask deceased to get upon his back.

John Hodgetts stated that he was bathing in company with the deceased. Deceased sprang upon his (witness's) back and the force of the spring sent them both under the water. Deceased clutched witness by the neck and the weight of the deceased pulled him beneath the water a second time. When witness was got out he was unconscious; upon regaining his consciousness he sprang into the pool in search of the deceased. Witness could not then swim owing to the exhausted state he was in. Witness begged of the colliers on the pit bank to get the deceased out, but they only said it was too late, and that the deceased would get hold of them with a dead grasp.

The mother of the deceased stated that Hodgetts loved her lad, and she did not think any fault was attached to him.

Richard Berks stated that when he got the deceased out, he was quite dead.

In summing up the evidence the coroner said that the men who worked on Beardmore Colliery bank were a disgrace to the Company by whom they were employed and that the conduct that they displayed was most inhuman. The Jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

We may also state that a subscription to the amount of 7s and 6d was raised in the room for the boy Hodgetts, and a smaller one for the man Berks.”

County Advertiser 28/10/1865

“On Wednesday afternoon last, an inquest was held at Mr. Hickton’s, the PLOUGH AND HARROW INN, Cradley Heath, before Mr. E. Hooper, Coroner, on the body of Joseph Gregory, aged four years and five months, the son of a furnaceman at Corngreaves Works. On the previous Friday morning, about seven o’clock, the deceased was down stairs in his night clothes, with a sister, a year or two older than himself. The mother and father, who were upstairs, heard loud screams, and on rushing down found the deceased in flames. The flames were extinguished as speedily as possible, and deceased taken up to bed, and Mr. Hodgson, surgeon, sent for. The poor child lingered in great agony till three o’clock next morning, when death put an end to his sufferings. The deceased was playing with the fire, when his clothes became ignited. He was badly burnt about the face and chest. The Coroner severely censured the father of the deceased, who had six other small children, for not having a guard to the fireplace. The Coroner also ordered him to procure one before that day week, and Police-constable Fox was ordered to visit the house and see that there was one. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

Staffordshire Advertiser 7/1/1860

William Croft, 39, chainmaker, was charged with stealing a horse rug, the property of John Payne, at Cradley Heath. Mr. Neale conducted the prosecution; Mr. Motteram defended the prisoner.

William Hickton, on being examined, said he kept a public house at Cradley Heath, with the sign of the PLOUGH AND HARROW. About midnight on the 6th of December his father-in-law came to visit him with a pony and trap, in order to bring some leeches for witness’s wife, who had been taken ill that day. There was a horse rug, worth ten shillings, upon the pony at the time his father left it to come into the house, but when witness went out the rug was gone. He saw the prisoner about twenty yards off, and immediately ran into the house, and told his father of the occurrence.

John Payne, a butcher living at Old Hill, near Cradley Heath, corroborated the principal facts of the preceding evidence, and said that on being told of the theft by his son-in-law, he ran after the prisoner, and came up with him at about forty yards from the house. The prisoner, as soon as he saw him, rolled himself in the rug, and threw himself on a heap of stones. Witness said, as soon as he saw the rug, ‘That’s mine.’ Prisoner said, ‘Well, if it’s yours, take it.’ He said that the boys passing by the house from the furnaces had thrown it at him. As soon as witness had taken the rug from him, he took him down to his son-in-law’s house and had him taken into custody.

Cross-examined: Neither man, woman, nor child had passed the house while witness was inside.

Mr. Motteram: And yet the prisoner must have passed.

Thomas Parsons, a member of the local police, deposed to the apprehension of the prisoner. At the station he repeated the assertion he had previously made to the elder witness, except that he said the men from the furnace threw the rug at him. Witness was not paid a regular salary, but was paid according to the number of cases he attended.

Mr. Motteram, in his address for the defence, drew attention to the trivial nature of the difference in evidence which had been insisted on by the counsel for the prosecution, and attributed to the fact that the constable was paid by the case, the cause of this affair being brought forward at the sessions. He also endeavoured to prove that it was because the witness Hickton had not previously seen a trial at Stafford that he was gratified by being brought up as a witness in this case.

The jury found the prisoner guilty, and he was sentenced to three months’ imprisonment.”

William Hickton died on 8th March 1879 at Hawn Bank Farm, Halesowen.

“On Tuesday Mr. E. Hooper, district coroner, held an inquest at the PLOUGH AND HARROW, Corngreaves Street, on the body of Eli Rider (17), underhand puddler. The deceased’s body was discovered, after a day’s search, in a pool in Pig Lane, belonging to the New British Iron Company. On Sunday last the deceased got into the pool in company with a young man named William Westwood, to bathe. When in a deep part he sank, it is supposed, from the effects of a sudden seizure of cramp. Although there were several others bathing in the pool at the time, they were unable to reach him before he succumbed, and sank for the last time. It was stated at the inquest that the night previous to his death Rider had some words with his father, and he afterwards told the young man Westwood that he ‘would do something before the next day was over.’ The jury returned an Open Verdict.”

Dudley and District News 14/8/1880

“Mr Topham (deputy district coroner) on Wednesday afternoon held an inquiry at the PLOUGH AND HARROW INN, Corngreaves Road, Cradley Heath, touching the death of William Richards (60), sinker, Surfitt Hill, Cradley Heath, who was injured at the Cotsall Colliery, belonging to the New British Iron Company on the 7th inst, and died two days later. Mr. W. B. Keen, the colliery manager, attended.

It appeared from the evidence of John Dimmack, another sinker, that on Saturday morning he and deceased were working in the engine pit at the colliery named. They were going to repair the buoy wire, and for that purpose were erecting a scaffold in the shaft at the point where the wire had broken, which was a distance of 66 yards from the top of the shaft. Dimmack placed a two-inch plank, that was in the shaft ready for the purpose, across the scaffold for deceased to stand upon. Immediately deceased stepped upon the plank it snapped asunder, and he was precipitated on to another scaffold, a distance of thirty seven feet below. Dimmack went up the shaft and procured a light, and afterwards returned down the shaft and fetched up the deceased, who remained unconscious until Monday, when he died. The witness had since examined the plank, and he said it appeared to be rotten. It was now produced and examined by the jury, some of whom remarked that it did not appear to be rotten. It was, however, stated that it was the duty of the deceased, as foreman sinker, to have seen to the state of the planks used for scaffolding; and the manager said there was plenty of timber on the premises. As no blame was attached to anyone, the jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

“John Hickton, PLOUGH AND HARROW INN, Cradley Heath, was charged with permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises on the 16th inst. Mr. Cooksey defended.

Police-sergeant Shaw said that at half-past eight on the night of the 16th inst he went with Police-constable Tytherleigh to defendant’s premises, in the bar room of which he saw a drunken man named William Knight, who was sitting at a table with a pint cup containing ale before him. He was resting with his arms on the table, but noticing the policemen he raised himself up, and using a bad word, invited them to drink. Shaw and Tytherleigh then left the house, Knight calling after them. They returned some time afterwards, and found that Knight had removed to another table in the same room, with a pint cup nearly full of ale still before him. Shaw then called the landlord's attention to the man's condition, and told the landlord he ought not to have allowed him to have anything to drink. Defendant said he had not filled Knight any ale for some time, and on Tytherleigh pointing out that the pint cup had been filled since their former visit, another man said the ale in the pint cup belonged to him. This man, however, had some more ale before him. The landlord asked Knight to leave, but he refused, though he allowed some men to lead him out immediately afterwards. He stumbled when he reached the door, and outside the house made use of bad language.

Police-constable Tytherleigh corroborated.

Mr. Cooksey called witnesses to prove that Knight was not drunk, and that the ale in the pint cups did not belong to him, but to a man named Holloway, who was in the room.

Mr. Bassano said the case was not so bad in itself, but it was a terrible thing that people could be found ready to commit perjury in order to bolster up a defence.

They fined the defendant 20s and costs."

"This being the Old Hill adjourned licensing sessions the Bench granted a renewal of the licenses which were suspended at the last annual general sessions. The Chairman stated that the magistrates had very carefully considered each case, and they had decided to renew the licenses on the understanding that some assurance was given on the part of each defaulter, that their respective houses should be better conducted in the future. The Bench were determined that the law should be enforced, and if the defendants were guilty of any further offence against the Licensing Laws they would be severely punished and their licenses forfeited. The Chairman added that Henry Heath, who was convicted for selling ale during prohibited hours on Sunday, was now taking out a six days' license instead of a seven days', and his license was renewed on that condition; and if any of the others wished to have six days' licenses the Bench would be pleased to grant them."

Birmingham Daily Post 30/12/1887

"Yesterday evening an inquest was held at the PLOUGH AND HARROW INN, Cradley Heath, before E. F. W. Topham, deputy coroner, respecting the death of Dorah Willetts (46), wife of Thomas Willetts, who died suddenly on the 27th instant. Evidence was given to the effect that about six o'clock on the morning in question deceased complained to her husband of a violent pain in her head. About nine o'clock the same morning she was found dead. The jury returned a verdict of Death from Natural Causes."

"A striking instance of the fidelity of a dog has been afforded this week in connection with a sad railway fatality at Cradley Heath. The body of a young man named Patrick White (18), a farmer, residing at Codsall, near Wolverhampton, was found on Sunday, on the Great Western Railway, midway between Old Hill and Cradley Heath. On Saturday night the deceased visited Old Hill, and after transacting business, he called at a public house. He left late at night, accompanied by a terrier dog. On Sunday morning some men were attracted to the railway by the barking of a dog, and upon getting up a steep embankment, they were horrified to find White's mangled body. The face was reduced to a pulp, and some of the limbs were severed from the body. It is supposed that the deceased was knocked down by a train early on Sunday morning. It is stated that the dog followed the remains from where they were found to his late home, and has several times since been to the scene to the accident.

An inquest was held on Monday, at the PLOUGH AND HARROW INN, Corngreaves Road, Cradley Heath, by Mr. Topham (deputy coroner) relative to the fatality. Evidence was given that deceased visited Old Hill on Saturday night and called at the BLUE BALL INN, when he intimated his intention of walking home along the railway. Nothing further was heard of him until his body was found in the four-foot. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

“James Powell, army reserve man, of Cradley Heath, was charged with being disorderly in the PLOUGH AND HARROW, Cradley Heath, and refusing to leave when requested, on the 9th inst. The landlord said the defendant was in his house on the day named, and challenged a man to fight. Witness asked him to leave but he refused, and asked witness to fill him some beer. Witness refused, and defendant then set on him. The latter behaved like a madman, and tore witness’s shirt and other articles of apparel. A witness named Slater corroborated, and in reply to the Bench said the landlord used no undue violence. Inspector Bishop said defendant was an army reserve man, and there was no holding them in Cradley Heath; they took a lot of looking after. (Laughter.) Defendant was fined 10s and costs.”

“The annual licensing sessions for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held on Wednesday.....

Thomas Hackerson, of the NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill; George Payne, of the PLOUGH AND HARROW INN, Cradley Heath; and William Titus Smith, of the RAILWAY TAVERN, Cradley Heath; on the ground that the premises are structurally deficient and unsuitable.....

In the case of the PLOUGH AND HARROW INN, Corngreaves Road, Cradley Heath, Superintendent Johnson said that a back door opened out of the premises into a passage, and the inhabitants of about thirty houses in the locality could get to the public house without going to the front of the premises. The police had no supervision over the premises.

The Chairman thought the premises should be enclosed.

Mr. Thompson, who appeared for the owners, the North Worcestershire Brewery Company, said his clients were asked to give up considerable rights by closing the doors, and he asked for time to consider the matter.

The objection was deferred to the adjourned sessions.”

“The adjourned licensing sessions for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held on Wednesday, at the Police Court.....

Mr. Thompson referred to three objections made by the police at the annual licensing day for certain alterations which were deferred. The houses in question were the NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill, the RAILWAY TAVERN, Cradley Heath, and the PLOUGH AND HARROW, Cradley Heath. Superintendent Johnson raised certain points, and he asked them to be deferred because they were of considerable importance to his clients. Since then he had consulted with his clients. With regard to the NEPTUNE INN, the police objected to a door which led out of the licensed premises on to the canal side. His clients would give an understanding that this door would be closed altogether excepting to allow horses to be taken to the stables. Otherwise it would be necessary to take the horses a considerable distance round. With regard to the RAILWAY TAVERN they had consented to close the back entrance to these premises and also to close a doorway leading from the back premises of the PLOUGH AND HARROW INN to public passages, after sunset each evening. This was a matter of considerable importance to them inasmuch as the passages were public ones, but his clients had decided to close the doorway at night and he believed this would meet with the wishes of the police.

Superintendent Johnson said he should be willing to withdraw his objections to the renewal of the licenses providing the conditions named by Mr. Thompson were given in writing and carried out by the owners. Mr. Thompson agreed to these conditions, and the renewal of the licenses was granted.”

“Birmingham Football Association.

A social commission of the above association met at the PLOUGH AND HARROW HOTEL, Cradley Heath, on Monday last, to consider the reported disorder after the football match at Cradley Heath, on April 30th. The commission consisted of four members – Messrs. C. Crump, W. McGregor, J. Adams, and J. Campbell Orr. Evidence was given by the referee (Mr. C. R. Hall), Mr. Hinman (Langley St. Michael’s), the officials of Cradley Heath Club, and Mr. J. T. Wright. After considering the evidence in private the commission came to the conclusion that there had been some disturbance on the part of the spectators, but that it took place after the conclusion of the match, and was not of a serious nature. The club was ordered to put up notices to caution spectators against disorderly conduct, and extra precautions were to be taken in future to prevent any unseemly behaviour, and to guard the referee at the conclusion of the matches.”

“We much regret to record the death, which took place on Tuesday midnight, of Mr. George Payne, landlord of the PLOUGH AND HARROW, Corngreaves Road. The news of his death came as a great surprise to his many friends, and it was totally unexpected. On Monday morning he was apparently in his usual health, when he seems to have contracted a severe chill, and he became so ill towards evening that a doctor was summoned. On Tuesday morning he rallied somewhat, but at midnight death occurred suddenly. The late Mr. Payne, who was only 48 years of age, had been married 13 years. He was a prominent member of the Cradley Heath Friendly Society Parade Committee, and was actively engaged in friendly society work, being a Forester and past chief ranger of the Lily of the Valley Lodge, Court 4431. He was widely known, and his kindly nature and courtesy made him many friends. He was a staunch Conservative but took no active part in politics.”

“At the Old Hill Court on Wednesday, application was made for the transfer of the license of the PLOUGH AND HARROW, Corngreaves Road, Cradley Heath, from Mrs. Wild to her husband, John Frederick Wild. Superintendent Johnson pointed out that the notice was served a day late. The character of the applicant is perfectly satisfactory. It is the notice that is wrong. It should be served seven clear days exclusive of service and application. The Chairman: The condition of notice must be strictly observed, because the police ought to have full opportunity for inquiry. When one admits slackness there is no limit to it. We must have the notice strictly observed. The application is granted.”

“Down Your Local. PLOUGH AND HARROW, Cradley Heath.

The PLOUGH AND HARROW is everything a good Black Country pub should be – friendly, cosy, and well stocked with good beer. Tucked away in Corngreaves Road, Cradley Heath, it is run by tenant landlord Ron Lloyd and his wife Andrea for the Wolverhampton & Dudley Breweries. The building is at least 100 years old, and some of the elderly customers can remember being told it used to be sandwiched between a butcher’s shop and barber’s. There was an old air raid shelter at the back and at one time spending a penny meant a long trek. The Banks’s pub sells traditional ales plus Harp lager, serves cold snacks during lunchtime and is open all day Friday.

Ron and Andrea, whose two grown-up daughters Mandy and Sue help out occasionally because they are both ‘brilliant barmaids,’ have been mine hosts for nine years. Prior to that they kept the BLACK HORSE, Tipton for 12 years and before that Ron worked in a factory.

The pub has a main bar, small snug, children’s room and pool room and has been extended in the past.

When the Lloyd’s arrived it was run down and needed a lot of work to get it back into shape. Now it is probably one of the most popular drinking places in the area. There are brasses on the bar walls and the pub is centrally heated, making it warm and cosy. Most of all, its regulars are the salt of the earth. Ron said, ‘If a stranger comes in he’ll be made to feel welcome very quickly. I’ve got some of the most wonderful customers in the country.’ These include Ronnie ‘The Dustbin Mon’ Yardley, a dustman for 29 years and a regular for just as long. He loves the Villa and hates anyone to praise the Albion – so be warned! Then there are two retired train drivers, Geoff who worked on the Severn Valley and Bob on the GWR line.

Barry Loughran did a sponsored 60ft underwater dive in Netherton Reservoir and a parachute jump for charity, and regular Albert Head knows all about pubs – he once showed Ron a list of 54 Cradley Heath inns that had closed since he was a boy.

Nine customers own two greyhounds between them that race at Wolverhampton in a syndicate run by Jeff Willetts, and a couple of regulars own race horses. There are several darts and domino teams, one of which, the Monday domino team, has just won the Old Hill Central Domino League Winners Cup, as well as two fishing clubs. And regulars frequently support charity events, much of the organising done by customer Margaret Walker.

Darts champion Jockie Wilson has been in for a drink, and you'll always find a cross-section of customers – Ron is well known for keeping a good cellar. He said, 'You'd go a long way to find a nicer pub than this.'"

"On Saturday last an inquest was held at the PORTWAY INN, Rowley Regis before G. H. Hinchcliffe, Esq, coroner, on the body of Thomas Johnson, aged 14. Deceased was employed at the Birch Coppice Colliery, belonging to Mr. T. Darbey. On the 12th he was engaged in the pit drawing coals, when a fall took place, and he was immediately buried under more than a ton of coal. When extricated he was so seriously crushed that he died in about two hours."

"On Monday last, an inquest was held before G. H. Hinchcliffe, Esq, at Mr. Leverett's [sic], PORTWAY TAVERN, on the body of William Price, aged sixty. From the evidence it appeared that deceased, who had been many years in the service of Mr. L. Lewis, nailmaster, Rowley, had on the preceding Saturday got the horse and dog cart ready for his master; Mr. Lewis was already seated in the vehicle when Price said, 'I have forgot the ear-caps.' Fetching these he was so imprudent as to take off the bridle and winkers, and the horse at once took fright, knocked down deceased, and another man who stood by, and so trampled upon him that blood issued from his mouth and nose, and he died in a quarter of an hour afterwards. The animal went off some distance with the trap and Mr. Lewis in it, but catching against a post this gentleman was thrown out against a wall, and fortunately escaped with trifling injury. The horse, generally a quiet animal, was then secured without further mischief or damage. Verdict, Accidental Death.”

“James A. Levett, licensed victualler, at Blackheath, was charged by Superintendent Mills with having his house open for the sale of beer before the hour of half past twelve. He was further charged with refusing to admit the police. Mr. Shakespeare defended.

Police-constable Slinn proved that he was near the defendant's house at half past twelve o'clock, on the 29th ult. He saw a man go to the defendant's house and come out with a can of ale. Did not taste it, but there was froth on the top. Saw a man named Hill come up and take a can of ale. Went to the door of defendant and tried it. The door was fast. He rapped, but no one came. Cross-examined: Did not see any light in the house. Was about 20 yards away when the man went to the door for the ale. It was dark.

Police-constable Isom gave corroborative evidence, but on being cross-examined said it was moonlight at the time.

Mr. Shakespeare addressed the Bench for the defence, and said that the defendant had kept the house between thirty and forty years, and had never had a charge brought against him before. He was most anxious to keep his proper time, and said the police had done their duty in bringing the matter before the Bench, and the real facts of the case were that a number of men had been at the defendant's house, and just before 12 he told them the time was up, and they must leave. A man named Hill then called for a gallon of ale, and took it to his house to drink, accompanied by a number of men. Some dispute afterwards arose, and two men were going to fight, when the police came up. At the time Hill ran out of the house with the can half full of ale, to the defendant's door; but at that time defendant was in bed. Hill's object in going to the defendant's was that he thought by that means to induce the men to leave his house; and that was the real explanation.

The Bench took this view of the case, and the charge was withdrawn."

Complainant said that defendant wanted to fight. He would not let him, and defendant struck him on the mouth, and knocked one of his teeth out.

Defendant pleaded guilty, and said he was very sorry.

Defendant was further charged with refusing to leave the house when requested.

Parish-constable Payne proved the offence.

Fined 2s 6d and costs for the first offence; for the second, to pay costs."

"Samuel Kite was charged with wilfully and maliciously breaking two panes of glass, the property of Sarah Levett, on the 20th ult. Mrs. Levett said defendant came to her house, the PORTWAY TAVERN, Blackheath, on the day in question, and wanted to come in. He was very violent, and because she would not allow him to enter the house he broke two panes of glass in her window.

Their value was 2s.

Defendant was further charged with being drunk in the public highway on the same date. Mrs. Levett proved the case.

The Bench fined defendant 2s 6d and costs for being drunk; and for the wilful damage ordered him to pay the value of the glass, and a fine of 20s and costs, in default twenty-one days' imprisonment."

"Thomas Summerfield, Rowley Village, was summoned for being drunk and disorderly on the licensed premises of James Levett, PORTWAY TAVERN, Perry's Lake. Prosecutor said the defendant went to his house on Sunday night, there were about 30 or 50 persons in the house, one of the men having paid for 20 quarts of ale, the defendant left but returned and commenced a disturbance, and knocked a woman down.

Superintendent Woollaston asked for the case to be adjourned, he visited the house on Sunday night in company with Sergeant Cooper and two PCs. There were about 70 persons in the house, and the landlord never interfered. A more disgraceful scene never took place. He was of opinion that the summons was only taken out for a sham. There would be further evidence adduced. The case was adjourned."

"James Levett, PORTWAY TAVERN, Rowley, was charged with permitting drunkenness.

Mr. Cooksey appeared to prosecute and Mr. Shakespeare defended.

PC Birch said at seven o'clock on the night of the 20th ult, he was sent to defendant's house in plain clothes, and remained there until 9.30. There was a large number of men and several women in the house, some of whom were drunk. There was a great disturbance, and the language used by the waiter and company was of the most disgraceful nature. Superintendent Woollaston said on Sunday night the 20th ult, he sent the last witness into defendant's house, he remained outside with PS Cooper and PC Styles. About 8.30 he saw several persons stagger out of the house, but they re-entered it almost immediately. About nine o'clock he entered the house; the passage and tap room were completely crammed with persons. There was an old woman quarrelling with a man named Summerfield, who knocked her down and fell on to the top of her. There was great confusion. There were several men under the influence of drink. There were about 70 persons in the house, every room being crowded. A more disorderly house he never saw. He spoke to defendant about it, who said he was very sorry.

Cross-examined: Defendant had not been summoned before.

PS Cooper corroborated.

Mr. Shakespeare said the case arose under unfortunate circumstances. Defendant was away from the house some portion of the time, and left someone else in charge. A friend of defendant's, from Birmingham, came to the house and left 10s to pay for some beer for the men who caused the disturbance complained of.

Mr. Bassano said the Bench considered it a bad case, and inflicted a fine of £5 and costs, and endorsed the license.

Mr. Shakespeare appealed to the Bench not to endorse the license, as this was defendant's first offence.

Mr. Bassano said they could not alter their decision, as they considered it a very bad case."

Sarah Perry was the daughter of James Adshead Levett Jnr.

She married George Perry in the 4th quarter of 1882.

Dudley and District News 2/9/1882

"Old Hill annual Brewster Sessions were held at the Police Court on Wednesday.....

The following is the black list, and in each of the cases the licenses were suspended till the adjourned licensing meeting.....

James Adshead Levitt, PORTWAY TAVERN, Perry's Lake, Rowley Regis, permitting drunkenness, fined £5 and costs."

Dudley and District News 30/9/1882

"This being the Old Hill adjourned licensing sessions the Bench granted a renewal of the licenses which were suspended at the last annual general sessions. The Chairman stated that the magistrates had very carefully considered each case, and they had decided to renew the licenses on the understanding that some assurance was given on the part of each defaulter, that their respective houses should be better conducted in the future. The Bench were determined that the law should be enforced, and if the defendants were guilty of any further offence against the Licensing Laws they would be severely punished and their licenses forfeited. The Chairman added that Henry Heath, who was convicted for selling ale during prohibited hours on Sunday, was now taking out a six days' license instead of a seven days', and his license was renewed on that condition; and if any of the others wished to have six days' licenses the Bench would be pleased to grant them."

County Express 9/6/1883

"Mr. James Levett, the landlord of the PORTWAY TAVERN, near Halesowen, met with a shocking accident yesterday whilst brewing. When in the act of mashing he slipped off the raised platform and fell into the boiling wort, and was badly scalded about his arms and body. His face was not injured, but when extricated his arms presented a shocking appearance."

County Express 13/9/1884

"An informal meeting of some of the local members of the South Staffordshire Institute of Iron and Steel Works Managers' Association was held at Rowley Regis, on Saturday week, with the object of going over some of the basalt quarries in the neighbourhood.....

The party afterwards adjourned to the PORTWAY TAVERN, at Perry's Lake, where a substantial tea had been provided, to which full justice was done, and every attention rendered by the obliging landlord....."

"At Old Hill Police Court yesterday, James Southwick, landlord of the YEW TREE INN, Blackheath; Isaac Mullett, landlord of the HAWTHORN INN; Joseph Tromans, landlord of the BOAT INN, Gosty Hill; James Lovatt of the PORTWAY TAVERN, Perris Lake, Rowley; Henry Cooper of the THREE FURNACES, Old Hill; and Joseph Tibbetts, Spring Fields, Rowley, were summoned by the Excise officials for adding sugar to beer after the duty had been taken, between the dates of April 18 and 27.

Mr. Davis stated that the defendants added a quantity of sugar to the beer after the Excise officers had been round and taken the duty. Books were supplied by the Inland Revenue, in which the quantity of sugar and other ingredients used was entered. Upon visiting the defendants' premises it was found that sugar had been added which was capable of raising the standard of ale from what was termed twopenny up to sixpenny.

Mr. Shakespeare, who defended, pleaded guilty to the charges, but pointed out that the defendants were ignorant of the law, and were not aware they were doing wrong. Their object in adding the sugar was to give the beer a 'head,' make it clear and palatable. There was no intention of defrauding the Inland Revenue Office.

Mr. Davis stated that in one case the gravity of the ale was increased from 66 to 77 degrees.

Mr. Shakespeare asked that a nominal penalty be inflicted.

Defendants were fined £20 each, including costs, the aggregated amount of the penalties being £120."

"Yesterday, at the Old Hill Police Court, James Adshead Levett, landlord of the PORTWAY TAVERN, Rowley, and Joseph Pensotti, of Kates Hill, were charged with concealing six gallons of wort and beer and eight bushels of malt in March and May last, with intent to defraud the Inland Revenue Department. Evidence was given showing that two five-gallon buckets containing wort were found in a fowlhouse, which, it was contended for the defence, had been placed there to cool; also, that the malt was not properly entered in the book. Defendants denied the charges. Levett was fined in the first case £40, and in the second £5 and costs. Pensotti was fined £5 and costs."

"Mr. E. Hooper (coroner) held an inquest on Friday night, last week, at the PORTWAY TAVERN, Portway Road, Rowley Village, relative to the death of William Whitfield, aged three years, Gadd's Green, Rowley, who died the previous Wednesday from the effects of burns, received on the previous day. Frances Whitfield, the mother, went to draw some water from a well, when she left the deceased, together with some other children, playing in the yard. Witness pulled the door to. She heard her sister shout, and upon going to see what was the matter, found that her child had been badly burnt about the face, head, and arms. Dr. Beasley's assistant was sent for, and dressed the burns. The child died on Wednesday night. There was a guard round the kitchen fire, but witness had displaced it for the purpose of heating some irons. The Coroner said the mother had not exercised proper caution in not leaving the guard in its place before she left the house. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death."

“On Tuesday, Mr. H. A. Pearson (coroner) held an inquest at the PORTWAY TAVERN, Perry’s Lake, Rowley, touching the death of Beatrice Alice Williams, aged seven months, daughter of Henry Williams, miner, of Perry’s Lake, who was found dead in bed on Sunday morning. The evidence of the mother and father showed that on Saturday night, at eleven o’clock, deceased was taken to bed. At 4-45 the next morning the mother saw the child alive, but at 8-20am she was found lying dead in bed. Police-constable Reynolds said he had made inquiries, and he found no suspicious circumstances connected with the case. A verdict of Death from Natural Causes was returned.”

“Mr. H. A. Pearson (coroner) held an inquest on Thursday, at the PORTWAY TAVERN, Rowley Regis, concerning the death of George Whitfield, aged two years and seven months, whose parents reside at Gad’s Green, Rowley, and who was drowned in a cistern on Tuesday last.

The mother of deceased stated that for some time past he had not been in very good health, and had had to be attended by Dr. Beasley. On Tuesday morning, at 11-20, she last saw deceased alive, when he went to play with some other children in a field. About one o’clock she missed him, a search was made, and the result was that his body was found in the cistern at the rear of the premises. In reply to the foreman of the jury, witness said she was washing close to the cistern, which was not covered up, and she did not hear a splash or cry.

Mary Ann Vine, a neighbour, stated that she was assisting in the search for the body, and pulled it up from the cistern.

Dr. F. J. Beasley stated that he had made a post mortem examination of the body and death was due to drowning.

The Coroner said it was a very sad case.

The foreman of the jury remarked that there seemed to be some neglect on the part of the mother in not covering up the cistern. It was a very dangerous place, and as it was not required it should be closed.

Another juryman said it was a regular death trap, not only to children, but to grown-up persons, who might easily walk into it.

Several of the other gentlemen regarded the cistern as very dangerous, and the Coroner promised to write to the owner upon the matter.

The jury eventually returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

County Advertiser 14/7/1900

“David Webster, a private in the S. Staffs. Regiment, living at Shepherds Fold, Blackheath, was charged with being drunk on licensed premises at Rowley on the 10th inst.

Police-constable Reynolds stated that on the 10th inst he found defendant drunk in the tap room of the PORTWAY TAVERN, Rowley Regis. Defendant ought to have returned to his regiment on the 9th inst, but he would not be an absentee until midnight on the 11th inst.

Defendant said he hoped they would deal lightly with him, or else if he was not back to his regiment that night he would be in further trouble.

Defendant was fined 12s including costs.”

“Inquests before Mr. Hinchcliffe.....

On Friday, at the PRINCE OF WALES INN, Rowley Regis, on the body of Joseph Smith, a doggy in the employ of the British Iron Company. In the pit in which the deceased worked there are two gate-roads, the one running parallel above the other. On the evening of the previous Wednesday the deceased descended his pit for the propose of working all night, but at ten o'clock desired to re-ascend the pit; and as there was a sinker's scaffolding over the shaft upon a level with the upper gate-road, he got into the upper gate-road through a hole in the roof of the lower one. Immediately, however, upon getting upon the upper gate-road the flooring of it gave way, and he was precipitated into the lower one, and killed. The inquest was adjourned to ascertain the reasons of the sinkers in refusing to remove their scaffolding referred to.”

Wolverhampton Chronicle 17/12/1856

“On Wednesday last an inquest was held at Mr. J. Wright's PRINCE OF WALES INN, before G. H. Hinchcliffe, Esq, on the body of Thomas Shipley, a miner, twenty-nine years of age. The evidence showed that on the 25th of November, whilst deceased was at work at Mr. Badger's coal pit, where some coal was cut, and ready to be taken down, he laid hold of a pike, and proceeded to remove a tree from under them, when several hundred weight of coal fell upon and so seriously injured him, breaking his leg and bruising his body, that after lingering some days he died on Tuesday. It was shown that the stall where poor Shipley worked was six yards wide, and no fear was had as to the coals falling. Verdict, Accidental Death.”

Brierley Hill Advertiser 16/5/1857

“An inquest was held yesterday (Friday), before G. H. Hinchcliffe, Esq, at the PRINCE OF WALES INN, Cherry Orchard, near Rowley, on the body of William Foley, who died on the previous Wednesday from injuries received on the 26th ult, by an explosion of fire damp in a pit belonging to J. E. Swindell, Esq, at Cradley Heath. Deceased is a middle aged man, and has left a wife and four children in lament of their loss.”

“On Friday evening last, an inquest was held at the PRINCE OF WALES INN, near Old Hill, on the bodies of Edward Richards, aged twelve, and Samuel Richards, aged fourteen. The two deceased worked at the British Iron Company's stone pit, Black Wagon Colliery, and on the previous day they were both in a stall, about two yards wide, when a quantity of dirt suddenly fell from the roof, and buried Samuel Richards beneath, and a clod fell upon Edward Richards's foot, and held him fast. The men went to his assistance immediately, but in trying to remove the clod one of the trees or supports suddenly moved, and the men, for their own safety, were obliged to get out of the way, when another fall of dirt took place, and buried Edward Richards. Three-quarters of an hour elapsed before the dirt could be removed, and then both the deceased were found to be dead. The Jury, after hearing the evidence, returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

“On Tuesday last, a fatal accident took place at the Hawn Colliery, belonging to the New British Iron Company, which resulted in the death of Enoch Beckett, aged sixty-four, residing at Cherry Orchard, Old Hill. It appears that on the previous day a new rope had been affixed to the engine, and deceased was engaged in claying the rope about 4-30pm, when by some means one of the horns of the drum barrel caught his head, puncturing his skull, and he died from the effects of the injuries he received about a quarter of an hour afterwards. The body was removed to his place of abode, to await a coroner’s inquest. The unfortunate deceased has been seriously injured at least eight or nine times, and had only just recovered from the effects of a broken arm when he met with his death.”

“Joseph Williams, alias Dommer, Netherton, was charged with being drunk on the licensed premises of George Wakeman, PRINCE OF WALES INN, Old Hill, on the 8th inst. Police-constable Hinsley said he saw the defendant drunk at the house, with some beer in front of him. Defendant was fined 2s 6d and costs.”

“George Wakeman, landlord of the PRINCE OF WALES INN, Old Hill, was charged with permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises, and the 8th ult. Mr. W. Waldron defended.

Inspector Walters stated that at 9.30 on the evening in question he was in Wrights Lane, Old Hill, near to the defendant’s house and saw two men leave the house, and one was helplessly drunk and was lead by the other. On going inside he found a man named Joseph Williams, who had been convicted, drunk and staggering about the room and saying he was ‘Jack the Ripper.’

There was a jug of ale on the table in front of Williams.

Police-constable Insley stated that at 10.30 he visited the defendant’s house and saw Williams there with a jug of ale before him, and when he walked he staggered about. He called the landlady’s attention to him and she said he had not been there that long, and was not drunk only ‘half and half.’ Williams said he was drinking with a man named Homer.

Police-constable Barnes corroborated.

Matilda Wakeman, Joseph Potter, Henry Homer, and a man named Cotterill were sworn, and stated that Williams was not drunk. The Bench considered the case proved, and defendant was fined 40s and 16s 6d costs.”

“The first of what is intended to be an annual demonstration of the friendly societies in the Old Hill district, was held on Sunday, the object in view being to help the funds of the Dudley Guest Hospital, Dudley Dispensary, and Birmingham Eye Hospital the day was bright and promising, and there were large numbers of people all along the route.

At one o'clock the 1st Worcestershire Volunteer Band started from the CROSS INN, proceeded across Halesowen Road, calling at Trinity Schools and GEORGE HOTEL; then across Lawrence Lane into Reddal Hill Road, calling at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, and proceeding to the Cross, where the final procession was formed. Meanwhile the Old Hill Brass and Red Band started from the WHITE LION INN, proceeded by way of Powke Lane and Garratts Lane to Wrights Lane (as far as the PRINCE OF WALES INN), and returned to Garratts Lane, calling for lodges at the BRITISH OAK INN, FOX HUNT INN, Tabernacle, DUKE WILLIAM INN, VINE INN, to the Cross. On the arrival of this contingent a huge line was formed, and very pretty it looked. Members of the various lodges wore their regalia, and these being interspersed with the more elaborate honorary members' scarves, gave the line a very bright appearance.....”

“On Sunday afternoon the annual hospital parade and open-air service, arranged by the various friendly societies in Old Hill and the surrounding district took place. Processions were formed at different points of members of the Foresters, the Free Gardeners, and provident societies, numbering altogether about 1,000, and these, accompanied by the Blackheath, Halesowen Temperance, and Old Hill Bands, paraded the principal streets of the locality, after which they marched to a field in Garratts Lane, lent for the occasion by Mr. A. Sidaway, where a special service was held. Addresses were delivered by the Revs. E. Brewer, MA (vicar of Old Hill), and W. B. Cheshire (Primitive Methodist). A collection was made along the route and at the service in aid of the Guest Hospital, Dudley Dispensary, and Birmingham Eye Hospital, this realising £25 14s 5³/₄d.

The following was the order of procession issued by the committee. The Blackheath Village Band will start from the WHITE LION INN, Powke Lane, at 1-45 prompt, proceed down Garratts Lane, calling for societies at the BRITISH OAK INN, Tabernacle, DUKE WILLIAM INN, and VINE INN, turning across Queen Street on to the old football ground (by kind permission of Mr. W. H. Jarvis). The Halesowen Temperance Band will start from the PRINCE OF WALES INN, Wrights Lane, at 1-45 prompt, proceed round Cherry Orchard Street, into Wrights Lane, turning down Wagon Street, calling at the OLD ENGINE INN, proceeding down Elbow Street and King Street, across Halesowen Road, to the old football ground. The Old Hill Band will start from the CROSS INN at 1-45 prompt, calling for societies at Trinity Schools and GEORGE HOTEL, proceed across Lawrence Lane, turning up New Street, Ridding Street, Pear Tree Street, Pear Tree Lane, thence into Reddal Hill Road, calling at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, and proceeding to the old football ground. A grand procession will be formed as follows.....”

“Some strong remarks anent [in regard to] perjury were made by Mr. W. Bassano in giving the verdict in the cases in which John Hill and Israel Gould, of Old Lion Road, Old Hill, were charged with assaulting Agnes Williams on Saturday evening. Mr. G. Williams, of Cradley Heath, defended.

Mrs. Williams, who appeared at court with a black eye, told the Court that on Saturday night about twenty minutes past eleven, as she was passing along Old Lion Road, she heard Hill and Gould, who had just left the PRINCE OF WALES INN, conversing. Hill said, ‘I am going to kill the first I come to.’ He struck her without the slightest provocation, giving her the black eye they saw, and the blow also knocked her down. While on the ground she alleged Gould said, ‘Out of the road, let me give her a — kick,’ and that he kicked her on the face. She became insensible, and remained so for some time. In cross-examination, she stated she was not living with her husband, but was living at the RED LION INN. She admitted seeing Hill and Gould with Mrs. Gould and another woman, but denied speaking to or striking Mrs. Gould. She and Mrs. Gould did not have a free fight, neither were the injuries she received caused by Mrs. Gould striking her in the eye and cutting her face with a ring she wore.

A case arising from the same bother was one in which John Shaw, of the RED LION INN, was charged with wilfully damaging a pane of glass, value 2s 6d, the property of Elizabeth Hill. Mr. G. Williams prosecuted.

Mrs. Hill stated that at about half-past eleven or twenty minutes to twelve, while she was in the house, half-a-brick came crashing through the window, and the allegation was that it was thrown by John Shaw. A number of witnesses were called, who gave different versions of both occurrences.

The Bench said it was very well they took the brick throwing case before they gave their decision in the assault case, for it was quite clear from the independent evidence that there had been perjury. The case had been complicated, as unfortunately many of those assault cases were, by perjury. They did not consider it proved that Gould kicked Mrs. Williams, but they had no doubt that Hill struck her. Hill would be fined 40s and costs, or a month's hard labour, and the cases against Gould and Shaw would be dismissed."

"Charged with keeping his house open during prohibited hours, John Bushby, licensee of the PRINCE OF WALES INN, Old Hill, at the local police court, yesterday, denied that anyone was on the premises after ten o'clock, and after a legal argument, which lasted for an hour and a half, the police withdrew the charge, intimating that they would proceed against him under another section. According to the police, a man named Price was seen to leave the house with a bottle of whisky after eleven o'clock at night. For the defence it was contended that there was no evidence that the premises were open for the sale of liquor, and that Price was not in the house after ten o'clock."

"Mr. W. H. Thompson made an application for the transfer of the PRINCE OF WALES INN, Wrights Lane, Old Hill, from John Bushby to Edwin Arthur Barnett. He explained that the applicant formerly held the license of the BEEHIVE INN, Old Hill, but on the 13th of April last was fined £5 and costs upon two charges of permitting gambling upon the premises. Mr. Barnett held an air-gun shooting club upon the premises, and the gambling consisted of shooting for beer. Applicant had held licenses in various parts of the Midlands for twenty years, and he urged them to give him another chance. Mr. Thompson produced a number of testimonials, and read one from Superintendent Hodkinson, of the Stone Division, who was inspector in charge of the Old Hill Division at the time of the conviction, to the effect that having regard to his previous good character, he thought the Bench would grant him the license.

The Bench, after a short deliberation, decided to grant the application.

Mr. A. H. Bassano (presiding magistrate) said the Bench were greatly surprised at the action of Superintendent Hodkinson. Superintendent Johnson said it was quite unusual and altogether contrary to the rules and regulations of the police force. An application was made for the return of the testimonial, but it was stated that the Bench wished to deal with the matter themselves."

"Today, Mr. G. C. Lewis (Coroner) held an inquest at the PRINCE OF WALES INN, Wrights Lane, Old Hill, respecting the death of John Marsh (80), of Wrights Lane, who died on the 4th inst from the effects of injuries sustained on the 2nd inst. The evidence showed that for some time past the deceased had been confined to his bed. On the 2nd inst his son left him in the house when he went to work at 5.30, and when his daughter visited the house an hour and a half later she found her father lying at the bottom of the stairs. He had sustained severe injuries to the head and face, and died on the 4th inst, as stated. Dr. Tibbetts attributed death to concussion of the brain, caused by the fall. "Benjamin Homer, of High Street, and Harry Davies of Spring Meadow, Old Hill, were charged with stealing a bottle of brandy, of the value 5s, belonging to Edwin Arthur Barnett, landlord of the PRINCE OF WALES INN, Wrights Lane, Old Hill, on the 6th inst.

Prosecutor stated that on the night in question defendants were drinking in his house, and when they left he found that a bottle of brandy was missing from a shelf.

Inspector Gibbs stated that soon after he received information of the theft he paid a visit to Davies's house where he found the defendant in a drunken condition. He was almost mad drunk. He also went to the house occupied by Homer, and found him lying on a screen in a very drunken state, with the drink running out of his mouth. Subsequently he found the empty bottle with the neck broken off in a room in Davies's house. Defendants surrendered on the 9th inst, and when charged with the theft Homer said, 'Yes, that is quite right.' Davies said, 'Let's have a smell at the bottle. It smells more like beer than brandy.' Both defendants pleaded that they knew nothing whatever of the theft, Homer adding that they were fairly boozed. The Bench fined defendants £1 including costs each, Mr. Bassano remarking that the penalty would have been much heavier but for the fact that they were willing to believe it was the result of drink."

"On Saturday evening a gas explosion, fortunately unattended with serious results, occurred in the highway at Wrights Lane, Old Hill. The residents were startled by a loud report, and upon going into the street found that a portion of the roadway had been blown up, whilst damage had also been caused to an entry close to the PRINCE OF WALES INN. The shock was felt in many houses, and at the CHERRY ORCHARD INN the tea table was upset by the explosion. Mr. Walter Cutler informed the police, and PCs Davies, Heathcote, and Pass visited the place. Upon examination it was found that large volumes of gas were escaping from one of the mains. How the gas was ignited is a mystery. At one time it was feared that an old woman residing in Wrights Lane had been suffocated, as she could not be seen, but when PC Pass effected an entrance to her house she was found safe and sound."

"On Sunday night, Joseph Wakeman, aged eight years, Wrights Lane, Old Hill, was drowned whilst bathing in the Birmingham Canal, adjacent to the Fly Colliery, Old Hill. Several men jumped into the canal and tried to rescue him, but half-an-hour elapsed before the body could be found. When it was brought to shore artificial respiration was resorted to by Inspector Needham assisted by other police officers, but their efforts were to no avail. Thousands of people assembled on the canal embankment to witness the recovery of the body. Dr. McQueen was called but the boy was dead when he arrived.

The Deputy Coroner (Mr. Lewis) conducted an enquiry into the facts on Tuesday, at the PRINCE OF WALES, Wrights Lane, Old Hill.

Joseph Wakeman, bolt forger, 63, Wrights Lane, Old Hill, said deceased was his son. He last saw him alive between 3 and 4 o'clock on Sunday afternoon.

Alfred Israel Welding, new Eagle Colliery house, said: I went to bathe with Wakeman at 4.30 on Sunday. Later in the day Wakeman went into the water himself. He then got out of the water and ran along the side. Then I missed him, and ran home to tell my mother. I also told two men that he was missing.

You did not see him fall in? – No, sir.

Meshack Dyas (18), said: I saw a crowd on the canal side and I ran down. They told me a boy was in the canal. I stripped, and ten minutes after I found him in the old wharf.

Had you much difficulty in finding him? – I stepped on him and then dived and fetched him up.

Was he embedded in the mud at all? – No, sir.

How deep is the water? – About five feet.

PC Longman deposed to receiving the boy from the last witness. Witness was informed that deceased had been running round a ledge and had fallen in. When Dr. McQueen arrived he pronounced the lad dead.

Is it fenced? – One side is.

Is there much bathing there? – Yes.

No amount of fencing would keep the boys out? – No.

Mr. James: Was the boy dressed? – No, he was undressed. He had been bathing.

Mr. Partridge: The boys must have been trespassing.

The Coroner: Anyone who bathes in the canal must be trespassing.

Inspector Needham said he was there when the dragging operations were in progress. About twenty people stripped and dived into the water. He heard nobody say that they had seen the boy fall in.

Re-called Welding said he saw two men about five yards away, but they did not trouble them.

The jury were of opinion that the witness was confused.

The Deputy Coroner agreed. The only gratifying thing about the affair, he said, was the assistance given by the people who came along and the plucky manner in which the witness Dyas fetched him out.

A verdict of Accidental Death was returned.

Mr. A. James (the foreman) expressed thanks to the police, who rendered first-aid, and also to the lad who got the body out.

The Coroner: I agree with you, sir. The police in this district, I find, are always ready to render what help they can in such cases.

Inspector Needham complimented those who attempted to recover the body, speaking highly in the manner in which they dived into the water time after time.”

“County Quarter Sessions.....

John Pearson, aged 26, a miner, was charged with breaking and entering the dwelling house of James Tromans, on February 15th, at Old Hill, and stealing a bottle of rum, £1 9s 3d in money, and other articles. Mr. Kenneth Wood conducted the prosecution, and the prisoner, who as not defended, pleaded not guilty.

The case for the prosecution was that Mr. Tromans was the licensee of the PRINCE OF WALES INN at Old Hill, and that the house was entered on the night mentioned, and the money and the articles missed. There was evidence to connect the prisoner with the theft, as he took a bottle of rum, similar to that which was missed, to the house of his sister-in-law on the following morning, and also spent money freely on the same day.

The prisoner gave evidence on oath, and strongly denied the charge. He admitted having a bottle of rum in his possession, but said he bought it from two men at a coffee-house at Dudley.

The jury found the prisoner guilty, and a previous conviction for theft at Old Hill was admitted by the prisoner, who was sentenced to six months' imprisonment with hard labour.”

“Pub Talk. Cheers! It's your Best Guide to Midland Pubs.

Regulars were worried that their friendly local would lose something of its appeal when a popular ‘mine host’ retired and new managers moved in behind the bar. From the outside, the PRINCE OF WALES could be like any other pub tucked away in the side streets of Old Hill. For its faithful band of customers, however, there was always a touch of magic about the atmosphere inside this particular Black Country tavern. That they continue to meet up over a pint in the cosy bars or settle contentedly into a game of crib or darts shows how well licensee Steve Berrow came up to scratch. Fears that the pub would suffer from a change of management, with a young couple at the helm, proved to be unfounded. Steve, who arrived as manager three years ago, soon made it clear that he wouldn't do anything to spoil the character of a favourite community haunt.

The PRINCE OF WALES, in Wrights Lane, is used by many local residents and people who travel in from neighbouring areas. 'We all enjoy a splendid pint and convivial company,' said one pub regular, Paul Brownhill, of Cradley Heath, Warley. 'Many must have thought the relaxed and comfortable atmosphere would be disrupted when the previous licensee retired, but that was not to be. It is still one of the best pubs I know.'

Steve, 29, and his wife, Lisa, are on first-name terms with just about everybody they serve in the bar and small lounge at the PRINCE OF WALES, their first pub – although Steve worked for his dad when he was a licensee. 'Many of our customers have been coming in for years, people born and bred round here and it is very much their pub. I am just being friendly towards them. They create the good atmosphere,' said the modest host.

Older drinkers like the fact they can swap tales and enjoy a pint of Banks's mild or bitter without having to compete against music blasting out across the bar. There is a juke box but nothing in the heavy-beat category is ever likely to be played.

'We get a lot of middle-aged customers who have got to know each other and treat the pub like a community centre,' said Steve.

'But younger people also fit in well and we treat everybody as friends.'

Another regular, Clive Hamond, described the PRINCE OF WALES as a 'family pub,' which has not suffered any fall in standards.

The two Banks's 'house' beers account for about 70 per cent of the pub's sales. There is hardly any call for lager, although it is on tap.

Pick of the pints: Banks's Mild; Banks's Bitter. Cost of a pint 91p mild, 96p bitter (bar prices).

Wolverhampton Chronicle 19/12/1855

"On Wednesday evening a numerously attended public meeting of the inhabitants of Cradley Heath took place at the house of Mr. Charles Holmes, the QUEENS HEAD INN, for the purpose of considering the present inefficient number of policemen appointed for the watching of that district It was stated that four or five months ago a deputation of the inhabitants waited upon the Magistrates with a memorial signed by the principal inhabitants, setting forth that Cradley Heath contained a population of 10,000 persons, and that but one single policeman was stationed in the place. It was also said at the meeting that there was no lock-up nearer than Rowley Regis, the headquarters of the parish, and which was a distance of two or three miles from Cradley Heath. The numerous robberies which have recently taken place in Cradley were also commented upon, and traced in a great measure to the inefficient provision for watching. Resolutions were passed, establishing a society for the appointing of private watchmen; a committee being named for carrying out the same."

"On Tuesday evening last, the puddlers and shinglers employed at the Corngreaves Iron Works met at the house of Mr. Homer, QUEENS HEAD INN, for the purpose of presenting to their late manager, Mr. S. Coley, a token of their sincere respect for the kindness and good feeling which he had evinced during the number of years he had presided over them. The memorial consisted of an elegantly-chased silver lever watch and a splendid gold chain. The presentation was accompanied by an appropriate address from one of the senior workmen, which was acknowledged briefly but with much feeling."

"Isaiah Faulkner, alias Runner, and Joseph Willetts, alias Gordon, from Tividale, were brought up on a charge of the police, indicted with burglariously entering the premises of Mr. C. Homes, QUEENS HEAD, on the morning of the 23rd inst, and with attempting to murder the police. The two prisoners, on being brought up, exhibited marks of their having been very roughly handled; but the face and body of Faulkner especially attracted the attention of sight seers, his head and face being plastered nearly all over, and his right arm apparently altogether disabled. They seemed to be devil-may-care sort of men, and men who, to effect their own ends, would not stand at trifles. No doubt a desperate struggle took place in the dark in Mr. Homes's cellar, and had the three other men belonging to the gang, and who are supposed to have been on the look-out around the premises, joined their fellows in crime a fiercer strife would have been waged, and not unlikely attended with fatal results. The police in this case manifested great vigilance in gaining a clue, and then much courage in executing their designs and bringing the offenders to justice. Police-constable Taylor, we are glad to learn is recovering nicely.

It being deemed advisable by the police in charge of the case, to have the prisoners remanded for a week, one witness only was called.

