“Samuel Jones, landlord of the ROEBUCK INN, was yesterday summoned to the Police Court for using threatening language towards Thomas Hincks. The complainant said that on the 30th ult, he was in Bridge Street; when the defendant seized him from behind by the hair, called him a cur, and asked why he had sworn falsely against the Jukeses (some fellows recently convicted of felony). The complainant added that he went in fear of his life. The Bench ordered the defendant to find a surety for his keeping the peace for the next six months.”

Birmingham Daily Gazette 17/11/1869

“Yesterday, at the Police Court, Eliza Harding, a girl aged about 19, was charged with having stolen twelve sovereigns, the property of her mistress, Mrs. Sarah Jones, landlady of the ROEBUCK INN, Bridge Street, Bilston. Mr. H. Langman defended.

On the 29th of October the prisoner went to live with Mrs. Jones as a domestic servant. On the 11th of November Mrs. Jones missed twelve sovereigns from a box in her bedroom, and as the prisoner had been in the habit of going into that room, she was accused of having stolen the money, but denied any knowledge of it. Inspector M’Williams was sent for, and questioned prisoner about the matter, but she again protested that she did not know anything about the money. The inspector did not then take her into custody, but made certain inquiries, which led him to go to her father’s house in Queen Street, Bilston. On searching there he found a large quantity of new furniture, including iron bedstead and mattress, sofa, tables, looking glass, and a number of other articles. The father said that they had been there for some years, and that they belonged to another daughter. Inspector M’Williams ascertained, however, that this was not correct, but that they had been purchased by prisoner for £7, a few days previous, from Mr. Pateman, auctioneer, of Bilston, to whom she gave an order for them to be left at her father's house. Prisoner had also purchased a water-proof cloak, a bonnet, and several other articles of wearing apparel. Inspector M'Williams also ascertained that she was engaged to be married to a young man in a short time, and that the proceeds of her theft were to go towards setting up housekeeping.

Prisoner pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to two months' imprisonment."

"Staffordshire Epiphany Sessions.....

Refusal to Renew a License. Job Jeavons v The Licensing Justices of Bilston.

This was an appeal against a refusal to renew a license for the ROEBUCK INN, at Bilston. Mr. Underhill was for the appellant, and Mr. Young and Mr. J. R. Rose for the respondents.

The public house in question had been a licensed house for seventy years, and about August last it was vacated by a Mrs. Jones. The appellant then took the premises, and when the application for the transfer of the license was made in October, the Magistrates refused it. The majority of the Bench were of opinion that as the appellant had allowed the regular licensing meeting to pass without submitting his application, the license would, if granted, have been a new one within the meaning of the Licensing Act of the last session. The appeal was dismissed, with costs. On the application of Mr. Underhill, a case was granted. After the Chairman had announced the decision of the Bench, Mr. Spooner (one of the Magistrates) expressed his dissent from the opinion of the other Justices."

Wolverhampton Chronicle 23/9/1863

"At the Police Court, on Friday, before J. Perks and R. Bagnall, Esqs, a man named Edwin Legg, a clerk in the employ of Messrs. T. J. Perry and Sons, ironfounders, Highfields, was brought up on remand, charged with having obtained by false pretences, the sum of £5 12s. It was stated that there were other charges against him, both of embezzlement and forgery. Mr. Waterhouse appeared for the prosecution, and Mr. Fellowes for the prisoner.