John Siviter deposed: I am brewer in the employ of Mr. C. Homes, QUEENS HEAD, Four Ways, Cradley Heath. On Friday morning the 23rd ult, I saw the two prisoners in the house about one o'clock. I generally sleep at the QUEENS HEAD, and did so on Thursday night. I went to bed about twenty minutes past twelve. I had suspicions that something was going to happen from information I had received. About one o'clock in the morning I heard a noise down stairs, in the cellar. In about ten minutes afterwards I saw the two prisoners in the passage of the house. I afterwards saw the two prisoners taken into custody in the cellar. There was violence used, and I heard the report of a pistol. I was carrying a candle, and as soon as I entered the cellar, Willetts fired. At this stage of the proceedings Sergeant Powner asked for a remand for a week on the ground that the evidence had not been completed, and to allow him time to investigate one or two other matters to which the prisoners are supposed to have been concerned."

Stourbridge Observer 8/7/1865

"At the Old Hill Police Court on Wednesday, before E. Moore, E. Gem, and F. W. G. Barrs, Esqrs, Isaiah Faulkner, alias Fisher, alias Runner, and Joseph Willetts, alias Gordon, were brought up in custody of the police and on remand, charged with burglariously entering the house of Mr. C. Homes, of the QUEENS HEAD INN, Cradley Heath, on the night of Thursday, the 23rd ult. The following witnesses were examined.

Miss Homes: My name is Catharine Homes. I manage the business of the QUEENS HEAD, for my brother Charles. He lives at Halesowen. On the night of Thursday, the 22nd ult, I saw the house was all made up as usual. I went upstairs to bed about 20 minutes past twelve. Previous to going upstairs I looked at all the doors and windows. The servant girl, Esther Reece, went upstairs with me. No one else was upstairs. When I went upstairs I left the three policemen, John Powner (Sergeant), Isaac Taylor, and James Chatham, and the brewer, Joseph Siviter, in the smoke room. About one o'clock I heard a noise down stairs. The noise was similar to that caused by breaking bars. After a short time I went down stairs along with the servant. We went down the cellar and saw the two prisoners in the custody of the police, handcuffed. I saw blood on the cellar floor, on one of the policemen (Taylor) and on prisoner Faulkner.

Joseph Siviter: I am brewer to Mr. C. Homes. I do not live in the house but sleep there chiefly. On Thursday night, the 22nd ult, about half past eleven o'clock, Police-sergeant Powner, Police-constables Taylor and Chatham, came to my master's house. After they came we shut up the house, made the doors &c. I made some of the doors, and the windows and shutters, and Esther Reece made the others. I saw my mistress and the servant girl go upstairs to bed. It was after twelve, perhaps a quarter past. The policemen went into the smoke room. Previous to going into the smoke room, I saw all the doors and windows fast. I then went upstairs and put out all the lights, the lights downstairs being already out. I then came down stairs and found the police in the smoke room. Twenty minutes afterwards I heard a noise outside, as of some one getting over the wall into the back yard. We next heard some one at the cellar window trying to break it open. The cellar was immediately under where I was sitting. In a few minutes I heard a match struck. I next heard some one up the cellar steps breaking open the cellar door. The door was forced open without making much noise. The key was in the door outside the kitchen. As soon as the door was open there was a light in the passage. Police-constable Taylor went out of the smoke room into the passage, and was met by prisoner Faulkner. I then went to the smoke room door, and saw Police-constable Taylor and prisoner Faulkner wrestling at the top of the steps; Faulkner having a lighted candle in his hand. I saw them go down the cellar steps, and I then went for a light. The other two officers followed Taylor and Faulkner down the cellar. When I procured a light and went down the cellar, I saw the prisoner Faulkner and Police-constable Taylor on the ground, Taylor holding Faulkner down and both were bleeding much. I put my candle forward to step over the two when a pistol was fired, which extinguished my light. The report was a loud one. Prisoner Willetts fired the pistol. The snuff of the candle was taken off. I then went up the cellar into the smoke room, for another light. When I returned I saw Police-constable Chatham and prisoner Willetts wrestling together, against the wall in the passage. Chatham brought him out of the recess, and Sergeant Powner locked the two prisoners together, and took them upstairs in the kitchen. Police-constable Taylor and prisoner Faulkner were very much hurt about the head and face, and bled profusely. After the prisoners were removed to the kitchen, Sergeant Powner and I went into the yard and found the three bars, the chain, lever and bag now produced, lying near the cellar window. The bars when in the cellar window were straight, and had been wrenched out of the stone work of the cellar window. They were all right when I looked at them about 20 minutes past eleven. I do not know where the lever, chain and bag were brought from.

By the Bench: They made very little noise by getting in. While they were striking the match I heard a man walk down the yard. Prisoner Faulkner had the candle in his hand without a candlestick. On the Thursday afternoon I saw the two prisoners and another not found in the kitchen, drinking. They staid a little over an hour, I think. Besides these three were Enoch, Joseph, and Richard Davis, persons whom I know, in the same room. When the prisoners left the house I did not see which way they went.

By Faulkner: I did not see you go out of the back way with Joseph Davis.

By Willetts: There was a quack doctor of the name of Johnson, from Dudley, in. Mr. Johnson was saying something about the human frame, but I did not stay to hear what he said. I did not see Joseph Davis, alias Lock, go out with Faulkner by the back door. I saw you, Faulkner, Joseph Davis, and a man named Hartshern go out together.

Enoch Davis: I was in the QUEENS HEAD, on Thursday afternoon, the 22nd ult. It was about four o'clock when I went in there. When I went in there was no company at all. I had been in the house about half an hour, when a man from Blackheath, who is a tailor, and whom I do not know, and Richard Davis, a painter, living at Cradley Heath, came in. Shortly afterwards the two prisoners, with another man, whom I do not know, came in. I could tell the other man again if I were to see him. They had either two or three pints, and were drinking together. Johnson 'the pill man' was lecturing about the human frame. Prisoner Faulkner left the room once or twice, for what purpose I can't tell. I did not tell the Sergeant that I made some remarks about their going out so many times to light their pipes.

By Faulkner: I know Joseph Davis. I do not know that he sent for you down to his house. I know Charles Bridgewater. I do not recollect Joseph Davis nodding his head and calling you across the room to sit by him. I do not remember Joseph and you going out to the back together.

By Willetts: I do not recollect seeing Joseph Davis go out with Faulkner.

Isaac Taylor: I belong to the Worcestershire police, and am stationed at Netherton, in the parish of Dudley. Our station is distant from Cradley Heath about two miles. From information received, Sergeant Powner of the Staffordshire, Police-constable Chatham and I, on Thursday, the 22nd of May, went to the house of Mr. C. Homes, QUEENS HEAD, about half-past eleven o'clock, or a quarter to twelve. When we arrived we saw Miss Homes, the servant girl, and witness Siviter. We called Miss Homes to one side, and acquainted her with our suspicions. After a short time they retired to bed, and left me, Chatham, and Sergeant Powner, and Siviter in the smoke room. We turned the light quite out, and remained in the dark. Miss Homes had not gone to bed above a quarter of an hour, before we heard a noise outside, as of someone getting over the wall. The next thing we heard was the sound of a leverage, just outside just opposite to where we were. I then pulled my shoes off and went to the back door, in which are two holes and peeped through, when I saw two men pass and re-pass, they were whispering, but I could not tell what they said. I waited a quarter of an hour, and heard them distinctly strike matches. As soon as the matches were struck, I heard a lumbering noise as if they were getting into the cellar. I then returned into the smoke room, and partly closed the door. I next heard them coming up the cellar steps. I heard the bolt fly – they sprung the lock of the door leading from the cellar into the passage. As soon as the door was opened, I saw a light in the passage coming towards me. I next saw prisoner Faulkner with this jemmy produced, about two feet long, in his right hand, and a candle in his left. I sprang upon him. I was going to strike him, when he struck me with the jemmy, cutting my hat through in two places, and also cut my head. I then struck him, and broke my staff at the first door. I then closed with him, we struggled from the parlour door to the cellar door. As we were struggling the cellar door flew open, and we fell down the steps. The prisoner Faulkner falling bottomwards. I then wrenched the jemmy from him and struck him with it several times. I beat him about the head until he lay without holding. Police-constable Chatham and Sergeant Powner came down, Chatham falling over me. The blood was running from my wounds and Faulkner's. I was nearly blind with blood. I heard Police-constable Chatham say, 'There's another here.' I then heard the report of a pistol, and saw the flash therefrom. There was a light then brought down stairs, but by whom I cannot say. The prisoners were then secured. The doctor was sent for, who dressed my wounds and Faulkner's. Prisoners were then removed in a cart to Brierley Hill station. I was in plain clothes, and went in at the front door.

Sergeant Powner: I accompanied the last witness and Police-constable Chatham to the QUEENS HEAD on Thursday night, the 22nd ult. The two officers came to my house, and I went with them. We went in the smoke room. I first turned the gas in the smoke room nearly out, but on being provided with matches and candles I then turned the light totally out. I heard the evidence of the last witness which is correct. As soon as Taylor closed with prisoner Faulkner, I lighted the gas. I then followed and made to the place where they got through, thinking that if there were any others they would try to escape through there. I heard the report of a pistol, which appeared to have been fired from the direction where Chatham discovered Willetts. I found the pistol now produced. It smelt very strong of powder as if it had been very recently discharged, and has a cap on it now. The pistol is in the same state now as when I found it. After prisoners had been secured, I examined the cellar wall opposite to where Willetts had been found. There were marks on the wall which might have been produced by pebbles or slugs.

Siviter recalled: I cannot say whether the marks referred to, were there before that night.

Sergeant Powner resumed: I went into the yard and found the lever, chain, bag, and the three iron bars now produced. The three iron bars belong to the cellar window, and had been forced from the stone work into which they had been let two inches, or two inches and a half. Prisoner Willetts said, 'We should have not come here, if we had not been fetched.'

James Chatham: I belong to the Worcestershire police, and am stationed at Netherton. I have heard the evidence of the last two witnesses, which is correct. I followed Police-constable Taylor down the cellar. I found Willetts in a passage in the cellar, with one leg in the water. I found he had changed his position by the sound of some bottles in the recess. With my staff in my right hand, it being dark, I felt about for him with my left, and as soon as I touched him he fired a pistol. It flashed across my face and singed my whiskers and the hair on my eyelashes. I then received several blows on my right arm from him, with what weapon I cannot tell. I then used my staff until he cried for mercy saying, 'Lord save me! Don't kill me.' I broke my staff. While handcuffed, and when they were taken into the tap room, I found on Faulkner a few common matches (now produced), in his waistcoat pocket. I found on Willetts a fusee box, with lucifer matches in, a pocket knife, a piece of iron, six caps, and a small quantity of powder. I have compared the caps produced with the one on the pistol, and find they are of the same description. After that the prisoners asked to go up the yard to fetch their shoes, and a jacket (Faulkner's), and they told me where to find them. I went to the place pointed out, and there found two pairs of shoes, a jacket and a jemmy. I brought them in and the prisoners selected what belonged to them. They were without their shoes when taken. Faulkner claimed one pair, and Willetts the other. Faulkner was without a jacket. Willetts was dressed as he is now. Willetts said there was nothing in the pistol, only powder. He said that he did not fire, but it went off itself. I know both prisoners well, they live at Windmill End, which is distant from Cradley Heath, a mile and a half.

By Faulkner: Colliers do not generally take two caps furred like the one produced. I have been watching you for 12 months. I cannot say whether 'jobs' have been done while you were in bed.

Thomas Moore: I am a surgeon, at Cradley Heath. I was fetched to the QUEENS HEAD, about half past one, on the morning of the 23rd ult. Police-sergeant Powner and Siviter, the brewer, fetched me. On arriving there I found Police-constable Taylor sitting in the smoke room. He was resting his head on his hand and seemed to be in pain. He was faint and his head and hands were covered with blood. I examined his head, and found several wounds and bruises. One was a very severe lacerated wound over the left eyebrow, about two inches long; the bone though thick was cut in two. There had been severe haemorrhage, which broke out again when I began to dress it. The haemorrhage resulted from the wounding of a small artery. There were two smaller contused wounds near the crown of the head, another near the left temple, and a severe bruise on the right hand. I dressed the wounds and ordered him brandy and water. Such an instrument as the jemmy produced, would be sufficient to cause the wounds. I also examined the prisoners and both were injured, but Faulkner very severely. I also examined Police-constable Chatham. His arm was bruised and both eyes inflamed, as if produced by a flash of powder.

Faulkner said: I was sent for from home down to near Darby's Pits, by Joseph Davis. I enquired where he was and was told that he had gone off with his brother Enoch. I went to look for him, when they told me he would most likely be at the QUEENS HEAD. He and his brother were there. I, Willetts, and Thomas Hartshorn went in. We had a pint of ale. While drinking Joseph Davis nodded to me, and when I went near him he said to me, 'Do you see that drawer where the young woman is? There's a false drawer under it.' I said, 'For why?' He said he saw a big bag of money put there, while he had been in the house. I told him I did not care if he had, I should have nothing to do with it. He and the other man then began to push the drink on me, but I told them I should not have anything to do with it. He then nudged me to go out. We then went out as far as the petty, and there we stood a bit. I said 'Come, let's go into the house a bit.' He said, 'Do you see that window?' I said, 'What window?' He said, 'That cellar window.' I said, 'What about it?' He said, 'I shall get in there in two or three minutes.' I said, 'I don't care if thee does. I shan't get in.' We then went into the house again, and sat down for a short time. We then went out of there, into Joseph Davis's house. We had a jug or two of drink there. He says, 'We can have that money easy.' I said 'I don't care if we can I shall have none of it.' Thomas Hartshorn said he should make one to go. He said he had got things at their house, amongst the old iron which he could pick out to do it with. I have nothing more to say.

Willetts: Joseph Davis's wife's son, came to our house about 11 or 12 o'clock of the day. He took us to the DOG AND DUCK. Thomas Hartshorn paid for two or three quarts of ale. Then Hartshorn, and Joseph Davis's wife's son took me to Davis's, and we had two quarts there. We then went to Homes's and found Joseph Davis along with his brother. Hartshorn went with us. Joseph Davis then beckoned Faulkner, and they both went out. I did not hear what they said.

They were committed to take their trial at the next Stafford Assizes.

After hearing the case the Bench expressed a high opinion of the gallant conduct of the police."

Staffordshire Advertiser 29/7/1865

"Staffordshire Summer Assizes.....

Isaiah Faulkner, 32, and Joseph Willetts, 31, miners, were indicted for burglariously breaking and entering the dwelling house of Charles Holmes, with intent to steal therein, at Rowley Regis, on the 22nd of June The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and previous convictions against the prisoners were proved.

His Lordship, in passing sentence, remarked that this was not like an ordinary case of housebreaking. This was a burglary by experienced hands, armed with deadly weapons, and effectual care must be taken that the county of Stafford was freed from the prisoners' presence. They must be kept in penal servitude for ten years.

His Lordship ordered £5 to be paid to Taylor as a reward for his gallant conduct.”

“On Wednesday at the Petty Sessions, before F. W. G. Barrs and E. Moore, Esqrs, Henry Talbot, tailor, of Cradley Heath, was charged with having, on the 16th inst, unlawfully neglected giving up certain monies, books, and other effects, belonging to the Court Hope and Anchor of the Ancient Order of Foresters, held at the QUEENS HEAD INN, Cradley Heath, and also with having unlawfully applied the monies to purposes other than expressed by the rules of the said society. When asked if innocent or not, defendant said he was guilty.

Edward Townsend, of Cradley Heath, one of the trustees of the Court Hope and Anchor, proved that the trustees of that court were entitled to the books, and that £1 12s 6d was owing to them by the defendant.

The Bench suggested that as defendant acknowledged his guilt, and had promised to deliver up the books, monies, &c, on the 22nd inst, the case had better be adjourned a fortnight to allow him to do so. Mr. Townsend agreed to this, and the sentence was deferred till the next sitting of the Bench, defendant being bound in his own recognisances to appear at that time. If the money be paid defendant will be acquitted, but if not he will be committed.”

“On Saturday, the 7th instant, the members of Court Hope and Anchor, of the Ancient Order of Foresters, held at the QUEENS HEAD HOTEL, were kindly entertained by the host, Mr. W. Hickton (who has lately succeeded Mr. Holmes) with a good supper. The cloth was laid by the usual tasty and hospitable style of the host and hostess.

After supper, a very comfortable evening was spent, and was brought to a close by a very hearty thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Hickton, for their liberality.”

Stourbridge Observer 3/4/1869

“On Saturday last, at W. Hickton's, QUEENS HEAD, an inquest was held before the Deputy Coroner, Mr. Bailey, on the body of Agnes Shaw, aged four years, who was severely burnt on Monday, the 22nd ultimo, at eight o'clock am, and died the following day.

The jury, after examining several witnesses, returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

Birmingham Daily Gazette 22/12/1870

“An adjourned meeting of the gas consumers of Cradley Heath and district, was held last evening, at the QUEENS HEAD INN, Four Ways, when it was stated that the directors of the Gas Company had offered to reduce the price of gas as follows: 9d per 1,000 feet up to 10,000; 6d per 1,000 feet from 10,000 to 20,000; and 3d above 20,000. A resolution was passed to the effect that the terms be accepted, which thus ends this question in an amicable manner.”

“Early on Monday morning Cradley Heath was all astir and hundreds of persons could be seen wending their way towards the Five Ways to witness the procession of Foresters, which was announced to take place that day. The weather being fine thousands of persons were present to witness the procession through the various streets. Ten o'clock was the appointed time for starting, but it was nearly half-past eleven before they got away, owing to their having to wait for some of the Courts from a distance.

The various Courts assembled at the Five Ways, and then formed themselves into order of procession. The following Courts were represented: No.3068, Hope and Anchor, QUEENS HEAD, Corngreaves Street, Cradley Heath; No.3595, Cable and Anchor, BIRD IN HAND, Cradley Heath; 4127, Good Samaritan, BEEHIVE, Corngreaves Road, Cradley Heath; 4196, Foresters' Home, VINE AND RAILWAY HOTEL, Cradley Heath; 4233, Loyal Shenstone; 4340, Loyal Marlborough, COOKSEY'S HOTEL, Old Hill; 4398, Moss Rose, ROYAL OAK INN, New Town; 4546, Robin Hood's Merry Rangers, CROWN INN, Five Ways; 4970, Lye Reformed, WINDMILL INN, Lye. Although the district of Cradley Heath and Halesowen comprises 36 Courts, only nine took part in getting up the Fete.

The procession started from the Five Ways, headed by the Cradley Heath Brass Band. The Pensnett Victoria Brass and Reed Band and the Halesowen Drum and Fife Band also took part in the procession. Each band played lively quick steps passing through Lomey Town, Five Ways, Four Ways, Reddal Hill, Old Hill, and Haden Hill, en route for Halesowen, passing through the principal streets and then to the Leasowes. The procession was three-quarters of a mile in length, and was accompanied with three magnificent banners bearing suitable mottoes of the Order, and a large number of flags, the members wearing the various badges of the Order, and accompanied by Robin Hood, Little John, Will Scarlet, Friar Tuck, Shepherds, &c, &c.

On arriving at the beautiful and classic grounds, famed as having been the seat of the poet Shenstone, the procession passed round the house of B. Gibbons, Esq, who had kindly placed the whole of the grounds at the disposal of the Committee.....

There was a number of shooting galleries, Aunt Sallys, and other things to amuse all classes. During the day a number of balloon ascents took place.....

It is estimated that between six and seven thousand persons were present, upwards of £100 being taken at the gates, and it is expected there will be a good surplus in aid of the funds of the Order and General Hospital.

We must not close without a word of praise to the Committee, who were indefatigable in carrying out the arrangements according to the programme. The refreshments were provided by Mrs. S. Cartwright of Cradley Heath, and the tea and confectionery by Mr. J. Corns of Wolverhampton.”

“Thomas Westwood, a chainmaker, was brought up on the charge of being in possession of housebreaking implements, with intent to commit a felony. Mr. Stokes was engaged on prisoner’s behalf. The facts of the case will be seen from the following evidence. Sarah May said she was a servant at the QUEENS HEAD public house, Cradley Heath, which was kept by Mr. William Hickton. Mr. Hickton, however, did not live at the house, but resided at the PLOUGH AND HARROW, close by. Witness had known prisoner for some time, and he lived nearly opposite the QUEENS HEAD. About six o’clock on Friday evening witness went to her bed-room, taking with her a candle. The bed-room was occupied by the barmaid (Charlotte Hardy) as well as witness, and was on the third storey. When witness entered the room she heard a noise under a bed, and also heard what she believed to be a man breathing. She ran downstairs and told the barmaid, and whilst she was doing so she heard a noise on the second floor as though a boot had been dropped. Witness and the barmaid went upstairs at once, and from the door of a room used to store malt in, on the second floor, they saw a man throw up his arms and make a kind of moaning noise. The man was on the top of some malt bags. The box produced belonged to the barmaid, and was at the time in question near the barmaid’s bed. Witness and the barmaid had lived at the house since last May, and prisoner was in the habit of coming there daily. On the afternoon of Friday he called for a pint of ale. He was then quite sober.

Charlotte Hardy, the barmaid, said that on Friday evening last, about six o’clock, in consequence of what last witness told her, and also from hearing a noise, they both went upstairs together, taking with them a candle. They searched several rooms, and when they reached the malt-room door they saw a man on the top of the bags, at the further end of the room. Witness did not recognise the man, who threw up his arms and made a noise. Witness and her companion then ran downstairs and told the brewer what they had seen. Witness, the brewer, and other men in the house at once went upstairs. Witness remained on the stairs while the men went to search. Hearing something that the brewer said, witness ran into the spare club-room, where she saw prisoner standing behind the door, with a pair of shoes in his hand. She told him she thought he was the last man she should have expected to have done such an act, and asked what brought him there. Prisoner began to cry, and said, ‘I don’t know. Oh! My poor children.’ The spare room was close to the malt room. The box produced was kept in her bed-room, and it was usual to keep in it the money taken in the house. She always carried the key herself. The box bore the marks as though someone had attempted to wrench it open; the lock had also been loosened. The box was quite right on the afternoon of Friday. The prisoner had been in the house about one o’clock. About a month previously witness had occasion to change a £5 note. The prisoner was present, and said, ‘I thought there was no money kept here.’ Witness replied, ‘I keep a week’s takings here; but don’t mention it, or we may get killed.’ He asked witness where it was kept, and she said, ‘In a box at the side of the bed.’ Prisoner was in the habit of calling at the house daily, and she believed him to be a respectable man, she thought she was doing no harm in speaking to him in the way she had. Mr. Homer, in cross-examination, asked witness if the prisoner did not court her. Witness burst into tears, and said the defendant was a married man, and she would not be insulted in that manner. She then ran away from the witness box.

Police-constable Craddock said he was sent for, at half-past six on Friday afternoon, to the QUEENS HEAD. He found the prisoner in the spare room upstairs. He took him into custody, and found in his possession a chisel, screw driver, and five keys produced. Witness charged him with being found in the room with intent to commit a felony. On the box produced there were marks as though an attempt had been made to wrench it open. Witness received the key of the box from the barmaid, and it was ascertained that no money had been taken. Witness then charged the prisoner with attempting to force open a box, the property of the barmaid, containing cash. Prisoner said, ‘I only tried it once; all this comes through spending other people’s money.’ Sergeant Powner was present. The pair of light shoes produced witness took from the prisoner.

Mr. Homer made a lengthy address on behalf of prisoner, and produced excellent certificates of good character from residents at Cradley Heath. He also contended that the Bench had power to deal with the case.

The bench made some demur to this, but at length gave way, and sentenced the prisoner to three calendar months’ hard labour.”

“James Woodhall, Benjamin Weaver, and Joseph Weaver were charged with being disorderly and refusing to quit the QUEENS HEAD INN, Cradley Heath, when requested, on the 19th inst. Mr. Stokes appeared on behalf of Mr. Hickton, the landlord.

John Smith, manager of the house, said on the above date the defendants were disorderly in his house, and wanted to go into a private room. He ordered them out, and they refused to go, and he had to send for the police.

The defendants were fined 2s 6d each.

There was a charge of assault by John Smith against Joseph Weaver. Defendant did not appear and a warrant was issued for his apprehension.”

Stourbridge Observer 3/1/1874

“Mr. Hickton, landlord of the QUEENS HEAD INN, Cradley Heath, applied to be allowed to keep his house open on Monday and Wednesday next, it being the occasion of the supper of the blast furnace men employed at the Corngreaves works.

Mr. Hingley [magistrate]: I wish you would not come here. We have been pestered week after week by you publicans. I wish Mr. Barr [another magistrate] would join me in putting a stop to this. Eleven o'clock is plenty late enough for them to eat and drink. It has been a great blessing to the country in having the hours of closing put at eleven o'clock, and I should be very much pleased if it were altered to ten o'clock.

Mr. Barrs: We had better grant it to him this time.

Mr. Hingley: Very well then, very well.

The application was then granted."

"Robert Griffith Austin, a licensed victualler, was charged with neglecting to have his name painted on some conspicuous part of his house. Mr. Superintendent Woollaston was the prosecutor.

Police-constable Cooper deposed that the license of the QUEENS HEAD INN, Corngreaves Street, Cradley Heath, was transferred to the defendant in December last, and he occupied the house until the end of January. The name of the former tenant was upon the sign in front of the house, and it was not altered during defendant's tenancy. Defendant pleaded guilty, and said he only took the license of the house for the purpose of selling it; he managed it for Messrs. Wall and Co, of Stourbridge. Mr. Woollaston said he believed there had been great irregularity going on for some time in regard to this matter; the names on licensed houses being allowed to remain for some time after the tenant had left.

Mr. Bassano said it was very important that the name over the doors of licensed houses should be those of the responsible persons. The defendant was fined 20s and costs."

"On Monday last an inquest was held at the QUEENS HEAD, Corngreave Road, Cradley Heath, before Mr. E. Hooper, coroner, relative to the death of Alfred Hackett, who met with an accident on Saturday last, which terminated fatally. Deceased who is twenty-two years of age, was a 'bolter down' in the employ of the British Iron Company. Whilst standing on a plate situated above some machinery in the 12in mill, it gave way, and deceased fell into the machinery. Help was obtained, and deceased was got out and taken home, and a surgeon called in. Deceased, however, who had been injured very badly on his left side and had both legs broke, died about four o'clock from serious injuries he had received. A verdict of Accidental Death was returned."

“Samuel Hughes, landlord of the QUEENS HEAD INN, Corngreaves Road, Cradley Heath, was summoned for selling intoxicating liquors during prohibited hours, and further, for refusing to admit the police into his house. Mr. W. V. C. Addison prosecuted on behalf of the police, and Mr. J. Stokes defended.

Police-inspector Walters stated that at 12.40 on the night of the 22nd ult, he, in company with Police constable Rowlands, visited defendant’s house. They afterwards remained watching outside, and about a quarter to three o’clock saw defendant and three other men standing on the doorstep. One of them made a bet with the landlord of four glasses over something, and went away for a short time. When he returned he found the other men were admitted into the house. At three o’clock witness heard the rattling of glasses and voices in the house, and upon taking down two unfastened shutters he saw the landlord behind the bar and the three men named Yates, Barnsley, and Hall, in front of it, one of them with a glass in his hand in the act of drinking. Witness demanded to be admitted, upon which the lights in the house were extinguished, and the men scampered away. Witness and Police-constable Rowlands remained at the back, but it was not until 4.30am that admittance was gained, defendant’s wife then opening the door. On witness telling defendant he wanted the men who were in the house, defendant said it was a pity he could not have a lodger. The three men were found in one bed.

Cross-examined: Could not swear that there was anything in the glass out of which one of the men were drinking.

Police-constable Rowlands gave similar evidence.

Police-constables Weston and Sylvester, who were also engaged in watching the house at another point, likewise gave evidence to the effect that about a quarter to three o’clock, whilst the men were standing outside the house, two jugs containing drink were brought out, and the contents drunk by the two men and the landlord. Police-constable Sylvester further stated that after the police had asked for admittance he heard defendant tell his wife not to open the door, and was afterwards seen to peep through the window several times.

Mr. Stokes having addressed the Bench for the defence, defendant was sworn and denied that any drink was supplied to the men outside or inside the house, that the men were sleeping there in order to be ready to start early next day on a fishing excursion, and that the knocking at the door was supposed to be caused by night-soil men. Haynes, Yates, and Barnsley also each gave evidence, the first two admitting that a small bottle of champagne cider was brought outside the house and drunk in Queen Street. The Bench considered the case proved, and fined defendant 40s and costs for each offence.”

After the usual toasts of ‘The Ancient Order of Foresters,’ and ‘The Dudley and Cradley Heath District,’ the Secretary, Bro. Jno. H. King, gave a brief account of the position of the Court, pointing out the rapid progress that had been made in recent years. The Court now numbered 130 members, with funds amounting to over £620. Other toasts were given, and these being interspersed by songs, a very pleasant evening was spent.”

Dudley and District News 13/5/1882

Joseph Manning, QUEENS HEAD, Corngreaves Road, said on Monday evening last the prisoners came to his house while he was sitting at tea. Ball called for two drinks, and was served by his wife, who called him to look at the half-crown they had tendered for the drink. He looked at the coin and broke it in two. It was bad, and he sent for a police officer, and detained Ball, but Johnson would not stay, and went out because he said he had nothing to do with Ball.

Aquilla Parkes, landlord of the BIRD IN HAND, Spinners End, said Ball came to his house on Monday afternoon about 4.30 and called for a glass of ale, tendering the base half-crown produced, he filled the glass of ale and gave him 2s 4½d back. It rang well on the counter. Ball drank the ale and went out. The next morning a police officer came and asked if he had taken any bad money, and his wife examined the money they took on Monday and picked the half-crown out, it being the only one they took that day.

He identified Ball next day.

Monday Ball came to her house and asked for a bottle of soda water, she had none and gave him a bottle of ginger beer, he tendered her half-a-crown, she gave him 2s 4½d in change and he went out. Next day she found that the coin was bad.

Louisa Nicklin said she was servant to Priscilla Foley, who kept the BRITISH OAK, High Street. On Monday afternoon both the prisoners came to the house and Ball called for a pint of ale. She filled it and Ball gave her half-a-crown which she took to her mistress who gave her change. She was quite sure that Johnson was with Ball. Priscilla Foley said when her servant brought the half-crown and she had given her the change she went into the shop and saw the prisoners standing by the counter. Two more men were with them. When she went into the bar Ball asked for the cup to be filled, and gave her a two shilling piece, she gave him 1s 9½d in change, they did not wait to empty their cup but said they must go so as not to be caught in the rain. Ball and Johnson then left the other men and went out. The two coins she received were bad, and she gave them to the police.

Emma Johnson (14), daughter of Samuel Johnson, the HEARTY GOOD FELLOW, King Street, Old Hill, said she saw the prisoners come into the house on Monday afternoon. Ball called for a quart of ale, she supplied it and Ball gave her half-a-crown in payment. She gave the change, Ball threw the drink down and both went out. Her father wanted some change and she took it to Chances for sixpences.

Hanna Webb, barmaid at Mr. John Foley's, the SWAN INN, Old Hill, said the prisoner came into the house and Ball asked for some ale and tendered her half-a-crown, she took the coin to Mrs. Foley and gave Ball the change. Hannah Foley said Hannah Webb brought her a half-crown which she put in her pocket with the other money. The same night she gave it to a police officer. PC Litherley said he was sent for to the QUEENS HEAD, Corngreaves Road, on Monday and received the half-crown produced, from Mr. Manning, who said in the presence of Ball, that he had received it from him. He took Ball into custody, and he at first gave the name of George Keel, Hart Yard, Hatton Garden, London, and said it was not half-a-crown but a two shilling piece which he gave. PCs Litherly and Lawrence proved receiving the base coins produced from the witnesses.

Inspector Walters said on Monday the prisoner Ball was brought to the station and gave the name of George Keel, Hart Yard, Hatton Garden, London. He declined to give any reference, and said witness might enquire about it. He took him to Birmingham to the detective department, where he saw detective Baker, who called Keel by his right name, and said, 'How do William Ball.' He then went to Ball's address in Bridge Street, West Hockley, and on going into the house he found the prisoner Johnson lying on a screen, he then gave the name of George William Hobson, No.13, Eaton Street, Abbey Fields, Hockley. He told him he would be charged with being in company with Ball the previous day at Old Hill, and passing counterfeit coins. He replied, 'I know nothing at all about it.' He searched him and found £1 9s 7½d all in small coins. He told him he would have to go with him to Old Hill, when he became very violent, and rushed to the table to get a knife, but he put the handcuffs on him and brought him to Old Hill. He was present in the office when Ball was identified, and he might add that he went to Eaton Street, Hockley, but no such person as the prisoner Johnson was known there.

Honor Chance, wife of John Chance, 2, King Street, underground manager for Messrs. Hingley, said she changed half-a-crown for Emma Johnson on Monday afternoon. Emma came and told her that it was a bad half-crown, and took it back.

Eliza Johnson, wife of George Johnson, publican, KINGS HEAD, Elbow Street, said four men came to her house on Monday, and Ball asked for half-an-ounce of tobacco and a pipe, and gave her half-a-crown which she changed. PC Rowlands came at night, and she found the coin was a bad one.

Mr. Henn, Cradley Heath, said PC Litherly showed him three half-crowns which he examined and found to be bad. They were made principally of lead. PC Rowlands also showed him four half-crowns, and one two shilling piece which were counterfeit. The half-crowns were all from the same mould, dated 1875, and plated.

Prisoners were remanded to Stafford to appear on Wednesday."

[At the Staffordshire Quarter Sessions, William Ball (32) and John Johnson (27), both button makers, were each sentenced to twelve months, Ball pleading guilty.]

The toast of the evening, ‘Success and prosperity to Court Hope and Anchor,’ was proposed by Bro. Homer, CR, and was responded to by Bro. J. H. King, secretary, who said that the court had been in existence more than twenty-nine years, and had paid some very heavy claims, but was, nevertheless, in a good financial position. The number of members was 122, and the average age 33½. The officers’ health was proposed and responded to, and a very pleasant evening was spent.”

County Advertiser 28/12/1889

“The adjourned inquest was held at the QUEENS HEAD INN, Cradley Heath, yesterday, before Mr. F. W. Topham, deputy coroner, touching the death of Edith and John Thomas Westwood, infant daughter and son of Thomas Westwood, ironworks labourer, Corngreaves Road, Cradley Heath. The parents were brought up at Old Hill on Saturday last charged with manslaughter of the children, and were formally remanded till after the coroner’s proceedings. Inspector J. Thompson, of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children was now present. Dr. Thomas Standish stated with regard to the child Edith Westwood that he had made a post-mortem examination of the body on the 19th inst. He found the body was extremely emaciated. There were no external marks of violence. The eyes were wide open and very much sunken into the head. The length of the child was 26 inches, its weight, 8½ lbs; the average weight of a child of that age being just a little over 27 lbs. He was unable to discover any traces of disease whatever. The organs were more or less shrivelled. There was an entire absence of fat, and also of blood. Both stomach and intestines were perfectly empty and contracted, especially the stomach. Nothing, so far as his knowledge went, would produce those conditions except an entire absence of food – starvation really. He was told the child was two years and nine months old. With regard to the child John Thomas, Dr. Standish stated that he made the post-mortem on the 24th inst. He was told the child was one year and eleven months old. Mr. Westwood: It was one year and eight months old. He found the body somewhat emaciated, its weight being 11¾lbs, and the height 31 inches. There was a slight scar from a burn on the left side the face below the angle of the mouth. The internal organs were healthy with the exception of the lungs. The left lung was far advanced in inflammatory action, but the right one not so much. That, in his opinion, was the cause of death.
The Coroner, in summing up, said it was no part of his duty to point out to the jury that parents ought to provide their children with the clothing, lodging, &c, suitable to their station and condition in life, and if they did not do that, and anything should happen to those children the parents were responsible for the consequences. In this case one child, they were told, was two years and nine months old, and the other nearly two years old. They died within a few days of each other. He went on to review the evidence. In addition to the evidence of identification they had that of Police-constable Davies, and of Mr. Cooper, relieving officer, who visited the house of the parents of these children, and who spoke to the state in which they found the house, and also the children. Davis, he thought, said he went in December. There was no fire in the grate, and scarcely any clothes on the children. No food was in the house, and the filth and dirt were such that Davis did not consider it safe for him to continue any longer in the house than he could help. That evidence was confirmed in every respect by Mr. Cooper, who, he thought, went to the house in September. The latter went several times, and he had spoken to the state in which he found the children as regards absence of food and clothing. Mr. Cooper further told them that in consequence of representations which he made to the Dudley Board of Guardians, they instructed him to take proceedings against the parents, the result of which was that the wife was sent to gaol for three months and the husband for one month for neglecting their children. Having regard to the evidence of Dr. Standish on the child Edith, it seemed to him they could not have much doubt in that case. Dr. Standish distinctly explained the condition of the child. The internal parts were all healthy, but there was an entire absence of fat and blood, and that in his opinion death was entirely due to starvation. In that case they must hold the parents responsible. If the jury were of opinion that this state of things was brought about by malice it would be their duty to return a verdict of murder. If they thought – and he thought they would be justified in coming to that conclusion – that it was caused more by negligence, the jury would find a verdict of manslaughter. With regard to the other child he thought that in the case of the medical testimony their safest course would be to return a verdict that the child died from natural causes.

A juryman: I should like to ask whether the children are insured.

The Coroner: I don't think you should ask the parents any questions. They are on their trial.

In answer to another juryman who put the same question, the Coroner said he believed that as a matter of fact the children were insured, but that the insurance had lapsed.

The jury having consulted for a short while in private, returned a verdict in the case of Edith Westwood, that the child died from Starvation in consequence of the parents neglecting to supply her with food and clothing and medical attendance; and, further that the parents had, on 14th December, 1889, feloniously killed Edith Westwood. In the case of the child, John Thomas Westwood, the jury returned a verdict of Death from Natural Causes.

The accused were committed on the Coroner's warrant to the Staffordshire Assizes on a charge of Manslaughter. Afterwards they were taken before a magistrate at Old Hill and again formally remanded."

[At the Staffordshire Assizes in March 1890, Thomas and Alice Westwod appeared charged with 'on 14th December, 1889, at Rowley Regis, did kill and slay Edith Westwood; also charged at the Coroners' inquest.' They were found not guilty.]

"Alfred William Tibbetts was charged with permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises, the QUEENS HEAD INN, Corngreaves Road, on the 5th inst. Mr. Waldron prosecuted, and Mr. Tanfield defended.

Inspector Bishop said he visited the house about 9.10pm, and found in the bar three men, among them being a man named Tromans, who was drunk. They then went into the kitchen and found two men there, one of whom was named Johnson, with a pint cup before them.

Sergeant Hayward corroborated.

Mr. Tanfield said that defendant had no knowledge of Tromans being in the bar, but believed he was in the kitchen. No drink, he claimed, was supplied to him.

The Bench said that it was not such a bad case as the last [HEARTY GOOD FELLOW], and they should fine the defendant 40s and costs."

"At the Hales Owen Police Court, yesterday afternoon – before Messrs. H. D. Lea Smith and J. G. Reay, Richard Hay (56) and his wife, Ann Hay (56), both of Bell Vale, Hales Owen, were charged with stealing four £5 Bank of England notes belonging to William Walker, brick manufacturer, Bell Vale.

Prosecutor stated that at noon on the 3rd inst he put four £5 Bank of England notes in a small canvas bag ready for his wife to take to the bank at Cradley Heath, the bag being placed by the side of the basket. Shortly afterwards two men came round hawking oilcloth. His wife subsequently returned from the bank and told him the notes were missing. On the 5th inst Inspector Bishop showed him one of the notes, which he identified as his property by the initials 'W. W.' The prisoners lived in one of his cottages, about two hundred yards away. Mrs. Walker deposed to missing the notes out of her basket when she got to the bank.

Eliza Tibbetts, landlady of the QUEENS HEAD INN, Cradley Heath, said on the 3rd inst the woman asked her to change a £5 note, stating that it had been sent to her to divide between her and her sister. Upon finding the note marked 'W. W.' she gave information to the police. Inspector Bishop and Police-constable Pailing deposed to arresting the prisoners, who stated that they found the notes in Corngreaves Road. When prisoners' house was searched they found two of the missing £5 notes, £7 in gold, and some silver, making a total of £17 9s. In answer to the charge the male prisoner said, 'How can you make it stealing? I found them where I showed you; I took them to Cradley Heath, and then gave them to my wife.' The woman also said, 'My husband found them in the road and gave them to me.'

In defence, the male prisoner said he thought the notes were bad when he found them, and he sent his wife to try and get one cashed.

Prisoners were both committed for trial at the quarter sessions, bail being allowed."

“The Fire at the QUEENS HEAD AND RAILWAY HOTEL, Cradley Heath.

To the Editor of the Advertiser.

Sir. I would like to ask you to kindly rectify the statement which appeared in your paper last Saturday to the effect that the police were instantly on the scene. With all due respects to the police, I like to see praise given to whom it is due. Myself, together with other civilians, were on the scene first. We were immediately followed by Tustin and Denning, of the Fire Brigade, who prevented any further spread of fire. Other members of the brigade were in attendance, although not in uniform. None of the police arrived until the fire was out, and at once directed their attention to us civilians, ordering us off the premises after we had assisted in the work of extinguishing the fire. It is galling, sir, for those who did the work to see the police get the praise. I sincerely hope you will kindly insert the above, and oblige, yours truly, Fair Play.

“Old Cradley Heath. Chat with Mr. Thomas Hingley Parsons, sexton at St. Luke’s Church for Forty Years.....

Though in his 81st year, Mr. Parsons is wonderfully virile and active, the keenness of his intellect and memory is unabated, and he willingly discoursed upon the Cradley Heath of his younger days.....

In those days, he added, the inhabitants of the district were not quarter so many as they are now, and the only public houses were the HOLLY BUSH, High Street; Bannister’s Newtown; ‘Benny Fiddler’s’; SALUTATION, Lomey Town; BEEHIVE, Graingers Lane; and QUEENS HEAD, Corngreaves Road.....

Touching on matters relating to the public peace, Mr. Parsons recalled a burglary of many years ago at the QUEENS HEAD INN. ‘Two men,’ he remarked, ‘had arranged to ransack the premises, but the landlord received a warning, and a policeman was in readiness awaiting their arrival. The struggle was fierce, the policeman defending himself with a poker, while one of the men was armed with an iron bar, with which he had broken into the house.’ ‘Aye,’ Mr. Parsons added, ‘it was a terrible sight to see the man afterwards, for his face was knocked to pieces.’”

“At Old Hill Police Court, on Wednesday, William Thomas Clews, the manager for and on behalf of the Home Brewery, Ltd., Quarry Bank, was summoned for making a false mark on a barrel of beer delivered to a licensed trader at Cradley Heath, for making a false statement relating to the beer and for failing to plainly and durably mark in figures on the barrel the maximum price at which such beer could be sold in a public bar.

Mr. Turner (Beale & Co.), for the prosecution, said a barrel of beer, which was marked at 6d, was delivered from defendant's brewery to the QUEENS HEAD INN, Cradley Heath, a tied house managed by Frederick Piper, and an invoice showing that it retailed at 6d a pint. Complaints were made by the customers regarding the character of the beer, and the Enforcement Officer obtained a sample, which upon analysis was found to be 5d beer. The offence was calculated to get the manager into trouble, and the public were entitled to protection, as beer was already dear enough.

Mr. J. M. Wylie, for the defendant expressed regret. The offences were the result of a mistake. During the brew something went wrong with the temperature, causing a leakage of water into the beer. It was originally brewed at 6d beer, but when the mishap was discovered defendant gave orders for it to be retailed at 4d per pint. Unfortunately this barrel of beer became detached from the others, and by mistake was sent to the house of Piper by the cellarman at the brewery. When defendant's attention was called to the fact that customers complained about the state of the beer he gave instructions to Piper to sell it at 4d per pint, but by this time the beer had become tainted with the wood, a common thing when it was placed in barrels made with American wood, and the beer was useless. There was no idea of profiteering on the part of Clews, and a technical offence only had been committed. Clews, in evidence, said his loss on the 60 barrels through the mishap was over £100. He could not account for the barrel being sent to Piper's house as 6d beer. None of the other barrels affected were sold as 6d beer.

The Chairman (Mr. H. Lench) said the Bench realised that a bona-fide mistake had been made, but a fine of £5 5s would be imposed in the case for making a false mark on the barrel. The other two offences would be treated as one, and a fine of £2 2s inflicted. Special costs of £6 16s 6d would be allowed, the total amount being £14 3s 6d."

"Damages amounting to about £300 was caused by a fire which occurred at the QUEENS HEAD AND RAILWAY INN, Corngreaves Road, Cradley Heath, yesterday afternoon.

The outbreak was confined to the bedroom of the public house, and is supposed to be due to a quantity of soot having fallen down the chimney and ignited the rug and floor.

The Rowley Regis Fire Brigade were summoned, but before the flames could be extinguished the whole of the furniture was destroyed. It is stated that the licensee, Mr. F. Piper, as a result of the fire lost £300 in Treasury notes, the takings for the past month, which had been put away in a drawer in the destroyed bedroom ready to be paid to the brewery company."

"Owing to the late arrival of Mr. Arthur Shaw, who was applying for a transfer from Thomas Edward Evans, the license of a well-known Cradley Heath public house, the QUEENS HEAD AND RAILWAY HOTEL, was in danger of being withdrawn at Old Hill yesterday.

Shaw, who is secretary of the Cradley Heath FC, was not present when his name was called, and Mr. Evans (the ex-Cradley Heath full-back) said he did not know where he was.

Supt. Elliot: You had better go and find him, because if he is not here in a few minutes I shall ask for his licence to be withdrawn. The magistrates can't be kept waiting like this.

Mr. Shaw had not arrived by the time the other business of the Court was finished. Supt. Elliot then sent his car to Shaw's house, and when the applicant arrived he explained that he had misunderstood the date.

In granting the transfer the Chairman said Shaw had narrowly escaped having the license washed out."

“Joseph Harding, landlord of the OLD BREWERY INN, Garratts Lane, was charged with permitting gambling on his licensed premises on the 24th ult. Mr. W. Waldron prosecuted on behalf of the police authorities.

Police-constable Moss, of the Bilston Force, said he went to the OLD BREWERY INN, kept by the defendant on the night in question. Witness was disguised as a working man, and in the tap room saw six men. On one of the tables two of the men were playing at dominoes. While in the room witness heard one of the men say ‘This is for a pint of fourpenny.’ At the time the game was being played two of their companions made a bet of 2s to 1s on the game. At the conclusion of the game the man who had lost paid for the pint of fourpenny, which was supplied by the landlord, who was present all the time the game was played. Police-constable Blackshaw corroborated.

Defendant, in answer to the charge, said that he knew nothing about the charge, and was not present when the game was played. The Bench said there was a previous conviction against the defendant, for supplying a drunken man with beer. Taking that into consideration, they could do no less than fine him £5, and £2 8s 10d costs, and endorse his license.”

“Joseph Foley, landlord of the OLD BREWERY INN, Garratts Lane, was summoned for permitting drunkenness in his house on Bank Holiday. Mr. Waldron prosecuted, and Mr. Benbow Hebbert (Birmingham) defended.

Inspector Bishop and Police-constable Wickstead stated that upon visiting the defendant’s house they found three men named Scriven, Edge and Perks drunk, and upon leaving the house they were seen to stagger. The defence was that the men were sober, and after hearing a number of witnesses, Mr. Bassano said the magistrates were of opinion that some of the witnesses for the defence had committed perjury, and, further, that the time had arrived when they should order proceedings to be instituted against persons who had no regard whatever for an oath. More disgraceful perjury he had never heard. In reply to the magistrates, Superintendent Woollaston said the house had for years had been badly managed, but defendant had only held the license six months. Mr. Bassano said the magistrates considered it a bad case, and they should not be doing their duty unless they inflicted the maximum penalty of £10 and costs. They should also order the license to be endorsed. The fine and costs amounted to £11 17s 6d.

“The Licensing Session for Old Hill division was held yesterday.....

Police-inspector Bishop reported that there were 163 license-holders in the division. Thirty-eight transfers had taken place since last licensing meeting. Five licensed victuallers and four beerhouse keepers had been fined, and 403 persons had been charged with drunkenness, three of whom were discharged. Mr. Bassano (presiding magistrate) said The report for the year was not at all satisfactory, as it reflected discreditably upon the licensed victuallers. He pointed out that it was becoming a very serious matter to have an increase of 138 cases of drunkenness in one year. All the licenses would be renewed with the exception of. . . . Joseph Foley, of the OLD BREWERY INN, Old Hill.”

“Adjourned Licensing Sessions. . . .

Mr. Waldron applied for the renewal of the license of the OLD BREWERY INN, Garratts Lane, Old Hill, to Joseph Foley, jun. Inspector Bishop, in reply to the magistrates, said there were three convictions against the license – the first being in 1887, the second in 1888, both of which were committed by a previous holder of the license. During the present year the defendant had been fined £10 and costs, and his license was endorsed for permitting drunkenness.

Mr. Waldron: And how has the house been conducted since?

Inspector Bishop: Very well. I have had no occasion to complain.

Mr. T. Homer opposed the renewal of the license on the ground that the house was, owing to its being badly conducted, a pest and a nuisance to the district, and, in the interests of the public, he contended that the magistrates should not renew the license. He was prepared to admit that if persons who properly conducted their houses were called upon to forfeit their licenses they should be compensated, but the holder of the present license was not entitled to any consideration.

Mr. Waldron urged the renewal of the license, and stated that the applicant had valued the public house at a cost of upwards of £1,000, and the house was at the present time one of the best houses in the district, and as the whole of his savings had been expended in improving the house, it would be inflicting a great hardship upon him to refuse his license simply because he had committed an offence. It was only right that he should say that his friend did not appear in the interests of the public, but for the owner of an adjoining public house, who appeared to be desirous of kicking the applicant when he was down.

Mr. Bassano said the magistrates had, after serious consideration, decided to give the applicant another chance and renew the license.”

It was rebuilt and renamed QUEENS HEAD.

“The first annual meeting of the Old Hill Wanderers Football Club was held on Tuesday evening at Mr. J. Foley's, QUEENS HEAD INN, when arrangements were made to carry on the club in a more systematic manner than heretofore. Mr. W. Thomas was in the chair, and Mr. G. Mills was elected president, with Messrs. Hall Flemings, Chapman, J. Attwood, W. Jones, L. T. Bishop, and J. Potts, as vice-presidents. Mr. F. W. Baker, of Cradley Heath, was elected secretary and J. Foley treasurer, while sound financial and match committees were also formed.

On Wednesday evening a supper was given at headquarters by Mr. E. H. Boilstone, to which about thirty-five sat down, and the provision made reflected great credit on the donor and caterer. Most of the players were entertained, and after having enjoyed the feast, a convivial evening followed. Mr. E. H. Boilstone was in the chair, and after some appropriate opening remarks, the toast of Her Majesty the Queen was proposed by Mr. F. W. Baker. Toasts to Mr. Boilstone, Mr. Foley, the officials, were given, and of prosperity of the club.

During the evening the chairman impressed upon the players and officials the necessity of working in unison with each other, the opinion being supported by several prominent members of the committee, and the unanimous verdict was ‘that all should put their shoulder to the wheel.’

A smoking concert followed, and songs and recitations were rendered by Messrs. Billingham, W. Thomas (who gave a Welsh song on ‘Love and Marriage’ admirably), W. Foley, F. W. Baker, W. Harvey, G. Wesson, and W. Jones.

The meeting on the whole was most enjoyable, terminating with the usual vote of thanks, and the merry party dispersed just as the clock struck eleven. Mr. E. H. Boilstone announced his intention under existing circumstances, of giving an annual dinner to the club, and the appreciation of the kind offer was shown by repeated musical honours. This, however, is only one of the many kindnesses exhibited by Mr. Boilstone who is one of the most valued supporters connected with the club.”