The first charge taken was that of having obtained money under false pretences. The facts relating to this charge, were briefly as follows. It appears that near Messrs. Perry's works is a public house, kept by a person named Whitmore Lathe. The workmen employed at the works are usually paid their wages by Messrs. Perry's cashier, Mr. David Walters, or in his absence by a clerk named Smith, and as on these occasions Walters is often short of change, he had, with Mr. Perry's authority been in the habit of going across to the house of Lathe for whatever sums as change he might require, and with which Mrs. Lathe was in the habit of accommodating them, she received in return an I.O.U. for the amount, signed either by Walters or Smith, they being the only persons authorised to do so. These notes for change had generally been sent by one of the junior clerks, and on several occasions they had been taken by the prisoner, but whenever so sent he had always delivered to him an I.O.U. for the amount required, bearing with the signature of Walters or Smith. On Saturday, the 29th of August, the prisoner was sent to Mrs. Lathe's for £10 worth of change, which he received, after having given the usual note from Walters. A short time after he went again to the house of Mrs. Lathe for a further £2 2s, which he said was wanted by Walters, but produced an I.O.U. written and signed by himself. Mrs. Lathe said she was unable to accommodate him with so much small change, but could give him £3 in gold, which he agreed to take, and at once altered the figures in the note to the amount in her presence. The prisoner went to his place of business at Messrs. Perry's about once or twice after, but ultimately absented himself altogether, and in the interval obtained from Mrs. Lathe, in the name of his employers, three several sums of 19s, __, 5s, and 15s, for which he gave her the usual I.O.U.s, but written and signed by himself. On the 10th instant, some days after the prisoner had absented himself from the office, the cashier, Mr. Walters, received a letter from him, in which he confessed that he had borrowed the sum of £5 12s from his employers name, for his own use, and enclosed a sum of £3, which, he said, with the wages due to him since the money was obtained, would make up the entire amount, desiring that credit might be given him for paying off the I.O.U.s in the hands of Mrs. Lathe. On further inquiries being instituted, other transactions of a more serious nature were brought to light, and a warrant was then issued for the prisoner's apprehension.

Mr. Walters and Mrs. Lathe were then called, and proved in evidence the above facts.

In cross-examination, Mr. Walters stated that he had, on a previous occasion taken up an I.O.U. given by the prisoner to Mrs. Lathe, and he then cautioned him against doing anything of the sort again. Witness identified several I.O.U.s produced by Mrs. Lathe as being in the prisoner's hand-writing.

Mr. T. J. Perry, the proprietor of the works at Highfields, also gave evidence as the prisoner having no authority to borrow money off Mrs. Lathe, on behalf of the firm, except when deputed to do so by Walters or Smith.

This being the case for the prosecution, Mr. Fellowes, on behalf of the prisoner, contended that the fact that the prisoner having sent in his letter of the 10th inst the sum of £3, and requested that £2 12s due to him as wages might be added to it, to make up the amount he had borrowed, showed that no fraud was intended by him at the time he obtained the money, and he (Mr. Fellowes) also submitted that no fraud had been committed.

The Bench, however, expressed a different opinion, and committed the prisoner to take his trial at the next assizes."

“Bilston annual licensing sessions.....

Formal objection was made against the renewals of the ROLLING MILL, Bradley.

Superintendent Walters objected on the ground of a hole being in the wall, through which communication could be made to an ironworks. The superintendent said two years ago objection was taken to a hole, which had since been remedied, this second hole being made. A speaking tube had also been put in the house.

Mr. R. Tildesley said there was no offence against the house, and everything had been done openly, and nothing with the intention of evading the law. It was a convenience to the men, as a letter from Messrs. Davis Brothers and Co. Ltd. (produced), showed. The letter was as follows. ‘Our works manager, Mr. Granger, informs us that from his experience of nearly twelve years he finds the hole in the wall from which our men obtain refreshment from the ROLLING MILL to be a great convenience; it prevents the men leaving the works, and after having a drink they go back to work; but if they go outside they meet with acquaintances and are often induced to stay longer than necessary, when he has to send after them, with sometimes a difficulty in finding them.’ Mr. Rochelle said the hole could be seen from the road with little difficulty.....”

Mr. Pratt (Magistrates Clerk) said two years ago the license was renewed on condition that the hole was built up.

The Bench decided to renew all the licenses to which Superintendent Walters had objected with the exception of the ROLLING MILL, Bradley. That would come up again at the Adjourned Licensing Sessions, and the Bench wished the owner of the house to be informed that the license would be absolutely refused unless the hole referred to was hermetically sealed to the satisfaction of the licensing justices.”

“Mutual recriminations were made by husband and wife in an application for a license transfer at Bilston yesterday. Mrs. Charlotte Emma Brooks applied for the transfer of the ROLLING MILL INN, Bradley, to herself, but eventually the Bench refused the application.

Mr. J. S. Sharpe said Mrs. Brooks’s husband was in the army. They formerly kept the SPREAD EAGLE, Wednesbury, but subsequently Mrs. Brooks kept the STAFFORDSHIRE KNOT, Darlaston. He understood the husband was in court, being over on short leave, for the purpose of making allegations against his wife, and under those circumstances he was bound to say that before the husband enlisted Mrs. Brooks had led an unhappy life. She accused her husband of misconduct, in consequence of which he ill-treated her.

Mrs. Brooks said she was bringing a divorce suit against her husband.