“The annual adjourned licensing sessions for Rowley Regis petty sessional division was held on Wednesday.....

Mr. Joseph Foley, landlord of the QUEENS HEAD INN, Garratts Lane, Old Hill, applied through Mr. Waldron for a full license, and Mr. Shakespeare opposed the application.

Mr. Waldron said in making that application two questions would have to be considered, whether there was any necessity for the license, and whether the applicant could make out his case. There was a constant demand for spirits and wines at applicant's house, which was also the headquarters of the Old Hill Football Club.

Mr. Foley gave evidence and said he was the owner of the house, upon which he had spent £1,800 in alterations.

Cross-examined: He wanted the license because people wanted spirits, and not to create drunkenness. There were ten licensed houses in the immediate locality. He had been convicted three times, and the last time he was fined 10s and costs and his license endorsed.

Mr. Shakespeare: I don't think I need say any more.

Mr. Bassano: No, we have heard quite enough. We cannot think for a moment of granting the license.”

County Advertiser 3/2/1894

“On Tuesday morning Mr. Hooper, coroner, held an inquest at the NEPTUNE INN, Powke Lane, Old Hill, upon the body of Elijah Poole (21), labourer, Churchbridge, Oldbury, who was drowned in the Birmingham Canal on Sunday evening, close by the NEPTUNE INN.

Bennett Lowe, labourer, Oldbury, said deceased was his step-son, and worked at Albright and Wilson’s. About 10.30 on Sunday last he went in company with a neighbour named Arthur Pearson to Old Hill on a visit to some relatives of Pearson. Deceased said they should be back by dinner time, but he did not come. Pearson came back about a quarter to twelve at night, at which time witness was in bed, and he heard his wife ask Pearson, ‘Have you bought Elijah back?’ Pearson replied, ‘No, he is drowned.’ Witness then got up and went to Pearson’s house. Pearson, who had different clothes on to what he had in the morning, told him that they had walked into the ‘cut,’ and he had got out the other side; that when he got out he shouted for Elijah, but could get no answer. The two men were on good terms with each other.

William Pearson said he asked deceased on Sunday morning to go with him to his mother’s at the Saltwells for a walk. Deceased refused at first, but afterwards consented. They called on their way at his sister’s, where they had some porter. After a quarter of an hour’s stay they proceeded to his mother’s where they had dinner and some ale mixed with ginger beer. They stayed about twenty minutes there, and afterwards went to the MAYPOLE INN at Cradley Forge. There they had five or six jugs of ale, two or three of which were had after half-past two o’clock – closing time. They paid for them between them, and the landlord paid for some. At closing time witness walked out of the house and walked in again. He told the landlord they had come the three miles and were travellers. They took away from the house a pint of rum.

In answer to Inspector Bishop witness said they were not much the worse for what they had had, but he did not think they were sober.

Witness, continuing his evidence, said they reached his sister’s house about four o’clock, and had tea. They mixed their tea with the rum which they had brought from the MAYPOLE.

The Coroner: How many partook of the tea? – Witness: About five or six.

Witness said they remained at his sister’s house till about a quarter to six, and then proceeded homewards. On the way home they called at the BRIDGE INN, where they were joined by a man named Henry Homer. Here they had about three quarts between them, and left about seven o’clock. They were then much the worse for beer, and Poole ‘showed it more than he did.’ They afterwards went into the QUEENS HEAD INN, kept by Mr. Joseph Foley, where they were refused liquor, for which they asked, and they were refused at another public house. They had in their possession a pair of pigeons, and as they were coming up Powke Lane, deceased was talking about putting up a pen for them. They walked straight into the canal instead of keeping to the road. Witness swam across to the far side and scrambled out. He then shouted ‘Elijah’ several times, but could not get any answer. He was dazed, and could not find Poole, who he thought might have got out.

The Coroner: Yes; you were dazed through drink.

Witness, continuing, said he lay down under a hedge, and subsequently was taken to a house, where he changed his clothes.

In reply to Inspector Bishop, witness said that after he got out of the water and lay down, afraid to get up in case he should roll into the canal.

The Coroner: Through having too much to drink? – Witness: Yes, and the cold. I did not know whether Poole was in or out of the canal.

A Juryman: You are in the habit of getting drunk? – Witness: Yes.

And you have been convicted by the magistrates many times? – Yes.

And fining you has not done you any good? – This job will, for I will never taste drink again.

Did you say to the deceased, ‘You can’t stand any more drink, I will drown you?’ – No, I did not. It was not the first time Poole had got drunk.

Police-constable O’Leary deposed that at 9.45, on Sunday night he heard that a man was in the canal at Jones’s Bridge, and with the assistance of Police-constable Wickstead and four other men he dragged the canal and found Poole’s body. Pearson, who was taken into a private house to have his clothes changed, was drunk. He saw him there, and he asked how Poole got into the water, and Pearson said, ‘We walked into the canal by accident, and Poole was too drunk to get out.’

The Coroner said there could be no reasonable doubt that the deceased died from drowning, and there were many serious matters connected with the affair. The two men undoubtedly went into various public houses, and had such a quantity of drink that both of them must have been in a beastly state of intoxication when they got into the canal. The question of any breach of the law having occurred would be inquired into by another court. The evidence showed that deceased got into the canal, and they had to consider whether he got there by accident.

The Jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death, and that the deceased was intoxicated when he got into the canal.

The Jury wished the Coroner to reprimand Pearson on his drunkenness, and on his being called into the room, Mr. Hooper said to him that the jury considered he was in a great measure responsible for his companion’s death. It was a very serious matter, as Pearson induced the deceased to go with him. It appeared to him that he (Pearson) was considerably addicted to drink, and if he was again brought before the justices, and he (the Coroner) knew of it, he would get the magistrates to inflict a heavy penalty on him. The only way he could mark his sense of such conduct as Pearson’s was by disallowing his expenses, and he should take that course. He hoped the occurrence would be a warning to him for the rest of his life.

Pearson said he would never touch drink again.”

[The landlord of the MAYPOLE INN (Halesowen file) was fined for selling intoxicating liquor during prohibited hours, they not being bona fide travellers.]

“The adjourned licensing sessions for the Rowley petty sessional division were held on Wednesday.....

Mr. J. W. Clulow applied, on behalf of John Bushby, landlord of the QUEENS HEAD INN, Garratts Lane, Old Hill, for a full license. Mr. B. Shakespeare opposed the application.

Mr. Clulow said these were very extensive and imposing looking premises, and consisted of a fine large elevation, three storey high. This was an old beerhouse, and until within a recent period it was the most important house in the district. It had very extensive accommodation, and it practically had the trade of two streets. The splendid arrangements of the public house made it a model one, and he should ask the Bench to grant the license.

John Bushby was called.

At this point Mr. Bassano said the Bench took this view. There were a great deal too many licenses in the parish, but it might become necessary that they should be more widely distributed, and when there was such an application as the present one before the Court, such as the enlargement of any premises, the first question that would be asked would be what other licenses would they be prepared to surrender? He did not like Birmingham for a good many things, but he did think that was a very good thing. If it was carried out it would undoubtedly be a benefit. It was useless proceeding unless the applicants were prepared to make a concession.

Mr. Clulow asked the Bench to be allowed to mention the application half an hour hence, and during the interval he would consult the owners as to what course they would pursue in face of the intimation from the Bench.

At a later stage in the proceedings, Mr. Clulow said he had communicated with his clients and they had decided they would renew the application at the next licensing meeting.”

It appeared that on the afternoons of these dates PC Kent and another man visited the house and found a game called ‘tip it’ being played. Kent was in plain clothes, and he and his companion were invited to take part in the game. They did so, and after a time the game was changed to one of ‘cork pitching.’ In both games the losing side paid for beer, which was supplied by the landlord, who had been sitting in the room watching the games. On the second day the landlord supplied the corks to play with.

Belcher, the Liberal candidate for the borough of Dudley, was announced to speak, but he was unable to attend the meeting and sent an apology. The Chairman, speaking of the representation of the borough in the House of Commons, stated the working classes wanted a man who knew their needs, one who would sympathise with them and be prepared to help them. They had such a man in Mr. W. Belcher, and if they returned him to Parliament he would assist in passing measures for the uplifting of the working classes. Mr. Claughton was a friend of the working class (laughter). He belonged to a firm who were given to upsetting people’s property and wrecking working men’s dwellings (cries of shame). He was not the kind of man to represent them, and they should leave no stone unturned until they had sent Mr. Belcher to Parliament. They knew now who their opponent was to be, and he hoped Mr. Claughton would fight on gentlemanly lines, they knew Mr. Belcher would treat him with the utmost courtesy. Other addresses followed. A vote of confidence was passed in Mr. Belcher, and votes of thanks to the chairman and to the various speakers terminated the proceedings.”

“On Wednesday the annual licensing session for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held at the Court House..... Superintendent Spendlove had given notice that he should oppose the following licenses.....

Mr. Thompson, of Dudley, appeared for Edward Stevens of the QUEENS HEAD INN, Garratts Lane, Old Hill, whose license was objected to.

Mr. Cooksey produced the register, which stated that on the 11th of April, 1886, there was a conviction for permitting gambling, and a penalty of £5 and costs imposed, the license also being endorsed. On December 11th 1887, the tenant was convicted for selling to a drunken person and fined 10s and costs. On the 13th of August, 1890, there was a conviction recorded for permitting drunkenness, and a fine of £10 and costs was inflicted and the license again endorsed. On the 9th April the tenant at that time was convicted of permitting gaming and fined £5 and costs, the license being endorsed for the third time. Since 1886 the house had been transferred on fourteen occasions.

Superintendent Spendlove, in support of the objection, pointed out that there was another public house next door, and it was quite a congested district so far as public houses were concerned.

Inspector Hodgkinson, in reply to Mr. Thompson, said the present tenant had conducted the house very well since the conviction. The Bench decided to reserve their decision until the whole of the objections had been heard License renewed.”

“The adjourned annual licensing sessions for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held on Wednesday.....

Mr. Bassano said the bench had under consideration the nine houses, five of which were objected to on the ground of convictions and four others on the ground of redundancy. It had raised a very large question, and the magistrates had had before them the consideration of the parish as a whole. He threw out a suggestion to the trade and owners that the matter should be considered from their point of view during the next twelve months. The magistrates would be prepared to consider any counter proposition that might come from the brewers which could be laid before them next year. In order to simplify the proceedings that day the following licenses would be renewed.....

QUEENS HEAD INN, Old Hill.”

“An application was made by Mr. W. Waldron for the transfer of the license of the QUEENS HEAD INN, Old Hill, from John Busby to Joseph Smith. In reply to Superintendent Johnson applicant denied that he was a betting man. The application was granted, Mr. Waldron remarking that he would give an undertaking that nothing of that kind should take place on the premises.”

“The principal meeting of the Staffordshire County Compensation Authority, adjourned from the 11th inst.....

The decision of the local licensing magistrates to refuse the renewal of the FOX HUNT alehouse, Old Hill, tenant, Arthur E. Jew, was opposed.....

In opening the case, Mr. Lawrence said that the house was fully licensed, and he thought the main fact to be borne in mind in coming to a decision was the situation of the adjoining licensed houses. There was one – the QUEENS HEAD (a beerhouse) – actually next door. There was another full licence – the BRITISH OAK – only 51 yards away, and there were others within a short distance.....”

“A destructive gas explosion occurred late on Wednesday night at the QUEENS HEAD INN, High Street, Old Hill. It appears that about 10.45pm the landlord, Silas Chambers, who only took over the management of the house that day, was talking in the smoke room with two customers, Messrs. John Rock and Charles Priest, when they were startled by a loud report. Leaking gas had been fired by a flame, and the shock was felt throughout the house. The door of the smoke room, which was closed at the time, was completely blown out and smashed to splinters. The windows were all broken, blinds burnt, and the pictures dislodged from the wall, which cracked from end to end, the brickwork being pushed out in many places. The woodwork of the large windows in the bar was displaced, and the windows in the kitchen and scullery were also smashed. There were also signs upstairs of the severe shaking which the structure had experienced, and glass was scattered in all directions. The landlord and the two customers narrowly escaped serious injury. Chambers was sent reeling into the bar, burnt on the face and arms, and sustained a severe wrist injury, and the other men were considerably shaken and slightly burnt. Their escape from further hurt was miraculous, as they were in the room which was most affected by the explosion. It is said that for some time gas has been known to escape in the smoke room, but the exact spot could not be located. It is thought that the gas had accumulated behind the skirting boards and the wall cavities, and had gradually risen until into contact with the gas. The damage to property is estimated at about £150.”

Evening Despatch 9/4/1941

“The plea that he thought that if gave a tradesman calling on him on business a glass of beer there would be no offence in law if the beer was drunk after closing time, was advanced at Old Hill Police Court today.

This explanation was made by Richard Edge, licensee of the QUEENS HEAD, High Street, Old Hill, who was summoned for aiding and abetting in the consumption of beer after hours.

Three tradesmen, Victor Edmonds, of 116, Halesowen Road, Old Hill; Thomas Hadley, of 39, Hickman Avenue, Old Hill; and William Dumolo, of Ingestre, Birmingham New Road, Dudley, summoned for consuming, were stated to have called at the house just before two o'clock and to have each been given a drink by the licensee.

PC Venables, looking through the window shortly before 2-30, said he saw the three men and the licensee playing cards. He saw Edwards drink from his glass, and there were full glasses of freshly-drawn beer in front of the other two.

Submitting that there was no intention to defy the law, Mr. R. Baker said Edge gave his tradesmen a friendly drink, but they had apparently been 'a little slow in the swallow.'

Each defendant was fined £2, the licensee, in addition, being ordered to pay £5 5s costs.”

“Thomas Pool, William Pool, and Richard Pool, were charged by David Parsons, landlord of the RAILWAY INN, Blackheath, with refusing to quit his house, on the 26th ult, when requested. Complainant said that the three brothers were in his house about half-past 8 o'clock. They began to quarrel among themselves, and he was afraid of a disturbance and sent for the police. He ordered them out, and they refused to go. After some difficulty he got Thomas out, and he returned, and they all began to fight. William and Richard were not so bad. Fined 1s each and costs, or default seven days.”

County Advertiser 29/9/1877

David Parsons of the RAILWAY INN, Oldbury Road, Blackheath, applied for a six-days' spirit license. Mr. Hayes supported and Mr. Addison opposed the application, the latter appearing on behalf of Mr. Laister, owner of the HANDEL HOTEL. Mr. Hayes urged that his client had established a car and vehicle agency, and his house being near the railway station, and not near to any old-licensed house, accommodation of the nature asked for was necessary. Mr. Addison's cross-examination elicited from the applicant that his house was a little over a hundred yards from the HANDEL HOTEL; but he did not think there were seven beerhouses within three hundred yards of it. The magistrates' clerk did not think the latter fact applied to the present case, the application being for a spirit license. Mr. Hayes presented a testimonial, signed by residents of the neighbourhood, in support of his client's application. There was no opposition made to it other than by Mr. Addison. Application refused.”

“John Edward Partridge, landlord of the RAILWAY INN, Blackheath, was charged with permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises, and also with selling ale to a drunken person, on the 18th inst. Mr. Waldron prosecuted, and explained that on the date in question Police constables Jewson and Wood visited defendant’s premises, and in the taproom found two men named Jones and Taylor drunk, and the latter was drinking out of a pint cup of ale.

For the defence Mr. J. S. Sharpe urged that the men were not drunk, but excited over a previous row. The case was dismissed. George Taylor and William Jones, were each fined 10s, for being drunk on the above licensed premises.”

“Edwin Heath, landlord of the RAILWAY INN, Oldbury Road, Blackheath, was charged with keeping open his house during prohibited hours on the 6th inst.

Sergeant Wingfield said that at 11.30 on Saturday night, the 6th inst, he visited the RAILWAY INN, Oldbury Road, Blackheath, occupied by the defendant. In the back kitchen he found a man named Lewis. Lewis was sitting down at a table upon which was a pint cup of ale. The landlord was present, and witness asked him how he accounted for having Lewis there drinking at that time of night. He replied, ‘We have been to a cricket match together at Stourbridge, and we had a little private business to do, and came into this back room to ourselves to do it. Lewis has had nothing to drink here since 11 o’clock tonight.’ The man Lewis at the same time said, ‘We had a little private business to do, and we came in this room to do it.’ Witness had visited the house at 10.30 and saw Lewis in the bar drinking.

Cross-examined: He did not say what the business was. Witness saw Lewis drink twice.

Mr. Waldron said the facts were not disputed, but the case was not one of the bad cases which really called for the interference of the Court. Defendant and Lewis had been out to a cricket match together, defendant having supplied the brake to convey the team, and they were settling up the business, as they were officers of the club. The beer was sold before eleven o’clock.

William Lewis, of Blackheath, was charged with being on licensed premises during prohibited hours on the same date.

The Bench considered that a technical offence had been committed, and fined each of the defendants 1s and costs.”

County Advertiser 29/8/1896

“Alfred Heath, Blackheath, was summoned for being drunk on the licensed premises of Edwin Heath, landlord of the RAILWAY INN, Blackheath. Police-constable Poultney proved the offence, and said the landlord was defendant’s brother. Defendant was drunk in the back premises of the public house. Fined 10s.”

County Advertiser 12/2/1898

“Mary Ann Hingley, Market Place, Blackheath, wife of a well-known tradesman in the neighbourhood, was charged with stealing 3d on the 20th ult, and 2½d on the 21st ult, from the till of Mr. Jethro Sidaway, landlord of the RAILWAY INN, Oldbury Road, Blackheath. The case was heard last week, but as the Bench could not agree it was put off till this week. Mr. Waldron appeared for complainant, and Mr. C. H. Darby, of West Bromwich, defended.

The evidence for the prosecution was to the effect that about half-past ten in the morning of the 20th ult, prisoner came into his house and went into the bar. She called for a glass of ale, and the landlord went out of the bar, leaving prisoner alone in the room. The landlord, who was in the kitchen, and who could see into the bar from where he was standing, saw the prisoner open his till, which was in the bar, and put her hand inside. Prisoner afterwards left, and when the landlord subsequently counted his money he found that threepence was missing. The next day prisoner again came to the house, and again went into the bar. Mrs. Sidaway saw the prisoner open and shut the till drawer, and after prisoner had gone away she counted the money, and found a halfpenny short. Prisoner went into the house again about half-past five. She went into the tap room, and then into the bar. The complainant went into the cellar, leaving his wife, Mary Louisa Hipkiss, his sister-in-law, and a servant girl named Willetts in the kitchen. Mrs. Hipkiss then saw prisoner with one hand on the door and another in the till. Mrs. Hipkiss heard money rattle and went into the bar. She said, 'Who is at the till?' Prisoner replied, 'There is no one here but me.' Mrs. Hipkiss replied, 'I thought the child was in.' The till was divided into two compartments; one being devoted to silver. The prisoner went away, but returned. The prosecutor came up from the cellar, and prisoner asked if she could see the master. Mrs. Sidaway said she could, and prisoner then asked the landlord whether he had missed any money. Prosecutor said he had, and told her it was not the first time she had been at the till, because he saw her with his own eyes the previous day. Prisoner said, 'Why should I do a thing like that?' Information was then given to the police, and Police-sergeant Onions went to the house and charged prisoner with the theft, to which prisoner replied, 'All right, I will go with you.'

In cross-examination, prosecutor said he did not say anything to prisoner on the first occasion. It was out of regard for her in the neighbourhood. She had lived in Blackheath for 26 years, and he had known her for many years. Her husband was a wealthy man, and she had no occasion to want money.

Mrs. Hipkiss, in cross-examination, said her child was not in the room on the 21st ult. When she said she thought it was the child, it was an excuse.

Mr. Darby said he must draw the attention of the Bench to the improbability of the story told by the prosecution. It was an extraordinary story, and had been rehearsed so often that they had convinced themselves that prisoner had committed the theft. But he thought it was very strange that as prosecutor was so convinced of the guilt of prisoner he did not accuse her of the theft directly after he saw her at the till, and not only that, but on two occasions afterwards prisoner was not accused of the theft. She had no notice of having been suspected until the Friday evening. It was said this was done out of respect to her, but he thought that was not the act of a friend. He rather thought it was because of complainant not being sure that prisoner had committed the theft. There was no motive for such an act, as prisoner's husband was in a good position, and prisoner herself was well-known in the neighbourhood, where she had lived for many years. Prisoner protested her innocence, and refused to make any apology. He submitted that if the Bench thought there was any doubt in the case they should give prisoner the benefit.

The Bench retired to consult, and upon returning into Court, Mr. Walker intimated that they considered the prisoner guilty. She would be fined £5 and costs, or one month."

"There was a regular row at the RAILWAY INN, Blackheath, on Saturday, and as a result, several charges of assault etc, were issued.

Hezekiah Plant and Henry Skitt, Oldbury Road, Blackheath, were charged with assaulting Caroline Plant, on May 18th. The complainant stated a dispute arose in the house, and alleged that Skitt caught hold of her by the head, damaged a new hat, and pulled out a handful of hair. Hezekiah Plant, her brother-in-law, did not hurt her much. He only pushed her into the fire place, but, she added, 'I was served 'orrid.' Plant said it was a family affair, which arose over some photos of a brother of his, nicknamed 'Darkey,' who was at the front. The Bench decided to hear some other cases before adjudicating upon this. They were: Benjamin Plant, of Rowley Village, was charged with being disorderly upon, and refusing to quit, the licensed premises of Jethro Sidaway, on May 18th, and with assaulting Sarah Sidaway and Alice Skitt at the same time and place; and Richard Plant, of Siviters Lane, Rowley, was charged with assaulting Sarah Bastable, Caroline Plant's mother. In the charges against Benjamin Plant, Mrs. Sidaway said defendant went into the house, and commenced the row about the photos, she went into the room, and he then struck her, and also refused to quit when asked. Alice Skitt corroborated this evidence.

In the charge against Richard Plant, Sarah Bastable said she was in the room while the dispute was on, and defendant caught hold of her and swung her backwards, and she fell against the screen, hurting her head. Defendant said his sons were fighting, and he simply pushed the old woman away from them. He did not strike or assault her in any way. Jethro Sidaway was called to support this evidence.

The charges against Hezekiah Plant and Henry Skitt were dismissed. Benjamin Plant was fined 10s for refusing to quit, and 10s each in the charges of assault, and the charge against Richard Plant was also dismissed."

I am unaware of my grandfather's relationship with Archie, or for how long Archie was involved in the business.

From 1919 until 1924 Jimmy was the licensee of the RAILWAY INN public house on Oldbury Road in Blackheath, but he and his family had to leave when Arthur Bagnall, a member of the Salvation Army, notified the brewery of the illegal gambling that had been going on there. Jimmy, his wife May and their two young children (Ivan and my mother, Nora) left the RAILWAY INN and moved to live for a while with May's family in Oldbury Road, where the betting business continued. “Eli Hill [sic], landlord of the RAILWAY TAVERN, Cradley, was summoned for having his house open on Sunday the 27th inst, during prohibited hours. Police-constable John Dix said he visited defendant’s house in company with Police-constable Craddock, and four men were sitting in the kitchen. There was a quart jug full of ale on the table, and on witness going into the room, one of the party threw another quart jug on the floor and broke it. It contained ale, and a glass was put under a bench. Mr. Mills, in reply to the Bench, said that defendant had not been convicted, but he had had several complaints against him, and the police were unable to detect him before. Being the first conviction, the Bench fined him twenty shillings and costs.”

“James Littlewood, labourer, was charged by Eli Hill, landlord of the RAILWAY TAVERN, Corngreaves Road, with having been disorderly on his premises and with having refused to quit the same when ordered to do so by him. Mr. Stokes appeared for the prosecutor, and Mr. Addison defended.

The prosecutor gave evidence to the effect that on the night of Saturday, the 2nd inst, the defendant came to his house in a drunken state, and because he refused to supply him with ale, he became disorderly. Witness attempted to eject him, but he was very violent and struck him several times. Witness’s wife also assisted him in getting the man out, and he threatened her with a brick which he snatched up.

Cross-examined: His wife did not strike the defendant on the head with an iron bar several times. Did not say when he first saw him, ‘Here’s the b—— informer.’

By Mr. Stokes: Would swear that his wife never had an iron bar in her hand at the time of the occurrence.

Mrs. Ann Smith said that she went into Mr. Hill’s house on the evening in question about a quarter before ten o’clock and saw the defendant there in the kitchen. He appeared to be causing a disturbance, and Mr. Hill came in and told the defendant if he didn’t go he would put him out of the house. A struggle then took place, and the defendant struck the landlord several times, causing him to bleed ‘fearfully.’ Mrs. Hill went towards him, and he threatened to knock her face in with a brick which he had in his hand. Mrs. Hill took the brick from him, and as she did so the defendant fell backwards to the floor.

Cross-examined: She (Mrs. Hill) had no such thing as a crowbar in her hand. She did not supply him with any drink. The brick which defendant had he pulled from near the front door, where it was loose.

Phoebe Hill, the wife of the prosecutor, deposed that defendant came into her house and asked for some ale, but as he appeared to have had sufficient she refused to supply it. He then pulled some money from his pocket, and wanted to gamble with it, on seeing which her husband ordered him to leave. He would not go, and resisted her husband’s endeavours to eject him. He afterwards caught up a brick, which witness took from him. He fell down when she did so.

Cross-examined: Did not strike him with an iron bar.

This being the case for the prosecution, Mr. Addison addressed the Bench for the defence, urging that the facts were totally different from what had been stated. He was instructed that his client went to the house quite sober, in order to see a man there. As soon as he went in, the landlord, Hill, cried out ‘Here comes the b—— informer,’ and commenced abusing him. He afterwards knocked him about, and struck him several times in forcing him out of the house. Mrs. Hill also struck him violent blows on the head with an iron bar, doing him very severe injury. There would be charges preferred against the two Hills when the facts he had stated would be proved.

Eli Hill and Phoebe Hill were then charged with assaulting Littlewood on the date and at the place above referred to. Littlewood gave evidence in accordance with Mr. Addison’s statement, and a witness named Tromans was called to support it. He said he saw Mrs. Hill strike Littlewood on the head with some iron instrument, and he caught hold of the weapon, but could not take it from her.

Police-constable Cooper, who said that the last witness called him on the night on question in a drunken condition, was called by Mr. Stokes.

After hearing the whole of the evidence, the magistrates had very little hesitation in dismissing the charges against Mr. and Mrs. Hill. They fined Littlewood for refusing to quit the former’s house 20s and costs; in default, a month’s imprisonment.”

“Apology. To Mr. George Goring.

Whereas I have made use of certain Slanderous Expressions reflecting upon the character of Mr. George Goring, of Corngreaves, I beg to Retract such expressions, and express my regret for having made use of them, as I am well aware they are utterly untrue, and without foundation, and in consideration of Mr. George Goring withdrawing the legal proceedings he has commenced against me, I have paid his Solicitor’s costs, and authorise him to publish this Apology in the newspapers.

Dated this 24th day of December, 1877.

Phoebe Hill, RAILWAY TAVERN, Cradley Heath.”

“A charge was preferred by the police against Eli Hill and Phoebe Hill, of the RAILWAY TAVERN, Corngreaves Street, Cradley Heath, alleging that they were drunk and disorderly on their own premises on the night of the 16th ult. Mr. W. Shakespeare (Old-bury) defended.

Police-constable Sylvester stated that at nine o’clock on the night named he visited defendant’s house and found Mr. Hill and his wife intoxicated and quarrelling. At twenty minutes to ten o’clock he went again to the house along with Police-constable Parker, and then found the two defendants in a similar condition.

Police-constable Parker, who corroborated his brother office, said Mr. Hill was standing near the table, and his wife was supporting herself by it. They both tried to speak, but witness could not understand what they said.

Mr. Shakespeare submitted that the drunkenness was an invention of the constables, and arose out of a vindictive feeling on the part of Sylvester. This officer had some time ago bought a pig from Mr. Hill for 28s, and having paid 10s defendant pressed him for the money and threatened to ‘County Court’ him. He called John Williams and a man named Rider and his wife, to prove that the defendants were not drunk, but perfectly sober, at the time in question. When the officers entered they were reading Peace’s trial in the Advertiser, and all that Hill did was to make a joke about having ‘Peace on earth,’ and hoping they should have ‘Peace in Heaven.’

The male defendant was also called, and gave evidence relating to the pig, and to Sylvester having said he would ‘make it out’ with him.

After retiring the Bench said they thought the case proved, and the male defendant having been convicted three times, they should fine him 20s and costs; and his wife 10s and costs.”

“Eli Hill and Phoebe Hill, beerhouse keepers, Cradley Heath, were charged with being drunk on their licensed premises on the 20th ult. Mr. Hayes defended.

PC Buckley said he went to the defendant’s house and heard the defendants quarrelling. On going into the house he found that they were both drunk. They used language which was perfectly disgusting. He told them he would summon them for being drunk.

Superintendent Woollaston said he went to the defendant’s house and found them both drunk. The female defendant was in a worse state than the male defendant. She was in a dirty state, as was also the house.

Defendant admitted the offence, and asked the Bench to deal leniently with him. If they would he would not drink any more beer for 12 months, and would make a grand present to the Guest Hospital.

There being previous convictions against both the defendants, the Bench said they would not be doing their duty unless they inflicted the full penalty.

Eli was fined 40s and costs, and Phoebe 20s and costs.”

“Eli Hill, landlord of the RAILWAY TAVERN, was charged with being drunk on his own licensed premises on the 31st ult. Mr. Hayes defended.

Police-constable Martin’s evidence was to the effect that about half-past six on the day named in the charge, he visited the defendant’s house in Corngreaves Road, and found defendant quarrelling with his wife. About an hour afterwards he went to the house again and found the defendant drunk and making use of bad language. Defendant went to the beer-machine, drew half-a-glass of ale, and supported himself against the machine.

Similar evidence was given by Police-constable Sylvester.

Mr. Hayes totally denied the charge of drunkenness against the defendant, and called a witness who said he was in defendant’s house for several hours, and the defendant was sober.

The Bench said they were willing to give him another chance, as he was heavily fined when he was before them last time, and they should only fine him 5s and costs.”

County Express 13/3/1880

“Eli Hill, landlord of the RAILWAY TAVERN, Corngreaves Road, Cradley Heath, was charged with being drunk on his own licensed premises, on the 16th inst, and he was further charged with having been twice previously convicted of similar offences within twelve months. Mr. Hayes defended.

It appeared from the evidence given by Police-inspector Walters, and Police-constables Sylvester and Rowlands, that on the night of the above date they found the defendant drunk and staggering about a passage in his house. When he saw the officers he lighted a candle and took them into another room, where they found his wife lying helplessly drunk.

Mr. Hayes, in defence, denied that the defendant was drunk. He said that he was a man of excitable temperament, and the officers might easily have mistaken his real condition.

During the hearing of the case the defendant behaved very disorderly, and called one of the witnesses a liar. He also told the Bench that he was being driven to death through spite; and said he would sooner be brought to the gallows than live in his present state.

The Bench fined him 40s and costs.

Phoebe Hill, his wife, was then charged with being drunk on her husband's licensed premises.

Mr. Hayes, on her behalf, pleaded guilty. She was fined 5s and costs.

Eli Hill was then further charged with using threatening language towards Herbert Hall. The charge was proved, and defendant was ordered to be bound over in his own surety of £10 to keep the peace.

Defendant resolutely announced that he would not pay a shilling, and asked for what term he would have to go to prison in default. He was told that if he did not pay, his goods would be distrained."

County Advertiser 1/5/1880

"On Saturday, an inquest was held at the CORNGREAVES HOTEL, Cradley Heath, before Mr. E. Hooper (district coroner) touching the death of Phoebe Hill (35), the wife of Eli Hill, of Cradley Road, until lately the landlord of the RAILWAY TAVERN, Cradley Heath.

It appeared that on the 22nd inst, the deceased woman was asleep on a screen at the house where she and her husband lodged, when she fell off the screen apparently in a fit, and died a few hours later. Deceased had been a woman of intemperate habits, and a rum bottle was found by her side after the fall, and upon her body being examined after death several bruises were found, including a blackened eye.

Deceased's husband being now called into the room to give evidence, was found to be in a state of drunkenness, and at the request of the jury, the coroner administered to him a severe reprimand.

Dr. Standish gave it as his opinion that deceased died from the effects of an apoplectic fit.

The jury returned a verdict of Died from Natural Causes, and expressed their opinion that deceased's intemperate habits had accelerated her death."

"Jeremiah Westwood, landlord of the RAILWAY TAVERN, Corngreaves Road, Cradley Heath, was charged with assaulting Joseph Weston, chainmaker, of Cradley. Mr. Waldron appeared for the complainant and Mr. Wright for the defendant.

It seemed that on the 4th inst after some sports had taken place at Cradley the complainant and a man named Mallen repaired to the RAILWAY TAVERN and there ordered half a pint of beer and a bottle of ginger beer. A number of people were in the room at the time. Some gambling was going on, and complainant tossed and won and lost several cigars. As the two men were going out, the defendant, who stood at the door, asked Weston if he had got a horse to trot. He replied that he could get one, and it was agreed that they should have a match for £10 a side. Both parties made a deposit of 2s each, Mallen holding the money. A dispute arose as to the height of the ponies and defendant demanded his money back again, at the same time seizing hold of Mallen by the collar and telling him to give him the money. Mrs. Westwood shouted out to her husband, 'Give me your watch and chain and take it out of him.' Complainant told Mallen not to give the money up, and defendant, loosing Mallen, struck complainant a heavy blow on the face, felling him to the ground. He followed him up and kicked him on the head, face, and shoulders. Leaving complainant, defendant turned his attention towards Mallen whom he knocked down and shamefully jumped on, and kicked whilst on the ground. Several people cried shame on the defendant for his cowardly conduct. As soon as the row was over the complainant went to the doctor who sewed up his wounds.

Mallen and a woman named Clara Smith gave evidence in support of the charge.

For the defence, it was urged that when defendant asked for his money complainant told Mallen not to give it up. Mallen was about to give it up when complainant said, 'We'll fight him for it.' At the same time striking defendant on the ear. Defendant struck back again in self-defence and both the other men started kicking him.

Evidence for the defence was given by William Golding, John Hill, and William Rock.

Defendant was further charged with assaulting Mallen.

The Bench considered both charges proved and fined defendant 40s and costs in each case, or two months. The solicitor's fee of 10s 6d in each case was also allowed. The total amounted to £6 9s 6d."

Police-constable Wynn said at nine pm on the 30th ult he visited the defendant’s house in company with Police-constable Davies. In the tap room he saw a man named William Swingler very drunk, and making use of bad language. He had a pint cup containing ale in his hand. Witness spoke to the landlord about the man’s condition, and he replied, ‘I have only filled him one pint of ale, and the son paid for that.’ They went into the tap room and the son of Swingler said he had paid for the ale. The defendant requested the man to leave, and he left, staggering across the room, the defendant assisting him to the door.

Cross-examined: He had not noticed that the man ‘limped.’

Police-constable Davies gave corroborative evidence.

Mr. Waldron said the defendant had kept his house for twelve months in a satisfactory manner. He thought it should be shown that there was a want of control and care in the management of the house before the Bench could say that the landlord was guilty of permitting drunkenness. The police did not say that there was general drunkenness in the house, but that it was an isolated case. Defendant was called, and said Swingler had only been in the house a quarter of an hour before the police came in, and had only been supplied with one pint. Swingler was perfectly sober.

William Swingler said he only had one pint of ale in the house, and that was paid for by his son.

Elizabeth Davies, servant, said Swingler only had one pint.

George Swingler and Samuel Ryder swore that Swingler was perfectly sober.

Defendant was fined £5 and costs.

“Old Hill Adjourned Licensing Sessions.....

Mr. W. Bassano said the only case in which they proposed not to renew the license was in the case of the CROSS INN, Old Hill.....

Mr. Ward asked if all the other licenses were granted without any special application being necessary. Mr. Bassano said this was so. Of course they had, in the exercise of their discretion, thought there were several cases in which they might reasonably withhold the license, and the Bench had had a long discussion that morning before coming into Court as to whether they should do so in the case of a man fined £10 and costs. However, they had decided to grant the whole of the licenses this year, and they gave an intimation that in future the Bench would deal very stringently in cases of conviction under the licensing laws, both as regards the amount of fines and endorsements, and in the cases of endorsements they would deal more stringently. In plain English, this meant that a person with an endorsement against the house would in future have a very small chance indeed of getting his license renewed. They hoped the licensed victuallers and other licensed persons in the district would take a warning from that.”

“Jeremiah Westwood, formerly the BEE HIVE INN, Cradley Heath, Staffordshire, afterwards Southalls Lane, Dudley, Worcestershire, now residing in lodgings at the RAILWAY TAVERN, Cradley Heath aforesaid, formerly licensed victualler, afterwards fish and fruit dealer, now out of business.”

“Bankruptcy Proceedings. Re Jeremiah Westwood, licensed victualler.

Yesterday, at the Dudley County Court – before Mr. Kettle – Jeremiah Westwood, formerly of the BEEHIVE INN, Cradley Heath, afterwards of Southalls Lane, Dudley, and now living in lodgings at the RAILWAY TAVERN, Cradley Heath, came up for his public examination in bankruptcy. Debtor’s liabilities amounted to £587, and his assets, it was estimated, would produce £64, leaving a deficiency of £523. Mr. Martin (from the office of Mr. Waldron, Brierley Hill) appeared on behalf of the debtor, who was examined by the Official Receiver (Mr. E. P. Jobson).

About seventeen years ago debtor commenced business at the RAILWAY TAVERN, Cradley Heath, having previously been in business at the CROSS INN, Old Hill. The in-going valuation at the RAILWAY TAVERN was £160, of which £70 was advanced by the debtor’s father. He traded at that house for eight years, and in the meantime he purchased the freehold for £360, of which £300 was advanced upon mortgage. When the debtor disposed of the premises and business he received £100 from his successor. This was not sufficient to pay his creditors 20s in the pound, so he used it in part payment of the in-going valuation (£230) at the BEEHIVE INN, Cradley Heath, then acquired by him. The payment was advanced by a local maltster, with whom was deposited, as security, a lease of the premises. He traded there about seven years, when a firm of brewers purchased the lease, and ultimately arranged for the debtor to remain on the premises as their tenant. They also paid him £100. His indebtedness at that period considerably exceeded his assets, and at the end of two years, also his connection with the brewery company ceased, his liabilities amounted to about £500. During the latter period of the debtor's trading at the BEEHIVE INN, he speculated with a theatrical company for the production of several stage plays. This company was sent on tour for two months to several provincial towns. The salary and travelling expenses averaged about £32 per week. The debtor did not personally superintend the finances of the company, being satisfied to leave them in the hands of his son, a youth of fifteen, who reported weekly. This speculation involved a loss of £250. He admitted that when he embarked on this undertaking he was insolvent. When he left the BEEHIVE, in March, 1893, his affairs were put into the hands of a solicitor to arrange with his creditors. An arrangement for the acceptance of a composition was not completed, and debtor was pressed for payment, and compelled to file his petition in bankruptcy. During a portion of the last two years he had traded as a fishmonger, and his liabilities had been slightly increased. His wife carried on business as a fishmonger at Dudley. With regard to the theatrical business, he had to pay an agent 25s a week and his travelling expenses, and the first week he made 12s 6d profit, but the next week he lost £13. He came from Canada seventeen years ago, and during most of the time since he had been in difficulties. Debtor was allowed to pass."

"Charles Westwood, Corngreaves Road, Cradley Heath, was charged with refusing to quit the licensed premises of William Alfred Smith, and also with assaulting Mr. Smith. Complainant stated that on the 17th October defendant came to his house, the RAILWAY TAVERN, Cradley Heath, and witness could see that he had had sufficient drink, and refused to fill him anything. He ordered him to leave the house, but defendant refused, and he was eventually put out. Witness went to the door to see if he had gone, and defendant came and struck him twice in the face. Defendant said he did not know anything about the affair. He was fined 10s and costs in each case."

"Harry Garratt, RAILWAY TAVERN, Cradley Heath, was charged with permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises on the 30th ult. Mr. J. Walter Clulow prosecuted, and Mr. W. Waldron defended.

Mr. Clulow said the facts were that on the 30th ult Police-constable Dale saw a man named Cole go into the RAILWAY INN in a drunken condition. About twenty minutes later he and the sergeant went into the house and found Cole sitting down in a drunken condition with two glasses in front of him. The sergeant called the defendant's attention to the man's condition, and he asked him to look over it this once.

Mr. Waldron said the man was not served with anything but ginger beer. The question was whether a publican ought to turn a drunken man out or not, some Benches thought so, but others did not. He thought the costs would meet the case.

Mr. Clulow said he must ask for a small penalty.

Police-constable Dale and Police-sergeant Pitcher gave evidence.

A fine of 20s and costs was imposed, and solicitor's fee.

Stuart Cole, Corngreaves Road, Cradley Heath, was fined 10s including costs for being drunk on the premises."

"The annual licensing sessions for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held on Wednesday.....

The following is a list of the licenses objected to by Superintendent Johnson.....

Thomas Hackerson, of the NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill; George Payne, of the PLOUGH AND HARROW INN, Cradley Heath; and William Titus Smith, of the RAILWAY TAVERN, Cradley Heath; on the ground that the premises are structurally deficient and unsuitable.....

The objection was deferred to the adjourned sessions, as well as the opposition to the RAILWAY TAVERN, Cradley Heath, another house belonging to the North Worcestershire Brewery Company."

"The adjourned licensing sessions for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held on Wednesday, at the Police Court.....

Mr. Thompson referred to three objections made by the police at the annual licensing day for certain alterations which were deferred. The houses in question were the NEPTUNE INN, Old Hill, the RAILWAY TAVERN, Cradley Heath, and the PLOUGH AND HARROW, Cradley Heath. Superintendent Johnson raised certain points, and he asked them to be deferred because they were of considerable importance to his clients. Since then he had consulted with his clients. With regard to the NEPTUNE INN, the police objected to a door which led out of the licensed premises on to the canal side. His clients would give an understanding that this door would be closed altogether excepting to allow horses to be taken to the stables. Otherwise it would be necessary to take the horses a considerable distance round. With regard to the RAILWAY TAVERN they had consented to close the back entrance to these premises and also to close a doorway leading from the back premises of the PLOUGH AND HARROW INN to public passages, after sunset each evening. This was a matter of considerable importance to them inasmuch as the passages were public ones, but his clients had decided to close the doorway at night and he believed this would meet with the wishes of the police.

Superintendent Johnson said he should be willing to withdraw his objections to the renewal of the licenses providing the conditions named by Mr. Thompson were given in writing and carried out by the owners. Mr. Thompson agreed to these conditions, and the renewal of the licenses was granted.”

The Chairman said in addition to the licenses mentioned by Superintendent Johnson, the magistrates had decided that notices of objection be served upon the holders of the licenses of.....

County Advertiser 10/3/1906

“The adjourned annual licensing sessions for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held on Wednesday.....

Mr. Bassano said the bench had under consideration the nine houses, five of which were objected to on the ground of convictions and four others on the ground of redundancy. It had raised a very large question, and the magistrates had had before them the consideration of the parish as a whole. He threw out a suggestion to the trade and owners that the matter should be considered from their point of view during the next twelve months. The magistrates would be prepared to consider any counter proposition that might come from the brewers which could be laid before them next year.....

The next objection gone into was that of the RAILWAY TAVERN, Corngreaves Road, Cradley Heath. Mr. W. H. Thompson (Dudley) appeared for the licensee and the owners.

Inspector Gibbs stated that the premises were small and stuffy, and there was no accommodation for the licensee or his family.

The house was not properly constructed for a licensed house. Two transfers had taken place within the last ten years. There were 13 licensed houses within 500 yards. The nearest licensed house was the PLOUGH AND HARROW INN, owned by the same firm, 30 yards away. There were two previous convictions against the house, and the business done was very small.

Mr. Thompson said the North Worcestershire Brewery Company felt there were too many houses in the locality, and did not propose to offer any opposition to this house being submitted to the Quarter Sessions on the question of redundancy.

The Bench decided to take this course.”

It was known locally as “Bellyfields”.

It had an ante ‘69 beerhouse license.

It was a home brew house.

William Billingham, beer retailer, Cradley Heath. [1868], [1870]
He issued tokens from here.

“Edward Matthews, of Cradley Heath, was charged with stealing a quantity of wearing apparel on the 8th instant, the property of William Billingham.

Caroline Billingham, wife of prosecutor, said they kept a beerhouse, at Cradley Heath. On the above date she lost two pillow cases, 1 bolster case, 1 baby’s frock, 8 pinafores, 1 towel, and 1 chemise. Witness missed them about six o’clock. They were worth 10s. Could swear the articles produced were her own property, as she had made them herself.

Police-constable Hammond proved finding the articles produced in the prisoner’s house, upstairs, inside a flock bed. Prisoner denied stealing them, and said, ‘That cat of a wife has put them there,’ and if he got out of this mess he would never live with her again. Prisoner had hitherto borne a good character. The articles could have been put in the bed without the knowledge of prisoner. Prisoner said he was quite innocent, and never stole anything in his life. Had worked for Messrs. Bagnall all his life, till last Whitsuntide, when he went to work at the Corngraves. Prisoner was then discharged.”

Staffordshire Advertiser 29/5/1869

“At the Old Hill Petty Sessions, on Wednesday, before Messrs. N. Hingley, and G. W. F. Barrs, Emma Payne, domestic servant, was charged, on remand, with stealing £5, the moneys of her master, William Billingham, a publican, of Cradley; and Eliza Willetts, another young woman, was charged with receiving a part of the same, knowing it to be stolen. Mr. Addison defended Willetts. Enoch Gould, a draper, of Cradley Heath, deposed that the two girls came to his shop on two occasions about a fortnight ago. They bought gloves, a sunshade, and several neckties. Payne paid for the articles on one day with a sovereign, and on the other with a half-sovereign, but Willetts selected the goods. On the prisoners being brought up together and charged, they incriminated one another, and before the magistrates Payne said that Willetts had tempted her. Both were committed for trial, but bail was allowed for Willetts.”

Staffordshire Advertiser 3/7/1869

Emma Payne was charged with stealing five sovereigns, the property of William Bellingham, beerseller, of Cradley Heath; and Eliza Willits with receiving part of the same knowing it to have been stolen.

Mr. Underhill for the prosecution, called Mrs. Bellingham, from whose statement it appeared that on the 8th of May she placed nine sovereigns in a drawer in her room, locked it, and placed the key in the pocket of her dress, which was hung up. On the 15th she missed five sovereigns, which Payne afterwards acknowledged to have taken. The question now was as to the guilt of Willits, and the learned counsel for the prosecution said he felt compelled to put Payne in the witness box, with the view of eliciting that fact.

Payne said, in substance, that the prisoner knew how she (Payne) had got the money, although she had never told her personally, but had told another in her presence; and that they bought articles together, which were paid for out of the stolen money.

William Bevan and Enoch Gold, tradesmen, of Cradley Heath, deposed to both prisoners coming to their shops to purchase various articles; but in one case it turned out that Payne paid for the things, and in the other the witness could not tell who paid for them.

Willits, when taken into custody, acknowledged to having some of the furniture bought by Payne, but denied that she had received any of the money. The prisoner Willits received an excellent character from two persons who had known her from childhood; and after an earnest appeal to the jury on her behalf by Mr. Smith the jury, without waiting for the Chairman's summing up, returned a verdict of not guilty. Payne was sentenced to three months' imprisonment."

“Thomas Parsons, landlord of the RAILWAY INN, Cradley Heath, was charged with having, on the night of the 20th ult, permitted drunkenness in his house. Mr. Homer defended.

Police-constable Cooper said that he visited the defendant’s house at about ten minutes to eleven o’clock on the night in question in company with two other officers, and he found there two men there named Mansell and Felton. They were drunk, and Felton was bleeding from the mouth. There were also some broken cups strewn about the floor.

Police-constable Stiles gave confirmatory evidence.

James Mansell was called, and said he was in the defendant’s house when the officers arrived. He was not very drunk although he had had some beer.

A witness named Brooks deposed that he saw the defendant’s son put a sovereign on the table, and bet on the fight which was to take place between Mansell and Felton.

Mr. Homer addressed the Bench, and contended that the men were not drunk.

Defendant was fined 20s and costs.”

County Advertiser 22/5/1875 - Advert

“At a Public Meeting held at the RAILWAY HOTEL, Lomey Town, the following resolutions were unanimously passed. Resolved, that we as Delegates from various Friendly Societies in this District, representing 4,000 members, do deplore the language made use of by the Stipendiary, at the late trial, viz, ‘That if we wish to meet to feast and drink at our funerals, we must not meet on Sunday,’ thereby creating an impression that we meet only for that purpose, a statement we indignantly repudiate, and consider the Stipendiary ought to know that we, as bodies of respectable working men, are united for higher purposes, and that such remarks from such a source are calculated to injure friendly societies if uncontradicted.

That we, the Representatives of various Friendly Societies numbering 4,000 Members, at a Public Meeting held on May 4th, do pledge ourselves to Agitate for the Alteration of the Laws affecting Friendly Societies, seeing that we as self-supporting and respectable bodies of Working Men, whose only object is to meet to relieve and alleviate our distressed bretheren and to bury our dead, and as Sunday is the only day we can spare without losing our time, which is our capital that we obtain our livelihood by, and as we cannot meet on that day at our club rooms without being treated as Felons under the existing laws, and whereas gentlemen's clubs are exempt from any Police supervision whatever, we, as a body of working men who strive to aid each other and be respectable, only ask for a portion of the privileges enjoyed by the Gentlemen's Clubs, viz, that we be allowed to meet at our Club Houses on a Sunday (for the purpose of burying our dead, when required) without Police supervision.

And we earnestly invite the Co-operateion of all Societies for the above objects.

Resolved that the next meeting be held at the RAILWAY HOTEL, Lomey Town, Cradley Heath, at 7pm, May 25th, when all Societies are invited to send Delegates."

County Advertiser 29/5/1875

"Some dissatisfaction has occurred in consequence of the language made use of by the Stipendiary Magistrate, Mr. I. Spooner, in a case recently brought before him at the Brierley Hill Police Court, and meetings of delegates from the various friendly societies have been held, and resolutions passed, pledging themselves to agitate for an alteration of the law as affecting friendly societies. On Tuesday night last a meeting was held at the RAILWAY HOTEL, Cradley Heath, at which Mr. T. Homer, auctioneer, presided. The Chairman, in the course of a lengthy address, said that they, as respectable bodies of working men, felt themselves aggrieved at the treatment they had received from the Stipendiary. They did not attend funerals to feast and drink, but to inter deceased members in a respectable and decent manner. He urged upon them the necessity of agitating for some alteration in the law. It was necessary that they should bring all their united influence to bear; and by bringing in the influence of members of Parliament and other men, and making them understand the feasibility of their efforts, they should get that for which they were asking awarded to them. Such was the power of friendly societies that if the matter were taken up throughout England their power would be felt both in the House of Commons and out.

Addresses were also delivered by Messrs. J. Rock and D. Bryce.

On the motion of Mr. Thomas Aston, of Stourbridge, seconded by Mr. Joseph Cox, of Brierley Hill, the following resolution was unanimously passed: That, in the opinion of this meeting, it is advisable that the various friendly societies should hold meetings for the above purpose in their various districts, and use their utmost endeavours to procure a mass meeting of the various societies at a place and time hereafter to be determined upon, and that all local divisions be invited to co-operate with the chairman of this meeting."

"Thomas Parsons, Deceased.

Pursuant to an Act of Parliament made and passed in the 22nd and 23rd years of the reign of her present Majesty, cap.35, intituled An Act to further amend the Law of Property and to relieve Trustees.

Notice Is Hereby Given, that all creditors and persons having any claims or demands upon or against the estate of Thomas Parsons, late of Cradley Heath, in the Parish of Rowley Regis, in the County of Stafford, Publican, deceased (who died on or about the 2nd day of June, 1879, and whose Will was proved by Thomas Davenport, of Brettell Lane, Staffordshire, Gentleman, and Thomas Parsons, of Withymoor, in the Borough of Dudley, in the County of Worcester, Publican, the Executors therein named, on the 11th day of September, 1879, in the District Registry of Her Majesty's Court of Probate, at Lichfield), are hereby required to send in the particulars of their claims of demands to the said Thomas Davenport and Thomas Parsons, or to the undersigned, their Solicitor, on or before the 21st day of November, 1879, and notice is hereby also given, that after that day the said Executors will proceed to distribute the assets of the deceased among the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which the said Executors shall then have notice, and that they will not be liable for the assets or any part thereof so distributed to any persons of whose debt or claim they shall not then have had notice.

Dated the 31st day of October, 1879.

Thomas Homer, Solicitor, Brierley Hill."

County Advertiser 22/1/1881

“A gale of unusual violence passed over Cradley Heath district on Tuesday, and continued during the night until noon on Wednesday. The unseen element in its unbridled passion was simply merciless, and carried everything before it. About half-past two on Tuesday afternoon a serious accident happened at the RAILWAY INN. The public house stands just at the corner of the Five Ways and it caught the full force of the blast. The chimney was blown on to the roof, and falling through the ceiling seriously damaged the furniture and pictures. A considerable portion of the roof was stripped off, and the house seemed to have been shaken to its foundation. The ceiling of the large club room fell in a body at the same time. The damage is estimated at over £100. Mr. James Bunn, the proprietor of the house, fearing that another chimney on the same side of the house might share the same fate had it taken down.....

On Wednesday there was a heavy downfall of snow, accompanied by a strong wind, which drifted the snow into high piles at various points, rendering traffic – both vehicular and foot – a very difficult matter. The weather continues intensely cold.”

“Stourbridge. County Court. Tuesday.

Nock v Bunn. Edwin Nock, hay, straw, and corn dealer, High Street, Brierley Hill, was the plaintiff in this case, and James Bunn, landlord of the RAILWAY INN, Cradley Heath, was the defendant. Mr. Waldron appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. W. O. C. Addison for the defendant.

Plaintiff’s solicitor said the claim was to recover the sum of £14 14s 1d, balance due to the plaintiff on a horse corn account. It appeared that the defendant carried on business with his brother as chartermasters of a colliery at the Saltwell Wood. The goods were supplied to the partnership firm; and plaintiff now sued defendant, he having been one of the partners.

Plaintiff was put in the box and gave evidence in keeping with Mr. Waldron’s opening statement.

For the defence Mr. Addison contended that the defendant was never in partnership, as was alleged.

The defendant in his evidence denied that he ever was in partnership with his brother. In cross-examination defendant said he did not leave the pits to take to the public house.

Richard Bunn, the brother of the defendant, was called and also denied the partnership.

A verdict for the defendant, with costs, was given.”

“A meeting of delegates representing the various trades in the South Staffordshire and East Worcestershire district was held on Saturday afternoon at the RAILWAY ARMS INN, High Street, Cradley Heath, Rowley Regis, for the purpose of taking steps for the formation of a trades council. There was a good attendance of delegates.....”

Worcestershire Chronicle 7/10/1882

“The first meeting of the Anti-Truck League was held on Wednesday, at the RAILWAY INN, Cradley Heath, Mr. John Price, chairman of the National Association of Nailmakers, presiding. The districts represented were Oldswinford, Lye, Lye Waste, Blackheath, and Rowley. Mr. C. Williams, secretary, explained that the league had for its object the suppression of the truck system. This mode of trading existed to a greater extent than a great many were aware of, and it was increasing every day. The nail trade was not the only industry that was hampered by such debasing proceedings. In the chain trade and also in the coal trade it was prevalent. A day or two previously he asked a miner whether there was any trucking in the mines, when he replied, ‘If I were to tell you anything I should have a brand on me like Cain.’ People were afraid to give any information. Whilst the truck system was followed by a large number of persons, it was well known that the respectable employers were averse to it, and some of them at Halesowen had been considering the advisability of forming a sort of co-operative society, in order to combat with the truck system. Another employer had consented to become a subscriber to the Anti-Truck League. The Chairman, in the course of a long address on the evils of trucking, said he did not think there would be one dissenting voice throughout England as to the necessity for such an association, In the case of a man who worked for a ‘truckster,’ earning 20s per week, it was well known in the trade that 7s of that money was returned to the pockets of the employer over and above the legitimate price for provisions. He was prepared to prove that such was the case before any tribunal. At Rowley it was well known that one of these ‘trucksters’ was charging 7d per peck more for the same quality of flour than was charged at the other shops. This showed an illegitimate gain of 9s 4d upon every sack of flour. This was no exaggeration, and he considered that the time had arrived when active measures should be adopted to suppress the growing evil. By resorting to such practices the ‘petty fogger’ was enabled to convey nails six miles across the country, and sell them 10 per cent below the standard price of the district. This had the effect of throwing out a large number of single hands, for what master would pay 10 per cent more for the same class of nails than he had cause to? There were something like 60,000 or 70,000 people dependant on the nail trade for their subsistence, and amongst these trucking was carried on to an alarming extent; in some instances 40 per cent of their earnings was again returned to the employers over and above the fair price for provisions. It was a mystery to him how the nailmakers made two ends meet, but they lived in wretchedness and misery, and it was very seldom they sat down to get a substantial meal of good common food. ('Hear, Hear,' and 'Shame.')

Mr. Williams then moved, 'That we form ourselves into a National Anti-Truck League, and that we solicit public support to assist us to destroy for ever a system which is a standing disgrace to this country.' Mr. Willetts, of Netherton, proposed, and Mr. Hill, of Oldswinford, seconded, 'That a memorial be drawn up and signed by the inhabitants of the various districts, pointing out the necessity which exists for further legislation, such memorial to be presented to Parliament as early as possible.' Both resolutions were carried unanimously, and it was resolved to issue an appeal to the public for support."

"On Christmas Eve the men and boys in the employ of Messrs. Holt and Willetts, engineers and pulley-block manufacturers, sat down to their annual dinner, given by their employers, and a splendid repast was served up at the house of Mrs. J. Bunn, RAILWAY TAVERN. After dinner the usual toasts were given and responded to. The health of the firm was proposed by Mr. McEwan, and supported by Mr. Thompson. Both spoke of the good feeling which existed between the firm and their men. The toast was responded to by Mr. Willetts, the senior member of the firm, and also by Mr. Holt. The toast was drunk with musical honours. Mr. Walter James amused the company with his funny extempore songs. Other employés gave songs and recitations, and a pleasant evening was spent, the proceedings closing with the National Anthem."

"Last night, a meeting of the Midland Counties Trades Federation was held at the RAILWAY HOTEL, Cradley Heath; Mr. J. Richards presiding. A delegate made a report as to the white brick makers' strike. Mr. R. Juggins mentioned that one employer had consented to give the advance, but the men refused to continue working because the firm would not give the increase to the females. It would be known on the following day whether the firm would concede the advance to the females or not. He should be glad to see the time when the federation could see its way to stand by the females, not only in the brick trade, but in every other trade. It was resolved that the council of the federation should contribute £30 per week until the next meeting of the council towards the support of the strikers."

“David Priest, chainmaker, Netherend, Cradley, was charged with stealing a walking stick, the property of Charles Murray, an army pensioner.

On the 3rd inst, defendant went to the RAILWAY INN, Cradley Heath, where complainant lodged, and it was alleged that he took the prosecutor's stick out of the smoke room. When accused of taking it he alleged that he found it in the street. In reply to the magistrates, defendant admitted he took the stick for a lark. He had no intention of committing a felony, and, as he had hitherto borne a good character, he hoped the magistrates would deal leniently with him.

The magistrates said they would deal with the defendant under the First Offenders' Act, and would order him to come up for judgment three months hence. He would also be ordered to pay the costs, £1 4s 6d.

The value of the stick was 9d.”

Thomas Scriven's license (full) was renewed in August 1900, despite 'long pull' offences.

County Express 25/8/1900

“The annual licensing sessions for the petty sessional division of Rowley Regis were held on Wednesday, at the Court House, Old Hill. The magistrates present were Messrs. W. Bassano (chairman), G. Green, and J. W. Tilley.....

Mr. E. W. Cave (instructed by Mr. Jeffries) said he was instructed, on behalf of the local Licensed Victuallers' Association and the Birmingham District Brewers' Association to oppose the renewal of the licenses of the RAILWAY INN and RED LION INN, Cradley Heath, kept by Mr. Thomas Scriven and Mr. Thomas Price respectively, the first being a fully-licensed house, and the latter a beerhouse. He thought the cases could be dealt with together. Mr. Waldron appeared to support the renewal of the licenses.

Mr. Cave said the objections were limited to four, the chief of which were that the license-holders were guilty of unfair trading by giving excessive over-measure, and that the premises were not required for the needs of the neighbourhood. The facts were that for a considerable time there had been a custom in the trade to give what was known as the long pull, which means that a man asking for a half-pint would get a pint, and asking for a pint would get a quart. Several attempts had been made to put an end to this, but the efforts had not been very successful until recently. Some time ago it was proposed there should be a combination on the part of license-holders to stop the practice, and it was only recently that it had come to a head, and it was desired now to prevent license-holders from indulging in the practice. The practice was one which he did not think they would dispute was detrimental to the interests of the public, and the trade were showing a genuine desire to bring about a reform and improvement in the cases in which drink was supplied to the public, and he considered they should be encouraged in that desire. That was the meaning of the objections, and as the trade had devoted itself to a system of internal reform, he thought the Bench should support it by refusing the licenses to these two houses until they conformed to the movement instituted by the trade in the interests of the public.

Edward Every, clerk, in the employ of Mr. Jeffries proved posting of notices of objection.

Mr. W. Green, jeweller, of Oldbury, gave evidence as to purchasing ale from the houses, and stated that for half a pint he got nearly a pint.

Cross-examined: He did not know whether these houses were 'free houses' or not.

Mr. Waldron said that anyone who knew anything about this question of fair trading practices amongst publicans could not be blind to the real object of those associations, they never were aware of any injury being done either to themselves or to the general public until the unfortunate extra shilling per barrel duty came into existence. The result was, as soon as it came into existence, then the very large brewers – he saw in the paper in the case of Allsopp's there was a loss of £30,000 to the shareholders – throughout the country began to hold meetings to see how that could be taken out of the public pocket, and put into the shareholders' in the shape of profit. That was the real inception of the beginning of the so-called 'fair trade,' and what was known as ceasing to give long pulls. The Bench were not there to deal with private quarrels amongst the trade, but only to see the license-holders conformed with the regulations of the statute. It seemed to have been a regular thing to give greater measure than was asked for, but he ventured to suggest there was nothing unlawful or immoral in that, as long as the competition was fair and legitimate. The question that it led to drunkenness was nonsensical from its inception, because if there were drunkenness in the house it would mean not the white gloves they had heard of that day, but the Court would be inundated with prosecutions. He asked the Bench not to make themselves parties to a trade dispute, but to renew the licenses. There had not been a word suggested against the character of the two licensees that they were not fit and proper persons, neither that the houses were unsuitable, and he asked for the licenses to be renewed.

The Bench said they would renew the licenses. There were no special grounds for refusing, and it would be monstrously unfair to do so. Whatever the association might try to do for the public good and morality it would have the Bench's sympathy; but they were not altogether clear that there were any great benefits for public morality to be expected from this movement. It appeared that if a man went into a house and asked for a pint of beer, and he got a quart, it did no damage to his morality, for he was not obliged to drink it. It would be advantageous to a man and his family, inasmuch as he would get two pints for the price of one. If the trade was honest in its endeavor for the public good, let it go on and show itself in a better form than it had hitherto done. It did not come to the Court with the cleanest hands that day."

"The South Staffordshire police on Saturday made raids on betting men at the BULLS HEAD, Blackheath, and the RAILWAY HOTEL, Cradley Heath, arresting altogether 33 men, including the two publicans. County Express 12/4/1902

"As a result of a clever ruse on the part of the police authorities, the RAILWAY HOTEL, Lomey Town, Cradley Heath, and the BULLS HEAD INN, Oldbury Road, Blackheath, were raided on Saturday afternoon, and a large number of men, who, it is alleged, frequented the houses for the purposes of betting, were captured. The police adopted a modus operandi which, although new in the annals of the force, was new to the district, and caused considerable amusement to those not immediately concerned. Two large furniture vans were chartered, and the one, containing Inspector Hodgkinson, PS Pitcher, and fourteen constables, drew up outside the RAILWAY HOTEL; while the other, containing Supt. Spendlove, PS Harris, and twelve constables, was drawn up outside the BULLS HEAD INN. Immediately the vehicles stopped, the officers raided the premises and secured the men they found there. It is alleged upon being searched, these were found to be in possession of betting papers and tickets. The men submitted quietly to the arrests, and were conveyed to Old Hill Police station in the vans. Naturally, the news of the occurrences quickly spread, and caused great excitement and some consternation in the districts. Later in the evening they were all brought before Messrs. W. Bassano and C. W. Bassano, and charged with offences under the Betting Act. Formal evidence was given by Supt. Spendlove and Inspector Hodgkinson, and the prisoners remanded until Wednesday, bail being allowed to the landlords themselves in £50 each and one surety of £50 or two £25 each, and the other men on their own recognisances of £10 each.....”

“A large crowd assembled at the Old Hill Police Court yesterday, when a special session was held to hear the charges against the persons concerned in the recent betting raids at Cradley Heath and Blackheath. The magistrates in attendance were Messrs. W. Bassano, J. F. Pearson, A. H. Bassano, R. Hill, and J. Billingham.....

Thomas Scriven, senior, landlord of the RAILWAY INN, Lomey Town, Cradley Heath, was charged with knowingly and wilfully permitting his house to be used for betting purposes on March 26th and 31st, April 1st and 5th, James Tromans, described as a bookmaker, of Scholdings Green Road, Cradley Heath, was charged with unlawfully using the house for the purpose of betting on March 26th and 31st; and Thomas Insull, described as his clerk, who lives at Colley Gate, was charged with similar offences on March 26th and 31st and April 1st.

Mr. Clulow prosecuted, and Mr. Vachell (instructed by Mr. P. Baker and Co. Birmingham), defended. Mr. Waldron represented the owner of the house. In this case the evidence for the prosecution was similar to that in the preceding case. An independent witness visited the house on March 26th, 31st, and April 1st, and saw betting transactions taking place, Tromans and Insull taking and making bets with the customers, the former paying out money which had been won. The witness received 1s 7d from him on a bet he won by backing a horse. Scriven's son and wife were seen to give Insull slips of paper containing money. When the police raided the house on April 5th Inspector Hodgkinson and his man found numerous papers relating to betting upon those in the house.

Inspector Hodgkinson, PS Pitcher, and numerous witnesses were called for the prosecution.

For the defence, Mr. Vachell said the landlord, Scriven, was not aware any bets were being made upon the premises, therefore he could not be said to have knowingly and wilfully allowed his house to be used for betting.

The landlord and other witnesses were called. The former denied all knowledge of betting transactions in his house, and the witnesses sated they saw no betting.

Scriven was fined £100, costs, and solicitor's fee of £2 2s; Tromans was fined £100 and costs; Insull was fined £25 and costs.

Mr. Vachell asked the Bench to grant a case in Scriven's and Troman's, cases and this was consented to.

The following men who were charged with using the licensed premises for the purposes of betting were bound over not to take part in any betting transactions for six months, and ordered to pay the costs.....

“Mr. Phillip Baker of Birmingham, appeared on behalf of James Tromans, of Scholdings Green Road, Cradley Heath, and stated that he had a gentleman present who was willing to enter into recognisance of £100 so that Tromans could appeal against the decision of the justices in fining him £100 and costs for using licensed premises for the purpose of betting. There were one or two complex points upon which they would like to have the decision of the High Court.

Mr. W. Bassano said he failed to see where the complex points came in.

Mr. George Bearwood, commission agent, of Bearwood Road, Smethwick, then entered into the recognisance of £100.”

“Police-constable Kent, who created such a stir in Cradley Heath and Blackheath districts, and took the principal part in the betting raids successfully made at the RAILWAY HOTEL, Cradley Heath, and the BULLS HEAD INN, Blackheath, retired on Monday last from the Staffordshire police force, after serving for ten years.....”

“In the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, on Monday, the case of Tromans v. Hodgkinson came before the Lord Chief Justices Wills and Channell, sitting as a Divisional Court, on the appeal from a decision of the Justices of Staffordshire, sitting at Old Hill Petty Sessional Court. Mr. Stutfield (instructed by Messrs. P. Baker and Co. Birmingham) appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Shakespeare (instructed by Mr. J. W. Clulow, Brierley Hill) for the respondent justice.

The question raised was one under the Betting Houses Act, the point being whether a bookmaker, professedly going from day to day to a public house and carrying on business there, could be convicted, under the Betting Houses Act, of using the public house for the purpose of betting. The appellant was charged with using the house on various days in March and April last, and convicted and fined £100; and the landlord was convicted of permitting him to use the house for the purpose alleged, and fined; whilst the bookmaker's clerk was also fined. The appellant (the bookmaker) appealed against the conviction on the ground that there was no evidence to show that he had an exclusive right to use the premises, and was not in occupation, possession or control of the premises.

Counsel read the information of John Hodgkinson, inspector of police, who swore that on various days in March the appellant visited the RAILWAY INN, Cradley Heath, and convictions and fines were set out as above. The appellant was known as a professional bookmaker, and was on divers occasions observed in the bar of the inn making money bets, and his clerk, Thomas Insoll, acted as his agent. There was no evidence to show that the appellant frequented the RAILWAY INN solely for the purpose of procuring refreshments, or that he was a customer in that respect. The appellant did not constitute 'a place' within the meaning of the Act, but he maintained that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant the justices convicting, because the appellant was neither the owner or occupier of the house, and was not in sole possession or control of the premises. There was no evidence to show that the appellant had an exclusive right to carry on business there.

The Lord Chief Justice, without calling Mr. Shakespeare for the other side, said there was no dispute that this was 'a place' within the meaning of the Act. The only point was whether, as the appellant had no interest in the house, the case was brought within the meaning of the Act. Clearly the case did come within the Act. The appellant was in the habit of frequenting the bar of the public house for the purpose of there carrying on a ready-money betting business with the persons assembled there. In his Lordship's opinion there was a clear breach of the statute, and the magistrates were perfectly right.

Mr. Justice Williams concurred, and said that having of half-a-pint of beer on occasion would not make any difference.

Mr. Justice Channell also concurred, and remarked that he would like to make it quite clear that the appellant used the place, as it were, as a betting office.

The appeal was accordingly dismissed with costs."

"Echoes Of The Betting Raid.

John Woodcock, of Mushroom Green, applied for the transfer of the license of the RAILWAY HOTEL, Cradley Heath, from Charles Henry Mansell. Applicant said he had not given the necessary seven days' notice to the superintendent of the police, neither was he in possession of the premises.

Mr. Cooksey (magistrates' clerk) told the applicant that he could not apply for the transfer of the house until he was in possession of the premises.

Applicant was subjected to a lengthy cross-examination by Superintendent Spendlove, who asked the applicant how long he had known about the premises.

Applicant said he had known them for ten years.

Superintendent Spendlove: You frequented the premises very much when Mr. Stevens [sic] kept it? – Applicant: Yes, sir.

He was your father-in-law? – Yes, sir.

He was the man who was fined £100 and costs for betting? – Yes, sir.

You gave him assistance in that business? – No, sir.

Did you ever assist in the gambling transactions? – No, sir.

Did you ever make a bet? – No, sir.

You never heard that gambling took place on the premises – Not until the raid was made.

Is your father-in-law going to assist you in the business? – No, sir.

Superintendent Spendlove said that he should call evidence next week to support the questions he had raised.

The Magistrates' Clerk informed Mansell that he would have to remain in possession until next week, and the application was to be adjourned for seven days to enable applicant to give the necessary notice to the superintendent."

“Jabez Batham, chainmaker, of Quarry Bank, was charged with stealing 19s 9d, belonging to William Edmonds, landlord of the RAILWAY HOTEL, Cradley Heath, on Monday. Mr. Waldron defended.

Alice Edmonds, daughter of the prosecutor, stated that on Monday afternoon a meeting of chainmakers was held a short distance from the hotel, and at the conclusion of the meeting defendant and another man called at the house. They called for a pint of ale, defendant tendering 2s in payment. A man named Alfred Little also came in and tendered a sovereign for his refreshments. Witness put down the change in each case, and defendant, instead of picking up the 1s 9d, picked up 19s 9d, which should have been received by Little. Defendant afterwards left the house.

In reply to Mr. Waldron, witness said she did not give defendant into custody, but she was sure he was the man who picked up the 19s 9d.

Evidence was given by two other witnesses and Police-constable Foulkes, who arrested the defendant.

Mr. Waldron, for the defence, denied the theft.

The Bench, however, considered that the defendant submitted to a sudden temptation, and fined him 20s and costs, or one month's imprisonment.”

A young man named Forrest, of Spinners End, was standing with his bicycle on the side of the horse road near to the top of King Street, talking to an acquaintance. A trap belonging to Mr. William Edmonds, of the RAILWAY HOTEL, Lomey Town, came down at a trot. Mr. Edmonds was in the trap, accompanied by Mrs. Collier, his sister-in-law, and Mr. John Perry, who was driving. They shouted to Forrest to get out of the way, and he attempted to do so, but in his confusion backed the machine into the horse's feet. There was in a moment a scene of the utmost confusion. Forrest was thrown under the wheel of the trap, which ran over him and disturbed the balance of the vehicle, throwing the trap over and pitching its occupants into the road. The wonder is someone was not killed or dangerously hurt, but when the participants in the scrimmage picked themselves up, they found they were not nearly so bad as they might have been. Mr. Edmonds had escaped with a shaking and a bruised shoulder. His sister-in-law complained of bruises on her face and leg. Perry was suffering from a scalp wound in the right side of the head which necessitated a visit from Dr. Branday. Forrest, though considerably shaken, had personally come off the best, but his bicycle was badly damaged, and it will cost 30s to put the trap in good condition again.”

County Advertiser 22/4/1905

“What might have been a disastrous fire was discovered in the nick of time on Wednesday morning at the premises of the RAILWAY HOTEL, Lomey Town, Cradley Heath. The house belongs to Messrs. Anson (Dudley), and is managed by Mr. James Pegg, a well-known Quarry Bank man, who removed there only five weeks ago. The building stands rather high, and the bar and smoke room are to the left and right respectively of the central passage, their somewhat old-fashioned square windows looking out upon the main street. It was in the smoke room that the fire originated. This is a large square room, very comfortably fitted with seats upholstered in leather, and well furnished with the company's and the landlord's effects. A pier glass hung over the mantelpiece, which was adorned by a marble timepiece and handsome vases; and the walls were hung with attractive pictures and valuable cases of stuffed birds. There had been a fire in the room on Tuesday evening, but it was removed before the inmates went to bed; and when, approaching midnight, Mrs. Pegg went to take a final look round, all appeared safe. At about half-past two Mr. Pegg awoke, and was startled by a crackling noise and a distinct smell of fire. He hurried downstairs, and found the smoke room all ablaze. The two children who were sleeping in the house were at once removed for safety to Mr. Buttery's, the SALUTATION INN, across the way, and the alarm given by the landlord brought on the scene Police-sergeant Wood, with Police-constables Turner and Bridgwood. Mrs. Pegg had opportunely closed the door of the smoke room with when she left it, and the fire had been to some extent smothered by the lack of air. When Mr. Pegg opened the door, the flames and smoke burst out fiercely, and made the task of putting them out, which was essayed at first with buckets of water, a very dangerous one. At a quarter to three the alarm was given by Police-constable Turner to the local fire brigade. Superintendent Tustin, with Firemen Denning and Round, immediately turned out, and securing a good supply of water from a hydrant in the main street, were playing on the flames within the next quarter of an hour. It was impossible to save much in the smoke room, and the efforts of the brigade were directed to confining the flames to that room. This they did, although the wood ceiling of the passage was badly scorched. It was three of four hours before they could venture to leave, as although the flames were quickly got under, with the assistance of the police, the fire smouldered for some time in the stuffing of the seats. The sitting room above the smoke room was full of smoke and would soon have been ablaze; and one cannot but think how fortunate it was that none of the inmates slept near to the seat of the fire. When the danger was over, the smoke room was a complete wreck. Charred table-tops and empty picture frames showed how the fire had raged, and the whole of the leather upholstery was scorched to tinder. Indeed, there was but a few shillings' worth left in the room. The wood ceiling was ominously burnt and blistered, and had the discovery of the fire been delayed for half an hour, or had the door been left open, or had the fire brigade been absent, the whole house would probably have been involved. As it is about £100 will meet the damage, which we understand is covered by insurance. A large hole eaten into the floor by the flames at the foot of the left chimney jamb suggests that the fire originated here, though how can only be conjectured.”

“By the kindly thought of Mrs. James Pegg, of the RAILWAY HOTEL, a smoking concert in aid of a fund to assist the aged poor, was held at the RAILWAY HOTEL on Tuesday evening. There was a good attendance. Mr. S. Head, who presided, remarked that the object of the gathering was a good one, as the proceeds were to provide garments for the aged poor and widows. The programme was a varied one. Mrs. Province sang three songs excellently, and was joined by Mrs. Barnes in a duet, and Mr. J. Baynham gave in pleasing style ‘Rocked in the cradle of the deep.’ Messrs. T. W. Duke-Smith and A. James contributed recitations, Messrs. W. Clarence and E. Garner supplied the comic element, Mr. H. Griffiths was the ventriloquist, Mr. T. Salt produced gramophone records, and Mr. Raybould accompanied on the piano. The concert was very successful, and we are promised a statement of proceeds for our next issue.”

“In reference to the smoking concert held at the RAILWAY HOTEL on the 8th inst, for providing garments for the aged poor, Mrs. J. Pegg begs to announce that the concert and donations realised £7 10s, which has been distributed to sixty people in the district. Each old man received a shirt, and each old woman a woollen petticoat, costing 2s 6d each. The ladies and gentlemen who gave donations are: Mrs. J. Pegg £2 6s, Julia Hanson (Dudley) £1, Mr. G. Foster (Dudley) 5s, Mr. Conison (Brierley Hill) 2s, Mr. S. Priest (Pensnett) 1s, Mr. Potts (Brierley Hill) 1s. The ladies and gentlemen who assisted in selling tickets are Mrs. J. Pegg £1 17s 6d, Mrs. J. Lowe 3s 6d, Mrs. F. Hill 3s, Mrs. H. Watts 6s, Mr. H. Crompton 7s, Mr. W. Harris 7s 6d, Mr. Parkes 4s 6d, Mr. J. Barnes 6s – total £7 10s. Mr. and Mrs. Pegg desire to thank all who gave donations or who aided in any way in the movement.”

County Advertiser 11/5/1907

“On Monday evening Mr. and Mrs. James Pegg entertained their customers to supper at the RAILWAY HOTEL. Mr. Walter Harris presided, and a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the host and hostess, on the proposition of Mr. A. Woodhouse, seconded by Mr. D. Round, the host responding. Songs were given by Messrs. J. Pegg, junior, W. Dunn, T. Pegg, F. Priest, and W. Barnbrook, duets by Mrs. Province and Mrs. Barnes and a recitation by Mr. D. Round.”

Tipton Herald 10/7/1909

“The members of the RAILWAY HOTEL Sick and Draw Club held their half-yearly dinner in the clubroom of that house on Monday evening. About 50 members sat down to a capital spread provided by the host and hostess, Mr. J. H. Cole, and his mother, Mrs. Farndon. After the meal the chair was taken by Mr. E. Willetts, the vice chair being occupied by Mr. S. Raybould.....”

“On Monday evening, at the RAILWAY HOTEL, Five Ways, 52 members of the dividend club were entertained to dinner by the proprietor, Mr. Llewelyn Province. A splendid dinner was put upon the table, after which Mr. J. H. Cox was unanimously voted to the chair, and music ensued. Mr. William Hancox was encored for ‘If they ask what your name is,’ responding with ‘Sweetheart.’ Mr. Thomas Webb’s selections, ‘Josser Cricketer’ and ‘I’d like to go halves in that,’ were greatly enjoyed. Mrs. Llewelyn Province sang splendidly ‘Rich or poor.’ Mr. W. Priest contributed ‘Love rules the world’; Mr. Llewelyn Province, ‘A picture on the table’; Mr. James Pegg, ‘My Girl’ and ‘Jessie dear’; Mr. Thomas Whitehouse, ‘Pat-a-cake,’ encore ‘Patrick John O’More’; and Mr. Charles Cole, ‘The scene was at Chatham.’ Gramophone selections were also given by the kindness of Mr. Jos. Robinson. Votes of thanks to the host and hostess, and to the chairman, closed a most enjoyable evening.”

“James Harris was charged with being disorderly and refusing to quit the premises of Joseph Partridge, on the 2nd inst.

Joseph Partridge, landlord of the RED LION INN, Cradley Heath, said on the day in question the defendant came into his premises and began to pull the servant girl about. He ordered him to go out, but he refused.

Samuel Partridge said he saw the defendant in the house, and seeing he was disorderly, asked him to go out. After a deal of bad language had been used by the defendant, he went out and picked up a stone, and threw it at a window and broke it, doing damage to the extent of 4s.

Defendant was fined 5s and costs, and 4s, the value of the window, or, in default, one month’s imprisonment.”

County Advertiser 15/5/1880

“David Willetts, chainmaker, Cradley Heath, was charged with being disorderly and refusing to quit licensed premises, on the 5th inst. Joseph Partridge, landlord of the RED LION INN, Cradley Heath, gave evidence that the defendant came into his house, commenced to use abusive language, and refused to leave when requested. Defendant was fined only 2s 6d and costs, as the costs were rather heavy. Defendant was summoned for last week. He, however, did not appear, and a warrant was issued.”

County Advertiser 17/10/1896

Debtor, who is charged with being an absconding bankrupt, attended in custody with two of the warders from Worcester gaol. Mr. Tinsley represented the bankrupt, and Mr. W. H. Thompson appeared on behalf of the petitioning creditors.

In reply to Mr. Jobson (Official Receiver) debtor stated that he had been a miner, and about six years ago he borrowed £200 and took the RED LION INN, Five Ways, Cradley Heath, where he remained for about three years. He repaid part of the money, and whilst at the public house he ran up an account with a firm of brewers. He was paid a sum to leave the RED LION in December, 1893, but could not remember the amount.

Mr. Jobson: Have you from that date up to the present time been able to pay your creditors in full? – I think I have been; sometimes I have been level, and sometimes I have been behind.

He took the OLD CROSS GUNS in December, 1893, and remained there until last August. The in-going valuation was £140.

Of this sum he only paid £80, some of which he borrowed, and the remainder being the money he had received in respect of the valuation of the other public house.

Mr. Jobson: Do you suggest that you were robbed whilst at the CROSS GUNS? – Debtor: I do. There was £65 10s in cash taken away at once. We tried to discover who took the money, but we could not find it.

You have suggested that it was members of your own family? – Well, I could never find it out.

How many sons have you? – Four or five.

Has there been a prosecution against you? – Yes.

When was that? – About two months ago.

What did it cost you? – About £30.

Where did you get the money from? – From my mother.

Did your creditors come down upon you when they saw that you had been convicted? – They did not interfere with me.

Do you want the Court to understand that at that time you could not pay 20s in the pound, but that if you had sold the lease of the house you would have had sufficient to have done so? – Yes.

What was the amount of the lease? – £170.

He believed this sum would have paid them all. He had the BLACK BOY, at Oldbury, which he carried on at the same time he was landlord of the RED LION. He took the BLACK BOY on behalf of his son Thomas, who went to India, taking with him some of the money. About nine months ago he took the OLD ENGINE HOUSE, Wagon Street, Old Hill, for his son John. He paid part of the money for the license and his son the remainder, the amount being £50. His son had repaid the money, with the exception of about £7.

Mr. Jobson: Where did you get the money from? – Debtor: From a club conducted by teachers and scholars.

Why did you leave the neighbourhood? – I went out for my health.

And whilst out for your health did you spend any of the takings from the house? – I did not see a penny.

Replying to Mr. Tinsley, debtor stated that he had about £19 or £20 when he went away.

Mr. Jobson said that certain proceedings were yet to be taken against the debtor.

The Registrar said that he did not think the bankrupt would have to appear in that court again, but he would adjourn the case sine die.”

County Advertiser 25/3/1899

“Strange Allegation Against A Brother. A singular charge of theft, preferred by Hezekiah Bills, chainmaker, Cradley Heath, against his brother, Alfred Bills, grocer, of Cradley.

The evidence given by a number of witnesses showed that on the 17th ult the father of the prosecutor was fined 12s by the Stourbridge magistrates for drunkenness, and as he had no money to pay the fine, his sons and a few friends decided to make a collection to pay the fine. On the 18th ult they met at the RED LION INN, Cradley Heath, and prosecutor put 5s on the table towards the 12s required. It was alleged that the defendant picked up the two half crowns, and at the same time remarked, ‘I am glad my brother has got plenty of money.’ He refused to give up the money and walked away.

Mr. Hinds, of Stourbridge, who defended, submitted that no offence had been committed, because after defendant had left the public house he handed over to his father the amount of the fine, which was paid to the police at Cradley, and the old man was set free.

The case was dismissed.”

“On Monday afternoon, the annual dinner and meeting of the members of the Amalgamated Society of Anchorsmiths took place at the RED LION INN, Cradley Heath. A large number of members sat down to an excellent repast, provided by the landlord (Mr. Thomas Price). Afterwards, the President (Mr. Caleb Worton) occupied the chair.....”

Thomas Price’s license was renewed in August 1900, despite long pull offences.

“The annual licensing sessions for the petty sessional division of Rowley Regis were held on Wednesday, at the Court House, Old Hill. The magistrates present were Messrs. W. Bassano (chairman), G. Green, and J. W. Tilley.....

Mr. E. W. Cave (instructed by Mr. Jeffries) said he was instructed, on behalf of the local Licensed Victuallers’ Association and the Birmingham District Brewers’ Association to oppose the renewal of the licenses of the RAILWAY INN and RED LION INN, Cradley Heath, kept by Mr. Thomas Scriven and Mr. Thomas Price respectively, the first being a fully-licensed house, and the latter a beerhouse. He thought the cases could be dealt with together. Mr. Waldron appeared to support the renewal of the licenses.

Mr. Cave said the objections were limited to four, the chief of which were that the license-holders were guilty of unfair trading by giving excessive over-measure, and that the premises were not required for the needs of the neighbourhood. The facts were that for a considerable time there had been a custom in the trade to give what was known as the long pull, which means that a man asking for a half-pint would get a pint, and asking for a pint would get a quart. Several attempts had been made to put an end to this, but the efforts had not been very successful until recently. Some time ago it was proposed there should be a combination on the part of license-holders to stop the practice, and it was only recently that it had come to a head, and it was desired now to prevent license-holders from indulging in the practice. The practice was one which he did not think they would dispute was detrimental to the interests of the public, and the trade were showing a genuine desire to bring about a reform and improvement in the cases in which drink was supplied to the public, and he considered they should be encouraged in that desire. That was the meaning of the objections, and as the trade had devoted itself to a system of internal reform, he thought the Bench should support it by refusing the licenses to these two houses until they conformed to the movement instituted by the trade in the interests of the public.

Edward Every, clerk, in the employ of Mr. Jeffries proved posting of notices of objection.

Mr. W. Green, jeweller, of Oldbury, gave evidence as to purchasing ale from the houses, and stated that for half a pint he got nearly a pint.

Cross-examined: He did not know whether these houses were 'free houses' or not.

Mr. Waldron said that anyone who knew anything about this question of fair trading practices amongst publicans could not be blind to the real object of those associations, they never were aware of any injury being done either to themselves or to the general public until the unfortunate extra shilling per barrel duty came into existence. The result was, as soon as it came into existence, then the very large brewers – he saw in the paper in the case of Allsopp's there was a loss of £30,000 to the shareholders – throughout the country began to hold meetings to see how that could be taken out of the public pocket, and put into the shareholders' in the shape of profit. That was the real inception of the beginning of the so-called 'fair trade,' and what was known as ceasing to give long pulls. The Bench were not there to deal with private quarrels amongst the trade, but only to see the license-holders conformed with the regulations of the statute. It seemed to have been a regular thing to give greater measure than was asked for, but he ventured to suggest there was nothing unlawful or immoral in that, as long as the competition was fair and legitimate. The question that it led to drunkenness was nonsensical from its inception, because if there were drunkenness in the house it would mean not the white gloves they had heard of that day, but the Court would be inundated with prosecutions. He asked the Bench not to make themselves parties to a trade dispute, but to renew the licenses. There had not been a word suggested against the character of the two licensees that they were not fit and proper persons, neither that the houses were unsuitable, and he asked for the licenses to be renewed.

The Bench said they would renew the licenses. There were no special grounds for refusing, and it would be monstrously unfair to do so. Whatever the association might try to do for the public good and morality it would have the Bench's sympathy; but they were not altogether clear that there were any great benefits for public morality to be expected from this movement. It appeared that if a man went into a house and asked for a pint of beer, and he got a quart, it did no damage to his morality, for he was not obliged to drink it. It would be advantageous to a man and his family, inasmuch as he would get two pints for the price of one. If the trade was honest in its endeavor for the public good, let it go on and show itself in a better form than it had hitherto done. It did not come to the Court with the cleanest hands that day."

"I, John Dimmock, of Foxoak Street, Cradley Heath, Do Hereby Apologise to Mrs. Thomas Price, of the RED LION INN, Cradley Road, Cradley Heath, for the Abusive and Slandorous Language I used towards her on Monday, the 28th day of January last, and I Express my Regret that I used same, and further I agree to Pay all Costs in the Matter.

"Bertha Buckley, a girl, of Graingers Lane, Cradley Heath, was charged with stealing a gold brooch, value 17s, belonging to Elizabeth Price, wife of Thomas Price, landlord of the RED LION INN, Cradley Road; and Sylvia Billingham, her grandmother, was charged with receiving it.

Mrs. Price said that Buckley was a servant in her employ, commencing duty on the 28th January, and leaving on February 25th.

She (witness) afterwards missed the brooch produced from a writing desk.

Arthur Griffiths, jeweller, said the brooch was brought to his shop to have a catch put on it.

Charles Dewitt, manager for Mr. Chambers, pawnbroker, said that Billingham offered the brooch in pledge, saying, on being questioned, that her grand-daughter had given it to her.

Police-sergeant Pitcher arrested the girl, who in reply to the charge said, 'I found it behind the bar, and thought I could keep it.'

The grandmother, on being apprehended, said, 'It was given to me by my grand-daughter, who found it.'

Mr. Ward, in defence, said the girl, in cleaning up the room, sometimes came across coins on the floor, and it was an understood thing that those on the bar side of the counter belonged to the landlord, and those on the other to the sweeper. She found the brooch in some sawdust, and picked it up, not knowing that it was of any value whatever.

Bertha Buckley, in evidence, said she found the brooch produced on the customers' side of the bar amongst some sawdust. She did not think it was worth a penny, and put it in her pocket. The jeweller Griffiths first told her it was gold.

Sylvia Billingham said she saw the brooch for the first time on the previous Friday. The lodgers were talking about their rings, and one said the brooch was gold, and the other that it was not.

The Bench fined Bertha Buckley 10s, and the grandmother 20s, costs being included in each case."

“When the Staffordshire Licensing Committee and Compensation Authority sat at Stafford on Saturday to consider the license of the RED LION INN, Cradley Heath, which had been referred on grounds of redundancy, it was stated that within an area of a quarter of a mile there were 26 other licensed houses.

Mr. I. Sunderland, representing the Rowley Regis justices who had referred the license, said that in the first place the structure and lay-out of the house were such that nobody could be in doubt as to its undesirability. There was, however, another matter which, he thought, should be taken into consideration. Within a quarter of a mile of the RED LION there were no fewer than 26 licensed houses where similar facilities could be obtained. Some of the houses had been improved considerably and offered amenities that the RED LION could never offer. The committee would hear from a police inspector that from a structural point of view, design, and repair, the house could hardly be in a more deplorable state. It was only fair to state, however, that a few years ago the owners of the property prepared plans for its improvement, but on the advice of the licensing justices they were withdrawn. Today the circumstances were different, because not only would it be most uneconomical to reconstruct the house, but it would be impossible under existing conditions to undertake rebuilding. Furthermore, it was not in accordance with the interests of the public or the interests of the trade at present that there should be a number of services catering for the public when it could be served by a few. Here they had a licensed house for which nothing could be said for its structure or lay-out, and within a quarter of a mile there were 26 other houses. The licensing justices took the view, therefore, that the license should not be renewed.

Describing the condition of the RED LION, Police Inspector Hughes stated that no painting or decoration had been done for a number of years, and structurally the property was bad. Witness had paid 11 visits to the house on different days and at different times of the day and the number of customers averaged 19.

Major E. J. Hardy, DSO, who presided, mentioned that the justices' report showed that the barrelage was between five and six barrels per week.

Mr. H. Wallace Copland, who appeared for the owners of the house, handed in a statement giving details of the trade, and formally applied for the renewal of the license.

The committee refused renewal of the license.”

“Staffordshire Quarter Sessions.....

The report of the County Licensing Committee for the year 1941 was submitted.....

Dealing with the Compensation Fund, the report stated that on January 1, 1941, after taking into consideration cheques drawn and not presented, there was a balance of £1,156 8s 9d. During the year the sum of £14,100 was received from the Commissioners of Customs and Excise, and a further sum of approximately £2,500 was expected for the year 1941. After payment of the compensation monies in the cases of the Elephant and Castle and the RED LION, Cradley Heath (£4,700), and taking into account any other expenses of the committee, there would be a credit balance of approximately £6,200 on December 31, 18941.....”

“Sports Argus darts player Len Cotton made history for the team last night when, throwing against the Tividale League, he had a six-dart game. It was the first by an Argus player – or against one – in the 18 years the team has been in existence. It was the first time, too, that Cotton has ever performed this feat which not only made sure of another Argus victory, but put the seal on his long and distinguished career in Midlands darts circles.

Cotton has lost count, over the years, of the number of maximums he has thrown. He has had several seven-dart games previously and eight and nine-dart games have cropped up comparatively frequently; but never previously has he scored a six-dart game in match play.

It was a wonderful moment for him, for his colleagues and, indeed, the packed room at the RED LION, Tividale, and it was certainly the highlight of a night of memorable throwing – big scores, fine finishes and two nine-darts games by other Argus players.....”

Sports Argus 4/3/1967

“The Sports Argus darts team defeated the Tividale League 5-4 at the RED LION, Regent Road, Dudley, last night, to maintain their winning sequence. But the closeness of the score tells nothing of the night of high drama in which fortunes ebbed first one way, then the other, and which culminated in the visitors winning on the third leg of the last match. It could not have been closer; it could not have been more thrilling or more entertaining. It was indeed a match to remember.....”

“Albion defender Paddy Mulligan had a surprise in store for his team-mates when they visited the RED LION, Tividale, this week for a darts match against the new holders of the world record for playing a million and one.

Goalkeeper John Osborne told me, ‘Paddy had seen dart boards before but as far as he was concerned I think he thought they were some sort of traditional English wall plaque.’ However, with his first three darts Mulligan scored 152 with a treble 18, bull and double 19! But it was Len Cantello who turned out to be Albion’s match-winner, having the top score of 156 and throwing the winning double on the deciding leg.

I’m told though that the RED LION players, who scored a million points in under seven hours recently, all complained of mysterious arm injuries just when they looked like taking the match 2-0.”

“Steel traders in the Black Country have given a £5,000 boost to a Midland children’s hospital after a gruelling marathon. Ten people took part in a 24-mile cycling, swimming, and running quadrathlon which ended with them tackling an army assault course at Lichfield. Their efforts were rewarded by raising a total of £5,000 which will now be handed over to the Birmingham Children's Hospital at the RED LION pub in Tividale next Thursday.

The event was organized by Mr. Paul Lingwood and Mr. Mike Waldron, of Coseley steel firm, Lingwood Steels. Sales executive Mr. Waldron said, 'We are both family men and knew there was a £1 million appeal at that time for a new operating theatre at the children's hospital. We persuaded three colleagues from the steel trade together with five friends to take part and managed to raise about £5,000 between us.'

The quadrathlon began with a three-mile run from Firs Bank community centre in Willenhall to Walsall Gala Baths where all ten men had to swim a mile. They then cycled the 20 miles to Whittington Barracks in Lichfield for the army assault course. The cheque is due to be presented by former European boxing champion Pat Cowdell on November 9."

"Down your Local. RED LION, Tividale.

The Monday Crowd were having a whale of a time. It was the monthly get-together for eight close friends and landlady Linda Purcell had laid on another treat for them.

'We wouldn't go anywhere else for our little outing,' said Chris Jukes, one of the group of old folk clearly at home in their favourite spot at the RED LION. In fact, they never leave the pub in Regent Road, Tividale, without booking themselves in for their next visit.

Chris, and her husband, Bill, are two of the many regulars who call back at other times – especially if there's something special to celebrate. 'We had a family party here to mark our 46th wedding anniversary and, as is always the case, we were well looked after,' added Chris as she and her friends relaxed over a lunchtime meal and drink in the lounge.

Linda, wife of licensee Trevor Purcell, had served up a tasty looking dish of the day – a good helping of liver and onions – for just £1.75. 'It's great value,' said Bill Ashcroft, there with his wife, Nellie, 80, and other sprightly members of a happy gang including Alf Whitehouse, 83, a regular since the pub opened 52 years ago.

This RED LION is roaring away on all social fronts. 'You won't find a better pub anywhere around here for raising money when help is needed,' said Ray Johnson, a key member of fund-boosting teams. 'We've given thousands to help sufferers of cystic fibrosis, and we'll support any worthy cause. Mind you, we have fun doing it.'

Martin Whittall has all his mates in the bar to thank for making life easier for his daughter, Dannielle, aged four, who has cystic fibrosis. The pub has raised about £10,000 for the Birmingham Children's Hospital.

'I've got a brilliant bunch of customers,' said landlord Trevor whose own efforts to create a good community local are roundly applauded. 'The place was a dump when we arrived 11 years ago, but if a licensee gets himself involved in new interests, the regulars soon join in – and that's what we've done.'

The first eye-catching feature of this gem of a pub is Trevor's collection of some 800 beer mugs and jugs hanging from rafters. They've come from all over the world.

Other 'counter' attractions include live entertainment twice a week; Sunday lunches; indoor bowls plus teams set up for darts, dominoes and cricket; Charity Quiz Nights; a children's play area and free Christmas treats for the kids and old folk.

The pub's 100-seater Functions Room is fully booked for Mother's Day lunch treats. And they're expecting another big crowd for a 1940s style party night.

Pubfile:

Pick of the pints: Ansells bitter; Tetley bitter; Hanson's mild.

Hezekiah Golding was also a furniture dealer. [1864], [1865]

Stourbridge Observer 18/2/1865

“On Monday last at the County Court, Dudley, Mr. Kettle, Judge, presiding, Mr. Brooks, now of Birmingham, but formerly of Cradley Heath, sued Mr. Hezekiah Golding, of the REINDEER INN, Cradley Heath, for damages as compensation for losses sustained owing to the defendant illegally distraining his goods, and also throwing out of his situation without giving the proper notice. Mr. Stokes appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Oldershaw for the defendant.

It appears that the plaintiff is a clock and watch maker, and formerly resided at Cradley Heath; and the defendant is a publican, and furniture dealer. Owing to the defendant's neighbour, a Mr. Beaven, who is a watchmaker, setting up as a furniture dealer in opposition to the defendant, he entered into an agreement with the present plaintiff to come and live at his shop, and make and mend watches in counter opposition to Beaven. In the month of September last, the plaintiff became a tenant of the house, on the conditions of paying three shillings per week for the use of two furnished rooms (a bed-room and a kitchen) and also the use of part of the shop wherein to work. He had also to attend to the selling of furniture in the absence of Mr. Golding.

According to the evidence of Mr. Brooks, he fulfilled all these arrangements up to within a short time since. He paid his rent regularly till the 16th of last December. On the 2nd of January last he went out from home for a day or two, on a visit to his relations at Birmingham. He locked all up safely before he went, and left the key at Mrs. Golding's. He returned on the 5th and tried to get into his house but could not, as all the doors were locked. He went to Mr. Golding's public house, and asked him how he was; next he asked the reason why the shop and house were locked up. Golding replied that he had sold all his (Brooks's) goods.

And also said that Mr. Andrews had been down enquiring after Mr. Brooks from whom he had got to know that Brooks was making arrangements to taking to his business. Golding then said that he thought it was best to take care of himself. He then asked Golding where the goods were; he was shown into the parlour where he found all his goods in a heap. His most valuable things being scattered on the floor. The door of the parlour was not locked, so that anyone might enter. He then offered to pay the rent and any reasonable expenses that might have been incurred. Golding wanted £2 18s. He would not pay it and was then referred to Mr. Chandler who wanted nearly £4. The sum of money owing for rent was 21s. Told Mr. Chandler that he would not pay it. The goods were sold next day. About five persons were present at the sale. He had not got back into the shop again. He had to travel to and from Birmingham in order to finish the jobs he had at Cradley Heath. There was an understanding between him and the defendant, that he (plaintiff) would pay the rent he owed as soon as he received the money due to him for setting up a large clock at Netherend. The value of the goods in his house was £30. What he got back were worth half that sum. Had not been able to obtain a situation since. He was residing now with his friends.

Mr. Brown, a bailiff in the employ of Mr. Chandler, deposed to the taking of the goods under a distraint for rent. Golding was present. He obtained an entrance through the back door which was open. No representative of Brooks was there. He removed the things to Mr. Golding's and put them up at the sale. Brooks was present and bought some of the things.

Samuel Romsley said that he witnessed Brooks offer Golding the sum of £1 16s.

For the defence it was urged that the defendant thought that the plaintiff had gone and did not intend to return, as the defendant alleged that Brooks had promised to return on the evening of the 2nd, and bring the money that he owed him.

The Judge said it was one of the worst cases of the kind he had ever had before him; the defendant had acted in a most tyrannical manner towards the plaintiff. He had far exceeded the bounds of law, and his verdict would therefore be for the plaintiff, damages £10."

"Frank Jones was charged with being drunk and refusing to quit a licensed house, kept by Samuel Jones, his brother, on the 5th inst. Mr. Saunders prosecuted, and Mr. Holberton defended.

Complainant said that he kept the REINDEER INN, and was the lessee under his brother. The defendant came to his house on the night of the 5th inst, about ten minutes to eleven o'clock, and said he had come to catch the b—. He then said that he would summon complainant before the magistrates. He ordered defendant out, but he refused to go. Complainant then put him out, but was knocked down by defendant, his wife, and another woman, and was also kicked.

Cross-examined: All the other houses in the neighbourhood were not closed. It was not twenty minutes past eleven o'clock when the defendant came to the house. Defendant was drunk.

Ann Harper, barmaid, gave evidence as to defendant refusing to quit the house.

The landlady and another witness gave evidence in support of the charge.

Defendant was sworn, and stated that on passing the complainant's house on the night in question he heard someone tell complainant to fill a bottle. He pulled out his watch and found that it was over twenty minutes past eleven o'clock. On going into the house he found the landlady filling a bottle with some ale, and there were also three persons present and glasses on the table. He then left the house, but complainant followed him, and, striking him, knocked him down. A struggle then took place between them, and complainant fell against the wall.

The Bench inflicted a fine of 20s and costs.

Several summonses which had been taken out arising out of the above case were withdrawn."

"Edward Strong and Reuben Southall were charged with having been disorderly and refused to quit a licensed house kept by Samuel Jones, on the 14th inst. Strong was further charged with having at the same time and place played a certain game of chance or pretended game of chance.