The latter, who was in khaki, went into the box and made serious allegations against his wife as to her conduct both before and after he enlisted.

Mrs. Brooks, recalled, described her husband’s allegations as infamous lies.

The Bench said apart from her husband’s allegations they did not consider the applicant a suitable one to have a license.”

Birmingham Daily Post 28/9/1893

“Mr. A. B. Smith (deputy coroner) held an inquest at the ROLLING MILL INN, Millfields Road, Bilston, yesterday, touching the death of Mary Ann Cartwright (65), of No.3 Millfields Road, who was burnt to death on Monday night. In opening the proceedings, the Coroner said a regrettable circumstance in connection with the unfortunate affair had come to his knowledge. It appeared that when the deceased was first found with her clothing on fire she was allowed to remain until a police officer was sent for, and there seemed to be an idea prevailing in the district that no one ought to interfere in a case of the kind until an officer appeared on the scene. Such a proposition was nonsensical in the extreme. In this case probably the life of the woman could not have been saved, but the neighbours might have prevented her being roasted almost beyond recognition. Not long ago the life of a man who hanged himself might have been saved if he had been cut down when first seen.

The evidence showed that the deceased suffered from the effects of a paralytic stroke, and in the absence of her husband a woman named Pumphrey was employed to attend to her. On Monday night Pumphrey left the woman for a short time, and during her absence deceased's clothing ignited, and the flames were extinguished by neighbours. Police-constable Currie said he was called to the house by a boy, who said the woman was still burning, and that the neighbours were under the impression that they could not touch her until a policeman arrived. When he reached the place he found a crowd of people around the door, and they might have moved the body, instead of allowing it to get cooked. The deceased was lying with her head near the grate, in which there was a bright fire up to the top bar. The body of the deceased was still being roasted when he reached the house. A verdict was returned that the woman came to her death Accidentally.”

The name was altered to ROLLING MILL in the licensing register on 29th August 1899.

Rough Hills Lane [1871]

Rooker Avenue [1932], [2005]

It had a beerhouse license.

Birmingham Daily Post 16/9/1862

“On Sunday morning a man named William Trevitt was found drowned in the Birmingham Canal, near Rough Hills, Wolverhampton. The deceased, who was a keeper, and who was to have opened a beerhouse called the ROUGH HILLS TAVERN, at Rough Hills, on Saturday, was missed on the previous Wednesday. Late on the night of that day he parted with a man named Bickers, in the Green Lanes. There can be no doubt that the deceased, being then intoxicated, must afterwards have accidentally fallen into the canal, as he had not been robbed, his money being in his pocket when he was found.”

Wolverhampton Chronicle 10/1/1866

“James Trevitt, beerhouse keeper, Roughhills, was charged upon a summons, issued under the authority of the Inland Revenue Board, with having sold one gill of spirits on the 25th of November, without having a license authorising him so to do. Mr. Allcorn, supervisor, supported the summons, and Mr. J. E. Underhill appeared for the defence. It appeared from the evidence of two common informers, named Richard Bray and Paul Roper, that in consequence of a communication received from Mr. Allcorn, they went to the defendant’s beerhouse about five o’clock in the afternoon of the 23rd of November, and after having some ale, Bray asked the defendant’s wife for a quarter of rum, handing her a bottle to put it in. She went upstairs and brought the rum, for which she charged sixpence. The witness, in answer to Mr. Underhill, said they had previously laid informations for the Excise, and had received compensation for so doing, generally consisting of half the penalty, less expenses. They sat in the tap-room, and no one was present except the landlady, the servant, and some little children, who were in and out of the room. This was the whole of the evidence, and Mr. Allcorn, in reply to the Bench, said the onus of proving that he had a license lay upon the defendant.

Mr. Underhill, for the defence, complained that in this case, which was in the nature of a criminal proceeding, the summons did not furnish full information of what the defendant had to answer, as it ought to do. He said that the Excise had acted disgracefully towards the defendant, for they had refused, upon a written application from him (Mr. Underhill) to state who supplied the rum, to whom it was served, and at what hour. Under these circumstances the object of the Excise must be to get a conviction whether the defendant was guilty or not. It might be said that if such information were given evidence for the defence might be manufactured, but the duty of the Bench was to sift the evidence brought before them. The law prevented him from calling the defendant’s wife, but she instructed him to say that she never sold a particle of rum in the house in her life. Mr. Underhill asked the Bench not to convict on the uncorroborated evidence of two common informers, who had a pecuniary inducement to seek to get convictions in cases of this kind. He then called Ann Carney, who was servant at the house on the day in question, and she said she had lived at the defendant’s twelve weeks, and never saw any rum sold there. She was at the house all day on the 25th of November, was in and out of the tap-room, and did not see the informers.