Mr. Hayes, who prosecuted, said Strong had made an attempt to get his client convicted of permitting gambling, and he asked to be allowed to withdraw the charge against Southall, whom he wished to call as a witness.

Fanny Jones, wife of the prosecutor, who keeps the REINDEER INN, Cradley Heath, said that the defendants were at their house on the 14th during the absence of her husband, and going into the kitchen, she observed some money upon the table, and shortly afterwards saw the kitchen door closed. She then entered, and suspecting the defendants were gambling, she said it could not be allowed, and pointed to a placard which stated that gambling was prohibited. She ordered Strong to leave the house, but they refused. Strong, however, subsequently left, and returned with a policeman.

Southall, against whom the charge of refusing to quit was withdrawn, said that Strong came into the REINDEER and having called for a pint of ale, said he would play any person in the company. Witness told him repeatedly that he did not want to gamble, because it was not allowed in the house. They, however, played for a quart of ale, and Strong subsequently said that if he (witness) would accompany him to Brierley Hill and Brockmoor for the purpose of detecting gambling in licensed houses, he would remunerate him and also pay what expenses were incurred in riding.

George Clark said he informed the landlady that gambling was going on in the kitchen, and she then ordered Strong to leave.

Police-constable Cooper said that on the 14th, the defendant, Strong, who had been previously convicted of gambling, came to him and made a communication to him to the effect that he had been gambling at the REINDEER with three men, and if he would accompany him to the house he would point them out. Witness accompanied him to Jones's public-house and the men were pointed out by the defendant.

The charge of refusing to quit was dismissed, but for gambling defendant was fined 40s and costs, or one month's imprisonment." [We have seen several cases where 'informers' were paid by the police for a conviction; publicans were an easy target.]

“Elan Carr was charged by Samuel Jones, landlord of the REINDEER INN, King Street, Cradley Heath, with having been drunk on his premises, and with refusing to quit when ordered. Mr. Hayes appeared for complainant. On the 12th inst, complainant on going home found defendant intoxicated. Defendant was secretary to a Woman’s Club held at the house, but was in such a condition that he was totally unfit to audit the books. Complainant ordered him to leave several times, and on his refusing to do so, ejected him. Fined 2s 6d and costs.”

“Samuel Jones, licensed victualler, Cradley Heath, was charged with wilfully damaging a hat, the property of Joseph Woodhouse. Mr. Hayes defended.

On the day in question the complainant visited the defendant’s house and offered some nuts for sale. Defendant bought a quantity, and complainant then called for a pint of ale. After the ale was supplied to him the defendant took the complainant’s hat, value 12s, and cut it up. In cross-examination the complainant admitted that the defendant had since given him another hat but it was not large enough for him.

Mr. Hayes said the defendant acquiesced in having his hat cut up; in fact the whole affair was done in a joke.

The case was dismissed.”

Dudley Herald 31/1/1880

“Samuel Jones, landlord of the REINDEER INN, Cradley Heath, was charged with stealing two ladders, the property of John Theaker, on the 21st ult. Mr. Hayes defended.

Complainant stated he had two ladders locked up on his own premises, and that the defendant took them away next morning and locked them up.

Mr. Hayes said there could not be a more preposterous charge than that imputed to his client. Defendant had a right to the ladders which he was charged with stealing. The fact of the matter was that defendant had previously lent the complainant money, and upon the last sum being lent, the complainant signed a promissory note, which stated that the ladders were to be given his client as security. Defendant took the ladders according to the written agreement which had been signed by the complainant. Here Mr. Hayes produced two documents which were in complainant’s handwriting, showing that defendant had lent him money at various times. One of these explicitly stated that the ladders were to be held by the defendant as security for the last sum lent.

The Bench were unanimously of opinion that there was no felonious intent whatever, and dismissed the case.”

Evening Star 14/2/1882

“At the Dudley County Court this morning, before Sir Rupert Kettle, judge, Mr. Homer, of Cradley Heath, stated that he wished to make an application in bankruptcy in re Samuel Jones, late licensed victualler of Cradley Heath. Mr. Stokes, of Dudley, applied for an adjournment, on the ground that some of the affidavits in the case were not filed until Saturday night, and his client had had no opportunity of examining them.

Mr. Homer asked, before this adjournment was granted, that he might be allowed to make a short statement. He said this was an application in the proceedings of a person named Samuel Jones, publican, of Cradley Heath, who filed his petition on the 23rd August last year. In the ordinary way the petition was filed by Mr. Addison, of Brierley Hill, on behalf the defendant, and upon the motion of one of the creditors, a Mr. Humphries, auctioneer, of Brierley Hill, was appointed receiver of the estate. At the first meeting of creditors, held in due course, it was resolved to accept a composition of 2s in the pound. At that meeting a statement of accounts was prepared, signed by the debtor, and presented to the creditors. The first item therein was two houses, valued by the debtor at £330, which were mortgaged to a person at Liverpool for £200. Also an item of £40 for debts, which the creditor said were due to him, and a few pounds the value of some household furniture. The debtors on these grounds agreed to accept a composition of 2s in the £. But it was not so much what was put in the statement, but what was suppressed, that was complained of. It had appeared that the debtor was a man of property and value, not only capable of paying 20s in the £, but 40s if necessary. On the 26th July the debtor, doubtless with a view of defrauding his creditors, entered into an arrangement with his brother, Frank Jones, for him to purchase the goodwill and stock of his public house, the REINDEER. Mr. Humphries, who was formerly travelling for a brewery, made a valuation himself, and it was agreed that the debtor should be paid by his brother for the goodwill and the effects at the REINDEER, on Mr. Humphries' valuation, the sum of £108 4s 4d which was to be paid in these bills. These bills were drawn by Humphries, signed by Samuel Jones, accepted by Frank Jones, and handed over to Humphries, who in his turn handed over the bills to Samuel Jones. This was done on the 26th July, the petition being filed in August following. At the meeting of creditors these bills were produced previous to the meeting by the debtor to his brother, Frank Jones, in the presence of Humphries, the receiver, and his charge was that it was arranged not to produce those bills at the meeting, or to say one word about them, for if they were it would do the debtor very serious injury, and there would be a great noise amongst the creditors. His Honour said he did not think he ought to hear any more.

Mr. Homer said there was a great deal more to be said. He only wished the Court would take his statement for what it was worth. He had investigated the statements, and he was convinced it was the most heinous case with which he was ever connected.

Mr. Stokes thought it very unfair that statement should have been made that morning, reflecting on the character of a respectable auctioneer without his having any notice of them. His name was brought in on a charge of fraud in his absence, and without any notice having been served upon him.

His Honour said he had stopped the charge of fraud from being made. He consented to the case being adjourned till nine o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, the 28th inst, when there would be a clear day for hearing it."

“An inquest was held on Saturday by Mr. A. H. Pearson (coroner), at the REINDEER INN, King Street, on Mary Ann Weaver (14), of Tibbetts Gardens, who had died from injuries received through being run over in the High Street. Elizabeth Ann Weaver, the mother, stated that on the 4th inst she sent deceased to get some fish for supper, and afterwards she was brought home in an unconscious state, and died the next morning. Ada Lane stated that when walking down High Street she saw deceased crossing the street, when a horse and trap was being driven up the road. She heard the driver (Mr. Charles Davies) shout out, and at the same time deceased was knocked down, the wheel of the vehicle passing over her head. Police-sergeant Picher said he also witnessed the accident. Mr. Davies was driving at a modest pace, and was quite sober. Charles Davies, landlord of the WAGON AND HORSES, Reddal Hill, said when driving through the High Street he saw the deceased about fifteen yards in front of him. Deceased afterwards became confused, and, the woman shouting her, she stopped right in front of the horse. She was knocked down by the horse, and a wheel passed over her head. He assisted in removing the unfortunate girl to her home. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death, being of the opinion that Mr. Davies was in no way to blame.”

“On Monday last the members of Court Pride of the Heath, No.6653, AOF, Dudley and Cradley Heath District, held their annual dinner at the REINDEER INN, King Street. The hostess, Mrs. Lane, provided an excellent dinner. Bro. B. Fowkes was chairman, and in felicitous terms proposed the health of Dr. Sturgis White, surgeon to the Court, which was duly acknowledged by the doctor. The Chairman next gave the ‘Pride of the Heath,’ and ‘The Hostess.’ The remainder of the evening was spent convivially, songs being given by Bros. James Cloe, Joseph Woodhouse, J. Silvers, and Richard Dodd. Mr. F. Webb sent a letter of apology. The singing of the National Anthem brought a very enjoyable evening to a close.”

“Last year, for the first time, the friendly societies of Cradley Heath united in an effort to raise funds for the Dudley and Birmingham hospitals, and a well-attended service was held in St, Luke’s Church. So satisfactory were the results of the movement that the societies were stimulated to repeat the effort this year, and on this occasion the service was held in a large field at the bottom of King Street, kindly lent for the occasion by Mr. Joseph Foley.....
Last Sunday was the appointed day, and, as every one knows, was gloriously fine, making the parade a rather arduous matter to those engaged in it, but a very attractive one from the view of the spectators. Three bands had been secured to take part in the proceedings – the Cradley Heath Town Prize Band, the Cradley Heath Salvation Army Band, and the Quarry Bank (Primitive Methodist) Brass Band. The first named left the REINDEER INN, King Street, the second started from the VICTORIA INN, Dudley Wood, and the third marched from the NEW INNS, Quarry Bank, shortly after one o’clock, and went by separate routes to the field in King Street. There a grand procession was formed, and took the road again When set going this procession extended for fully half a mile.....

A collection at the stalls in the market on Saturday evening realised £5 8s 7d. Sunday's collection en route realised £3 19s 3½d, and that on the field £5 3s 11d, and the chairman and Mr. A. Shaw gave donations of 10s each. These items amount to £15 11s 9½d, and as there are boxes and donations yet to be brought in, the committee hope that the result will equal or surpass that of last year."

County Advertiser 16/6/1906

"Friendly Societies' Parade Committee. A meeting was held on Wednesday evening at the RED LION INN, when Mr. Parrish presided over a full attendance of delegates. It was decided that a deputation wait upon the Rev. A. E. J. Cosson and arrange with him as to the order of service to be held in Christ Church in connection with the parade. The committee unanimously decided to invite the Rev. E. A. Cooke, the Rev. F. R. Brunskill, and the Rev. J. Walker, together with the local Councillors and the local fire brigade to take part in the service. The next meeting will be held at the REINDEER INN."

County Advertiser 30/6/1906

"The Friendly Societies' Parade Committee met on Wednesday evening at the REINDEER INN. Mr Parish presided over a full attendance of delegates. The Rev. F. R. Brunskill and J. W. Walker replied accepting the invitation of the committee to take part in the proceedings. The Rev. E. A. Cooke, who was away in America, was expected back next week, and would then write the committee. Several of the delegates of sick and draw clubs were present. A committee was appointed to wait on a number of local gentlemen to solicit their patronage. The next meeting will be held at the CROWN INN, Five Ways."

County Advertiser 11/5/1907

"On Monday evening last Mr. E. O. Nightingale sold by auction, at the REINDEER INN, Cradley Heath, the butcher's shop and premises, No.163 High Street, Cradley Heath. The bidding started at £800, and the property was eventually knocked down at £1,400 to Mr. Hickman. There was a very large and influential company of buyers present, and the price realised gave great satisfaction. Mr. Geo. Green, solicitor, of Cradley Heath, acted for the vendor."

County Express 7/5/1910

"A quiet but pretty marriage was solemnised at St. Luke's Church, Cradley Heath, on Wednesday morning, when the Rev. R. E. Walker (vicar) joined together in wedlock Mr. George Garratt, of Cradley Heath, and Miss Alice Beatrice Lane, only daughter of Mrs. Lane, the REINDEER, Cradley Heath. The bridegroom is a well-known professional footballer. Commencing with Cradley Heath St. Luke's, he successively migrated to Brierley Hill Alliance, Crewe Alexandra, Aston Villa, Plymouth Argyle, West Bromwich Albion, and Crystal Palace. The bride's brother, Albert Lane is a well-known cricket professional, and figures with the Selkirk Club, Scotland.

A large number of friends were present in the church. The bride was prettily gowned in an embroidered white robe trimmed with orange blossoms, and her hat was to match. She was attended by two bridesmaids, Miss Adelaide Lottie Chatham of Smethwick (cousin) and Miss Winnie Moody of Stourbridge (cousin). Miss Chatham wore a dress of old rose silk with hat to match, and the younger bridesmaid was attired in cream silk. Both wore gold brooches set with pearls, the gifts of the bridegroom. Mr. James Lane gave his sister away, and Mr. Sydney Lane was best man. Mr. A. B. Hayes was at the organ, and played Mendelssohn's Wedding March.

A large number of presents were received. Later in the day the bride and bridegroom left for Blackpool, where they are spending their honeymoon."

“Yesterday Mr. E. Hooper, coroner, held an inquest at the SPORTSMAN INN, Old Hill, respecting the death of John Crump (23), rivet maker, of Long Lane, whose body was found in the Birmingham Canal, on the 5th inst, near to the railway station.

William Crump stated that he last saw the deceased alive on Monday evening, at the RIDDINGS INN, when he promised to assist witness in making some rivets on the following morning and afterwards left to go home. He did not hear anything further of deceased until the following day, when the canal was dragged and his body was found in the canal between Wrights Bridge and Gorsty Hill tunnel.

Evidence was given by Thomas Brooke and John Bennett that deceased had threatened to make away with himself. He had had some beer, but was not drunk. It was stated there was insanity in the family.

The Jury returned an open verdict of Found Drowned, there being no evidence to show how the deceased got into the water. They also recommended the Coroner to write to the Birmingham Canal Company informing them of the dangerous state of the canal at Gorsty Hill tunnel.”

County Express 9/5/1891

“On Tuesday, Mr. Edwin Hooper (District Coroner) held an inquest at the RIDDING INN, New Street, touching the death of John Thomas Fletcher, aged one year and seven months, who was killed through being knocked down by a horse and cart belonging to Mr. Yates, ginger beer manufacturer.

It was stated that the child suddenly ran before the horse and cart, and before the driver could pull up he was run over and killed.

The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

Mr. Cooksey, who represented the owner of the horse and cart, stated that his client would pay the funeral expenses.

Whilst the inquiry was taking place a boy named Chatham was knocked down in the street by a horse and cart and injured.”

Birmingham Daily Post 30/6/1891

“Yesterday afternoon Mr. E. Hooper (coroner) held an inquest at the RIDDINGS TAVERN, Riddings Street, Old Hill, respecting the death of Ernest Darby (11), whose parents reside in New Street, Old Hill, and who was killed on Friday by falling down a pit-shaft belonging to Messrs. Astley and Lawton, colliery proprietors. Mr. W. B. Scott, Government inspector of mines, was present at the enquiry.

Andrew Pearson, a boy, said on Friday evening, between seven and eight o'clock, deceased, witness, and three other boys were playing near a pit-shaft belonging to the Ridding Colliery at 'follow the leader.' One of the deceased's playmates ran over the mouth of the shaft, which was covered with timber, and deceased followed him. As soon as deceased jumped on the boards they gave way, and he fell through and down the shaft. The other three boys who were following witness and the deceased at some distance also narrowly escaped, but they fortunately stopped before reaching the treacherous scaffolding.

Inspector Bishop described the steps taken to recover the body from the shaft, which was 280 yards deep.

James Henry Astley, one of the owners of the colliery, deposed that the pit had been standing for for six years. When it was closed it was fenced round well, and spikes were placed on the top of the fence. He had instructed a man to look after the covering of the shaft, and acting on the report presented to him he had given instructions for a new fence to be provided, but it had not yet been erected. He had complained to the police repeatedly about the damage done to the property by trespassers. In the course of further evidence it was elicited that the covering had not been tested, and Mr. Astley, on behalf of the owners, promised that the shaft should be bricked over and made safe.

Mr. Scott asked Mr. Astley if he could not consent to fill the shaft up, but the latter could not do so, as it would probably be started again.

The Coroner, in summing up, remarked that there was no doubt the deceased was on trespass, but at the same time it was a melancholy occurrence.

The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

The Coroner and the jury complimented the police, the mining engineers, and the two miners, Thomas Priest and Samuel Mason, upon the prompt recovery of the body of the deceased.”

Dudley News 18/11/2011

“An irate man who promised to wreck a Cradley Heath pub unless he was given the £60 he claimed his brother-in-law was owed for a decorating job has been jailed for 8 months.

Ryan Amphlett who was armed with a baseball bat when he walked into the RIDDENS TAVERN was angry because his relative was ‘hungry and on his uppers.’ And after forcing the barman to hand over the cash the first thing Amphlett did was take his brother-in-law to a fish and chip shop for a much needed meal, said Mr. Bernard Porter prosecuting. ‘The demand he made was perhaps warranted but the method he used was entirely wrong,’ said Mr. Porter. ‘He simply wanted to get the money he felt his brother-in-law was owed.’

Mr. Porter told Wolverhampton Crown Court that Amphlett first armed himself with the bat because the pub landlord had a 'certain reputation' and he was concerned for his own well being. 'He chose a completely inappropriate manner to get the money back but the first thing he did was buy fish and chips because his brother-in-law had not eaten for some time.'

Amphlett of Norton Crescent admitted blackmail and possessing an offensive weapon and he was told by Judge Michael Dudley, 'It beggars belief that you got yourself involved in this debt collecting activity.'

Mrs. Sati Ruck prosecuting said 28 year old Amphlett knocked on the pub door after and when the barman answered he saw he was carrying the baseball bat. He asked if the landlord was present and after being told he was out he demanded the barman hand over the £60 – the balance on a £100 job for which £40 had already been paid.

Mrs. Ruck said Amphlett said he would smash up the pub unless his demands were met and after being given the money he used the bat to shatter a number of bottles and glasses.

After his arrest he told police officers his brother-in-law needed the money for food and he decided to go to the pub because he 'felt sorry for him.'

The Judge described it as a 'very curious case' and said it was more akin to robbery than blackmail."

Elaine Gordon was filmed working here in 2014, by the Department of Work and Pensions, when she was claiming disability benefits. She was given a suspended prison sentence in February 2016.

Wolverhampton Chronicle 12/11/1845

“An inquest was held on Wednesday, at the RING OF BELLS INN, Rowley Regis, on view on the body of Thomas Parkes, aged twenty-nine years, who died suddenly whilst conversing with his wife, in apparently good health. Mr. Harry Adkins, surgeon, who made a post mortem examination of the body, discovered that the heart of the deceased was of a most unusual size, and that the right ventricle had burst, which was sufficient to cause instant death. The jury returned a verdict accordingly.”

Wolverhampton Chronicle 7/1/1846

“An inquest was held at the RING OF BELLS public house, Rowley Regis, on Monday week, on the body of Thomas Portman, a fine youth, about fourteen years of age, who lost his life in a very dreadful and distressing manner. It appears that the little fellow had been sent with his father’s dinner, on the previous Tuesday to the colliery where he worked, and was attracted to the place where some men were engaged mending a boiler. The whimsey being at this time at work, one of the men named John Legg, cautioned the lad not to go near the spot, and he accordingly went away, but again returned, and got entangled between the connecting rod and the crank of the whimsey, by which he sustained dreadful injuries. On the whimsey being stopped, the poor lad, who was rendered quite senseless, fell into the engine pit below, and on being taken up, his thigh was found to have been broken, and he sustained other injuries, which terminated in his death the following Saturday. Before his death the boy said that it was his own fault, that he went too near the machinery, and that it laid hold of him before he was aware of it.”

Staffordshire Advertiser 20/2/1847

“The neighbourhood of Rowley Regis had been the scene of considerable excitement during the early part of the past week, occasioned by a rumour that a woman named Whitehouse had been poisoned by her husband. Information having reached, George Hinchliffe, Esq, coroner, he gave directions for the body to be exhumed, and an inquest was held before him, at the RING OF BELLS, Rowley Regis. It appears that the deceased was the second wife of a man named James Whitehouse, and that they had been married about 6 months. During this time Whitehouse had greatly ill-used the deceased, and had kept her without the common necessaries of life, and though she took to her bed, he provided nothing for her comfort, but said now that she had done working she must have done eating. On Friday night, the 12th inst, just before the poor woman died, Whitehouse said he should be glad if they would bring him word she was dead. On Saturday, the 13th inst, she died, and Whitehouse got a certificate for the burial of the body, and told the registrar that the deceased had died of a stroke. On Sunday, when the funeral was at the church, the deceased’s friends endeavoured to stop the burial of the corpse, saying she had been poisoned. Mr. Mainwaring, surgeon, of Dudley, made a post mortem examination of the body, and found the left lung diseased, and four ounces of blood on the brain. He had analysed the contents of the stomach, but there was not the least appearance of poison, or anything improper. In his opinion, death was occasioned by disease of the aorta, and effusion of blood upon the brain. The jury returned a verdict accordingly.”

“William Adams, rivet maker, and Benjamin Perry, carter, two young men, who on Wednesday last were charged with uttering three counterfeit two shilling pieces, and remanded in order that the authorities at the Mint might be communicated with, this morning were again brought before the Bench. A letter, received from the solicitor to the Mint, was forwarded to the Bench by Superintendent Mills, in which the authorities expressed their unwillingness to take up the prosecution upon the evidence already adduced. Mr. Mills, therefore asked for a further remand until Wednesday next, in order that the matter might be fully investigated. Mr. Burbury, who appeared on behalf of the prisoners, objected to this, urging that the prisoners were undefended at the previous hearing, and he had no doubt he could convince the Bench that his clients were innocent. Mr. Mills replied that he was in possession of additional evidence to that given on Wednesday last.
The examination of witnesses was then proceeded with, and which occupied the attention of the Bench for a considerable time. Hannah Cooksey, who resides with her mother, at the RING OF BELLS public house, Rowley, said the prisoners came to the house on Friday, the 15th inst, and called for a jug of ale, which the prisoner paid for with a good two shilling piece. She saw the men drinking in the house the same evening, between seven and eight o’clock.
Elizabeth Adderley [sic], the landlady of the RING OF BELLS public house, said the prisoners came to her house in the evening of the 15th inst, and called for a pint of ale, which Perry paid for with coppers. Adams shortly afterwards asked to be supplied with half a pound of tripe and some bread, and tendered a two-shilling piece in payment. Witness put the coin in her pocket, and gave the prisoner Adams the change. Police-sergeant Powell went to witness’s house about ten o’clock the same evening, and asked her if she had received a two-shilling piece from the prisoners. Witness replied that she had, and produced the coin from her pocket, and upon examining it she found it to be spurious. Witness did not have any other coin of the same value in her possession that day.

A boy, named William Rock, said he lived with his mother at the BEE HIVE public house, situate near Rowley Church. About three o’clock on the 15th the prisoners came to the house, and Adams called for a cup of ale. Witness took the ale to them in the kitchen, and Adams gave him a two-shilling piece. Witness took the coin to his mother, who put it in her pocket, and returned the men the change. A few minutes afterwards his mother gave him some money to make a few purchases with at Dudley, among which was the two-shilling piece received from the prisoners. The other portion of the money was shillings and sixpences. Witness tendered the two-shilling piece at a shop in Pig Street in payment for some purchases he had made there, but was told it was counterfeit. He then returned home with the coin in his possession.

Eliza Rock deposed to receiving the two-shilling piece from her son, and giving it him again to make the purchases with at Dudley. Also that a short time after he had left the house, the prisoner Perry asked her if she would let him have three pennyworth of bread and cheese. Witness replied that she would, and on supplying it received a two-shilling piece from Perry. She put the coin in her pocket, and was sure it was the only one of that description she had there. The prisoners stayed in the house about an hour afterwards. Her son returned from Dudley about nine o’clock, and told her that the two-shilling piece she had given him was counterfeit. She then took the other coin from her pocket, and found that that was a spurious one also. She went in search of the police, and gave them the two coins. On her return to the house the prisoners were there, and she told them what had occurred. Prisoners said they were not aware that the coins were counterfeit, and directly afterwards left the house. The prisoner Adams was her nephew.

Obadiah Rushton, a sinker, said that on the 15th inst he saw the prisoner Adams in Darby’s public house at Rowley, and was called in by him. Prisoner asked him to drink, and said, ‘Will you go and fetch half a pound of cheese and a 3d loaf for me.’ Witness assented, and prisoner gave him a two-shilling piece to pay for it. Witness went to a shop a few yards from the public house, and asked to be supplied with the articles, but returned without them in consequence of the shopkeeper refusing to take the coin given him by prisoner. When prisoner was told that it was a bad one, he put it in his pocket and smiled, but made no reply. Nothing more was heard of the prisoners until they gave themselves up on the following Wednesday

Prisoners were well known to the whole of the witnesses, who said they had never known them attempt to pass bad money before. Mr. Burbury addressed the Bench on behalf of his clients, and contended that as they were innocent of knowing that the coins were spurious ones. He argued that had they been aware they were counterfeit, would they have attempted to pass them in a place in which they were so well known? It was the custom for persons who were in the habit of passing counterfeit coins to repair to places where they were unknown, the risks being not half so great.

The Bench considered there was sufficient evidence to warrant another remand, and adjourned the case until Wednesday.”

[At Staffordshire October Sessions, William Adams and Benjamin Perry were charged with uttering counterfeit coin, found guilty and each sentenced to 6 months' imprisonment with hard labour.]

George Hadley was also a saddler. [1861]

“On Tuesday last about forty gentlemen sat down to an excellent dinner, at the house of Mr. Edge, the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Haden Hill, near Old Hill. Mr. Josiah Hughes was chairman, and Mr. John Griffiths, of Old Hill, vice-chairman. After the cloth had been removed, and after the usual loyal toasts had been heartily drunk, the chairman proposed the health of a gentleman who, he said, was known by all present. That gentleman was Mr. Noah Hingley – (applause) – who was a good and charitable man, and respected both by the poor and the rich. The kindness he had shown towards a wide circle of poor creatures in that and other vicinities would never be forgotten. (Hear, hear.) He concluded by asking them to drink the health of Mr. Noah Hingley, and said he ought to represent them in Parliament. (Cheers.) Other toasts followed amongst which was the health of the host and hostess.”

“On Wednesday a mass meeting of horse-nail makers from the various districts in South Staffordshire and East Worcestershire was held at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Old Hill, for the purpose of discussing the wages question. In the course of the proceedings it was stated that within a certain period the reduction in the wages list had amounted to 1s 9d per 1,000, namely, from 4s 3d to 2s 6d, the latter price being the lowest to which the nailmakers have ever been reduced. The operatives assembled resolved that unless the masters agreed to pay 3s per 1,000 on horse nails the men should cease work on Saturday (today), and a strike be then declared. Earlier in the day similar meetings were held at Lye Waste and Halesowen, at each of which the same resolution was adopted.”

“A meeting of horse-nail makers was held on Monday, at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Old Hill, with reference which has been going on lately in the Sedgley, Gornal, Lye Waste, and surrounding districts for an increase of wages. It was stated that the action of the employers in refusing to grant the advance of 3d per 1,000 was causing a great deal of dissatisfaction. One of the delegates pointed out that the operatives now received 3s per 1,000, as compared with 4s 3d a few years ago. It was resolved to demand an advance of 3d per 1,000.”

“Yesterday Mr. Edwin Hooper (district coroner) held an inquest at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Haden Hill, touching the death of Laura Eliza Green, aged five years, who had died at the residence of her parents, at Beauty Bank, from the effects on injuries received on the 14th ult. It was shown that the deceased fell off a pillar adjoining the Great Western Railway, and sustained some internal injuries, from the effects of which she died on the 1st inst. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

“A meeting of nailers’ delegates was held at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Haden Hill, on Monday night; Mr. H. Lee presiding. A deputation was appointed to wait upon certain employers with a view to induce one of them to convene a meeting of the employers to consider the claim of the operatives that wages should be paid according to the 1879 list.”

“Last night a meeting of nailers’ delegates was held at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Haden Hill, for the purpose of considering what action should be taken to prevent a general reduction being enforced in the wrought-nail trade. Mr. H. Lee, who presided, remarked that the reduction was likely to become general on Saturday next. At a previous meeting it was decided that if a reduction was declared they should at once cease work and turn out on strike, and demand an advance of 10 per cent on the 1890 list. He considered it would not be wise on their part to submit to a reduction – (A Voice: ‘No, no.’) – and that they should ask for what they would likely obtain. They were not desirous of imposing difficulties upon the employers; but, at the same time, they thought they ought to live by their labour, and this they could not do at the present time. As a class of workmen they were in a deplorable condition. At Hales Owen many of the operatives had not had any work for three months. The employers had purchased large stocks up to the 7th ult, and they had since been restricting the output. At that time trade was considered fairly good, but it was not so good as they anticipated, or else the employers could not have continued their restriction for so long a period. The reduction had not been brought about by legitimate means, but by those employers who would not adhere to the decision of the majority of masters. The men throughout the trade did not average 14s per week, and out of that deductions ranging from 3s to 5s, according to the class of nails made, had to be reckoned. He challenged the masters to prove that they could earn more by their books. He suggested that when the reduction was made the whole of the operatives should cease work. The Bromsgrove district ruled the trade hobs, but he wished Old Hill and up-country districts ruled it. It was unreasonable to expect them to submit to reductions because Bromsgrove did. If Bromsgrove did not join in with them, then they should take action independently. It was decided to give the employers seven days’ notice to restore the 1890 list; failing this a general strike to be declared on the 7th of June.”

“Last Monday, Mr. E. Hooper (coroner) held an inquest at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Haden Hill, respecting the death of a single woman named Sarah Ann Shaw (35).

Mary Ann Shaw, of Haysech, mother of the deceased, said that her daughter had been in ill health for some time, and on the 19th inst complained of violent pains at her heart. Witness sent for Dr. Thompson, her club doctor, who resided at Cradley; but he unable to come. She didn’t have any other doctor because she didn’t think that her daughter was dying. The deceased only had a glass of beer to drink on the Monday.

A neighbour, named Baker, said that she didn’t think that deceased was neglected in any way. She complained, however, of the cold weather.

Police-constable Wickstead said that Dr. Thompson saw the body of the deceased on the 20th, and said that there was no doubt that deceased died from spasms of the heart. There was some delay in reporting the case to the police, and this it appeared was caused by the mother of the deceased expecting the doctor to perform that duty.

“Yesterday, at the Old Hill Police Court, Police-constable Wickstead, was charged with assaulting a youth named William James, of Heath Street, Winson Green, Birmingham, on 26th August. Mr. W. Waldron defended. Complainant stated that the officer met him coming out of the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Haden Hill, Old Hill, and charged him with assaulting some girls in Haden Hill Park. Defendant pushed him into the public house, took him into the smoke room, knocked him upon a seat, and pushed his knuckles into his throat. He also alleged that when the officer was taking him into the cells at the police station he struck him twice on the back. For the defence it was contended that no unnecessary violence was used by the defendant, and this was borne out by Inspector Given. The Bench dismissed the case.”

“On Saturday evening a meeting of nailmakers’ delegates was held at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Haden Hill, for the purpose of considering the wages question. Mr. H. Lea presided; and there were delegates present from Hales Owen, Blackheath, Rowley, Old Hill, and surrounding places. The chairman reported that he had written to over twenty of the employers requesting them to concede an advance, and so settle the matter in an amicable manner. He had received replies from ten or twelve of the masters, but they appeared to be divided in opinion as to the advisability of the general advance being granted at the present time. The delegates urged that immediate steps should be taken to secure an increase in the wages of the operatives, who, it was stated, were in a deplorable condition. The chairman was instructed to have an interview with one of the leading employers to request him to convene a meeting of the masters at an early date to consider the claims of the operatives. It was ultimately decided to give the whole of the employers fourteen days’ notice claiming an increase of 10 per cent.”

“On Saturday night, a meeting of delegates, representing the wrought nail makers in the Halesowen, Rowley, Old Hill, Blackheath, and surrounding districts, was held at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Haden Hill, to receive a report from a deputation appointed at a previous meeting to wait upon the employers for the purpose of asking them to sign an agreement to pay an advance of 10 per cent upon the present prices.

Mr. H. Lea, who presided, said he regretted to say that the visit to the employers had turned out a failure, and he was personally much surprised at the action of the masters. From the glowing accounts he had received he had been led to believe that they had only to make their application and it would be immediately granted. In fact, he was told there would be very little difficulty in obtaining an increase of 20 per cent. Employers had intimated to their workmen that there was nothing to prevent them from gaining a substantial advance. To his surprise, the first master the deputation visited said he thought they were taking a step in the wrong direction, and added that it was a suicidal for the operatives to ask for an advance. He pointed to the fact that machine-made nails were produced much cheaper, and were preferred to the hand-made nails. Four of the leading firms in the trade who were visited used the same argument against their application for an increase. He (Mr. Lea) admitted that the enormous increase in the price of iron had made the cost of nails very heavy, but the small amount of 15 per cent which they were claiming would barely cover the extra cost of fuel, &c. He must say their position was very low as compared with other trades. It was their own fault if they did not climb higher in the social scale. Every year the numbers of the nail makers decreased, and the demand could scarcely be supplied. He advised the operatives if the trade would not keep them respectably not to remain in it.

After some discussion, a resolution was passed expressing regret that the masters were not favourable to their claim, and, with the view to avoid resorting to a strike, recommending the employers should be appealed to to convene a conference of masters and workmen to consider the question, and in the event of this being refused, that notice should be given of their intention to cease work until an advance of 20 per cent was conceded.”

“Thomas Edge, landlord of the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Haden Cross, Old Hill, was charged with being drunk in charge of a horse and trap on the 2nd inst.

Police-constable Gratage stated that about 11-30pm on the night in question, witness was on duty at the Cross, Old Hill, in company with Police-constable Smith, when he saw defendant drive past. He was in a drunken condition, and Police-constable Smith called on him to stop, but he refused, and only urged the horse to go faster. Witness, together with Police-constable Smith, visited defendant’s house, and when charged with the offence and told that he might be summoned, he said, ‘I am very sorry. I hope you won’t.’

Police-constable Smith gave corroborative evidence.

Mr. W. Waldron, who defended, submitted that the officers had made a mistake. He urged that there was not the slightest evidence to prove that defendant was drunk. On the night in question he had been doing a little business at Pensnett, and called upon Mr. Marsh, a large colliery proprietor and a member of the Kingswinford District Council. He transacted some business with Mr. Marsh, and when he left was perfectly sober. Defendant bore an excellent character, having held a position as inspector under the Mines Drainage Commissioners for twelve years, and previous to that he served in the Dragoon Guards for a number of years. Evidence was given in support of Mr. Waldron’s statement by defendant, Mr. and Mrs. William Parish, and Rowland Edge. “The annual outing of the employés of the Rowley Urban District Council took place on Monday. The party consisted of the roadmen, their wives and children, numbering about 70, who were conveyed by brakes supplied by Mr. Harry Darby, of Blackheath, to Bromsgrove, via Rubery. After luncheon at the Cock Hotel, Rubery, the party were photographed in the brakes, and then proceeded to the Coach and Horses, at Bromsgrove. There the foreman (Mr. T. Adams) had arranged for an excellent dinner, which having been disposed of, thanks were voted to the chairman and members of the Council, the surveyor (Mr. W. H. Brettell), and the subscribers to the fund for the excursion. After a musical hour in the concert room, to which Messrs. John and George Ashman and Mr. C. Moore contributed, the fine old parish church was visited. In the cemetery a short open-air service was conducted by the Brothers Smith and Master Cole. At five o’clock all again met for tea, and at 6-15 the brakes were loaded for starting. Calls were made on the way, and a finish was made at the ROSE AND CROWN, Haden Hill. All spent a most enjoyable day.”

“In the Days of our Grandfathers.

It was in the days when the hours of license owners were not restricted, and when George Eliot’s ‘clowns’ – heavy drinkers – could sit regaling themselves until the early hours of the morn, and sometimes, too, till the birds were on the wing and the sun commenced to rise. Those were the times of the ‘sworn in’ constables, and who were few and very far between. To ‘run a shot’ and then clear out without paying was peculiar to the ‘tyke’ of that period. A couple such – pedestrians – on their way from Dudley to Hales Owen, sixty years ago turned into an ancient roadside inn to wit, the ROSE AND CROWN, Haden Cross, a house more famous for good living than the rendezvous of the cock-fighting fraternity and certain ‘Bill Sikes’s,’ called ‘doggers,’ who trained whippet dogs for hare-coursing for certain sporting gentlemen of the Midlands. It was not until these two worthies had run a big shot that they not only refused to pay, they also refused to go; and there was nothing left to the landlady (a widow) but to send, in the early hours of the morning, a stragglng customer for old ‘Crabby’ (professionally known as Mr. Siviter), the ‘sworn in’ constable for that part of the large parish of Rowley Regis. Enter constable.

Constable: ‘Weare bin um, Missis?’ – Landlady: ‘They are asleep now in the tap room. Go in.’

Constable goes in and slightly taps the sleepers with his formidable truncheon on the sides of their heads by way of rousing them. ‘Tykes’ awake, and breathe out threatenings.

Constable (professionally): ‘Bin yer gooin’ to pey?’ – ‘No we bain’t.’

‘Bin yer gooin’ to pay?’ again queries the representative of the law and order, and as he does so, administers his staff with such vehemence that he ‘fells’ them, to the great horror of the landlady, who, thinking they had had enough, is willing to let them go without paying. The constable, however, feeling that he had a duty to discharge to the widow, then rifles their pockets, and afterwards respectively carried them to the door, and then, ‘bucks’ neck’ throws them into the middle of the yard, where, when they ‘come round,’ they found themselves to be wiser, though sadder men.

Constable (to landlady): ‘What’s thair shot, missis?’ – ‘Seven and ninepence a’penny, Mr. Siviter,’ quoth the landlady. As the constable pays over the shot, he exhorts the landlady to ‘Allis send for me, Missis; they who war pey, I’ll gie um one up the side o’ the yed, and ’nock it out on um. Now yow con bring me a glass o’ brandy. Good ’ealth, mum, and my best respex.’

“Freehold Building Land, at Reddal Hill, near the proposed Four Ways Goods Station.
A Society will be commenced on Monday, the 8th day of February, 1869, at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Reddal Hill, at Seven o’clock in the Evening, for the Purchase of Fifty Lots of Building Land, belonging to Mr. Richard Green, situated at Plant’s Green, Reddal Hill. The Land is dry, has a good fall for drainage, and is bounded by the Rowley and Stourbridge Road on one side, and the Newtown Brook on the other side, and stands on a mining fault. The Vendor will construct proper streets.
For further particulars, and to see a plan of the land, apply to Mr. Richard Green, or Mr. Henry Mason, Reddal Hill; or to Messrs. Homfray and Holberton, Solicitors, Brierley Hill and Colman Hill.”

“On Thursday afternoon, a large meeting of horse-nail makers was held at the ROSE AND CROWN, Reddal Hill, to reconsider the steps resolved upon at Monday’s meeting.
Mr. J. Willetts presided. He said that before any business was gone into, he would read a letter from a leading man in the trade, at Belper, in Derbyshire. The writer stated that the men in that district were willing to be guided by the resolutions come to in the Old Hill and Netherton districts, whatever those resolutions might be. An influential master in Derbyshire, a day or two ago, had expressed sorrow for the men, and said he thought there was a good prospect for them at the present time to obtain an advance of 6d.
A lengthy discussion followed after which Mr. John Bloomer moved, and Mr. Josiah Hackett seconded, ‘That Mr. Walker’s men work up the iron on the conditions it was taken out on Saturday last.’ This was carried unanimously.
Mr. E. Whitehouse moved, and Mr. William Bellfield, seconded, ‘That no more iron be worked up after Saturday next, whether the men have worked up the iron taken out or otherwise.’
It was moved by Mr. Josiah Hackett, and seconded by Mr. James Smart, ‘That no more iron should be drawn out after Saturday till a general meeting of the trade had been held.’
Mr. Henry Rudge moved, and Mr. Samuel Grainger seconded, ‘That a deputation wait on the masters at the earliest possible moment to hear their views on the subject.’
The proceedings shortly after terminated.”

“The Dispute in The Horse-Nail Trade.
There is every probability that this dispute will shortly close, quite three parts of the men having received the advance of 3d in the Netherton, Reddal Hill, and Lye Waste districts. A meeting was held on Monday afternoon, at the ROSE AND CROWN, Reddal Hill, when 136 of the men on strike received a small sum, the result of a collection made on Saturday amongst those at work. It was fully expected on Monday last that an extensive firm at Reddal Hill would give out iron at 3s 3d. These expectations, however, were not realised; but we hear that a promise was made to the men yesterday (Wednesday) that on Monday next the firm would be in a position to pay the advanced price.”

County Advertiser 18/9/1869

“On Monday afternoon a meeting of horse-nail makers was held at the ROSE AND CROWN, Reddal Hill, for the purpose of appointing a deputation to wait upon Mr. Lewis, of Withymoor, to ascertain, whether, as it had been reported, he was willing to give the same advance as the rest of the trade, and also for the transaction of other business. Mr. T. Johnson presided, and the attendance was large. It was proposed and seconded that Mr. Joseph Rock and Mr. T. Homer, accompanied by a representative of the Press, at once wait upon Mr. Lewis, before any other business was gone into. This was accordingly carried out. The deputation was very courteously received by Mr. S. Lewis, junior, in the absence of his father. After a deliberation of about an hour, during which several technical points relating to the trade were gone into, Mr. Lewis, junior, said he was willing to give the advance; and the reason the firm had held out so long was in consequence of a shortness of orders, combined with the unprincipled conduct of several other petty masters. Mr. Lewis further said that he would give out iron on Wednesday, though his warehouse was fully stocked with every description of nails. In proof of this, he showed our correspondent over the warehouses, and the abundant stock fully corroborated his statement. In conclusion, he said that he believed the time was not far distant when another reduction would have to take place. The deputation then returned to the ROSE AND CROWN, and on Mr. Lewis's decision being made known to the meeting, round upon round of vociferous cheering were given. This dispute, which has extended over several weeks is, therefore, now brought to a conclusion. Iron was given out on Wednesday by Mr. Lewis in accordance with promise."

"An inquest was held on Monday last at the PRIMROSE [sic] AND CROWN, Reddall Hill, by Edwin Hooper, Esq, Coroner, on the death of Sarah Ann Jones, aged 5 years, daughter of Martha Jones. It appears that the child was burnt about eight o'clock on the 31st of August, having been left alone in the house for a few minutes. Her mother returned and found her enveloped in flames. Mr. Hodgson, surgeon, was called in and rendered everything to relieve the little sufferer. After a lingering illness she died on the evening of the 17th inst. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death."

"Extraordinary Case of Stripping Children. Mary Fisher, a woman poorly clad, and said to belong to Old Hill, was brought up in custody on several charges of stealing wearing apparel. In the first case she was charged with having stolen wearing apparel from a boy named Edward Bennett.

Mary Whittingslow, of Moor Street, Brierley Hill, said she was the guardian of the boy, and on the morning of Saturday he was with a play-fellow, the child of a neighbour. He had on jacket, trousers, shirt, waistcoat. The boys disappeared, and were not seen again until they were discovered at Old Hill, at two o'clock on the following morning.

Emma Rolinson, a married woman, residing at Old Hill, said the prisoner had recently been lodging with her. Last Saturday she saw the prisoner at the corner of Wrights Lane, and she was carrying a satchel in her hand. Prisoner came to her and gave her 2s saying that she would return shortly and give her a further sum. Prisoner was then alone, but witness went to the corner of the lane and saw two children. She had since ascertained that their names were Bennett and Hall. The boy Bennett had neither shirt, waistcoat or jacket, but had an apron (produced) which she could swear was prisoner's, thrown around him. It was about four o'clock in the afternoon, and she took the children to her home and communicated with the police. At about half past five o'clock the prisoner returned home, but immediately she saw the children, 'made her escape.'

Mary Ann Dunn, residing at Mill Street, Brierley Hill, said that about half-past twelve o'clock on Saturday morning, she saw the two children going down Mill Street, in the direction of Old Hill, and the prisoner was with them. One of the boys was carrying a satchel, and the other a basket.

Mr. Lovell, pawnbroker, said prisoner pawned the wearing apparel (produced) at his shop on Saturday, and he advanced her the sum of two shillings.

Inspector Price deposed that he received several articles of wearing apparel from the last witness and charged the prisoner with stealing them. In reply she pleaded guilty.

Mr. Bluck, pawnbroker, Cradley Heath, said on Saturday, prisoner pledged at his shop, a shirt, waistcoat, and other articles, upon which he advanced her one shilling and threepence.

Prisoner was then charged with having stolen articles of wearing apparel from Walter Hall.

Frederick Hall, mail contractor, Moor Street, Brierley Hill, said the boy was his son, and left home on Saturday morning. He was then wearing a petticoat, frock, and jacket. He did not see him again until Sunday morning.

Mr. Lovell said the prisoner pledged the frock (produced) at his shop.

Mr. Bluck deposed that she pledged at his shop the jacket.

Inspector Price said he charged prisoner with the offence, and she pleaded guilty.

There was another charge of having stolen a shawl from a girl named Fanny Whittaker, daughter of Joseph Whittaker, publican, Reddal Hill.

The girl's evidence went to show that the prisoner met her in the street and asked her which was the way to Cradley station. After she had proceeded some distance, the prisoner took from her a shawl, and did not return.

Mr. Lovell said the prisoner pledged the shawl (produced) with him.

There was another charge of a similar nature against the prisoner, but as the property had not been recovered, the case was not proceeded with.

On being formally charged prisoner pleaded guilty, and was committed for trial on the three charges of theft."

“Eli Johnson was charged with assaulting Priscilla Johnson, on the 6th inst. From the evidence of the complainant and another witness it appeared that complainant went to the defendant and asked him for some money. He called her foul names, and assaulted her. Defendant called two witnesses who swore that complainant set upon her husband first, and threw a spittoon at him. Eli [sic] Hadley, landlord of the ROSE AND CROWN, Old Hill, said that the complainant came to his house and used very bad language, and set about the defendant. He ordered her out but she would not go, and he sent for the police. The Bench said the defendant was a bad man, he had neglected his wife, and they would not give him the option of a fine, but sentence him to 14 days’ hard labour. Sentenced accordingly.”

“On Tuesday evening a representative meeting of horse nailmakers was held at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Reddal Hill, Cradley Heath, to take into consideration the advisability of forming an association of horse nailmakers for South Staffordshire and East Worcestershire. Mr. C. Williams presided, and there was a good attendance of delegates from the various districts. The Chairman and several other speakers spoke upon the importance of combination amongst the men, and urged the necessity of a trades union being formed amongst them. It was unanimously decided to form a union for South Staffordshire and East Worcestershire, each member to contribute 3d weekly. It was further decided to send a requisition to the employers to be presented at Birmingham, on Thursday, asking for 3d advance per thousand.”

"Henry Green, Old Hill, and James Hadley, landlord of the ROSE AND CROWN, Reddal Hill, were summoned by William Green for refusing to pay £2 8s, being six weeks' sick pay from the Snowdrop Lodge of Free Gardeners, Hadley being trustee and Green secretary of the lodge. Mr. Ward, who appeared for the defence, objected that the complainant should have first submitted his claim to arbitration, and then if it could not be settled taken out a summons.

The Bench decided to examine the complainant upon the objection set up.

Complainant said he was a member of the club held at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Reddal Hill, and had been a member six or seven years. He had been ill for three or four months, and Mr. Green, one of the defendants, stopped his pay about three months ago. He wished his claim to be settled by arbitration, but the defendants would not allow the case to be settled in that way. His claim was for six weeks' sick pay at 8s per week.

In cross-examination prosecutor said that he wished to have his claim settled at a meeting of the club instead of by arbitration.

Mr. Bassano said they considered the objection raised by Mr. Ward was a good one, and that they would have to dismiss the case. If it was not settled by reference to arbitration, as provided by the rules, the proper course would then be to take out a summons."

"A meeting of miners was held last evening at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Reddal Hill, Rowley Regis. A miner presided and stated that the meeting had been called for the purpose of taking into consideration the proposal of the Yorkshire coal-owners, that 5 per cent advance in wages be given on July 1, and another 5 per cent on October 1, the wages to be settled until July next year. Such terms he considered anything but satisfactory. In the Old Hill district the wages were very low and an increase was very necessary. Similar views were expressed by Mr. Winwood (miners' agent). Several delegates urged that the miners were entitled to an advance of 10 per cent at once. A resolution was unanimously passed in favour of notice being given for an advance of 10 per cent being conceded at the whole of the collieries. It was decided that Mr. Winwood represent the Old Hill miners at the forthcoming conference."

"On Wednesday a meeting of miners was held at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Reddal Hill, Old Hill, a miner presiding. Mr. B. Winwood remarked that the meeting was convened for the purpose of discussing the miners' strike in the Somerset district. Wages in the district where the strike had occurred were very low. It had been decided to reduce the levies for their support from 6d to 3d per man, and he sincerely hoped all who could see their way clear to contribute would do so without delay.....

Resolutions were passed in favour of each man at the various collieries in the district contributing 3d towards the support of the Somersetshire miners on strike; also to take part in the National Conference to advance wages and reduce the number of working hours."

Mr. Millership said that the report given to the meeting by Mr. Juggins would convey a wrong impression to men who knew nothing about the lock trade. He contended that the men were doing right in turning out on strike under the circumstances. Mr. Smith moved that another conference be called between the employers and workmen with a view to settling the dispute. This was seconded. “Yesterday afternoon a numerously attended meeting of wrought-nail makers was held at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Reddal Hill, Old Hill, for the purpose of considering the wages question.

Mr. R. Juggins (secretary of the Midland Counties Trades Federation) presided, and stated that they had met together to consider what appeared to be a very important crisis in connection with the nail trade. For a long time an agitation had been going on amongst the operatives with a view to improving their position, but he was sorry to say that instead of doing that they had been gradually getting worse, and their wages had been considerably reduced. They had severed their connection with the trade union, with the result that they had greatly weakened themselves and allowed the employers to take advantage of them. The prices had not been reduced systematically as was arranged under the Wages Board, but the employers had reduced special work, and the operatives who made hob-nails had submitted to more reductions than the others. (Shame.) He considered the nailmakers were placed in a very awkward position as regarded the advance to be claimed. He supposed they would demand the 1890 list of prices, but he had discovered that there were nailmakers in the East Worcestershire district who were receiving more than the 1890 list. If they asked for that list the masters who were paying more money would certainly pull their workers down to it. The present condition of the trade was due, to a great extent, to the large number of domestic workshops in existence. (Hear, hear.) If there were factories instead of so many workshops it would be much better for the trade generally. (Applause.) Operatives engaged in the cast-nail trade were obtaining three times more wages than those engaged in the wrought-nail trade, and yet in the market the cast-nail was the cheaper. Out of the 2,000 or 3,000 operatives engaged in the trade, only about 500 were connected with the federation.

Mr. T. Jones (secretary of the Toolmakers’ Association) stated that the Midland Counties Trades Federation had not given their sanction to a strike, and if the operatives left work it would be upon their own responsibility. (Hear, hear.) If there were any chance of success the federation would do all they could to assist them. They had spent over £300 in trying to keep the wages of the nailers intact in the Gornal and Sedgley districts. (Applause.)

Mr. H. Lea (secretary of the Nailmakers' Association) remarked that all the operatives in the trade were thoroughly determined to secure a better state of affairs.

A deputation was appointed to wait upon the employers with the view to ascertaining how many were prepared to pay the 1890 list of prices."

At one o'clock the 1st Worcestershire Volunteer Band started from the CROSS INN, proceeded across Halesowen Road, calling at Trinity Schools and GEORGE HOTEL; then across Lawrence Lane into Reddal Hill Road, calling at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, and proceeding to the Cross, where the final procession was formed. Meanwhile the Old Hill Brass and Red Band started from the WHITE LION INN, proceeded by way of Powke Lane and Garratts Lane to Wrights Lane (as far as the PRINCE OF WALES INN), and returned to Garratts Lane, calling for lodges at the BRITISH OAK INN, FOX HUNT INN, Tabernacle, DUKE WILLIAM INN, VINE INN, to the Cross. "A dinner was held on Monday night by the members of the club meeting at Mr. Hadley's, the ROSE AND CROWN, and a very pleasant time they spent. An excellent dinner was served up by the host and hostess. After the table had been cleared Mr. Henry Mather was voted to the chair, and Mr. Broadbent to the vice-chair, and under their guidance a good round of songs, etc, was gone through. Some excellently played pianoforte solos by Mr. Heys and Master Hadley were very much appreciated, and songs by members of the company provided a pleasing variation. Before the company separated hearty votes of thanks were passed to Mr. and Mrs. Hadley for the manner in which they had catered, to Mr. Heys for his solos and accompaniments, and to Master Hadley and others who had contributed to the harmony of the evening."

Dudley Herald 29/1/1898

"A supper was partaken of at the house of Mr. James Hadley, ROSE AND CROWN INN, Old Hill, in connection with a club held at the house. About 30 sat down to an excellent repast catered by the host and hostess in a most able manner. After the withdrawal of the cloth Mr. Broadbent was elected chairman, and Mr. Lucas to the vice-chair. A capital programme of songs and recitations by Mr. S. Fletcher, Mr. S. Danks, Mr. Hachison, Mr. C. Cockin, and others was gone through in a very able manner. Master E. Hadley was accompanist, and the chief items of the programme were the pianoforte solos which Master Hadley performed with much taste and ability. The evening was enjoyable throughout."

Dudley Herald 12/3/1898

"Smoking Concert. On Thursday evening a gathering of the above description took place at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Reddal Hill, in aid of Court Robin Hood the Brave of the Ancient Order of Foresters. Councillor S. Farmer presided, and Mr. G. H. Dowie was in the vice-chair. An interesting programme of songs and recitations was gone through. Master Ernest Hadley was the accompanist."

Dudley Herald 18/6/1898

"On Monday the members of a club held at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Reddal Hill, together with a few friends, partook of an excellent repast provided by the landlord (Mr. James Hadley). Supper was served at seven o'clock, after which the party settled down to an evening's enjoyment. Mr. Broadbent was elected to the chair, and Mr. Broome to the vice-chair. There was a capital programme of songs and recitations by the following gentleman: Messrs. S. and L. Fletcher, S. Danks, D. Grainger, and F. Woodall; and pianoforte solos and duets by Mr. B. Heys and Master E. Hadley. Mr. L. Fletcher's comic songs created a great deal of amusement, and Mr. S. Danks gave a thoroughly good rendering of 'Ora pro nobis.' Master E. Hadley very ably accompanied. Votes of thanks were passed to the host and hostess for the excellent catering, and to the performers for the able manner in which they contributed to the evening's enjoyment.

Mr. Hadley suitably responded, and said how pleased he was to see them all enjoying themselves, and his aim would always be to try and efficiently provide for them on any occasion.

Votes of thanks were then passed to the chairman and vice-chairman, after which the singing of the National Anthem brought a most enjoyable evening to a close."

"On Sunday afternoon the annual hospital parade and open-air service, arranged by the various friendly societies in Old Hill and the surrounding district took place. Processions were formed at different points of members of the Foresters, the Free Gardeners, and provident societies, numbering altogether about 1,000, and these, accompanied by the Blackheath, Halesowen Temperance, and Old Hill Bands, paraded the principal streets of the locality, after which they marched to a field in Garratts Lane, lent for the occasion by Mr. A. Sidaway, where a special service was held. Addresses were delivered by the Revs. E. Brewer, MA (vicar of Old Hill), and W. B. Cheshire (Primitive Methodist). A collection was made along the route and at the service in aid of the Guest Hospital, Dudley Dispensary, and Birmingham Eye Hospital, this realising £25 14s 5¼d.

The following was the order of procession issued by the committee. The Blackheath Village Band will start from the WHITE LION INN, Powke Lane, at 1-45 prompt, proceed down Garratts Lane, calling for societies at the BRITISH OAK INN, Tabernacle, DUKE WILLIAM INN, and VINE INN, turning across Queen Street on to the old football ground (by kind permission of Mr. W. H. Jarvis). The Halesowen Temperance Band will start from the PRINCE OF WALES INN, Wrights Lane, at 1-45 prompt, proceed round Cherry Orchard Street, into Wrights Lane, turning down Wagon Street, calling at the OLD ENGINE INN, proceeding down Elbow Street and King Street, across Halesowen Road, to the old football ground. The Old Hill Band will start from the CROSS INN at 1-45 prompt, calling for societies at Trinity Schools and GEORGE HOTEL, proceed across Lawrence Lane, turning up New Street, Ridding Street, Pear Tree Street, Pear Tree Lane, thence into Reddal Hill Road, calling at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, and proceeding to the old football ground. A grand procession will be formed as follows.....”

“Mr. Herbert Humphries, the auctioneer, Brierley Hill and Stourbridge, held a very successful sale of properties, on Tuesday last, at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Reddal Hill. The large assembly room was packed, a number of well-known property buyers being present. Each lot was competed for in a very spirited manner, the four lots being sold at satisfactory prices. Messrs. Johnsons and Co., solicitors, of Waterloo Street, Birmingham, acted for the vendors, who were the trustees of the late Mr. James Holcroft.”

“A similar dinner to that held at Brierley Hill, and reported on page 8 [in celebration of the coronation of King Edward VII], was held at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Old Hill, on Thursday evening, when the officers of the Old Hill Sub-division sat down to an excellent repast. Inspector Hodgkinson was in the chair and Sergt. Pitcher in the vice-chair. The chairman proposed a vote of thanks to Col. Wilkinson for his kindness in giving the dinner.

Sergt. Pitcher proposed ‘The health of the Chief Constable, Captain the Hon. George A. Anson.’

Sergt. Berkley proposed ‘The Press.’

Inspector Hodgkinson proposed a vote of thanks to the host and hostess on the able manner in which they had provided the repast. Mr. Hadley responded.

The evening was interspersed with harmony, the following contributing: Inspector Hodgkinson, Sergt. Bentley, M. Massey, PCs Richardson, Folkes, and others. Mr. Massey was the accompanist.”

“James Hadley, landlord of the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Reddal Hill, Old Hill, made an application for the magistrates’ sanction to make alterations to his premises. Evidence was given by Mr. William Bloomer, architect, Old Hill. In reply to Superintendent Pilliner, witness said it was proposed to make three rooms into two, and the landlord then would be able to have a better supervision of the house.

Superintendent Pilliner stated that he had inspected the premises, and did not object to the application, which was granted.”

“At a meeting of frost nail makers held on Tuesday at the ROSE AND CROWN HOTEL, Reddal Hill, Cradley Heath, at which there were delegates present from Old Hill, Netherton, Dudley, Halesowen, and The Lye, it was decided to declare a strike in consequence of the employers have refused to continue to pay the sixpence advance in wages which was conceded last winter, and which was taken off the revised list in March last.”

Tipton Herald 24/10/1903

“The strike for an advance in wages, which lasted a week, has terminated in a satisfactory manner to all parties concerned. A meeting of the workmen was held on Saturday at the ROSE AND CROWN HOTEL, Reddal Road, Cradley Heath. Mr. Rudge, who presided stated that since the last meeting the leading employers had been interviewed by the workmen’s delegates, and they had agreed to concede an advance of 3d per thousand in wages forthwith, and an additional 3d in the first week in December. An agreement has been signed by the employers, and he recommended the workmen to agree to the terms offered. Several delegates supported the suggestions made by the Chairman, and it was unanimously decided to return to work on the terms offered by the employers.

The Chairman announced that a trade society had been formed, and arrangements had been completed for an application to be made for the whole of the frost nail makers to join the Midland Counties Trades Federation.”

“On Sunday afternoon the eighth annual parade and service arranged by the various friendly societies in the Old Hill district took place under favourable circumstances. The proceedings commenced with a large procession.....

The Cradley Heath Salvation Army Band started from the ROSE AND CROWN INN, proceeded down Reddal Hill Road as far as the BRIDGE INN, turning across Plant Street, Lawrence Lane, Trinity Street, picking up another society. Afterwards they marched by way of Elbow Street and Wagon Street to the field, calling at the KINGS HEAD INN and ENGINE INN for societies.....

Upon arrival at the field a grand procession was formed This paraded the principal streets of the locality for some time, after which they proceeded to a field in High Street, kindly lent for the occasion by Mr. A. E. Sidaway. Here a service was held, the chair being occupied by Dr. T. E. Mitchell. Notwithstanding the threatening state of the weather there was a large attendance..... A collection was made upon the route, and at the service, on behalf of the Dudley Guest Hospital, Dudley Dispensary, Birmingham Eye Hospital, Birmingham General Hospital, Birmingham Ear and Throat Hospital, and the Old Hill Nurses Fund.”

“On Monday morning Mr. A. R. Betham (deputy coroner) held an inquest at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Reddal Hill, Old Hill, respecting the death of Alexander William Johnson (53), an anchormith, formerly residing at Trinity Street, Old Hill, who died suddenly on the 19th inst. The son, Joseph Johnson, stated that his father had had fairly good health. About eighteen months ago he received a heat stroke, and this had affected him since. On the night of the 18th inst deceased retired to bed in his usual health, and early the following morning witness was called into his father’s room when he found him in a dying condition. A doctor was sent for, but deceased expired before he arrived. The jury returned a verdict of Death from Natural Causes.”

County Advertiser 5/8/1905

“On Wednesday morning, Mr. H. A. Pearson (coroner) held an inquest at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, Reddal Hill, Old Hill, respecting the death of Wesley Humphries, aged eighteen months, the son of Joseph Humphries, chainmaker, of Reddal Hill, who was killed on the tramway belonging to the Dudley and Stourbridge Traction Company, on the 31st ult. Mr. W. Waldron appeared on behalf of the Tramway Company.

Evidence of identification was given by the father, who stated that at about seven o’clock on the night in question he was playing with deceased in the house. Subsequently the deceased left the house and went into the street, and the mother ran after him in consequence of hearing a tramcar running. Several persons screamed and he ran to the door, and his wife came into the house and shouted that the child was under the tramcar. Witness saw the tramcar, and he was sure the front of the car did not strike the child. In his opinion the driver lost control of himself. The car was eventually brought to a standstill, and he saw the child’s body, the left side of the head being completely shattered. The electric car travelled at a big rate, and he thought the motor man pulled up as quickly as possible. He did not blame the motor man, because he believed he lost control of himself.

Amelia Groves said on the night in question she saw the deceased on the tramway, and immediately afterwards a car knocked him down and carried him several yards. She screamed and ran after the car. She certainly thought the deceased tried to get out of the way, and she could not blame anyone for the occurrence. In her opinion the child was killed instantly.

Myra Cocken, housekeeper at the ROSE AND CROWN INN, stated that on Monday evening she witnessed the accident. The mother tried to get at the child and save it, but her efforts were in vain. The deceased stood and looked round, and the tram knocked him down and carried him a considerable distance. She did not think the driver was in any way to blame as he pulled up as soon as he possibly could.

Herbert Ernest Hadley, who witnessed the accident, said he saw the child’s body between the front wheel and the catcher, and assisted to get him out. There was no difficulty in getting the child out.

Charles Baker, the motorman in charge of the tramcar, said he had been in the employ of the Tramway Company about three and a half years. He was in charge of the car which left Cradley Heath for Dudley at seven o’clock on the night in question, and was travelling down Reddal Hill Road at about five miles an hour when he was eight yards away he saw the deceased child near to the tramway. He then applied the hand brake, but deceased darted in front of the car. Witness promptly applied the emergency brake, but the child was knocked down and came into contact with the lifeguard. The child, in his opinion, rolled over the catcher on to the pilot board. In reply to the jury, witness said the emergency brake did not act instantly because the sand ran over the deceased’s clothing instead of on to the rail. Replying to Mr. Waldron, witness said he had never had an accident before and no complaint had been made about his driving.

Inspector Gibbs said immediately after the accident he examined the lifeguard and catcher, and found both in good working order. Baker was, in his opinion, a careful driver.

Tom Satterthwaite, electrical engineer, stated that the lifeguard and catcher used on the car were the best that could be obtained, and were in perfect working order. In his opinion, the catcher did its work well, but the child being so small, rolled off it.

The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death and exonerated the driver from any blame.”

“George James, servant in the employ of Joseph Burley, butcher, of the Five Ways, Cradley Heath, was charged with stealing about ½cwt of horse corn and meal, the property of his master. Edward Griffiths was also charged with receiving the same, knowing it to have been stolen. Prosecutor suspected for some time, from the appearance of his horses, that they were not fed properly, and that the Prisoner James, whose duty it was to feed them, robbed him of the provender they ought to have had. Accordingly a watch was set, and on Friday prosecutor’s daughter saw James leave the stable with a bag, and go to Griffiths’s house, and subsequently to the latter’s stable. Prosecutor’s wife followed, and found both prisoners in Griffiths’s stable. The police were sent for and both given into custody. Each of the prisoners was committed for trial at the ensuing Sessions.”

[At the Staffordshire Quarter Sessions, both men were found guilty, James was sentenced to six and Griffiths to four months’ imprisonment.]

“William Foley, landlord of the ROUND OF BEEF INN, Tibbetts Gardens, Cradley Heath, was charged with permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises, on the 27th ult. Mr. C. H. Collis (Stourbridge) defended on behalf of the Stourbridge and District Licensed Victuallers’ Society.

Police-sergeant Hayward said that at about eight o’clock on the night in question he went to the defendant’s house and there saw a man named John Tromans drunk, and sitting down on a screen behind the door in the bar, with a jug in front of him. He called the landlady’s attention to Tromans’s drunken state, and she said, ‘Now, Tromans, see about going. I see he has had enough.’

Police-constable Cartwright corroborated.

Mr. Collis contended that there was no evidence to show the man had any beer supplied to him, and if he proved that was true he would ask the Bench to dismiss the summons.

The landlady stated that Tromans came into her house drunk and sat down, and she did not serve him with any beer.

The Bench thought there was not sufficient evidence and dismissed the case.”

“Disgraceful Row at Tibbetts Gardens.

Eliza Smith, of Tibbetts Gardens, was charged with assaulting Benjamin Foulkes, on the 2nd inst. Mr. J. W. Clulow defended. Complainant said that at 11-20pm on the date in question he was on his way home, when he was struck, on passing defendant’s house, by the defendant’s son. He was obliged to strike a blow to free himself from the son, when defendant fetched something out of the house, struck him on the head, and rendered him insensible.

By Mr. Clulow: He was sober, and had not previously challenged Smith to fight. He did not go into Smith’s house, nor fall against the scraper. He had been fined twice previously for assault, but that was when people put on him. He did not throw a cinder into Smith’s house.

Nancy Foley said she saw complainant pass her father’s house, the ROUND OF BEEF, when he wished her good night. Shortly afterwards she heard a row, and on going to ascertain the cause, saw Smith strike Foulkes, after which Mrs. Smith said she would fetch a weapon, and went into the house, returning with something with which she struck Foulkes, and the latter fell. Witness’s father then took the weapon from defendant.

William Foley, landlord of the ROUND OF BEEF, said that on the night in question he heard a disturbance in the street and ascertained that his wife and daughter were there, so he went to get fetch them back. When he got there, he saw Mrs. Smith strike someone with an iron weapon, and as she raised her hand to strike again, witness took the weapon from her. Mrs. Foulkes afterwards came to him and said, ‘They’ve killed our Ben.’

Lily Foulkes, sister of the complainant, said that on that night she heard Mrs. Smith say that if Ben Foulkes came that way home she would kill him.

Dr. Tibbetts, of Cradley Heath, said he was called to see Foulkes, and found him suffering from a contused wound on the scalp. It was a wound likely to be caused by the weapon produced. Foulkes was sober.

Police-constable Bennett said he went with Dr. Tibbetts to see Foulkes, and afterwards arrested Mrs. Smith, who said, ‘I can’t help it, I struck some one, but I don’t know who it was, as there were several at me.’

Benjamin Foulkes, the complainant, was charged with assaulting George Smith, husband of the defendant, at the same time and place,

Smith said that defendant and some others challenged him to fight, struck him, and when he got away followed him into his own house. They tried to drag his wife out of the house, and some one threw a large cinder into the house, which hit him on the leg. Sarah Morris, Edward Morris, and Mary Ann Hinds corroborated.

Foulkes was also charged with assaulting James Willetts at about five o’clock on the same date.

Willetts said that between one and two o’clock on the date in question, Foulkes challenged him out to fight, and squared off at him, but nothing more came of it at the time. At about five o’clock defendant came to him in his own garden, and struck complainant several times about the face and body, until defendant’s brother remonstrated.

Mary Ann Hinds corroborated.

Mr. Clulow said Foulkes was a terror to the neighbourhood, and that the wound he received in the struggle with the Smiths was caused by his falling against the scraper.

The Bench said that most cases were decided by the weight of evidence, but this would have to be decided by the weight of perjury. They were unable to discriminate between the perjury on the one side and that on the other, and would bind over all the parties concerned, except Willetts, who appeared to be a decent man, to keep the peace for six months.”

“Albert Parsons, youth, Cradley Heath, was charged on the 14th inst with stealing 4s 6d, the moneys of William Foley, a licensed victualler, of Tibbetts Gardens, Cradley Heath, and also with stealing 2s 3d, the moneys of William Foley, on the 17th inst. The evidence showed that prisoner entered into the prosecutor’s employ some time in March, and had been accustomed to go on errands for him. On the 14th inst prosecutor sent him to Mr. Grainger’s, Cradley Heath, for half a hundredweight of hay and half a hundredweight of chaff, giving him 4s 6d to pay for it. Prisoner brought back the hay and chaff to his employer. On the 17th prosecutor sent the prisoner to the same person for half a hundredweight of hay, and gave him 2s 3d to pay for it. The next day Mr. Henry Grainger, the son, brought prosecutor a bill for the articles and Mr. Foley told him he had paid it. It was then found that prisoner had not paid Mr. Grainger for the hay and chaff when he went to fetch it, and prisoner admitted to a man named Alexander Hill that some money was in a purse, which was recovered, and that he had spent some of it. Prisoner was dealt with under the First Offenders’ Act, and warned as to his future conduct. He was ordered to come up for judgement in three months hence.”

County Advertiser 14/10/1899

“Samuel Bushill, of Foxall Street, Cradley Heath, and James Chatwin, of Tibbetts Garden, Cradley Heath, were charged with being disorderly on the licensed premises of William Foley, landlord of the ROUND OF BEEF INN, Cradley Heath, on the 7th inst. Mr. C. H. Collis appeared to prosecute on behalf of the Licensed Victuallers Association, and said that it appeared that James Chatwin came to the house of William Foley, and asked if a certain person was there, whom he wanted to see. The landlord, Mr. Foley, saw that the man was drunk, and therefore asked him to leave, which he did. Some time later he came to the house again, in company with the other defendant, Samuel Bushill, and asked for beer. This was refused them because they were in a drunken state. They were asked to leave and refused to do so. The servant was then sent to fetch the police and the men were ejected. William Foley bore out the statement of Mr. Collis in evidence.

Mrs. Foley corroborated.

Defendant (Samuel Bushill) called two witnesses who said he was not drunk.

Defendants were further charged with being drunk and disorderly in the public highway on the 7th inst. Police-constable Butler proved the charge and Police-constable Tierman corroborated.

Bushill was fined 5s and costs for the first offence, and 10s and costs for the second.

Chatwin was fined 10s and costs for the first offence, and 15s and costs for the second.”

County Advertiser 4/11/1899

“James Edwards, of Bank Street, Cradley Heath, was charged with being disorderly in and refusing to quit the ROUND OF BEEF INN, Cradley Heath, on the 28th ult. William Foley, landlord of the ROUND OF BEEF INN, said that on the night of that date named defendant came into the house and commenced using bad language to his brother-in-law. Complainant told him he should not have that language there, and ordered him out. He refused to go, so witness put him out. Defendant was fined 5s and costs.”

County Advertiser 31/3/1900

“Roland Faulkner, Tibbetts Gardens, Cradley Heath, was charged with being drunk on licensed premises on the 19th inst. Police-constable Poulson stated that at 10-35 on the 19th inst he saw defendant in the tap room of the ROUND OF BEEF INN, Cradley Heath. Defendant was drunk, and dozing off to sleep by the side of the fire. Witness called the landlord’s attention to the man, and the landlord then ordered defendant out. Defendant was fined 10s and costs.”

“William Foley, landlord of the ROUND OF BEEF INN, Tibbetts Gardens, was charged with permitting drunkenness. Mr. Clulow prosecuted, and Mr. C. H. Collis defended.

Mr. Clulow said a man named Isaac Edward Billingham went into the house first about 3pm, on May 18th, and remained till 7 o’clock. He had five or six pints of beer. From 7 o’clock till 7.30 Billingham was in an outhouse with Joseph Foley, the landlord’s son, gambling. Then Billingham came back into the house, and after staying a few minutes went down home for a short time. He returned about 8 o’clock to the house, and stayed there till after ten o’clock, and during that time he had six pints of beer. A dispute arose between Billingham and Joseph Foley, because the latter refused to pay 5s Billingham had won while they were gambling with cards in the outhouse. A struggle took place, and some jugs of beer were knocked off the tables, and the jugs were broken. Soon after that the police arrived. During the day there were in the house a number of well-known persons, and they were playing for money. The public house was so situated that there could be no means of ascertaining what was going on inside the house, except by entrance from the front way, and it was a custom to place some person at the window to watch for any danger. It was the custom to bring in a board with hooks, on which rings were thrown, and on this day it was introduced; and he submitted that gambling was going on with the knowledge of the landlady. Mr. Collis objected to this, saying they were not charged with permitting gambling, but with permitting drunkenness. Police-constable Dale said when he visited the house shortly after ten, he found five men and two women in the house. All the men 'had had enough to drink,' but he noticed Isaac Billingham particularly, as he was drunk. Complaints were made to him by Billingham and the landlord as to a row which had evidently taken place. Police-constable Smith and Isaac Edward Billingham and Harry Billingham were called on behalf of the prosecution, and bore out Mr. Clulow's remarks.

Mr. Collis, for the defence, said when a case had to be bolstered up as this case had been by the prosecution, it was generally a very weak one. His case was that the landlady saw Billingham gambling, and told him he would have to stop it. Billingham became very abusive, and used bad language. The landlord then came downstairs on hearing the noise, and told Billingham he would have to go out, and Billingham continued to use bad language, and refused to leave the house for anyone. Eventually the landlord sent for the police, and it was at his instigation they came. Defendant had kept public-houses for 27 years without a conviction, and had kept this particular house for 19 years. It was his wife's property, and it was not likely defendant and his wife would risk losing the license by allowing gambling and other practices the prosecution had suggested. The landlord, Mr. Foley, and other witnesses were called for the defence. There were other cases the Bench elected to hear before giving a decision in the present case.

Isaac Edward Billingham, Tibbetts Gardens, was charged with being drunk and disorderly in the street, on May 18th, also with assaulting Police-constable Dale, and with being disorderly on the licensed premises of William Foley, and refusing to quit when requested, and with maliciously damaging cups value 4d.

Harry Billingham, Tibbetts Gardens, was charged with resisting and obstructing Police-constable Smith, on May 18th, while in the execution of his duty.

Evidence was given in these cases by Police-constable Dale, Police-constable Smith, and the landlord.

The Bench said although there might have been a technical offence of permitting drunkenness, they had always set their face against small cases of infraction of the law on the part of publicans. It was a difficult trade to manage, and if publicans failed in their duty, the Bench had always tried to do theirs. They thought there was not sufficient cause for a really substantial fine, and that it was better to dismiss the case of permitting drunkenness. For refusing to quit Isaac Billingham would be fined 5s and costs, for malicious damage he would have to pay the 4d and 5s and costs, for assault 2s 6d and costs, and he would have to pay the costs for being drunk and disorderly. Harry Billingham was fined 10s and costs for resisting the police."

"William Foley, landlord of the ROUND OF BEEF INN, Tibbetts Gardens, Cradley Heath, was charged with permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises on December 2nd. Mr. Clulow prosecuted, and Mr. C. H. Collis defended.

In opening the case Mr. Clulow detailed the circumstances which were deposed to by Inspector Hodgkinson and PC Wright. These officers stated that they visited the ROUND OF BEEF INN, and in the smoke room saw a man named George Coley sitting with four other men at a table. Coley had opposite him a pint cup partly filled with ale, and was obviously drunk. The landlord was in the room, and Inspector Hodgkinson pointed out Coley to him, and said, 'That man is drunk.' The landlord said, 'Yes, he has had enough.' The landlady said, 'I have not served him.' The inspector then pointed out that Coley had a cup partly full of ale in front of him. Neither landlord nor the landlady denied that Coley was drunk. When the inspector asked Coley to stand up he did so, but would have fallen down had he not fallen against the wall and partly on his seat. The landlord afterwards was told to get Coley out of the house, and PC Wright assisted him out of the house. Coley was so drunk as to be incapable of taking care of himself, and so he was first taken to the Cradley Heath police station, where he was seen by PS Pitcher and PC Turner. He was taken from there on the tram to Old Hill, to the Police Station, and was there put in the cells by PCs Gratage, Plant, and Horne. Mr. Clulow called Coley, who said that there had been a pigeon flying match that day, and he went into Foley's house twice. He denied that he was drunk. He admitted he made a statement to Inspector Hodgkinson the next day, which was taken down in writing, but he now denied the accuracy of it. Mr. Collis argued the evidence that Coley was drunk was not conclusive, and in any case there was none to show that the landlord knew of his condition. There was no evidence to show that Foley neglected his business that evening; on the contrary, he was in the house looking after the business. He had been a licensed victualler for 30 years, and had kept this particular house for over 20 years. There had never been a conviction under the Licensing Acts against his client.

The defendant and other witnesses were called for the defence.

The Bench said there was no doubt there had been an offence, but not sufficiently serious to endorse the license. Defendant would be fined £5 and costs, including solicitor's fee."

County Express 1/11/1902

"A miner, named James Cartwright, residing at Cradley Heath was charged at Old Hill Police Court on Wednesday – before Messrs. W. Bassano, J. Billingham, and J. H. Smith – with being drunk and assaulting PCs Foulkes and Smith.

PC Foulkes stated that on the night of the 28th ult the prisoner went to the ROUND OF BEEF INN, Tibbetts Gardens, in a drunken state, and demanded drink. The landlady refused to supply him, and ordered him to leave. He refused to do so, and was eventually ejected. When in the street the prisoner behaved a disgraceful manner, and witness found it necessary to take him into custody. Directly he did so prisoner set his dog upon him, and also kicked him in the face and on the legs, causing him to sustain serious injuries. Fortunately, PC Smith came to his assistance, and he struck the dog with his staff and prevented him from further attacking him. Prisoner then savagely assaulted PC Smith, and great difficulty was experienced in getting prisoner to Old Hill Police Station.

PC Smith said the prisoner behaved in a ferocious manner.

Prisoner: And I have got a hole in my head, and I have lost a large quantity of blood.

Mr. Bassano: What is the prisoner? – Inspector Hodgkinson: He is a miner, but he rarely does any work.

Mr. Bassano: What is the prisoner's record? – Inspector Hodgkinson: It is the prisoner's 42nd appearance before the Court. He has been seven times convicted for assaulting the police.

The Bench sentenced the prisoner to six months' imprisonment with hard labour."

"On Wednesday the annual licensing session for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held at the Court House..... Superintendent Spendlove had given notice that he should oppose the following licenses.....

William Foley, ROUND OF BEEF, Cradley Heath, permitting drunkenness, and not a fit and proper person....

The licenses objected to would be renewed with the exception of the ROUND OF BEEF INN, the consideration of which would be adjourned until March 11th."

County Advertiser 14/3/1903

"On Wednesday the adjourned licensing sessions for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held at the Police Court, Old Hill.....

The license of the ROUND OF BEEF INN, Cradley Heath was renewed to William Foley on the application of Mr. G. Williams, who pointed out that the objection of the police to the last tenant had been met by a new tenant being obtained."

County Advertiser 2/12/1905

"William Edward [sic] Jenks, landlord of the ROUND OF BEEF INN, Tibbetts, Gardens, Cradley Heath, was charged with permitting drunkenness upon his licensed premises, on the 15th inst.

Mr. J. W. Clulow, who prosecuted, explained that on the night in question Police-sergeant Wood and Police-constables Horton and Turner visited the house, and in one of the rooms saw a man named James Weston in a drunken condition. Weston was standing up, and had a shilling in his hand. He said, 'I will treat you all or I will fight you.' The man was turned out, but behaved so violently outside that he had to be locked up. Subsequently Inspector Gibbs and Police-sergeant Wood visited the house, and found the defendant in the back kitchen, suffering from rheumatism. Defendant, when spoken to, said he had heard a little bit of the row but as he was suffering from rheumatism he could not get out.

Mrs. Jenks said she had asked Weston to leave two or three times, but he had refused to do so.

Police-sergeant Wood, Police-constable Horton, Inspector Gibbs, and independent witnesses gave evidence in support of the statement.

Mr. G. Williams, who defended, urged that the man Weston was ordered to leave the premises on several occasions, but he declined to go. Seven or eight witnesses were called to prove this contention, but the Bench held that the case had been proved, and fined defendant £6, including costs.

James Weston, of Tibbetts Gardens, Cradley Heath, was fined 20s for being drunk upon licensed premises, and 10s for refusing to quit when requested to do so."

Birmingham Daily Gazette 8/2/1906

"The annual licensing sessions for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held yesterday.....

The Superintendent objected to the renewal of the licenses of.....

ROUND OF BEEF, Cradley Heath."

County Advertiser 10/3/1906

"The adjourned annual licensing sessions for the Rowley Regis Petty Sessional Division were held on Wednesday.....

Mr. Bassano said the bench had under consideration the nine houses, five of which were objected to on the ground of convictions and four others on the ground of redundancy. It had raised a very large question, and the magistrates had had before them the consideration of the parish as a whole. He threw out a suggestion to the trade and owners that the matter should be considered from their point of view during the next twelve months. The magistrates would be prepared to consider any counter proposition that might come from the brewers which could be laid before them next year.....

The justices then proceeded to hear the objections to the renewal of the licenses, the first taken being that of the ROUND OF BEEF, Tibbetts Gardens, Cradley Heath. Mr. G. Williams appeared for the tenant, Wm. Edwin Jenks, Mr. J. W. Clulow for the lessee of the house, Mrs. Nancy Foley, and Mr. W. Waldron for the owner, the Earl of Dudley.

Inspector Gibbs said there had been two previous convictions against the house, one on the 18th of December, 1901, when a fine of £5 and costs was imposed for permitting drunkenness, and again on the 29th November, 1905, when a fine of £6 including costs was imposed for permitting drunkenness. There were 27 licensed houses within a distance of 500 yards. There was one license to every 219 persons in the parish. The license had been transferred twice within ten years. He considered the house was difficult for police supervision and that the wants of the locality were well supplied. In reply to Mr. Williams, witness said there was no complaint beyond the last conviction against Jenks. Answering Mr. Clulow, he said he should doubt that the takings amounted to £12 to £14 per week.

Mr. Williams urged the Bench not to report the license to the Quarter Sessions, and contended that the licensee held a good character with the exception of one conviction, and the offence was committed whilst Jenks was suffering from rheumatism, and unable to attend to his business.

Mr. Clulow submitted that this was not the worst house in the district, though it had been selected for extinction. The house had been in the family for seventy years.

The justices retired to consider their decision, and Mr. Bassano said they were all agreed this was a proper house to refer to the Quarter Sessions on the ground of redundancy.”

“At Old Hill, on Wednesday, Alfred Evans, chainmaker, of Tibbetts Gardens, Cradley Heath, was summoned for refusing to quit the licensed premises of the ROUND OF BEEF INN, Cradley Heath, and for also assaulting the landlord, William Henry Foley, on the 11th inst.

Mr. W. Waldron, who prosecuted said defendant was in the public house, when a discussion took place as to who was the best worker at different trades. This developed into a political discussion, and Evans becoming objectionable to the customers was ordered to leave. He refused to go, and was caught by the landlord starting a row with a man named Rose. Foley ejected him, but when he caught hold of him defendant struck him. He followed it up by striking him again, whilst in the brewery yard adjoining the public house. Foley retaliated, and dealt Evans a blow upon the nose, which injured it. A number of witnesses were called in support of this statement.

Evans denied that he was ordered off the premises, or that the disturbance commenced over gambling, which, he said, was taking place at the time.

A cross summons was issued charging Foley with assaulting Evans.

After a lengthy hearing the Bench fined Evans 10s and costs for refusing to quit, but dismissed the charges of assault.”

“Another 50 Sandwell publicans are campaigning for rate cuts after complaining that beer sales are sinking. The latest applications come after 300 Sandwell pubs last year applied for rate cuts because of dwindling trade. The BARRELL in Pound Road, Oldbury, is objecting against a rateable value of £2,284 and the ROWLEY RAG at Throne Road, Rowley Regis, is contesting a rateable value of £3,513 in the latest applications.

The COACH AND HORSES at High Street, Princes End, Tipton, the PARK TAVERN at Dudley Road, Smethwick, the COACH MAKERS ARMS at Bridge Street, Wednesbury and the FLOWER POT at Spon Lane, West Bromwich, are also seeking rate cuts. The applications are due to be heard in March at the West Midlands Valuation Panel offices at Dudley. A Panel spokesman said, ‘Rates on pubs are based on sales.’

Some Sandwell publicans have already warned that they will not be able to carry on if rents and rates are increased.”

“John Fletcher, landlord of the ROYAL EXCHANGE, Blackheath, was charged with permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises, on the 3rd inst.

Mr. Waldron, who prosecuted, said the case was an exemplification of the sad effects of drinking. It appeared, he said, that man named Benjamin Nock, who lodged at the house of one Sarah Siviter, No.5, Powke Lane, Blackheath, after receiving his wages on Friday evening, the 2nd inst, remained out all night, and did not come home until seven o’clock on Saturday evening, the 3rd inst. He was then drunk, and about an hour afterwards went out again, after having changed his clothes. At nine o’clock the same night Siviter saw Nock with Fletcher, and on Nock’s calling her in she went and drank with him. Nock was not sober, and at ten minutes before ten o’clock the same night she saw Nock still at the ROYAL EXCHANGE. About a quarter to eleven she got home, and then found Nock in flames. He was lying across the ashes, and was helpless and drunk. Subsequently the man died from the effects of his burns.

Siviter was called, and bore out Mr. Waldron’s statement.

Martha Timmins, next door neighbour to Siviter, deposed to Nock coming into her house drunk about twenty minutes past ten o’clock on the night of the 3rd inst.

Solomon Cooper, a fellow lodger of deceased, deposed to Nock’s condition on the night in question. Nock, he said, was not to say ‘beastly’ drunk. He had had a drop of beer, but talked sensibly.

In cross-examination witness admitted that he himself got a little ‘fresh’ sometimes, but did not often get the chance.

Police-sergeant Salt spoke to a conversation he had had with the defendant, to the effect that defendant told witness that deceased had been supplied with two or three pints of fourpenny at his house.

Mr. Shakespeare, for the defence, contended that the man was not drunk either at the time he went to the house or left it. He commented on the fact of deceased having washed himself, eaten a meal, changed his clothes, and talked to his landlady on business matters, as inconsistent with the conduct of a drunken man, and attributed Mrs. Siviter’s statement as to deceased’s condition as being due to mistake. He pointed out the fact that the man to gain entrance to his lodgings must have lifted the latch with a nail, and asked whether a drunken man could do that? Was it not more reasonable from the man’s mode of living to presume that the man had a fit and was not drunk?

Defendant stated that he saw deceased at 8.30 on the night in question. Deceased was sober then, and also when he left.

Defendant’s wife swore that deceased was perfectly sober when he came to the house, and when he left. While at the house he had a pint of ale and a bottle of porter.

The Bench thought the deceased was such an habitual toper that he did not show his real condition, but they did not think the evidence was sufficient to show defendant knew of the man’s condition, or to justify him in refusing to supply deceased. The case would therefore be dismissed. At the same time the case had been very properly brought before the Bench.”

“Last night a meeting of gas-riquet makers was held at the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Black Heath, under the presidency of a workman.

The Chairman explained that various prices were being paid for carriage. He pointed out that one firm had offered to give 7s 6s per cwt, and pay for the carriage backwards and forwards; but he was of opinion that they should have 8s.

A workman remarked that the masters had said that if the Hales Owen gas-riquet makers would co-operate with the men at Black Heath they would willingly give the list price. Now they had got the Hales Owen workmen to take action with them, and why they had denied them the price he did not know. At one factory in the district the men had agreed to work at 6s and 7s per cwt. The men had decided to work at 7s 6d, and the master to pay the carriage. Were they going to work at that price? (Cries of ‘No, no.’)

A workman proposed that the list price be demanded, viz, 8s per cwt, and that no carriage be allowed. The resolution was carried.”

“On Tuesday night a largely attended meeting of rivet makers was held at the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, High Street, Blackheath, for the purpose of considering the wages question. Mr. H. Shinton presided and stated that they had met to consider what steps to take to better the condition of their trade as it was in a very bad state.....”

County Advertiser 3/6/1893

“On Monday, at noon, a large meeting of rivet makers, who have come out on strike against a series of reductions in wages, was held at the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Blackheath, Mr. Henry Skip presiding.

The Chairman said that owing to the numerous reductions in wages enforced by a section of the employers, it was a fortnight ago found necessary to give notice for the payment of the 4s 6d list prices, but in order to avert a strike the operatives intimated they would be willing to accept the 4s list. He, in company with Mr. Brooks, had waited upon the employers in the Old Hill district, and all except two had expressed their willingness to pay the 4s list of prices, and he was hopeful the next day these two would see their way clear to pay the list prices. (Hear, hear.) Some of the employers in the Blackheath district were willing to pay the 4s list, but the majority had not been seen yet.

Mr. Brooks (the local secretary) said he was glad a stand had been made against the miserable wages at the present time. He referred to the large amount of female labour in the district, and also to the great need there was of more frequent visits of the Government Inspectors of Factories into the district, for many irregularities were daily taking place which were not likely to be detected unless there were more frequent visits.

Mr. Juggins (general secretary to the Trades Federation) said the operatives were certain to be oppressed as long as they remained disorganised, and were permitted to work in what were known as domestic workshops. (Hear, hear.) They did not want any out-workers but all should work in factories.

In the course of further discussion Mr. Brooks said it appeared that there were about 30 employers, 11 of whom had consented to pay the 4s list of prices.

It was contended that it would be useless for a resolution to be passed to resume work until a majority had given their consent.

It was decided to adjourn the meeting until next day, to enable the leader to ascertain the views of the whole of the employers.

At a meeting on Tuesday it was reported that all the employers, except two, had consented to pay the price, and it was resolved to recommence work.”

County Advertiser 24/6/1893

“On Friday night, last week, a meeting of the stud and peg makers of Blackheath and district was held at the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Blackheath, for the purpose of considering what steps should be taken to improve the condition of the workers in these trades.

Mr. Haywood, who presided, said that as the employers had conceded an advance to the rivet makers in the district, he thought it was only just and right that the operatives in the stud and peg branch should ask for an advance, so that the remuneration in the two trades might be somewhat equalised, especially so as it was found that the employers in the district were not paying a uniform rate.

After some discussion as to which advance should be asked for, it was decided that notice should be given on Saturday claiming the May, 1889, list of prices, which is an equivalent to the one now being paid to the rivet makers, and which means an advance of from 12 per cent on the prices that are being paid at the present time.

On Saturday, in accordance with the above resolution, notice was given to the employers.

The employers in the gas-rivet trade in the Halesowen district have conceded an advance of about 12 per cent to the operatives, and the strike was brought to a termination on Tuesday.”

John Fletcher, beer retailer, 63, High Street. [1896]

County Advertiser 2/7/1898

“On Tuesday night the adjourned meeting of rivet makers was held at the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, High Street, Blackheath. A workman presided. Mr. I. Cashmore (secretary) said nearly all the operatives in the trade were willing for an application to be made to the masters for an increase in wages. A workman said their present wages amounted in some cases to 18s or 19s, whilst the most experienced men in the trade could not get over 24s or 25s a week. Ultimately, after a long discussion, Mr. Cashmore was instructed to write to all the employers, asking if they were willing to concede the advance, and the meeting was further adjourned.”

County Advertiser 18/11/1905

“On Thursday morning Mr. A. A. Betham (acting coroner) held an inquest at the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, High Street, Blackheath, respecting the death of Charles Herbert Stephens (18), boat builder, formerly residing at Holly Road, Blackheath, who died under shocking circumstances whilst following his employment at the Tiger Works, Powke Lane, Blackheath, belonging to Messrs. T. P. Jones and Company. Mr. J. Skidmore Jones represented the firm, and Mr. S. Hird (Inspector of Factories and Workshops) was also present.

William Stephens, boat builder, stated that on the evening in question, he was engaged with his son in raising a boat from the canal on to the wharf, in order that it could be repaired. The boat, which was about 70 feet in length, had been raised about three feet, and deceased was standing close to it. Witness turned away to fetch something and when he looked round again he found that the packing, which consisted of blocks of wood, had commenced rocking. Witness called out to his son, but he received no answer. The boat kept getting lower, and witness looked under the boat and saw his son moving. Deceased put out his right hand towards witness, and he had almost got hold of it to pull him out when the boat suddenly fell upon him. Witness called for assistance, but when they got him from underneath the boat he was dead. Witness had been a boat builder for forty years, and had never had an accident. He considered that the jack must have slipped and caused the boat to slip.

In reply to Mr. Hird, witness said the deceased was working with the jack, which must have skidded and caused the packing to give way. He thought the upper part of the jack skidded on account of the wet and greasy condition of the bottom. The handle of the jack must have struck the deceased at the back of the leg and pushed him under the packing.

Thomas Henry Whateley, a clerk employed at the works, stated that he was called to the spot, and found the deceased under the boat.

Mr. Hird thought that in future a stronger basis should be provided, and a juryman suggested that additional packing should be used in order to prevent accidents.

The Coroner said it was a sad case.

The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death, and expressed sympathy with the father of the deceased.”

County Advertiser 28/7/1906

“On Saturday afternoon Mr. G. C. Lewis (coroner) held an inquest at the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, High Street, Blackheath, concerning the death of Frederick Slim, aged six years, formerly residing with his parents at Darby Street, Blackheath, and who met with his death under shocking circumstances on the 19th inst. The evidence showed that on the afternoon in question deceased was leaving the Powke Lane Council Schools, and in running out of the playground fell under a cart laden with coal, belonging to Mr. H. Darby, of Blackheath, which was driven by a man named Parkes. The wheel of the vehicle passed over the lad’s head, and he sustained shocking injuries, being killed instantly. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death, and attached no blame to the driver of the vehicle.”

“At Dudley County Court, yesterday, before Judge Ingham, Thomas Benjamin Williams and Lizzie Bate, joint owners of the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Blackheath, and Thomas Benjamin Reynolds, licensee of the public house, sued Edwin Harry Hickman, Station Road, Old Hill, for damages, amounting to £4 12s 6d, in respect of injuries to the licensed premises. It was stated that a gable of a house belonging to the defendant and adjoining the public house fell on the roof of the latter premises, making a hole and doing other damage.

Defendant contended that it was the duty of the tenant, and not of the landlord, to see to repairs of property, and stated that he was not aware that the gable was dangerous. On the night the accident occurred there was a big storm in the locality, and several other accidents were due to the gale.

Judgement was given for defendant, with costs.”

“At the Police Court, Old Hill, on Wednesday, before Messrs. Moore and Barrs, John Harrington and Daniel Rogers were charged with Assaulting Mr. Thomas Llewellyn. Mr. Stokes appeared for the complainant, and Mr. Addison defended Harrington. The case was before the Court a considerable time, six witnesses being examined on the part of the prosecution. From their evidence it seemed that on Christmas Eve, the complainant, in accordance with his usual custom, gave the men in his employ a supper. The supper took place at a schoolroom, and after it was over some of the men went to the ROYAL EXCHANGE public house, close by. At closing time, the complainant told the men in the house that they had better retire peaceably to their several homes. Whilst the men were leaving, Rogers, without the least provocation, suddenly caught hold of complainant and dragged him to the door, and before complainant had time to defend himself the defendant Harrington struck him a violent blow on the cheek bone with a thick stick, causing it to bleed profusely for some time. Complainant had not noticed the defendants in the house previous to the assault, and he was at a loss to account for a motive for the assault. In cross-examination, however, by Mr. Addison, he said defendant Harrington had been in his employ some years since, and that he had discharged him. He could attribute the assault to no other motive than this. After complainant had been struck several of his men caught hold of Harrington, and had it not been for complainant and a person named Bullock, would have nearly, if not quite murdered him. As it was he received blows which badly blackened his eyes and injured his nose, and his clothes were torn.

Mr. Addison was about to call witnesses for the defence, when the Bench suggested a compromise. After some little parley, complainant said he should be satisfied if defendants would apologise and pay the expenses. This course was agreed to.

A counter charge of assault brought by Harrington against Llewellyn was not gone into."

"The Wrought-Nail Trade. A meeting of members was held at Mr. Pearson's the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Old Hill, on Monday, which was attended by delegates from Lye Waste, Hales Owen, Old Hill, Gornal, Sedgley, Old Swinford, Rowley, Blackheath, Gorsty Hill, and other places, to consider the present position of the wrought-nail trade. Mr. John Price was chairman. After a lengthy discussion it was resolved to adjourn the meeting till 1st July to see if the masters would meet the requirements of the men as regards an advance in wages. Unless they do so it is stated that there will be a general strike early in July for the 1875 list. It is urged on behalf of the men that they cannot live and pay their way with wages at their present level."

Worcestershire Chronicle 6/7/1878

"Intended Strike in the Nail Trade.

A largely attended meeting of delegates, representing the workers in the Halesowen, Old Hill, Bromsgrove, Rowley, Blackheath, Lye Waste, and other districts, was held on Monday afternoon, at the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Old Hill. Mr. John Price presided. All the delegates reported that the nailmakers in their respective districts were quite willing to strike for an increase of wages. After considerable discussion, it was resolved unanimously: That, unless the masters made a concession to the men by issuing a revised list, framed at the rate of 10 per cent reduction from the Dudley list of 1875, upon all classes of work, from the smallest 'tack' to the largest 'spike,' within fourteen days, a general strike should take place throughout the whole district on the 15th inst, demanding the full list of 1875."

Birmingham Daily Post 10/9/1878

"The Strike in the Nail Trade.

A meeting of delegates from the whole of the districts concerned in the present strike was held yesterday afternoon, at the ROYAL EXCHANGE, Old Hill, when it was unanimously decided to adhere to the original resolution. A meeting held at Hales Owen, a similar resolution was also adopted.

Our Sedgley correspondent writes: Some of the merchants, unable to wait for the nails which at some warehouses have become scarce in consequence of the long continuance of the strike, are now countermanding their orders for those goods which cannot be supplied, and it is stated they are sending them to Belgium, where they can readily procure the execution, at a rate even cheaper. It is alleged that in this district several large orders have been withdrawn, and it is feared that others will follow. The masters still affirm that the demands of the operatives are greatly in excess of anything it is in their power to grant."

He said his client at present kept the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, having a seven days’ license, and now asked for an in door spirit license for six days, with the consent of the owner of the premises, Mr. James Holcroft. The applicant stated his house was worth £30 yearly, and evidence of the posting of the notices was given. The license was refused.”

“On Monday afternoon a meeting of nailers’ delegates, to consider the best way of raising wages, was held at the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Old Hill. Mr. J. Hackett presided, and there were present representatives from the following districts: Rowley, Black Heath, Old Hill, Long Lane, Oldswinford, Haysech, Bromsgrove, and Perrys Lake; Halesowen, The Lye, Gornal, and the Dudley district being unrepresented.

The Chairman said wages in the trade had got so low that he could see no course open to the nailers but a general strike. It was true that one or two districts were being paid ‘something like,’ but that would not long continue. He should be glad if the masters could see their way to giving them the August list, which would mean something like 20 per cent increase on the present wages. Mr. John Price said the people at Rowley were ready to come out on strike at any time, but he pointed out that the strike must be universal if it was to succeed, and as there were some important districts unrepresented at that meeting – Halesowen in particular – it would be useless to send out a resolution from that meeting deciding on a strike.

The delegates from Bromsgrove and Long Lane said the nailers at those places were not ready to strike at present.

Ultimately it was decided that the deputation should wait on the masters to ask for the January, 1879, list, which is about 10 per cent below the August list of 1878.”

County Advertiser 25/10/1879

“On Monday a conference of delegates of the operatives employed in the local nail trade was held at the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Old Hill. Mr. Price presided. All parts of the Black Country were represented.

The President said the object of the conference was to take into consideration the advisability of entering upon a general strike on Monday, the 27th inst. He pointed out the need of a better rate of wages for the operatives, and went on to state that the Bromsgrove nailers would meet today, when it would be decided as to whether or no the operatives of that district would join the Black Country nailmakers in the strike. The resolution of that conference should be that the whole of the districts were prepared to strike for a net revised list. The January list met the requirements of a section of the operatives, but it did not embody the interests of the whole of them. The list for which they intended to strike should have reference to all the operatives. (Applause.) They had to consider whether it would be wise to strike independently of the Bromsgrove men, in case the whole of the latter did not see fit to join in the movement. The most respectable of the masters impressed upon him the necessity for the action of the nailmakers being united. The masters were at the back of them, so that instead of striking for the purpose of hostility, it would, in a measure, be a conciliatory movement, because there was so much underselling going on that some masters desired to have it ended. An improvement upon the present state of things could not be brought about without a strike of the whole of the men. It would not do for the men of the Black Country districts to turn out, and 4,000 or 5,000 men remain at work at Bromsgrove. He did not think that the strike would last more than a month.

The Halesowen delegate reported that the general nailmakers in the district he represented were willing to join in the strike provided the ‘jump’ nailmakers would join in the movement. The latter had stated that they would join in the strike, but there was a doubt as to whether one of the men would do so.

The President: Do I understand that the Halesowen men will not come out unless the 'jump' makers come with them? – The Delegate: No; they will not.

The President said these were, to him, new conditions, of which he had previously heard nothing.

The Old Hill delegate said the Halesowen men wanted to strike. He thought the time had come when the Bromsgrove men would act in concert with the operatives of the 'up-district.' He was confident they would be ready to strike at the same hour as the Old Hill and other districts. He ridiculed the idea of Halesowen holding aloof owing to the doubt as to the probable action of one man. The strike would be general, and they would not have to continue it long. If they did not decide the question at that Conference it would be too late.

The President suggested that an interview should take place between a deputation from the Conference and the jump nailmakers at Halesowen.

A delegate representing Lye Waste said the operatives of that district were willing to take part in the proposed strike.

The Sedgley delegate said that the operatives of that district, as well as those of Gornal, were prepared unconditionally to enter upon a strike with the operatives of the other Black Country districts on the day named. They believed in a general strike throughout the district.

The delegate from Blackheath said that men of the district he represented were prepared to enter into the strike provided the Bromsgrove men would join.

There was a similar report from Gorsty Hill

The Old Hill delegate hoped iron would be taken up by any of the operatives with the view of making nails, excepting at an advanced rate, after Monday next. (Hear, hear.)

It was then resolved, on the motion of the delegate from Halesowen, seconded by the Blackheath delegate, that the strike should be entered upon on Monday next, the 27th inst, provided the Bromsgrove men and the jump nail operatives would act in concert with the Black Country men.

The President said there was every reason to believe that this would be done, and it was agreed to hold a meeting at Halesowen on Monday to declare the strike commenced. The Sedgley and Lye Waste delegates were appointed a deputation to confer with the 'jump' nailers at Halesowen as to their intended action in the strike, and the proceedings terminated.

An interview has since taken place between the deputation appointed at the delegates' conference on Monday, and the jump nailmakers of the Halesowen sub-districts as to their intention in reference to the proposed general strike. They express their willingness to act in concert with the remainder of the operatives."

"James Pearson, ROYAL EXCHANGE, Old Hill, was charged with unlawfully permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises, on the 20th inst. Mr. Cooksey, solicitor, appeared for the defence.

PC Rowlands said about 8.40 on Saturday night he visited the defendant's premises, and saw a man named John Hopwoodine drunk, and drinking out of a cup of ale. He told defendant that he should not have filled any beer for the man. Defendant said he had come to join a club, and he had only supplied him with a cup of beer. Defendant's wife took the cup from the man, and defendant led him out of the house.

Mr. Cooksey said defendant pleaded guilty that his wife supplied the man with ale. He was drunk, but the man had worked for defendant some time, and she filled him a cup of small beer. Defendant was away at the time, but when he came in he heard something about the man, and was in the act of ordering him out when the police came in. He asked that the Bench would deal leniently with the defendant.

He was fined 20s and costs.

“This being the Old Hill adjourned licensing sessions the Bench granted a renewal of the licenses which were suspended at the last annual general sessions. The Chairman stated that the magistrates had very carefully considered each case, and they had decided to renew the licenses on the understanding that some assurance was given on the part of each defaulter, that their respective houses should be better conducted in the future. The Bench were determined that the law should be enforced, and if the defendants were guilty of any further offence against the Licensing Laws they would be severely punished and their licenses forfeited. The Chairman added that Henry Heath, who was convicted for selling ale during prohibited hours on Sunday, was now taking out a six days’ license instead of a seven days’, and his license was renewed on that condition; and if any of the others wished to have six days’ licenses the Bench would be pleased to grant them.”

Prosecutor stated that on the 1st ult John Charles came to his house and commenced a quarrel. He interfered, whereupon Charles bit his fingers, and he had considerable difficulty in ejecting defendant from the premises. Evans then came up, and the two beat prosecutor so badly that he was rendered unconscious, and had to be carried into the house. Dr. Standish stated that he had been attending prosecutor since the assault was committed. For the defence, it was contended that prosecutor’s injuries were received in a free fight which took place outside his house. Charles was sentenced to two months’ imprisonment with hard labour, and fourteen days in default of paying the costs, and Evans was fined 20s and costs, or one month.”

Harry Cooksey, landlord of the ROYAL EXCHANGE, applied for a wine license. Mr. Waldron appeared for the applicant, and Mr. Shakespeare opposed the application on behalf of Mr. Darby and Mr. Hobbs. Mr. Waldron in making the application, said that he had to apply for a wine license in addition to the license applicant held as a beer retailer. Last year he applied before the licensing magistrates for a full intoxicating license, and on that occasion the Bench thought that a full license was not required, and refused the application. He did not apply for a full license, but for a wine license, inasmuch as there was a constant demand for wines. The application was granted.”

“Last night a well-attended meeting of miners was held at the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Old Hill, under the presidency of a miner, for the purpose of considering what action should be taken in the present crisis.

The Chairman remarked that those representatives who attended the Manchester Conference pledged themselves to accept nothing less than the 10 per cent increase.

Mr. B. Winwood said that great discontent now existed amongst the miners of the Black Country. He had been accused of pursuing a weak policy, but he considered the miners had pursued a weaker policy than he had in accepting the 5 per cent increase. The price of coal had been raised, and he was of opinion that it was only right that the men should have the 10 per cent increase. He hoped the men would act in conjunction with their fellow-toilers so as to strengthen their case. He strongly repudiated the statement that had been made that the miners of their district had broken faith with the Manchester Conference. It was his opinion that Cannock Chase miners were responsible for the position in which they had been placed, and the strife that had been created in their ranks. If the Cannock men had abided by the decision that was arrived at at the Wednesbury Conference, they would not have been placed in such a complicated position. They must make every sacrifice, and even lose the Wages Board and sliding-scale, rather than not have the 10 per cent increase. A large number of collieries in West Bromwich were at work, but the Sandwell men, he was glad to say, were still firm in their demand. The men employed at Rowley Hall and New Grace Mary Colliery had obtained the 10 per cent advance, and he considered it was unjust to employers and men that a portion of the men should be working at 5 per cent increase, whilst others had 10 per cent. Things had now been reversed. West Bromwich colliers had, on former occasions, been at work whilst the men in Rowley and Old Hill districts had been on strike. It was resolved that a strike should be declared on the 27th inst at all the collieries where the employers did not concede the advance of 10 per cent.”

“Local Miners and the Eight Hours’ Bill.

On Tuesday night a well-attended meeting of miners in connection with the Old Hill branch of the Miners’ Federation of Great Britain was held at the SHOULDER OF MUTTON INN, High Street, Blackheath. Mr. Samuel Dyas presided, and said they had met to consider the Eight Hours’ Bill; and to adopt a petition in favour of the legal Eight Hours’ Bill from bank to bank.

Mr. B. Winwood (miners’ agent) addressed the meeting, and said the reason why they were taking that course was in consequence of the Federation asking for the branches in the different districts to send petitions in favour of the bill, and that they should be sent to the members for the divisions. He was glad to say that their member, Mr. Staveley Hill, gave him in a clear and definite reply stating that he should support the measure when it came before the House of Commons. He wished he could say that of other local members. Some of the people were opposed to the measure because the miners themselves were somewhat divided in opinion. He did not say that because he felt antagonistic towards the gentleman who gave that reply, but he contended that the majority of miners were in favour of the measure, and the Northumberland and Durham miners who opposed the bill were not opposed to a shorter day, but simply to the mode of obtaining it. It had been said that the men in the North worked longer than the men in the south, but this he denied. The men, with their leaders, were as determined as ever to make every effort to get the measure made law, and it now behoved them to do their utmost to reduce the hours of toil. If they desired to secure the passing of the Bill, and their member would not vote for it, then they should oust him and put in his place someone who would. (Cheers.) The Bill would soon be secured if the miners in the North would only join hands with them. It was anticipated that the Bill would be introduced about April 27th, but probably it might come on a little sooner. In conclusion, Mr. Winwood urged the necessity of organisation. Trade had been better the last twelve months than for many years past; but he regretted that the miners were going downhill, and were bearing encroachments and grievances which, if he had to bear them, would drive him mad. If they did not try to alter their position, he should like to know what would be the result when trade was going down and on the wane. It was then resolved that the chairman and secretary should sign a petition to the House of Commons in favour of the Eight Hours' Bill, introduced by Captain Norton and Mr. Pickard, and forward it to Mr. Staveley Hill for presentation. On Wednesday night a meeting was held at the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Old Hill, when, after an address by Mr. Winwood, and a similar resolution to the above was carried, and it was decided to forward the petition to Mr. Brooke Robinson requesting him to present it to the House of Commons and also support it."

County Advertiser 29/10/1898

"On Tuesday night a meeting in connection with the Old Hill and District Branch of the Miners' Federation of Great Britain, was held at the SHOULDER OF MUTTON INN, Blackheath. Mr. B. Winwood (miners' agent) presided over a good attendance, and he was supported by Councillor A. Stanley (of the Cannock Chase Miners' Association), and Mr. S. Dyas.

The Chairman moved the following resolution: 'That seeing miners' wages can be increased, and their general rights protected better by and through federated action, and with a view of giving more support to the Miners' Federation of Great Britain this meeting hereby urges upon all those outside the local organisation the necessity of joining such an association immediately.' He remarked that there seemed to be a great deal of misunderstanding amongst the miners in that district, respecting the advance of 2½ per cent they recently received. Some believed that it would only remain in force until next January, but the agreement arrived at by the Conciliation Board was that an advance of 2½ per cent should be conceded until next January, and then the Board would meet for the purpose of deciding whether a further increase should be conceded, and not to make any reduction. He considered that the miners' wages in that district were much lower than the men were entitled to, but he was of opinion that if the men would only strengthen their organisation and show a bold front they would be able to get a further increase in January next. Mr. S. Dyas seconded the resolution.

Mr. Albert Stanley addressed the meeting, and said some of the miners were making the advance they had just received look ridiculous, but he thought that if they looked at it from a different standpoint there was a vast lot of difference in having an advance rather than having it taken off. They had a guarantee of 30 per cent for two years, and there was every reason to believe from the state of the trade that a further increase would be demanded at the end of the present year. He urged upon them the necessity of organisation, and said that although it was an old question it was none the less important. There were only about one out of every three miners in the Union, and he contended that the other two who were not in any organisation had no right to receive any benefit obtained for them by the Federation. (Hear, hear.)

The resolution was carried, and a vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Stanley.

On Thursday a meeting was held at the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Old Hill, at which a similar resolution was passed. Mr. Winwood presided, and Councillor A. Stanley addressed the meeting."

County Advertiser 14/10/1899

"Miners Meeting. On Monday evening the members of the Old Hill Lodge, held their annual dinner at the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Old Hill. After the repast Mr. B. Winwood, miners' agent, addressed the gathering upon the local and general federation, and the callous indifference which was shown by the non-unionists towards the combination that had obtained for men advances in their wages, was most astounding. That being so he should advise them as union men, not to play with them under circumstances that were illegal, although grievances may exist, and run the risk of having to attend in the police courts, and so waste their time and money also, when all such matters could have any reasonable attention if the fault finders would only join the association, which was for the purpose of greater protection of their rights. Resolutions were afterwards unanimously carried in favour of stronger local federation, and thanking the host and hostess for their excellent catering of the dinner."

“Meeting of Miners at Old Hill and Blackheath.

On Tuesday night a well-attended meeting was held under the auspices of the Old Hill and District Branch of the Miners’ Federation of Great Britain, at the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Old Hill, to consider the wages and employment questions. A miner, who presided, referred to the statement of Mr. Claughton, the Conservative candidate for Dudley borough, and said they disagreed with him. In regard to wages, miners were practically on the rock bottom, and in his opinion it was time they sought to advance them. Instead of working longer and for less pay, they wanted to work less and have more pay.

Mr. B. Winwood (miners’ agent) addressed the gathering. He rereferred to the statement recently made by Mr. Claughton, to the effect that when bad times came, it was far better to have a lower rate of wages and work full time than to have a high rate and work half time. He totally disagreed with Mr. Claughton, and urged that he had never known trade to improve in bad times by a reduction in wages. During the last few years the miners had submitted to a reduction of 20 per cent in their wages, but this had not tended to improve trade. (Applause.) Moreover, if they had a further 20 per cent on top of that it would not, in his opinion, have improved the trade. He urged them to reorganise their forces, and send men to Parliament who were in sympathy with their interests and who would vote for the Miners’ Eight Hours Bill and the Trade Union Bill.

At the close the following resolution was unanimously passed: ‘Seeing from past experience that the low rate of wages which were paid to the miners were not the means of improving the condition of the coal trade, this meeting cannot accept the opinion recently expressed at the Brockmoor meeting by Mr. Claughton, that the operation of lower wages in the future will result in an increased number of working days, we hereby agree to adhere to the present system until a more advantageous one is formulated.’”

It stood slightly back from the High Street across a small, open yard which was paved in places with white ‘monkey bricks.’ The door into the bar was at the corner of the building, set at an angle, and had a well-worn step up to the small entrance lobby. A year or two earlier one of our group had caused uproar among the pub customers by riding his motorcycle up this step and into the bar, revving his engine and filling the place with exhaust fumes.....”

"An adjourned inquest was held on Wednesday last, before G. H. Hinchliffe, Esq, and a very respectable Jury, at Mr. H. J. Nicklin's, ROYAL OAK INN, on the body of Mr. John Smith, aged forty-nine, a shopkeeper.

The examination of a great number of witnesses showed that on the 11th of this month the deceased, complaining of pain in his stomach, sent his little boy to the shop of Mr. Nicholls, druggist, for a pennyworth of Irish slate – a popular medicine, it was stated, amongst the poorer class in this district. The daughter of Mr. Nicholls was in the shop, and on the boy referred to asking for the slate, Miss Nicholls opened a drawer and gave him a little paper packet, which he gave to his father. By the advice of a neighbour, Mr. Smith mixed the article sent (a powder) in some ale, and drank it off. He was soon afterwards purged and attacked with giddiness, and went to bed. Subsequently he became as it were convulsed, and his struggles were so violent that he was obliged to be held down in bed. Mr. Webster was called in, and that gentleman, after giving the patient an emetic, bled him. However, it was deemed necessary to send for Mr. Moore, of Hales Owen, who at once attended Mr. Smith. Of course every attention was paid him, but after lying ill until the 18th (seven days after) he died.

In this state of things the Coroner suggested that an adjournment of the enquiry must be had, in order that a post mortem examination should be made of the deceased's body, and the Jury at once adopted the suggestion.

Both Mr. Webster and Mr. Moore, from an examination of the remains of the powder given to Mr. Smith, as had from Miss Nicholls, said the drug was coccus indicus.

At the re-opening of the inquest, Mr. Moore minutely detailed the appearances which had been exhibited at the examination of the body, and finally both this gentlemen and Mr. Webster coincided in opinion, from such examination, that death had resulted from inflammation of the lungs. They were also of opinion that this disease had not been produced by the coccus indicus supplied to and taken by deceased, but they could not undertake to say but that the progress of the disorder might have been accelerated by its presence in the system.

The Coroner sent the whole matter to the Jury in a very clear and careful manner, who returned a verdict that deceased died from inflammation of the lungs, but they were of opinion that death had been accelerated by coccus indicus given to the unfortunate man's son in mistake by Miss Nicholls; and they called upon the Coroner to administer severe reproof to Mr. Nicholls, for allowing an incompetent person to serve drugs of injurious character.

Mr. Hinchliffe then, in accordance with the desire of the Jury, addressed Mr. Nicholls in very serious terms. The Coroner said it was the first time he had ever heard of a young female being entrusted to serve in a chemist's shop – a place where, from the great variety of articles sold, exceedingly great care and caution were required, as well as chemical knowledge. Had the medical testimony gone to show that the death of Mr. Smith had ensued from the noxious drug sold to him, Mr. Nicholls would have stood in a very awkward position. He (the Coroner) trusted that he would take the reproof given as a serious warning as to how he let manifestly incompetent persons serve in his establishment."

County Advertiser 27/2/1864

"On Monday afternoon, an inquest was held at the ROYAL OAK public house, Blackheath (Mr. W. Darby's), before E. Hooper, Esq, Coroner, on the body of Joseph Hadley, aged three years and nine months, the illegitimate child of a single woman named Hannah Hadley, and who was burnt on the previous Thursday so severely that he died on Friday.

The first witness was Catherine Thompson, the wife of Henry Thompson, a chainmaker, living in New Street, Blackheath, who said that the deceased's mother resided next door to her. The child had enjoyed good health up to the previous Thursday, when, about half-past twelve o'clock, witness heard him scream, and going out, saw him running up an entry from the brewhouse, with his clothes all in flames. She tried to extinguish the flames, but could not in consequence of having a child of her own in her arms. She called to the mother of the deceased, who came out of her mother's house, extinguished the flames, and took the child into her own house, and dressed the burns. The deceased was fearfully burnt on the bowels, chest, neck, and face, and died the next day at half-past eleven in the forenoon. The door of the brewhouse was open, and there was no protection before the fire in the dwelling house. The witness added that she herself had no guard to her fire, although she had a family of six children.

The Coroner cautioned her that if an accident of such a nature happened to any of her family she would be held criminally responsible.

Hannah Hadley, the mother of the deceased, deposed that his father was Samuel Hingley, a labourer, formerly living at Langley Green. On the day in question she left the child alone near the door of her house, to call at her sister's close by. There was nothing to prevent the child going to the fire in the house. There was also a fire in the brewhouse, the door of which was open. Witness ran back on hearing the last witness's cries, and attended to the child. A young man named Abraham Sherward lived with witness as her husband. Mr. Webster was sent for, and sent some oils, but did not attend himself until two o'clock. The deceased told witness that his clothes caught fire from the furnace in the brewhouse.

Mary Ann Hadley, sister of the last witness, stated that she was a single woman, but had had three illegitimate children – two by one man and one by another, and that she was now cohabiting with a third man, and lived next door to the mother of the deceased. After calling on Mr. Webster, she went to the relieving officer, and obtained a medical note, which she took to Mr. Hayes, surgeon, but he was out, and did not call till noon on Friday, when the child was dead. Mr. Hayes then stated that he had not received the note until after he had arisen at eleven o'clock that (Friday) morning.

A Mrs. Hadley, to whom the note had been delivered, was here sent for, but refused to attend.

The Coroner instantly made out a summons, and desired Police-constable Bevington to inform her that if she refused to obey it, he would commit her to Stafford. After the lapse of some time she entered the Court, and was sworn. She said she was the wife of Daniel Hadley, a saddler, and lived at Blackheath, and Mr. Hayes, an assistant to Mr. Moore, of Halesowen, the parish surgeon, lodged in her house. On Thursday evening she received a medical note from a woman named Hadley. Mr. Hayes was then away attending a labour case, and the woman said she would have the note back and go to Halesowen. Mr. Hayes did not return until after the family had retired to rest. Mary Ann Hadley brought back the note on the following morning, and it was given to Mr. Hayes, who then attended the case.

The Coroner said that no blame could attach to Mr Hayes, but that the mother of the deceased had not used due caution. The other sister appeared to be leading a most depraved life, but it would be for the jury to say whether they were satisfied with the evidence which had been brought before them.

The Jury at once returned a verdict of Accidental Death."

"On Saturday, Mr. E. Hooper, District Coroner, held an inquiry at the ROYAL OAK INN, Black Heath, concerning the death of Mary Steventon, a little girl of nine years old, who died on Friday from injuries she had sustained by burning on the 18th ult. It appeared from the evidence of Solomon Roberts, greengrocer, Hales Owen, that on the 18th ult a fire had been lighted by Mr. Darby, a neighbour of William Steventon, miner, and the father of the deceased, in the yard, for the purpose of consuming rubbish. Some children took some of the blazing material and made a bonfire in another portion of the yard, and deceased, fearing her little brother would get burnt, in her endeavours to extinguish the flames, caught fire. Her burning garments were extinguished by Mr. Roberts, and Mr. Moore and Mr. Kendrick, surgeons, attended her, but she expired on Friday. Mr. Darby was advised by the Coroner to take more precaution in burning rubbish for the future. The jury found a verdict of Accidental Death.

(The inquest had been fixed for a quarter past twelve o'clock, and on the Coroner's arrival he was informed by Police-constable Bevington that in consequence of the defective postal arrangements of the village, he had not received the warrant until after eleven o'clock, and had experienced considerable difficulty in getting a jury together by the required time. The Coroner apologised to the jury for the brief notice they had received. Several jurors complained of the inefficiency of the postal arrangements, and as it appeared that the inhabitants were about memorialising the Postmaster General for the purpose of obtaining an earlier delivery of letters, Mr. Hooper promised them his co-operation in the movement.)”

“An inquest was held on Thursday the 16th inst, at the ROYAL OAK INN, Blackheath, before E. Docker, Esq, District Coroner, touching the death of the illegitimate child of a young woman, named Sarah Ashmore.

It appears that Sarah Ashmore is a single woman, and resides with her parents in Hackett Street, Blackheath. On the 12th inst, she was delivered of the deceased child, which was alleged by herself, and those who attended her, to be still-born, but which the neighbours and others, thought had been treated in an improper manner. The rumours of the illegitimate child having reached the ears of the police, they immediately corresponded with the Coroner, who forthwith held the inquest as above.

The evidence brought forward not being at all satisfactory, the inquest was adjourned for a few days, in order that a post mortem examination of the body might be made. On Tuesday last it was again resumed, when Dr. Phillips, of Rowley, who had made the post mortem examination was examined. According to his evidence the child was still-born, which statement quite exonerated the parties implicated from all blame.

After hearing this evidence, the Jury found that the child was still-born. There being suspicion was not the worst feature of the case. At the inquest, in the course of the examination, it was elicited by the Coroner that the house in which Ashmore lived contained only one bedroom, and also that the bedroom contained only one bed, in which, the parents of Ashmore, herself, and the man with whom she cohabited, all slept together. This is one of the most unnatural acts that we remember to have heard of. It plainly exhibits the degradation to which the above four must have sunken to. They surely cannot have the feelings of human beings, but rather of animals. The young woman Ashmore has not yet reached her 16th year. The man with whom she cohabited is named Speare.”

“On Wednesday, Edward Hall, constable at Blackheath, summoned Messrs. W. Darby, Richard Hackett, and Priest, three trustees of a Friendly Society, for refusing to take his money and treating him as a member. The society, which is duly registered by Tidd Pratt, is held at the ROYAL OAK INN, Blackheath, at the house of Mr. W. Darby, one of the defendants.

It appears that one of the rules specifies that any member becoming a bailiff, or a bailiff’s follower, shall cease to be a member.

The defendant, being a constable, had taken a distress to one John Harris, of Blackheath, who lived in one of the houses of the society, and in consequence of that the secretary refused to take complainant’s money.

The Magistrates’ Clerk advised the Bench that to be a bailiff was to derive a livelihood therefrom, and further, that complainant being a constable, it was his duty to go to houses for that purpose.

The order of the magistrates was that Hall be reinstated in the society, and that his money was to be taken. The case was adjourned for one month for that purpose.”

Stourbridge Observer 7/10/1865

“The adjourned inquest concerning the death of Henry White, a miner, who lost his life by a fall of coal at the Colliery of Messrs. William and Joseph Nock, on the 19th of August, was held on Monday last, at the ROYAL OAK INN, Black Heath. Both members of the firm were present, and Mr. Motteram, of the Oxford Circuit (instructed by Mr. Bolton, of Wolverhampton) was also present in their interest.

The Coroner explained that the only evidence taken at the previous enquiries had been as to the identity of the body and that of one of the miners who was at work with deceased when the accident occurred.

Thomas Hill, loader at the colliery deposed to working in the pit on the day of the accident. He was in an outside stall, and deceased was assisting him to load a skip. A ‘bump’ was heard, and about a minute afterwards the coal fell on deceased and another man. He saw White taken up the shaft. A message was sent up the shaft that Henry White was killed. He was taken to the house and the field surgeon was sent for. Joseph and John Sheldon had examined the pit that morning with pricklers. He and Thompson saw them examine the roof of the outside stall with pricklers.

By Mr. Baker: The stall was not wide enough to admit of a pillar being left to support the roof. It was as near eight yards as he could guess.

Mr. Baker: Oh, as near as you can guess? Can’t you tell? Did you never measure it?

Witness: No.

Mr. Motteram objected to the Inspector’s mode of putting the questions, as rather tending to terrify the witness than to elicit evidence, although he did not think such was the Inspector’s intention.

The Coroner said he felt convinced Mr. Baker had no such intention.

Mr. Baker: Certainly not.

Mr. Motteram said the length of the stalls had better be derived from the plans and surveyors. Every witness that could throw light upon the subject would be produced.

Edward Yardley, mine surveyor, Burnt Tree, Tipton, said he surveyed the pits at Messrs. Nock's including the one where the accident happened. He produced the plan, which was an exact copy, made to scale, of that portion where the accident occurred. The plans were made after the accident.

By Mr. Baker: The extreme length was 18 yards by 11 yards and 1 foot in width. Sixteen yards was the greatest width, measuring from the bolt hole into a nook. The width of the stall where the men were working was 11 yards 1 foot.

By Mr. Motteram: In my judgement the pit was worked properly. It was what was called a 'stret' stall, with coal all around it. Mason was manager, and quite competent to take the management of any thick coal workings. Aston, the doggy, was a man of experience, and competent for his place. Measuring from bolt hole up to the nook it was 16 yards, but that was not in a 'stret' stall, considered the proper way of measuring it. Eleven yards and a foot was the width. Had not been down the pit for a month or six weeks previous to the accident, but had received reports. Witness's suggestion as to the mode of working had always been carried out. Up to the time of the occurrence nothing had suggested itself to his mind as rendering the pit more safe, nor had anything since the accident suggested itself. The aperture from which the coal had fallen presented a 'slip face.' Assuming that it was seven yards high, and the roof perfectly level, it would not have been possible to have discovered that the coal would have been likely to fall. The bump would be caused by the superincumbent weight and the settling of the strata, and that would have the effect of detaching the coal that fell.

By Mr. Baker: It was not practical to leave a pillar in the stall. Did not think eleven yards a foot too wide to be left without a pillar in a 'stret' stall.

By Mr. Motteram: The stall must be wide to get black coal. Could not have left a pillar in the stall and have got the coal; and if it had been left, it would not have prevented the accident. Anything less than a five yard pillar would have been crushed out, and would not have stood.

John Aston, head doggy, deposed to having, in conjunction with John and Joseph Sheldon, examined the pit in the usual manner, at six o'clock, on the morning of the accident. The roof appeared safe and as level as the floor. There was no room for a pillar to have been 'thirled' in the stall. He did not know the width. He saw no necessity why a 'sog or knob' should have been left as in the adjoining work, as in that place the work was as wide again. He said that after thirty years experience.

Mr. J. P. Baker, Government Inspector of Mines for the district, deposed to having examined the place. Sixty feet six inches (taking the plans produced) was the extreme length, and the average width of the place he made about twelve yards. The height of the stall where the coal fell was about seven yards. It fell from two converging points or structural divisions in the coal, very treacherous in their character, without any support having been left in the stall for the roof, and he believed there was no timber there at the time of the accident. He considered that a small pillar ought to have been left in the opening in order to leave the maximum amount of safety to the miners. He thought the place was too wide. The place did not appear to have been carried on conformable to the adjoining work. A pillar might have been left and the coal still gotten.

Mr. Motteram: Have you not told me that you have never had any practical experience in working pits?

Mr. Baker: No, sir; you must be dreaming. I have had thirty years experience. You must be thinking of some other inspector – an inspector of nuisances, or an inspector of factories. You have got hold of the wrong man.

Mr. Motteram: What collieries have you managed?

Mr. Baker: Various, but I don't think you have the power to ask such a question.

The Coroner ruled that the question could be put.

Mr. Motteram: I am examining you as to your experience, and you will see by-and-by whether I have hold of the wrong man. It is in print at the present moment, when I examined you at Wolverhampton, and Mr. Bolton then appeared for you, in the case of Thorneycroft, and again the same day with Mr. Dawes. I want to know the names of the proprietors of the collieries you have managed.

Mr. Baker: Oh, various collieries. I managed the Chillington Company's works from the year 1852 till 1855, both underground and on the surface. I had sole management for more than three years – somewhat about four years. I laid out the workings. They were coal and ironstone. Sometimes it was thick coal, similar to this in the Messrs. Nock's pit, and black and bright coal. I managed the Moseley Hole, and had something to do with the Capponfields. Mr. Barker was the owner, but he gave no practical directions. We had no ground bailiff besides myself. I was colliery manager both above and below. I had no doggies; the pits were worked by butties. The work was laid out under my directions. Haywood, Pickering, Baker, Bould, are the names of some of the butties of my experience. I began work in the mines very early – ten years of age. I had something to do with thick coal at Barker's, at Capponfield, and the management of a colliery in thick coal at Bradley. I have been not only a colliery manager, but well known as a mining surveyor for many years up to the time of my appointment. From the time I left school, more or less, I have been connected with pits, and had the conduct of pits under my father; and after that, from June 1837, I have been directly concerned with collieries up to the present time, both in thick and thin coal and ironstone.

The Coroner: I am sure I am much obliged to Mr. Baker for what he has told us. I knew he had had great, but did not think he had had so great experience.

Mr. Baker: A small pillar, 9ft or 10ft square, it is highly probable, would have prevented the accident, as it would have been situated directly under the spot where the men were killed.

Henry Johnson, mine agent and surveyor, deposed that he had had considerable experience (twenty-five years) in his profession. Had examined the pit, and was of opinion that it was properly worked under the circumstances. Agreed with Mr. Yardley that it would have been impracticable to have left the pillar and have got the coal in a stall of that width and having regard to the nature of the coal. The bottom coal was extremely soft, and the top extremely hard and black. A small pillar would not have stood. A pillar of nine foot square would not have stood. One of the five yards square would have been of no use, as the bottom coal would have been 'squose' out by the slightest weight. The proper measuring of the 'stret' stall was pretty much as Mr. Yardley had put it. He would go further. The stall was only eight yards at first. The extreme point at the time of the accident would have been about thirteen yards in the widest parts in the middle at the slips; at the benches only eight yards, and at the 'lambs and towcull' about six yards wide. It would be rather wider at the 'brazils.' The average width would be nine yards. Was of opinion that the coal had been jerked out by a bump caused by the subsidence of the strata, and no human soul could have prevented the accident. He instanced a colliery where an accident had recently occurred under similar circumstances where the roof was only 12 inches above the loaders' backs.

Mr. Baker (to witness): I will not be so impertinent as to ask you where you got your experience.

Mr. Motteram: I had a right to ask you.

Witness: A pillar could have been left and under-built but would have been of no use. It was a kind of work where cogs could not have been left.

The Coroner, in summing up, observed that the jury would have to consider whether the colliery where deceased had lost his life had been conducted properly, and in accordance with the mining of the district. They had the evidence of experienced men, which was always a pleasure to receive. It would be for the jury to say on whose evidence they most relied. If they were of opinion that there was not proper support to the roof, although they could not say there was culpable neglect, they could suggest as to the precautions to be taken in future. If they relied more on the evidence of Mr. Johnson and Mr. Yardley, they could say that Messrs. Nock were free from any blame whatever.

The jury deliberated for a short time and returned a verdict as follows, 'We find a verdict of Accidental Death, and we are of Mr. Baker's opinion that if knobs had been left in the stall the accident might have been prevented. We wish the proprietors to carry out the Inspector's suggestions. We consider the place to have been too wide without any support.'

Mr. Nock was called in and the verdict of the jury read over to him.

This ended the third and concluding chapter of this eventful inquest.

The opening of the inquiry was devoted mainly to the identity of the body of Henry White, the adjournment which followed to an inquisition on certain newspaper paragraphs with a verdict thereon, and Monday's proceedings, though not quite ignoring poor White's death, may be justly considered as much an inquest on the qualifications of her Majesty's Inspector for his appointment as to ascertain the death of the miner in question. The inquest on the body of the other victim of the catastrophe will be held in Dudley in due course."

"At the Police Court, on Wednesday, before Messrs. Barrs and Hingley.....

William Darby, landlord of the ROYAL OAK INN, Blackheath, was summoned, by Superintendent Mills, for permitting drunkenness in his house, on the 21st ult. Mr. Shakespeare appeared for the defence.

Police-constable Shorthouse proved visiting defendant's house, on the above date, at 9.15pm, and finding a man named Robinson there. He was drunk. Witness again visited the place at 10.15 and 10.45, and the man was still there. He was drunk on both occasions. Witness called the landlord's attention to the man, and defendant said the man had only been in the house a few minutes. Mr. Shakespeare said he should prove that the man Robinson had only been in the house a few minutes.

Mr. Hingley: I consider the landlord ought to have been cautioned.

Mr. Shakespeare: Certainly.

Mr. Barrs: Here is a man found drunk in the house at 9.15, at 10.15, and again at 10.45.

Superintendent Mills said it was the landlord's duty to see that no drunken man was in the house.

Mr. Hingley: Yes, and it is the duty of the police, if they find anyone drunk in the house to call the attention of the landlord to it.

Mr. Barrs said it would have been different if the attention of the landlord had been called to the man before.

Case dismissed."

"Ezra Evans, potter, Beet Street, Blackheath, was charged with stealing a glass decanter and some sherry wine, on the 11th inst, belonging to William Darby, ROYAL OAK INN, Blackheath.

Prosecutor's wife discovered prisoner leaning over the counter holding a glass under a running liquor tap that had been turned on by him. After he went away a decanter containing some sherry wine was missed. The value of the decanter and wine was 4s.

Police-sergeant Cooper said he went to the prisoner's house and found him in bed; and on searching the room he found the decanter produced. He charged the prisoner with stealing the decanter and wine, but he was so stupefied that he could not understand the nature of the charge. Witness again charged prisoner when sober, and he then said he had forgotten all about it.

The wife of prosecutor said she did not wish to press the case.

Prisoner was sent to gaol for seven days, with hard labour."

“William Darby, landlord of the ROYAL OAK INN, Blackheath, was charged with permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises, on the 20th inst. Mr. Shakespeare (Oldbury) defended.

The evidence was that between ten and eleven o’clock on the night named in the charge Police-sergeant Cooper and Police-constable Styles went to defendant’s house and found there a man named Noah Slade, drunk.

It was admitted in the defence that the man was drunk, but it was contended that he had not been on the premises more than five minutes when the police came in, and that the landlord had no knowledge that the man was there.

The Bench thought it a proper case to be brought before the Court, but under the circumstances decided to dismiss it. Slade was fined 1s and costs for being drunk on the premises.”

The colliery proprietors were represented by Mr. Collis, the certificated manager; Mr. Pickering, the assistant inspector of coal mines, watched the proceedings on behalf of the Home Secretary.

The deceased was employed on the 28th ult, to get the ‘top coal,’ and whilst at work on a scaffold erected 8 feet from the ground, the roofing suddenly came down and fell upon the deceased, killing him instantaneously, his head being reduced to a pulp.

In reply to the coroner, a witness stated that four or five tons of coal fell on to the scaffold.

Mr. Pickering said he had examined the place, and was of opinion that every precaution for the safety of the men had been taken. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

Birmingham Daily Post 27/12/1887

“Yesterday afternoon, Mr. F. W. Topham, deputy coroner for Staffordshire, opened an inquest at the ROYAL OAK INN, Blackheath, respecting the death of Sarah Debney (22), a single woman, formerly residing at Oldbury, who died in the 21st inst, at the residence of her sister at Blackheath, under singular circumstances.

John Debney, of Hales Owen Street, Oldbury, general dealer, said he was the father of the deceased, who lived with him and had no occupation. She died on the 21st inst. His opinion was that death resulted from miscarriage or taking cold. His wife told witness that deceased was pregnant. About a month last Wednesday he went away from home, leaving his wife and the deceased in the house. When he returned, about eight o’clock at night, his wife told him the deceased had gone to see Buffalo Bill. He understood that she went with Herbert Hadley, who was keeping company with her. She did not return home that night, and the next day they sent down to the young man’s home, and he came up and said she was all right, as she was at his aunt’s in Birmingham. He said he was taken ill in a crowd, and he procured a cab and took deceased to his aunt’s house. Deceased came home on the following Saturday night. She seemed cheerful and well, and waited upon customers in the shop. On the Tuesday following deceased complained of being ill. She, however, denied that she was enceinte. The same day Dr. Lyden was sent for, and attended her until the following Saturday. On Monday she went to her sister's at Blackheath, and remained there until she died. On the following Friday deceased became worse, and Dr. Lyden was again sent for, and he continued to attend her until her death. Deceased never said anything as to what took place in Birmingham. There being a suspicion that about the 30th ult deceased was subjected to an illegal operation, the enquiry was adjourned until January 4, in order that Dr. Beasley might make a post mortem examination of the body."

[At the adjourned inquest it was decided that Sarah Debney had an abortion, a miscarriage, or given birth, and that blood poisoning, arising from inflammation of the womb, was the cause of death.]

"The death of the young woman, Sarah Debney, at Blackheath, under extraordinary circumstances, points its own moral. It is to be hoped the case is not a fair index to Black Country morals. The Court severely censured the female witnesses for the manner in which they gave their evidence. It is a recognised maxim of our law courts that a woman can tell a lie much better than a man. It is the same across the Atlantic. Many of the American Insurance offices decline to issue policies to women on the ground that a female 'insuree' either cannot, or will not, tell the truth about her age, her state of health, mode of life, and other particulars of actuarial importance."

"Midland Counties Trades Federation. The Truck System at Black Heath.

Last night a well-attended meeting of operatives employed in various trades in the Rowley and Black heath district in connection with the Midland Counties Trades Federation was held at the ROYAL OAK INN, Black Heath, Mr. B. Hadley (a member of the Rowley School Board) presiding.

The Chairman said that the truck system had sustained a tremendous blow at the hands of the working classes recently, but still it existed in an underhand form; and in that district it was carried on to a certain extent. By that system the men did not receive the money they ought to get, and they were being robbed. Those who carried on the traffic were obliged to sell their goods in the market, and they were able to sell them cheaper than other traders, but if the men would combine the truck system would soon be entirely abolished.

Mr. Juggins (secretary to the Midland Counties Trades Federation) pointed out that if the men in that locality were thoroughly combined the truck system would soon be suppressed. Masters were in favour of their men being united in trade societies. In the spike nail trade the operatives had gained a large increase of wages through the influence of the Federation. During the past year they had distributed £600 in strike pay, of which the chainmakers had received £300.

A resolution was passed in favour of the Federation, and it was decided to establish a local branch."

“Sylvia Cole (44), married, of Beet Street, Blackheath, was charged on remand with stealing £1 0s 6d, the moneys of Henry Bennett Darby, the landlord of the ROYAL OAK INN, Blackheath, on the 25th ult.

Prosecutor deposed to defendant being in the bar of his house with other persons on the day named, about 3.30 in the afternoon. He went into the cellar, and when he came back found the defendant behind the bar. Upon asking her why she was there, defendant said she was getting some matches. He then searched the drawer where the money was kept, and found the amount named missing. He took her into another room and taxed her with the theft, which she denied. When her hands were opened, however, it was found that there was 18s in one, and 2s 6d in the other. Defendant tried to put the money in her stocking, and complainant sent for PS Salt.

Eliza Cole deposed to seeing the prisoner go to the drawer, ostensibly for matches.

Prisoner, when arrested by PS Salt, said she was innocent.

She was sentenced to 21 days hard labour.”

“Samuel Faulkner, Hackett Street, Blackheath, was charged with stealing a felt hat value 2s the property of William Whitehouse, Long Lane, Blackheath, on the 31st ult.

Prosecutor alleged that he was sitting in the ROYAL OAK INN, Blackheath, on the date named, when prisoner came in, pulled the hat off his head, and walked away with it leaving his own in its place.

Police-constable Poultney arrested prisoner the same night.

Prisoner said he took the hat, but he was going to return it.

Prisoner was discharged, the Bench thinking he had done it as a joke. They hoped that would be a lesson to him.”

“On Monday morning a meeting of the nailmakers out on strike was held at the ROYAL OAK INN, Blackheath, Mr. H. Lea presiding.

The Chairman remarked that he was expected to give the report of the result of the visit of the deputation to the masters. They went to the masters, but the course they took was to go to the large employers first. They found that their position was a very difficult one, as the masters were not prepared to give the advance whether it was for a test or not; but he thought they were fast ruining the trade. (Hear, hear.) He considered that if the large employers would be willing to give the increase the others would follow their lead. They received a report to the effect that if they visited the masters most of the employers would be willing to give the advance. He was prepared to say that that report was correct, but they had to beat the large masters, who were so stubborn. One of the masters said he thought they were having a very fair wage. He averaged the wage some time ago, and found it to be about 14s. Since then he had found out that he had averaged it a little bit too high. After deducting for coal, tools, &c, the average of the wages was 12s. That feeling man said 12s was a very fair wage. (A voice: ‘And let him live in it.’) He thought that he would soon require better wages if he did so. The masters were keeping them out for a paltry 12½ per cent. One master said the times were different from fifty years ago, but he (Mr. Lea) then asked him if he wished to go back to that period. The master then said if he had not got a better argument he could not give the increase. He then reminded him if 12s was a living wage, and he wished to know what he could better forward than a better wage for nailmakers. He might tell them some tales about the events which he had been told, but they were appalling to them. The masters had quenched the life and blood out of the nailmakers for many years. The question was whether they were going back to work. (A voice: ‘We will stick out.’) He advised them not to let the masters get the life and blood out of them any longer.

A delegate, who said he had worked in the nail trade for nearly seventy years, remarked that years ago he could get 2s 3d for nails for which they were now getting 5d. The masters always said they were losing but he thought their gains were large and their losses small. He said they called it a Christian country, but he always said there was a lot of scamps in it. His advice was for them to remain firm whilst they were out. If there was any man who ought to be pitied it was the poor old nailer.

A resolution deciding to continue the strike was unanimously passed.”

“Henry Bennett Darby, landlord of the ROYAL OAK INN, Market Place, Blackheath, was charged with assaulting Joseph Cox, a collier, Blackheath, on the 4th inst.

Cox told the Bench that while he was in defendant's house the defendant asked him to leave. As witness was going along the passage, the defendant struck him on the side of the head, and knocked him into the street.

The defendant's version was that the complainant was an objectionable customer, as he was very quarrelsome, and he refused to supply him whether he was drunk or sober. On the day in question he ordered Cox to leave three times, and as he persisted in remaining on the premises, he ejected him.

The case was dismissed.”

“Mr. H. A. Pearson (coroner) held an inquest on Saturday at the ROYAL OAK INN, Blackheath on the body of Phineas Rollason (48), boot maker, who expired suddenly on the 24th ult. According to the evidence of the deceased's father and mother he had suffered from a cold and cough, and which, it was believed, was due to the deceased having had a rather heavy beard shaved off.

On August 24th he retired to bed about 6pm, and four hours later he was taken ill, and during a fit of coughing he ruptured a blood vessel, death ensuing before Dr. Beasley, who was summoned, could arrive. The jury returned a verdict of Death from Natural Causes.”

“William Henry Skipton, a tube tester, of Hurst Green, Cakemore, was charged with stealing a duck, of the value of 2s, belonging to Henry Bennett Darby, landlord of the ROYAL OAK INN, Market Place, Blackheath, on the 26th ult.

It appeared from the evidence that on the date in question the duck was locked up securely at prosecutor’s premises, but subsequently it was missed on the night of the 27th ult. Police-constable Munslow was in company with Police-constables James and Emms, of the Halesowen police, in Long Lane, Halesowen, when defendant passed him by. Being suspicious, he followed the defendant and found he was carrying a duck. Munslow asked defendant where he had got the duck from, and he replied that he had pinched it, but could not say where from. Defendant was taken to Halesowen Police Station, but subsequently Police-sergeant Bentley received him into custody.

In reply to the charge defendant said he did not know what made him do it.

Defendant now pleaded that he had been greatly troubled with his wife of late, and he must have been out of his mind at the time. Fined 40s including costs.”

“At Dudley County Court on Tuesday, before his Honour Judge H. P. Smith, Harry Darby, ROYAL OAK, Blackheath, sued the Dudley and Stourbridge Electric Tramway Company for £31 0s 6d for damages to a brake, horses, and driver. Mr. Parkhouse appeared for the plaintiff, Mr. W. Waldron for the defence, and the case was tried by a jury.

It appeared that on 9th September one of plaintiff’s brakes was used to take a party to Stourport. Returning through Netherton, the vehicle collided with one of the company’s tramcars, one of the horses being killed. It was alleged on the one hand that the motor-man was reckless, and on the other that the plaintiff’s driver was drunk.

The jury decided that there had been negligence on the part of the defendants’ servant, but for which the accident might have been avoided. They gave plaintiff a verdict for £21.

His Honour said the verdict was contrary to the weight of evidence.

Mr. Waldron applied for a new trial, and the Judge granted the application.”

“Private Major Darby, a son of Mr. and Mrs. H. B. B. Darby, of the ROYAL OAK INN, Market Place, Black Heath, together with two comrades, has escaped from the clutches of the Germans. Darby, who is 20 years of age, and belonged to the Warwickshire Regiment, was taken prisoner by the enemy on September 9 last during the Somme offensive, as was removed to an internment camp at Lagendreer. Here he was employed on railway work, and it was whilst following this occupation that the idea to escape from their confinement was conceived by Darby and two comrades, a member of the King’s Scottish Borderers, residing at Newcastle, and a soldier belonging to the Essex Regiment, who lived at Colchester, both of whom were taken prisoners by the enemy during the retreat from Mons. Their opportunity came to them on February 15. When they reached the frontier the men were again faced with more dangers. They were taken to the British Consul, who, though called upon in the middle of a night, provided the men with refreshments, and despatched them to England. Food was very much required, for during four days the men had only partaken of one meal, which they saved from the parcels sent to prisoners from England. Darby states that whilst in Germany he was never supplied with any meat. For breakfast prisoners were given a cup of coffee and a piece of bread; for dinner they lived on boiled beans and cabbage, and were given the broth to drink. But for the parcels sent by friends and different societies in England, British prisoners would have fared very badly. Whilst the German people were not in a state of acute starvation, the privations they suffered were severe. The price of meat was very high, and a few days before he escaped he noticed whilst being marched through a town that it was marked 6s 8d a lb.

To mark their appreciation of his ingenuity and bravery on the occasion of his escape, the friends of Darby have presented him with a gold watch, which bears the following inscription: ‘Presented to Private Major Darby, Royal Warwickshire Regiment, to commemorate his escape from Germany on February 15, 1917.’”

“At Dudley County Court yesterday Frederick Darby, son of the licensee of the ROYAL OAK, Blackheath, was brought up on a judgement summons, the plaintiff being Alice Grigg, Titford Lodge, Langley, and the amount £351.

Plaintiff’s solicitor stated that the debt represented damages granted at the Birmingham Assizes a year ago to his client in respect of personal injuries sustained in a motor-cycle accident. Defendant had stated that he received no wages from his father, who maintained him and gave him 10s per week for himself. He (the solicitor) contended it was about time defendant earned his own living, but defendant did not want to do this because he would have to pay this young lady.

Defendant said he could not get a job because of the state of trade.

His Honour made a new order for £1, adding that if he did not pay he should consider an application to commit defendant.”

Henry Bennett Darby was fined £6, on 6th April 1927, for permitting gaming on his premises.

Birmingham Daily Gazette 15/6/1927

“An appeal by Henry Bennett Darby, licensee and proprietor of the ROYAL OAK INN, Blackheath, against a conviction and fine of £6 by the Old Hill justices for suffering gaming on his licensed premises, was dismissed with costs at the Staffordshire Quarter Sessions yesterday.

The case for the respondents was that two police officers were keeping observation on the house about 11.30pm on 22 March. The officers heard the rattle of coins, and someone in the sitting-room say, 'The bank is off this time.' The officers entered, and then saw Darby come from the sitting-room with a tray containing empty glasses. Darby said, 'It is all right, sergeant. There is nothing wrong.'

After putting down the tray Darby went back to the door of the sitting-room and stretched his arms across to prevent the police sergeant entering. The sergeant found eight men gathered round a table. There were coins on the table, and in the centre of it a crown and anchor sheet or board.

Appellant's case was that eight men met at the house to discuss arrangements for an outing to Droitwich. Some chaffing took place between them, in the course of which Charles Pearson, an ex-soldier, said to a disabled soldier (Mucklow) that he would have to go to China, and handed him the crown and anchor sheet to take with him. Mucklow threw it on the table. The money was provided by Leonard Bird, because the landlord had complained of being short of change.

Darby stated that he had been proprietor of the ROYAL OAK for 38 years. He had no knowledge of any gaming taking place, or of any drinks being served in the sitting-room. He was attending to some canaries when the police arrived. The first time he saw the crown and anchor sheet was at the Old Hill Police Court."

Stourbridge Observer 19/8/1871

“Early on Monday morning Cradley Heath was all astir and hundreds of persons could be seen wending their way towards the Five Ways to witness the procession of Foresters, which was announced to take place that day. The weather being fine thousands of persons were present to witness the procession through the various streets. Ten o'clock was the appointed time for starting, but it was nearly half-past eleven before they got away, owing to their having to wait for some of the Courts from a distance.

The various Courts assembled at the Five Ways, and then formed themselves into order of procession. The following Courts were represented: No.3068, Hope and Anchor, QUEENS HEAD, Corngreaves Street, Cradley Heath; No.3595, Cable and Anchor, BIRD IN HAND, Cradley Heath; 4127, Good Samaritan, BEEHIVE, Corngreaves Road, Cradley Heath; 4196, Foresters’ Home, VINE AND RAILWAY HOTEL, Cradley Heath; 4233, Loyal Shenstone; 4340, Loyal Marlborough, COOKSEY’S HOTEL, Old Hill; 4398, Moss Rose, ROYAL OAK INN, New Town; 4546, Robin Hood’s Merry Rangers, CROWN INN, Five Ways; 4970, Lye Reformed, WINDMILL INN, Lye. Although the district of Cradley Heath and Halesowen comprises 36 Courts, only nine took part in getting up the Fete.

The procession started from the Five Ways, headed by the Cradley Heath Brass Band. The Pensnett Victoria Brass and Reed Band and the Halesowen Drum and Fife Band also took part in the procession. Each band played lively quick steps passing through Lomey Town, Five Ways, Four Ways, Reddal Hill, Old Hill, and Haden Hill, en route for Halesowen, passing through the principal streets and then to the Leasowes. The procession was three-quarters of a mile in length, and was accompanied with three magnificent banners bearing suitable mottoes of the Order, and a large number of flags, the members wearing the various badges of the Order, and accompanied by Robin Hood, Little John, Will Scarlet, Friar Tuck, Shepherds, &c, &c.

On arriving at the beautiful and classic grounds, famed as having been the seat of the poet Shenstone, the procession passed round the house of B. Gibbons, Esq, who had kindly placed the whole of the grounds at the disposal of the Committee.....

There was a number of shooting galleries, Aunt Sallys, and other things to amuse all classes. During the day a number of balloon ascents took place.....

It is estimated that between six and seven thousand persons were present, upwards of £100 being taken at the gates, and it is expected there will be a good surplus in aid of the funds of the Order and General Hospital.

We must not close without a word of praise to the Committee, who were indefatigable in carrying out the arrangements according to the programme. The refreshments were provided by Mrs. S. Cartwright of Cradley Heath, and the tea and confectionery by Mr. J. Corns of Wolverhampton.”

“Wanted, a good General Servant.
Apply, Mrs. Woodall, ROYAL OAK, Newtown, Cradley Heath, near Brierley Hill.”

“At the Old Hill Police Court, yesterday, William Woodall, chain manufacturer, of Cradley Heath, was charged with having in his possession property belonging to the trustees of the Moss Rose Friendly Society.
Mr. Waldron (Brierley Hill), who prosecuted, said the defendant until recently had been the landlord of the ROYAL OAK INN, Cradley Heath, and a friendly society called the Moss Rose had been held at his house. He was appointed treasurer, and it was his duty to keep a book showing the financial position of the court. A disagreement afterwards arose, and he was dismissed from his office of treasurer, the society being removed from his house. Repeated applications were made for the treasurer’s book, but he refused to give it up, and the trustees therefore adopted that course to recover it.
Thomas Sidaway, one of the trustees of the Moss Rose Friendly Society, corroborated the above statement, and said Woodall was dismissed from the office of treasurer to the society about eight months ago.
Defendant was discharged upon giving up the book referred to and paying the costs of the case.”

County Advertiser 30/10/1886

“At the Dudley Bankruptcy Court, on Tuesday, William Woodall, chainmaker and publican, Old Hill, was examined. His liabilities were £674, and his assets nil. He said he paid his creditors last November with the proceeds of a sale of his furniture, and he had sustained heavy losses in consequence of his being bound for his father, who was treasurer to a friendly society. The examination was adjourned.”

County Advertiser 8/12/1888

“Henry Hingley, chainmaker, Bowling Green, near Dudley, was charged with stealing 2s 6d belonging to Benjamin Sidaway, on the 19th ult. Mr. Tanfield defended.
Complainant said that on the night of the date named he was drinking in the ROYAL OAK, New Town. He ordered a pint of ale, and had the half-crown in his hand, when the defendant snatched it from him. Two witnesses for the complainant were called, and stated that complainant put the half-crown down on the table, and that defendant picked it up.
Mr. Tanfield contended the complainant put down the half-crown to bet with, but that there was no evidence of a theft.
Defendant said he was willing to give up the half-crown, and the Bench, considering there was a doubt, dismissed the case.”

“The licensing justices, besides renewing several licenses, heard three cases in which the police recommended that the house should be referred to the Compensation Committee for closure. In two cases – those of the VINE INN, Rowley, and the BRITANNIA INN, Springfield – they referred to the committee, and in that of the ROYAL OAK INN, Banner Street, Cradley Heath, Mr. J. T. Higgs appeared on behalf of the licensee (Mr. Joseph Bennett) and opposed the closure of the house.

Inspector Davison said the application was being made by the police on the grounds of redundancy. He considered that there were enough houses of a better class to serve that locality.

“A month or two ago Mr. Timothy Parkes, of Reddal Hill, was kind enough to present to the congregation worshipping at the Baptist Chapel, Four Ways, a beautiful harmonium, which has since been efficiently played by his son, Mr. Alfred Parkes. At its introduction, a suitable choir was formed, who have acquitted themselves so well that it was deemed advisable to acknowledge their services. Accordingly they were as is the general custom at the present time, entertained to supper on Monday evening at the ROYAL OAK, High Street, Cradley Heath. A capital spread was prepared, to which ample justice was done, and the evening was spent in harmless jollification as befitted a chapel choir. Toasts of course went round, and the originators of the supper, as well as the host and hostess, came in for their due share.”

“Yesterday, at the Brierley Hill Police Court, before Messrs. W. Hancocks, J. C. A. Scott, and H. Talbot, a glede dealer, named Moses Dunn, was charged with having, on the 27th of November, paid Mary Hill and Louisa Round, two persons employed by him, the sum of 14s wages in other than the current coin of the realm. Mr. Addison appeared for the prosecution, and Mr. Perry defended.

On Friday last the complainants Hill and Round were charged with having stolen a quantity of gledes belonging to the defendant Dunn, but there being a doubt in the minds of the magistrates, the case was dismissed, and on Saturday last complainants laid these informations under the Truck Act. The evidence of the complainants and a large number of witnesses was to the effect that they went, on the evening of the 27th of November, to a shop and public house kept by Dunn, and that there they received a quantity of goods consisting of rabbits, fowl, tea, soap, cheese, &c; in payment of their week’s wages, being 14s.

For the defence, Mr. Perry asked the magistrates to take into account the fact that the complainants had been charged by Dunn with stealing from him, which fact, he contended, threw suspicion upon their evidence. His case was that they had been, like the other persons employed by defendant, invariably paid in money, that of course, if they chose to buy articles out of the shop they were welcome; but there was no compulsion placed upon them to do so. He then called a number of witnesses, who all deposed that the complainants were paid in coin, but their statements in other respects showed great discrepancies, and were entirely incompatible with each other.

Mrs. Summers, sister of the defendant, swore that she kept the shop on her own account, and that she bought the goods for it with her own money, but immediately after admitted that she was receiving out-door relief from the Board of Guardians.

Before the magistrates retired to consider their decision, Mr. Perry raised a point of law for their consideration. He pointed out that the trade of a glede seller was not enumerated among those to which the Truck Act applied, nor was it a trade which could be included within the definitive clause of the Act, which said, ‘That for the purposes of the Act, all labourers in any manner engaged in any way about the several trades or occupations enumerated will come under its operation.’

Mr. Addison’s reply was to the effect that there had been cases decided in which it was held that the true test of the application of the Act was whether the contract was for labour or the results of labour. He submitted that in this case it was for the results of labour.

The Clerk (Mr. King) did not think that the point exactly applied, and that there were stronger cases decided than those mentioned by Mr. Addison, in which it had been held that a person employed as a boat unloader for an iron-work came under the operation of the Act. Mr. Perry remarked that the trade of glede seller was separate and distinct.

The Bench then retired to consider their decision, and upon their return they said they had given the cases very careful consideration, and they had decided to convict in both cases. Defendant must pay a fine of £10 and costs in each case, half the fine to go to the informer. In default of distress, two months’ imprisonment.

Several other cases were withdrawn on payment of costs.”

County Advertiser 19/2/1870

“The profits of the truck system are so very large that those who carry it on are not to be frightened at small things. It is said that

‘all men think all men are mortal but themselves,’ and so truck dealers have an impression that all other truck dealers may be caught but themselves. Some time ago we reported a case at Halesowen, in which one of this fraternity was sharply fined; but the warning then given seems either to have been speedily forgotten or the fame of it had not extended very far. At any rate, it did not prevent Mr. Moses Dunn, of Lomey Town, telling people who worked for him that unless they would take their wages in goods from his shop they should not have any work. And this little game he has carried on for some time, till at last he has been caught, and warned in a manner we daresay will not very quickly fade from his remembrance. It is verily a dangerous thing for a man who carries on this system to get to loggerheads with any of his servants. So, no doubt, Moses Dunn will now be ready to admit. The evidence for the prosecution was clear and conclusive, and though open to a certain suspicion on the ground of motive, was so coherent in every point that it left no doubt of the truth of the charge.

The evidence given for the defence was simply disgraceful, and abundantly showed the excellence of the plan of sending witnesses out of Court. If some other workpeople had had the courage to come forward and give information against masters carrying on this system of trading, a few penalties of £10 and costs would have a great effect in abating the nuisance.”

“William Hill was charged with being drunk and refusing to leave a public house when requested to do so, on the 3rd instant. Mr. Addison defended.

Mary Attenborough, wife of Edward Attenborough, said she was sister of Moses Dunn, the landlord of the public house. On the above date she was at his house, helping to clean. Defendant went in, and called for a pint of cider. He was drunk. She refused to give him any, and he cursed and swore at her, and she requested him to leave and told him she should summons him if he did not. He afterwards went out.

Cross-examined: His brother gave evidence against my brother in a truck case. Do not speak to his family. It was ten minutes to twelve when he came in.

A witness named Dunn said when defendant came into the house he was not drunk. He refused to go out when requested to do so. Ordered to pay the costs.”

“John Hampton was charged with having, on the 18th ult, been disorderly and refused to quit the ROYAL OAK, Cradley Heath, kept by Moses Dunn. He was further charged with an assault upon the landlord. Complainant stated that on the above date the defendant came into his house, and, after drinking the ale which had been supplied to him, commenced to drink that belonging to other persons present. Complainant remonstrated with the defendant, whereupon he seized complainant by the throat and attempted to strangle him.

There was a further charge of his having been drunk and riotous on the 27th ult, and resisted Police-constable Collier whilst in the execution of his duty.

Defendant had been several times previously convicted, and he was fined 10s and costs, or two months’ hard labour; and 20s and costs in the second case, or two months’ hard labour, the periods to be consecutive.”

County Advertiser 2/2/1878

“Mathew Bower, landlord of the ROYAL OAK INN, Lomey Town, preferred charges against John Baker, collier, the Lye; John Raybould, collier, Cradley Heath; and Abel Homer, chainmaker, Cradley Heath, of being disorderly and refusing to quit his house on the night of Saturday, the 19th inst.

Mr. W. S. Hayes prosecuted, and told the magistrates that Mr. Bower had been very much annoyed by persons systematically coming to his premises and making a disturbance, and the trustee under whom Mr. Bower held the house had been put to considerable expense in journeys to quell these disturbances. The complainant spoke in support of the charge, and said he did not wish to press the cases except against Raybould, whom he had forgiven several times. The Bench recommended him to withdraw the charges against all the defendants on their paying costs, and promising not to repeat the offence in the future. The case ended on this being done.”

“Mr. Stokes appeared to make an application under the 1st and 2nd Vic. for an order of ejectment against Moses Dunn. Dunn was formerly the occupier of a public house now tenanted by a Mr. Bowers, and Bowers having sub-let to him a cottage near the house he refused to pay the rent or leave. The Bench made an order for ejectment within three weeks.”

“The Bankruptcy Act, 1869. In the County Court of Worcestershire, holden at Dudley.

In the Matter of a Bankruptcy Petition against Matthew Bowers, of the ROYAL OAK INN, Cradley Heath, in the parish of Rowley Regis, in the county of Stafford, Beer-house Keeper and Horse Dealer.

Upon the hearing of this Petition this day, and upon proof satisfactory to the Court of the debt of the Petitioner, Thomas Plant, and of the act or acts of the Bankruptcy alleged to have been committed by the said Matthew Bowers having been given, it is ordered that the said Matthew Bowers be, and he is hereby, adjudged bankrupt. Given under the Seal of the Court this 26th day of April, 1878.

By the Court, Thos. Walker, Registrar.

The First General Meeting of the creditors of the said Matthew Bowers is hereby summoned to be held at this Court, on the 17th day of May, 1878, at twelve o'clock at noon, and that the Court has ordered the bankrupt to attend thereat for examination, and to produce thereat a statement of his affairs, as required by the statute.

Until the appointment of a Trustee, all persons having in their possession any of the effects of the bankrupt must deliver them, and all debts due to the bankrupt must be paid, to the Registrar. Creditors must forward their Proofs of Debts to the Registrar.”

County Advertiser 20/7/1878

“Moses Dunn, greengrocer, Cradley Heath, appeared in answer to a summons, charging him with keeping a dog without holding a license to do so from the excise authorities. Mr. Addison defended.

An Inland Revenue Officer visited defendant's residence on the 13th May last, and found a dog there, for which he had no license. When asked about the license by the officer, defendant said, 'I didn't know that I had no license, but I will have one.' After hearing the evidence offered the Bench imposed the mitigated fine of 25s.”

“The following transfers were allowed by the Bench.....

ROYAL OAK, Cradley Heath, from the trustee of Mr. Bowers to John Tromans.”

County Advertiser 14/9/1878

“Moses Dunn, the occupier of a cottage at Lomey Town, was summoned by the owner, John Tromans, who asked for an order of the bench to eject him from the premises. Mr. Hayes appeared for Tromans, defendant being represented by Mr. Addison. Mr. Hayes stated that some time ago a public house and four small cottages adjoining, at Lowey Town, were let to Dunn. He filed his petition and was adjudicated bankrupt, and the property was given up to a trustee, after which it was occupied by a man named Bowers, who also became bankrupt. The property was then returned to Mr. Tromans as the owner; he served Dunn with a notice to quit one of the cottages of which he still retained possession, but he refused to obey it, and the present case was the result. Mr. Addison asked for proof that Tromans was the owner, and denied that Bowers became a bankrupt. The magistrates did not think the latter affair affected the case, and Tromans affirmed that he had owned the property for some years. Mr. Addison then said he would bring an action against him if he compelled his client to give up the cottage. Mr. Hayes said his client would risk that. The magistrates then made the order for ejection.”

“Joseph Harris, landlord of the ROYAL OAK INN, Lomey Town, Cradley Heath, was charged with permitting drunkenness, and also with supplying ale to drunken persons, on the 27th ult.

Police-constable Bennett said he visited defendant’s house on the date in question, at about 6.50pm. He saw in the tap room two men named Daniel Round and Eli Evans. They were both intoxicated and quarrelling; Evans was supporting himself by the table, and Round was staggering across the room, while the landlady, Mrs. Harris, was endeavouring to restore order, and telling the men to sit down and be quiet. On seeing the officer, she told the men they would have no more beer on the premises that night. He called the attention of Mrs. Harris and also of the defendant, whom he met as he was going out, to the fact that the men were drunk; and the latter replied, ‘Oh, it’s all right; say nothing about it; I will order them home at once.’ About an hour afterwards, when witness was in company with Police-sergeant Newman in High Street, Cradley Heath, defendant came up and asked him to say nothing about it. He said Round had only had two pints, but he was a regular blackguard when he had had a pint of beer; and if he (witness) would overlook it, Round should not come in his house again for three months.

By Mr. Waldron: Mr. Harris was a respectable man, and he had heard nothing against the house previously.

Mr. Waldron, who defended, said he proposed to call evidence to prove that the men were not drunk. Acting upon the suggestion of the Bench, however, he decided to drop that line of defence, and went on to urge that the officer might have been mistaken as to the condition of the men. The evidence given by the officer, too, proved that his client endeavoured to conduct his house in a proper and orderly manner, and he urged that, if the offence were proved, it was not a serious case.

The Bench considered the case proved, but thought that it was not one in which a very heavy fine should be inflicted, and fined defendant 40s and costs, in all £2 9s.

Daniel Round, of Lomey Town, and Eli Evans, of Dudley Wood, were each fined 15s and costs for being drunk on the premises.”

“Adjourned Licensing Session.....

Joseph Harris, of the ROYAL OAK, Lomey Town, Cradley Heath, applied through Mr. G. Williams for the extension of his six days’ license to a seven days’ license.

Mr. Williams said Mr. Harris was the owner and licensee of the ROYAL OAK INN. Some time ago the question of extending the six days’ license to seven days’ came before the Bench, and the principle was laid down that if application were made for such an extension it should be granted so that the licensees should all be on the same footing. Several applications had been made and granted under the principle. He believed the house he now applied for was the last in the whole of the parish that had a six days’ license, and now Mr. Harris asked for the extension, and to be put on the same footing as the other licensed victuallers in the district.

Mr. Harris said he had been in the house ten years. In reply to Superintendent Spendlove, he admitted he was giving up possession in a months’ time.

The application was granted.”

“Wanted, General Servant; age 18 or 20.

Mrs. Bridgewater, ROYAL OAK, Lomey Town, Cradley Heath.”

County Advertiser 21/7/1906

“On Wednesday afternoon Mr. G. C. Lewis (coroner) held an inquest at the ROYAL OAK INN, Lomey Town, Cradley Heath, respecting the death of Ann Maria Whorton (22), assistant school teacher, formerly residing at Compton Road, Cradley Heath, who died on the 17th inst, under singular circumstances. Mr. W. Waldron appeared for the Dudley and Stourbridge Tramway Company, and Mr. G. Williams represented the relatives of the deceased.

Joshua John Whorton, warehouseman, identified the body as that of his daughter, who was an assistant teacher at the Corngreaves School. Deceased had not been in her usual health for some time, having suffered from sciatica. She also suffered from a lung trouble, but the doctor informed him that this was healed up. Deceased told witness that she was alighting from the tram, when her dress got caught. The tram started, and she was dragged along the ground.

In reply to Mr. Williams, witness said his daughter was well enough to go to her school duties.

Replying to the Foreman, witness said deceased did not say that she called upon the conductor to stop the car.

In answer to Mr. Waldron he said his daughter had not been in a consumptive sanitorium.

Mr. John Green, JP, of Pedmore, stated that on the morning of the 11th inst, he was a passenger upon the tramcar which was proceeding from Cradley Heath to Dudley, and pulled up at the Corngreaves Schools. Deceased, who was also a passenger, got up to leave the car, and the next witness heard was a scream. He then noticed deceased upon the ground. When he heard the scream there was a signal for the car to proceed and also to stop. The two signals and the scream followed each other so closely that he could not tell which was first. Witness could not see whether the deceased was dragged along the ground. The tramcar was stopped instantly. He could not say whether there was time for deceased to get off the car before it was re-started, as he was reading a paper at the time. Deceased was picked up by another woman, with whom she went away. No complaint was made that the car was started too soon. Witness looked round for the cause, and he could only suppose that the dress of deceased caught a pedal on the car which the driver used to drop the sand on the line.

Replying to Mr. Waldron, he said he did not think any blame attached to the conductor.

Answering Mr. Williams, witness said it was quite possible the dress of deceased caught in the pedal. He had seen deceased several mornings, and she was not in very good health. She might have been very much frightened by the accident.

In reply to the Foreman, witness said the conductor was in his proper position at the back of the car.

James Nicklin, the conductor of the car upon which deceased was travelling, stated that on the morning in question the car stopped opposite Corngreaves Schools, and deceased got up to alight. When he signalled for the car to go on deceased was standing on the ground. He did not notice when he gave the signal for the car to proceed that her dress had caught anywhere on the car. Witness was inside the car when he gave the signal to re-start. He came out at once, and noticed the dress of deceased had caught the sand pedal. The car started, and deceased was pulled over and dragged about a yard. Witness immediately stopped the car. To his knowledge the sand pedal had not been interfered with that morning, and he had never noticed anything wrong before. It was the duty of the motorman to look after the sand pedals.

In reply to Mr. Waldron, witness said the car was stopped within a yard or so, and he went to the assistance of the deceased. He asked her if she was injured, and she replied, ‘No.’

In reply to Mr. Williams, witness said deceased did not appear agitated or injured. The pedal was up about an inch and a half.

Robert Chilton, motorman, of Halesowen Road, Netherton, said he examined the sand pedal about three minutes before he left the terminus on the morning of the accident. It was then all right, and he left it down in its proper place. Immediately after the accident it was up about an inch – far enough for working. It had apparently been pulled up. At the terminus lads were in the habit of playing round the car, and he suggested they might have pulled it up

In reply to Mr. Waldron witness said after putting the pedal right the conductor and himself had their breakfast. The pedal was in the proper position when he started from the terminus.

Dr. T. M. Tibbetts stated that he attended deceased eight months before the accident. She was then suffering from sciatica. A question was raised as to whether she was also suffering from consumption, but after an examination he could find no trace of this disease. When witness was called in after the accident she was suffering severely from shock. Witness then found that her chest was tuberculous. Death was due to consumption accelerated by the shock resulting from the accident. Deceased had no injuries. When the accident occurred something happened internally which gave her little chance of living. The strain upon her lungs as a result of the shrieking might have caused her condition.

The Jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death, but added a rider to the effect that the sand pedals should be kept down when they were not being used.

Mr. Waldron said he would convey this to the Tramway Company.”

“Edward Bastable, of the ROYAL OAK INN, was charged with selling at an illegal hour. A police officer found two men in the house, with drink in front of them. For the defence it was stated that the landlord called in the men to assist in giving a cow a drench, and that he gave them the ale. Ordered to pay costs.”

Stourbridge Observer 14/10/1871

“George [sic] Bastable, landlord of the ROYAL OAK beerhouse, Haden Hill, was charged with keeping his house open for the sale of drink during prohibited hours, on the 8th instant.

Police constables Johnson and Griffin visited defendant’s house at nine o’clock on the morning of the above date, and found two men in the house with a pint of ale.

Defendant said the men had been doing some work for him, and he asked them to have some breakfast; but they preferred beer to coffee or tea.

The Bench informed the defendant he had no right to give ale away, and ordered him to pay the costs.”

County Express 28/8/1875

“Edward Bastable landlord of the ROYAL OAK INN, Cradley Heath, was charged with keeping his house open for the sale of intoxicating drink, during prohibited hours on the night of the 15th inst. Mr. Stokes defended.

Police-constable Cooper stated that on the night in question, at twelve minutes past ten o’clock, he visited the house of defendant, in company with Police-constable Collier, and found four men drinking, and two cups on the table with some ale in. He called the attention of the landlord to the fact, and he replied that it was only just ten o’clock. They all produced their watches. The landlord’s watch was at five minutes past ten, and the officer’s at ten minutes past. He took the men’s names and left the house.

Police-constable Collier gave corroborative evidence.

Mr. Stokes for the defence said it would be straining the law to an unreasonable extent if his client were to be convicted for so small an infringement of the law as five minutes. The case was withdrawn on the payment of costs.”

“Jane Priest summoned Joseph and Edward Evans, father and son, for an assault at Rowley Regis, on 29th ult. Priest said that she was servant at the ROYAL OAK INN, Rowley, and that on the day in question the two Evanses were at her master’s house about 11 o’clock in the evening, and that on refusing the older Evans any more ale on credit, angry words arose, and the old man pushed her about, and the son struck her several violent blows.

Edward Evans admitted striking Priest, but said it was in defence of his father. Joseph Edwards was fined 5s and expenses and Edward Evans 10s and expenses or in default 21 days hard labour.

Sarah Priest, also a servant at the ROYAL OAK INN, and sister to the former complainant, then charged the Evanses with an assault on her at the same time and place. The evidence was merely a repetition of the former, and the Evanses were fined – father 5s and expenses, and the son 10s and expenses, or 21 days hard labour.”

Stourbridge Observer 11/7/1874

“At the Old Hill Police Court, on Wednesday, before Messrs. F. W. G. Barrs and N. Hingley, John Tranter, landlord of the ROYAL OAK INN, Springfields, was summoned for unlawfully selling a quantity of ale during prohibited hours, on Sunday, the 28th ult. Mr. Stokes defended.

Police-constable Cooper, stationed at Old Hill, said he was on duty on the morning in question, in company with Police-constable Allcock. They were near defendant’s house at about ten minutes to twelve, when he saw a man leaving the stable, with a stone bottle in his hand. He also saw another man coming up the road, and this person also had a stone bottle, and he went to the back of defendant’s house. Witness saw the bottle put through the door of the house. He waited a few minutes and saw defendant come out of the house and take the bottle back to the man. Witness then went up to the stable, and saw four men and one boy there. He also saw four barrels standing on one end, and one lying down. In the latter barrel there was a tap, and the beer was dripping from it. The barrel was placed on a bench. Witness saw defendant come out of the cellar, and he went in and saw the bottle amongst some barrels. There was a man in the cellar. He asked the man what brought him there, and he said he had come for the allowance beer.

Police-constable Allcock said he went to defendant’s house, in company with the last witness, and heard defendant say to the man, ‘You may as well take the bottle now; I know they would be after me. That b—— has had me before.’

Mr. Stokes, in defence, contended that the stable belonged to Messrs. Mason, and an accident had occurred. The men went to the stable to get their allowance drink, which was kept there. As regarded the defendant taking the ale out to the men, he was under the impression that as he had contracted with Messrs. Mason to supply the men with beer, he was quite right in doing so. Defendant, who has been previously convicted, was fined 50s and costs.”

“Mr. Edwin Hooper, district coroner, held an inquest at ROYAL OAK INN, Rowley, on the body of Edward Brazenhall (69), pike-man, who died on the 7th inst, from injuries received at the Prince of Wales Colliery, Dudley, the previous day.

Samuel Brazenhall, miner, son of the deceased, identified the body as that of his father, and stated that on the 6th inst he went to work with his father, and about three o’clock in the afternoon, as he was coming out of the blacksmith’s shop, he saw his father near the pit, picking up some bricks that were lying inside the rails of the tramway leading to the dirt mound. At the same time a horse was drawing a loaded tub, but the driver was not close to the horse, and the horse knocked deceased down, and then dragged him along for some distance, the tub being partially on him. Deceased was drawn about seven yards and then the horse was stopped by a man coming up the mound. When the horse was stopped witness assisted to get his father from beneath the tub, and he was then taken to the hovel, where he complained of injuries to his head, neck, and back. Dr. Higgs, from Dudley, was sent for, and he attended deceased about an hour and a half after the accident happened. Deceased was then taken home but died about eight o’clock the next night.....

The Coroner said the deceased old man had unfortunately lost his life, and no doubt it had been in consequence of the driver leaving his horse, and for that there was a certain amount of blame attaching to the driver; knowing the horse to be a spirited animal he should not have left the rein of the horse at all. He did not think there was sufficient evidence to render the driver culpable for his neglect, but at the same time it was a case in which the driver must be cautioned.....

The Jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death and recommended that the driver be censured.

The driver was hereupon called into the room and censured by the coroner, who remarked that it was fortunate for the driver there was a jury as well as a coroner, as otherwise the decision might have been very different.”

“Enoch Wood, engineman, was brought up on a charge of stealing an umbrella, a quantity of pianoforte wire, and tools, on the 14th inst, from John Dingley, pianoforte tuner, to the value of 12s.

Mr. Dingley went to the house of Mr. John Tranter, ROYAL OAK, Springfield, about 1.30 on the 13th inst. He had the articles in question with him. He placed them under a seat by him, the umbrella on the bag. He was there about half-an-hour. When he left the place the articles were on the seat, and in the room were Mr. Tranter and prisoner. Mr. Tranter was not in the room long; he went out by the back door. Mr. Dingley returned in about a quarter of an hour, and then it was he missed the articles. He asked Mrs. Tranter if Mr. Tranter had taken them, but she said he had not. They then went into the back yard to see if they could find them there.

Prisoner was seen by William Grant, boat unloader, Dudley Port Road, on the 14th inst, in the tap room of the BARLEY MOW, about half-past four; he was handing the umbrella round for sale. Witness asked how much he would take for it. Prisoner said, ‘I will let you have it for 4d as you are a gentleman.’ Witness said he would not give it him. Prisoner then said, ‘You may have it for 3d, as I have got about eleven more at home.’

Police-constable Green, having received information about the robbery, went to the prisoner’s house, at Greets Green, on the 14th inst, about five o’clock. When he got there he saw prisoner sitting at a bench with all the tools before him, examining them one by one. When taken into custody and charged with stealing them, he denied stealing them, and said he bought them off a man up the hills. He did not know what was inside. When cautioned about the umbrella, he said that he never went into the BARLEY MOW, but stopped, and had a pint of porter outside. On the way to Brierly Hill prisoner stated that he bought the umbrella for 8d from a man named Round, near the Hailstone.

Prisoner pleaded guilty, and was sent to gaol for six months, with hard labour.”

“On Monday Mr. Edwin Hooper held an inquest at the ROYAL OAK INN, Dudley Road, touching the death of Joseph, son of John and Emma Malpass, of Cock Green, who met with a shocking death on Saturday. The deceased was knocked down by a load of coal which was being emptied out of a cart by a labourer named Abraham Whitehall. He received injuries which resulted in his death shortly afterwards. No blame could be attached to Whitehall, and the jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

“Daniel Mason, licensed victualler, was charged with keeping open his licensed premises during prohibited hours on Sunday, June 1st. Mr. Shakespeare defended.

At about 4.40 on the afternoon of this date PC Styles saw four men in a field at the back of the ROYAL OAK, Springfield, Rowley, kept by the defendant. He saw one of them, named Walleth, go into the back premises and in a minute enter the back door. In the course of another minute Walleth returned carrying a bottle, and proceeding through the garden, went into the field and joined the other men. Styles made his appearance, and a man named Davies picked up the bottle, laid himself down in the ditch and dragged himself along. He feigned sleep when the officer went up to him, and the bottle was discovered under him. Styles took the bottle, which he found filled with beer, to the defendant, and asked how he accounted for it, seeing that it was fresh beer. Defendant said, ‘Oh, yes; it’s ale.’

For the defence Annie Mason, defendant’s daughter, stated that just before closing time on the day named she filled two bottles of beer for Walleth, the brewer, and both were taken out of the house.

Walleth stated that he was on the premises all afternoon. Some men in a brick-kiln hovel had the first bottle, which they took with them at half-past two. When he rejoined them at about half-past four he was asked where the other bottle was. He said he had forgotten it, and it was when he went back to the house that the officer saw him.

The defendant was sworn, and he denied having sold the beer to Walleth after half-past two.

The Bench considered the charge proved, and the least fine they could inflict would be 40s and costs.”

“On Wednesday, at the Rowley Police Court – before Sir B. Hingley, Messrs. W. Bassano, A. H. Bassano, and J. F. Pearson – Alfred Edwards, miner, Springfield, Rowley, was charged on remand with wounding Abraham Taylor, on the 4th ult. Mr. Ward defended.

Complainant said that on the Saturday afternoon in question he was in the ROYAL OAK INN, Springfield, in company with several others. Prisoner came into the house some time in the afternoon, and they agreed to toss for a quart of ale. They had a toss, two out of three, and witness won the toss. Prisoner then said he was not going to pay. Witness then got up, and said, ‘You will not go until you have paid.’ Prisoner kicked at him, and witness caught his leg and threw him on the bench. While he was on the bench witness saw prisoner put his hand in his pocket, and saw a blade in his hand. Prisoner dashed at him, saying, ‘I will pay you,’ and struck him with the knife, which went through his shirt, and gashed him in the chest. The wound bled a great deal, but he was able to walk home, and was afterwards attended by Dr. Beasley, who sewed up the wound. Witness was taken to the Guest Hospital the same night, and had been there until that morning.

John Perks, miner, of Springfield, said on Saturday, the 15th inst, he was at Mason’s public house, in company with prisoner and some other men. He described how the quarrel arose, and how prisoner stabbed prosecutor.

In reply to Mr. Ward witness said he and prisoner fought as they were taking him to the police station. Prisoner then threatened witness that he would not live a month after he was liberated.

Joseph Morton gave evidence, and said he saw the prosecutor take hold of prisoner’s leg, and throw him upon his back. Witness requested the prosecutor to stop it, but he refused to until the prisoner had paid for the ale. Witness then separated the men, and a few minutes afterwards a man named Bytheway told him to keep prisoner in the house until the policeman arrived. Witness wanted to know what was the matter, when he was informed that prosecutor had been stabbed. He went outside to see the wounded man, but when he returned he saw that Perks was stripped to fight the prisoner. Prisoner then had the knife produced in his hand, and witness immediately took it from him. Witness did not see prisoner strike the prosecutor with a knife. They were all the worse for beer excepting witness.

Dr. Beasley said on the 15th of August he was called to see the prosecutor, about 6-30. He was suffering from an extensive flesh wound under the right breast, about an inch deep. The wound was such as would be produced by a knife. Witness stitched up the wound, and ordered his removal to the hospital. The wound itself was not dangerous, but the consequences might have been serious. It would be about another week before the wound was healed.

Police-constable Reynolds deposed to arresting prisoner on the night of the occurrence. In reply to the charge, prisoner said, ‘Yes; all right.’ When witness was taking prisoner to the police station he ran away, but after a chase of about a quarter of a mile he re-captured him. Prisoner was very drunk. On the 17th witness re-charged prisoner, when he replied, ‘I don’t remember anything of it. I did not know I had had a misword with him until I was taken to the house.’

Edward Bytheway, of Dudley, gave evidence as to the quarrel, but said he did not see the knife used. Prisoner was the worse for beer.

Prisoner was committed to take his trial at the next Assizes.”

[On 2nd December 1896 at the assizes Alfred Edwards, charged with ‘on 15th August 1896, at Rowley Regis, unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously wounding Abraham Taylor, with intent to do him grievous bodily harm,’ was found guilty and sentenced to three calendar months’ hard labour.]

County Advertiser 19/9/1896

“Mary Ann Mason, landlady of the ROYAL OAK INN, Dudley Road, Springfields, Rowley, was charged with permitting drunkenness on her licensed premises, and also with permitting gaming on the 15th ult. Mr. W. Shakespeare defended.

The evidence for the prosecution showed that on the date in question a number of miners visited the defendant’s house. One of them, Alfred Edwards, who was drunk, played a game known as ‘tippet’ for a quart of ale and lost. A dispute took place between Edwards and a man named Abraham Taylor as to the payment of some money, which had been tossed for. Edwards, it was alleged, then stabbed Taylor. The police were then called in, and Police-constable Reynolds went to the house. He arrested Edwards outside the house, and he was then very drunk. The constable charged him with the wounding, and he said, ‘All right.’ Reynolds took him to Old Hill Police Station, and on the way he tried to escape. Edwards ran for about a quarter of a mile, and Reynold ultimately caught him.

Inspector Given saw Edwards at the station, and deposed to his being in a bad state of drunkenness.

In reply to Mr. Shakespeare, the whole of the miners called, stated that the only man who was under the influence of drink was Edwards, and he was not seen by the defendant, neither did she or her servants witness the gaming.

In cross-examination Inspector Given said that defendant had kept the house for eighteen or nineteen years, and there had been no conviction against her.

Mr. Bassano remarked that the men who had been called had stated a set of facts which were altogether different to those which they gave at the hearing of the charge of wounding.

Mr. Shakespeare said that the defendant had every wish to keep her house respectably and in accordance with the law, and the strongest proof of this was to be found in the fact that she had kept the house for nineteen years without a single complaint having been made against her. He submitted that the evidence clearly showed that the defendant had no knowledge that gaming was taking place, and that it was not through carelessness or negligence that she did not have that knowledge. Apart from the evidence of the police, there was no evidence of gaming, and he put it to the Bench that the evidence of the men who had been called was entirely favourable to his client, though they had given a different version on the present occasion. He submitted that there was no disorder until the stabbing affray took place, and in view of the evidence, which was favourable to his client and her good character, he left the case with the Bench, and asked them to dismiss the charges.

The Bench fined defendant £3 9s on the charge of permitting drunkenness, and the charge of gaming was dismissed.”

“On Thursday morning Mr. H. A. Pearson (Coroner) held an inquest at the ROYAL OAK INN, Dudley Road, Springfields, Rowley, concerning the death of Ellen Hughes, aged three years, whose parents reside at Dudley Road, Rowley, and who met with her death under shocking circumstances on the 15th inst. The evidence showed that on the afternoon in question the deceased was playing with other children close to her home when a horse and trap, driven by Thomas Westwood, of High Street, Kates Hill, Dudley, approached. On getting closer to the children Westwood shouted to them several times, and they all attempted to cross the road. When half way over the roadway deceased turned sharply round, and before the driver could pull up she was knocked down by the horse and trampled upon. Death appeared to have been instantaneous, the child having her neck dislocated. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death, and attached no blame to the driver. They also expressed their sympathy with the parents of the child, and the Coroner said it was a very sad case.”

"A Dudley mother-of-two who has never raised any cash for charity before has handed over a £2,000 cheque to the Russells Hall Hospital leukaemia unit. Mrs. Margaret Adams decided almost a year ago to try to raise £1,000 after a friend began having treatment for the disease. But she managed to raise twice as much as she first intended – with a little help from her friends at the ROYAL OAK pub in Dudley Road, Rowley Regis.

A 24-hour darts/pool/domino marathon at the ROYAL OAK pub, Dudley Road, Rowley Regis, on Saturday, helped to raise nearly £600 towards the appeal."

"A stripper wearing a dog collar and carrying a whip pushed a policeman's head between her thighs during an indecent act at a Midland pub. She also invited men customers at the ROYAL OAK pub, Rowley Regis, to eat marshmallows off her naked breasts, Warley magistrates were told.

The girl, who was paid £45 to perform before an audience of 39, carried out other indecent acts while naked, said Mrs. Susan Sims-Steward, prosecuting for Sandwell Council in a private prosecution.

Charles Grashion (40), licensee of the ROYAL OAK, Dudley Road, Rowley Regis, was fined £400 and ordered to pay £30 costs after admitting allowing a striptease act involving indecency to take place in breach of the license.

Mrs. Sims-Steward said two plain clothes policemen had gone to the pub's lounge bar after being told there had been a breach of the license. After paying £1 entrance money and a further £1 membership fee they saw a stripper appear wearing black plastic briefs, a dog collar and carrying a whip. She whipped several men, pushed one policeman's face between her thighs and invited men to eat marshmallows off her exposed breasts. She stripped naked and performed other indecent acts.

Grashion told the magistrates that £60,000 had been invested in the pub and that he had a £12,000 over-draft. He said he was struggling to survive in a depressed area and that he and his wife had only £45 a week to live on. 'Some of the lads asked me to put on the act – but we had an audience of only 39,' he said. 'I paid the stripper £45 and made a loss on the show.'

When told he was being fined £400 Grashion told the magistrates, 'You had better send me straight to prison because I cannot pay it.'

He was ordered to pay £8 a week."

Sandwell Evening Mail 4/10/1990

"A Sandwell licensee who illegally put on a striptease act at his pub has been allowed to keep his entertainments licence. Mr. Charles Grashion, who breached his licence at the ROYAL OAK, Dudley Road, Rowley Regis, was last night let off with a stern warning. The 40-year-old father-of-three now faces a court hearing over whether he keeps his drinks licence."

Sandwell Evening Mail 6/10/1990

"A Sandwell licensee, who ran an illegal strip show at his pub, has won a court battle to keep his drinks licence. Oldbury licensing magistrates decided not to revoke Mr. Charles Grashion's licence for the ROYAL OAK at Dudley Road, Rowley Regis, but gave him a 'strong rebuke'.

The decision came one day after Mr. Grashion, aged 39, was allowed by council environmental officials to keep his entertainments licence. He was fined £400 at a court hearing on March 11 for staging a striptease act in breach of the licence. Mr. Grashion told magistrates many local pubs staged similar entertainment. He believed he had been within the law by forming a private club for members aged over 21 who had to dress respectably. He said, 'I run a very clean house, and in order to run it cleanly and respectably, I have lost a lot of custom through throwing trouble-makers out.'

Mr. Kevin Bradley, licensing clerk for Ansells Sales Ltd, said the firm felt Mr. Grashion had done a good job in his two-and-a-half years at the ROYAL OAK. He had given in his notice to quit by February and had been disciplined.

Licensing bench chairman Mr. Gordon Linsey said the magistrates strongly rebuked Mr. Grashion but told him, 'We are not going to revoke your licence on this occasion. We do not wish to jeopardise any future opportunities for you.'"

To be Sold by Auction, by Ferdinando Lea, at the house of Jeremiah Billingham, the SALUTATION INN, the Five Ways, at Cradley Heath.....”

Birmingham Journal 13/11/1847

“On Monday an inquest was held before George Hinchliffe, Esq, at the SALUTATION INN, Rowley Regis, on the body of Matthias Attwood, twelve years of age, who came by his death on Friday last, under very distressing circumstances. He was employed in a pit at Cradley Heath, belonging to the British Iron Company, for the purpose of unhanging the skips when they come down the shaft. On the afternoon of the above day, a fellow-workman saw him at work, but on going to the spot in ten minutes afterwards, he found him stretched quite dead on the ground, and nothing to show how this had happened. On further examination, however, it became obvious that he had been struck by the projecting arm of a gin, near the bottom of the shaft, which revolves at considerable speed when empty skips are being let down to a deeper part of the pit, and by which persons not taking proper care are liable to be struck, and thrown some distance. Under these circumstances, the death of the lad was purely accidental, and the Jury returned a verdict to that effect.”

"Insolvent Debtor, to be heard before Rupert Kettle, Esquire, Judge of the County Court of Worcestershire, holden at the Guild-hall, Worcester, on Wednesday, the 20th of March, 1861, at 10 o'clock in the morning precisely.

Thomas Grice, late of the Five Ways, Cradley Heath, in the parish of Rowley Regis, in the county of Stafford, Licensed Victualler, keeping the SALUTATION INN; and also carrying on the trade of a Grocer, at Bloomfield, in the parish of Tipton, in the county aforesaid.

William Corles, Attorney-at-Law, Worcester. Attorney for said Insolvent.”

Wolverhampton Chronicle 27/3/1861

“Thomas Grice, a publican and grocer, carrying on business at the SALUTATION INN, Five Ways, Cradley, applied for his discharge, supported by Mr. Corles, and opposed by Mr. Rea, on behalf of several creditors, on the ground that he had contracted his debts with two of the opposing creditors by means of false pretences, also that he had incurred debts without reasonable expectation of payment, and under the discretionary clause. Causes of insolvency, badness of trade, ill-health, heavy expenses, and his father having distrained upon him for arrears of rent. The case was adjourned till next Court for the attendance of the insolvent’s father and his detaining creditors, and the production of some necessary books and documents.”

Worcester Journal 31/8/1861

“Re Thomas Grice. This was a case which had been adjourned no less than six times. Mr. W. Corles supported. The debts were £502 8s 2d; and the credits £31 0s 3d. The insolvent did not answer to his bail, and Mr. Rea, who opposed, said he presumed his Honor would dismiss the petition. The judge said he should do nothing in the matter at present, and should postpone his decision.”

Worcestershire Chronicle 2/10/1861

“Thomas Grice late of the SALUTATION INN, Five Ways, Cradley Heath, out on bail, whose case had been before the court since April last, and was adjourned last court through insolvent’s non-attendance, again failed to appear. In consequence, Mr. Rea asked that bail might be called on their recognizances. They were asked for accordingly, but did not answer, and his Honour further adjourned the case. Mr. Terry was nominated assignee.”

“At the Petty Sessions, yesterday, before Mr. St. John Matthews and Mr. F. D. Smith, Alfred Priest, SALUTATION INN, Cradley Heath, was charged by the police with having allowed gaming in his house. The evidence was to the effect that on Saturday last there had been a raffle for a watch at defendant’s house, and that at the conclusion of the game a dispute arose which resulted in a disturbance. The police were communicated with, and as numerous complaints had previously been made of the disorderly manner in which defendant kept his house, Mr. Superintendent Mills instituted the present proceedings. The defendant had been previously convicted of having kept his house open during prohibited hours, and the Bench fined him 50s and costs, and cautioned him as to his future conduct.”

Stourbridge Observer 3/12/1864

“Alfred Priest, SALUTATION INN, Cradley Heath, was charged by superintendent Mills with having refused to admit the police into a certain room in his house, on the night of the 26th instant. Mr. Shakespeare appeared for the defendant. Sergeant Powner deposed: I am a sergeant of police, and reside at Old Hill. I know the defendant, he is a licensed victualler. From information I received, I visited the defendant’s house, on Saturday night last, at about a quarter to eleven, in company with police-constable Fox. In a room to the right, I saw two men and the wife of the defendant. I said to Mrs. Priest you seem very quiet, and she said yes, we have no one else in the house. I passed on to a small back parlour. I heard some voices. I tried the door, but it was fastened on the inside. Upon my knocking at the door and asking to be admitted, the mistress jumped up and said Alfred open the door, the sergeant is here. This she said twice. Upon her saying that, a great scuffle took place in the room. It was similar to some men all moving suddenly. I said open the door, I shall not wait. I should think I waited about three minutes. At the expiration of that time I left. I do not know whether the door was locked or bolted. I turned the handle towards the right. It opened inside of the room; that is should have had to push the door from me if I could have entered. I am quite sure of the fact that there was a general scuffle in the room, and also that I staid at the door not less than three minutes. Police-constable Fox then corroborated the evidence of the sergeant. For the defence it was urged that the sergeant did not stop while the door was being opened, but went off as soon as he had knocked at it.

Mr. Priest deposed: I live at Cradley Heath. I was in the defendant's house on Saturday night last. I saw the police come in; I was in the kitchen. The sergeant went to the parlour door and tried to open it but could not. The handle is very difficult to turn. He only tried it once. He then turned to go out. As he was going out the door was opened, and Mrs. Priest said, 'Now go in.' He said, I shan't, I shall summons you. He was not in the house above one minute. The case was dismissed."

County Express 28/3/1868

"On Saturday last an adjourned inquest was held on the body of Josiah Chivers, before Edwin Hooker, Esq, coroner, at the SALUTATION INN, Cradley Heath. He was one of the sufferers in the recent colliery accident at Brettell Lane. Mr. Baker, Government Inspector of Mines, and Mr. Breakwell, agent of the Miners' National Association, were present.

The Coroner said the inquiry had been twice gone into and the cause of the accident fully investigated by Mr. Phillips, the deputy coroner, and in each case different juries had returned a verdict of manslaughter against the butty, Joseph Shaw. He did not think it necessary to go into the whole evidence as his duty would be simply to investigate the actual cause of the death of Josiah Chivers, when that was proved the duty of the jurymen would cease. Shaw was already been convicted of manslaughter, and if this jury did the same there would be three distinct charges of manslaughter against him. To take sufficient evidence to show how deceased lost his life without saying anything about the butty would effect a considerable saving of the time of the jurymen, of expense to the county, and be in strict accordance with the law. But if the jury considered it necessary he would go into the whole evidence. The body had been identified at the previous inquest.

The foreman said he should be satisfied with simply inquiring into the cause of death of the deceased.

The first witness called was Thomas Gough, pikeman, residing at Meeting Lane, which has been published before.

Richard Growcott, mine agent, Kingswinford, produced a plan of the colliery, and said it was a correct plan, it was made on the previous Thursday. He pointed out the place where the men were found.

Thomas Gough said Chivers lay with his head on the dam; we found five bodies altogether. He was quite dead. Joseph Shaw, the butty, came while we were staying there. They were taken up on a skip about six o'clock. They were all dead. When I went down the shaft I consider the air was in such a state that it would cause the death of the men. In answer to the foreman, he said it was about three hours and a half from the time he came up till he went down again.

Richard Growcott said he gave instructions to Shaw to keep the fire in regularly night and day. He promised he would see to it himself. On the day in question Shaw took the fire out and threw sand down the shaft after the fire was out. As soon as the shaft was cold the damp air would get in, which was the cause of the catastrophe. It was contrary to his orders to remove the lamp, and the sand was thrown down without his consent, this would cause an accumulation of black damp; the sand should have been put down the working shaft. In his opinion the accident would not have occurred if the sand had not been put down the wrong shaft nor the lamp removed. He impressed on Shaw the necessity of keeping the lamp in, knowing the prevalence of black damp in the district.

The Coroner said sufficient evidence had been adduced to show the cause of the accident, and if the jury would return a verdict that deceased died from suffocation their duties would be at an end. After a few minutes consultation a verdict was returned to the effect the Deceased was found dead in a coalpit, having been Suffocated by Carbonic Acid Gas."

[On 22nd July 1868, Joseph Shaw appeared at the Assizes, charged with killing and slaying Thomas Hicks and others, on 11th March 1868, at the parish of Kingswinford. He was found not guilty of manslaughter.]

"A man named Thomas Grice succeeded on Monday last, in committing suicide.

Some time back he was seized with a kind of stroke, and since then has been mentally affected. He went upstairs on Monday, and after placing his head in a noose made of some blind-string, he rolled off the bed, and was strangled. His son called him, but received no answer, and on proceeding upstairs found his father in part lying on the floor, with his head in the string. He immediately cut the string and Dr. Standish was fetched. On examination, he pronounced him quite dead.

An inquest was held on Thursday, at the SALUTATION INN, before Mr. Hooper, Coroner, and the jury returned a verdict to the effect that deceased Committed Suicide, while in a state of Temporary Insanity."

“On Monday afternoon last a meeting of the delegates representing the makers of Essex, Woolen, and Cooler nails, met at the house of Mr. H. Barber, the SALUTATION INN, Lomey Town. It was stated that the men were firmly resolved not to commence to work until they got 13 per cent and the alteration in the yield asked for; that the men had been on strike six weeks, but that their general opinion was that their employers would soon bring the struggle to an end by acceding to the terms of the notice. It was also stated that Mr. Walker, Messrs. Homes and Hickton, and Mr. Moore had already agreed to pay the advance and make the extra allowance for yield. The men expressed themselves highly pleased at the conduct of the gentlemen mentioned above.”

Hingley, James Marsh, Daniel Weaver, and George Stringer, were charged with being drunk and refusing to leave the SALUTATION INN, Five Ways, when requested. Henry Barber proved the case, and said that Marsh had his jacket off to fight, and they were all quarrelsome, and he had to send for the police to turn them out. After they had been turned out the defendants came in again, and began to quarrel. PC Collier corroborated. In answer to the Bench, Barber said there was from fifty to sixty persons in the room. It was a free and easy meeting. Mr. Hingley: These free and easy meetings seem to lead to quarrels. I do not like them at all. Fined 2s 6d.”

“The deputy-coroner F. W. Topham, held an inquest at the SALUTATION INN, Cradley Heath, on Wednesday afternoon last, to enquire into the death of Albert Gill, aged two years, who was run over by two horses and a break about two o’clock on Sunday afternoon and died in about an hour after from the injuries he had received.

Mr. J. Poole was the foreman of the jury and the following evidence was taken.

Sarah Gill, wife of Joseph Gill a chainmaker, of Cradley Heath said she was the mother of the deceased who died about three o’clock on Sunday. He was in the horse road at the top of the entry with her other child. She heard a break drawn by two horses coming along the road and she ran out of the house but before she got to the deceased, the break had gone over him. Walter Grove was driving the horses a sharp trot. The break went over his stomach and legs. The accident happened after dinner and the deceased died about twenty minutes after Dr. Kerr’s assistant was sent for. He came and said there was nothing the matter with him except to the leg and said the idea of sending for him. He did not examine him at all, and did not stop in the house more than a minute.

By a Juryman: It was the assistant of Dr. Kerr who was lame.

Joseph Billingham, living at Cradley Heath, said about two o’clock on Sunday he was sitting outside his house when he saw Whitmore’s break as he thought, drawn by two horses, going towards the station. The deceased was first, standing on the foot-road, but he went out into the road and was knocked down, and the break went over him. The driver was not driving fast, and in his opinion there was no blame attributable to him. He pulled up directly. He did not see any children in the road except the deceased. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death but they added that Mr. McGill, Dr. Kerr’s assistant, was greatly to blame for the manner he treated the affair.”

Dudley Guardian 4/7/1874

“Important Meeting of Colliers at Dudley.

On Monday morning a district meeting, representing forty-five lodges belonging to the Dudley district, was held at the Central Lodge House, SHAKESPEARE INN, New Mill Street, Dudley.

Mr. Joseph Lee occupied the chair, and in opening the proceedings, he said he should have been glad to have met the delegates under more gratifying circumstances, but it appeared that they could not turn back. How long the struggle would last it was not for him to say; in fact, he did not know. It rested with the delegates who represented the men to say what was the feeling of their constituents – whether they were disposed to play on, or go to work at the reduction – (cries of ‘No’). The masters, by their conduct, did not seem disposed to give way, or offer any conciliatory terms; but the men, on the other hand, wanted to have the dispute amicably and honourably settled They had carried on the fight for thirteen weeks.....

The reports from each delegate were then verbally given.....

No.46 Lodge, SALUTATION INN, Cradley Heath; 10 members. Six men are at work at the old rate of wages; the other four will not resume work at the reduction.”

[The consensus was overwhelmingly to remain on strike.]

Dudley Herald 22/7/1876

“Henry Barber, landlord of the SALUTATION INN, Cradley Heath, was charged with having in his possession on the 2nd of May, a quantity of sugar not being for the necessary or ordinary use of his family, he not being licensed to brew with sugar. There was another charge against him of having unlawfully removed a quantity of grains out of his mash tub before they had been gauged by the Excise officer. Mr. Stokes appeared for the defendant, who pleaded guilty to both charges.

Mr. Stokes, in addressing the magistrates for the defence, trusted they would recommend a mitigation of the penalties being made by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, on account of the defendant having left the conduct of his house mainly in the hands of his son. The defendant's son had assured him that when he had used sugar in the brewing he had entered upon his brewing sheet double the quantity of malt he had actually used, so that the Revenue should be no losers by the transaction.

The Magistrates fined the defendant in the mitigated penalties of £50 and £5 respectively, and refused to recommend any reduction being made, and would rather the matter should rest with the Excise authorities."

County Express 16/9/1876

"On Thursday evening last, a dinner was given at the house of Mr. Henry Barber, SALUTATION INN, in his usual taste and hospitality. After the removal of the cloth, Mr. Thomas Taylor occupied the chair, and Mr. John Poole the vice-chair. The usual toasts were introduced and enlivened with magnificent harmony, rendered by Messrs. John Poole, Joseph Poole, Thomas Poole, John Barber, and 'Old Mark.' Eleven o'clock terminated a most enjoyable and pleasant evening."

Dudley Herald 16/12/1876

"An inquest was held on Monday, before Mr. E. Hooper, district coroner, at the SALUTATION INN, Cradley Heath, on the body of George Frederick Shepherd, aged five years. Deceased was coming out of the Board School, on the 8th inst, at noon, when his hat blew off. He turned round to go in pursuit of it, when he was run over by a horse and trap, driven by Mr. Chatwin, of Netherton, and received injuries in the back, from which he died the same evening. The evidence proved that the horse was being carefully and steadily driven, and the jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death."

County Advertiser 1/12/1877

"On Wednesday afternoon Mr. Edwin Hooper, coroner, held an inquest at the SALUTATION INN, Cradley Heath, touching the decease of Edward Westwood (21), collier, Lomey Town, Cradley Heath. On the 23rd ult, the deceased was working in No.28 coal pit, at Darby Hand, belonging to the Earl of Dudley. About 8am a fall of coal took place, and he being under it, was killed on the spot in the presence of James Bunn and Joseph Smith. It was found that he had received injuries about the head and body, and death was almost, if not quite, instantaneous. The jury heard evidence to this effect, and returned a verdict of Accidentally Killed."

Dudley Herald 3/1/1880

"William Deeley, chainmaker, Cradley Heath, was charged with feloniously stealing a dog, the property of Joseph Parsons, on the 27th ult. Mr. Hayes defended.

George Wilkes stated that he saw the defendant in the SALUTATION INN, Five Ways, Cradley Heath, with a dog under his arm, which he (witness) recognised as the property of the prosecutor. He told defendant whose property it was; the defendant then took it out of the house.