Stephen Davis, a butty miner, under Mr. Aston, stated that he was in the tap-room of the house from about half-past one until about half-past seven on the day in question, and saw no men, except his own workpeople, come in during that time, and no spirits sold.

This was the last witness, and the Magistrates said they must convict. The full penalty was £50, but they would mitigate it to one-fourth that amount, £12 10s.”

Birmingham Daily Post 18/8/1870

“The annual special sessions of Wolverhampton Borough Justices, for the granting and renewal of licenses for the sale of spirituous liquors, and for the granting of certificates under the Wine and Beerhouse Act, is announced to be held at the Public Office, Garrick Street, on the 30th instant. The following is a list of persons who have given the usual notices of their intention to apply for new licenses on that day.

For wine or beer certificates.....

James Trevitt, of the ROUGH HILLS TAVERN, Rough Hills, for beer, &c, on the premises.”

[The application was granted.]

“An inquest was held at the ROUGH HILLS TAVERN, Wolverhampton, on Saturday, by Mr. W. H. Phillips, on the body of Sarah Cooper, aged 15 years, who died suddenly on Thursday night, about seven o’clock, under somewhat peculiar circumstances. Deceased was the daughter of George Cooper, who is employed at Mr. Bayliss’s, and on Tuesday she came home ill. She complained of a pain in her stomach, grew worse, and died on the day named, after suffering from vomiting. It was proved that no medical evidence had been called in, and the Coroner said he would adjourn the enquiry for a post mortem examination.”

“On Monday the borough Coroner concluded his inquiry touching the death of Sarah Cooper, aged 15, of Rough Hill, who died under circumstances that led to the stomach being sent to Dr. Hill, of Birmingham, who now proved the absence of all poison, and that the deceased died from inflammation of the stomach, the result of natural causes. The jury returned a verdict accordingly.”

“About nine o’clock on Saturday morning the dead body of a woman was found in the basin adjoining the Birmingham Canal. It was afterwards discovered to be the body of a woman named Jane Smith, aged 60. An inquest was held at the ROUGH HILL TAVERN, on Monday, at which it was thought that the deceased had accidentally fallen into the water. A verdict was returned accordingly.”

Midland Examiner 8/1/1876

“Samuel Silvey, labourer, was charged under a warrant, for having failed to attend to the summons, with having assaulted Hannah Trevitt, landlady of the ROUGH HILLS TAVERN, on the 11th September.

According to complainant’s statement, on the day in question, defendant went to her house, and not calling for anything to drink, immediately gave her a blow and knocked her down. She called a woman to support this statement.

Defendant, in answer to the charge, said the complainant gave some men a quantity of beer to throw on his house, and he was otherwise greatly annoyed. He went to the tavern to lodge a complaint, when the men who had thrown the beer set on him with others, ‘knocking both him and his wife almost to pieces.’ He at once informed Police-constable Ray, and afterwards applied for six summonses, but not having the money could not obtain them. He called Police-constable Ray who said the defendant had complained to him, as stated, and he had evidently been ‘in the wars.’

The Bench considered the assault proved, but that there was provocation, and they imposed the mitigated penalty of 1s and costs, or 14 days. The defendant said he had no money. Capt. Segrave remarked that during the last twelve months the defendant had suffered five months imprisonment for assault, and been also bound over to keep the peace.”

Wolverhampton Express and Star 21/8/1879

“The annual Brewster Sessions for the borough of Wolverhampton were held this morning.....

Mr. Joseph Underhill (instructed by Mr. Stirk) made an application under such circumstances as he said he did not recollect to have heard of in his previous experience.

For many years past and up to 1878 there had been a license in existence for a house called the ROUGH HILLS TAVERN at Rough Hills, within the borough. The house and land originally belonged to Mr. E. Dixon, who some time ago sold the property to Mr. Fenn. During 1877 and 1878 the house fell into a dilapidated condition, and whilst in that condition the license was transferred to James Trevitt. At the Licensing Sessions last year no notice of objection to the renewal was made, and the magistrates granted the renewal. There was no one present on behalf of Trevitt, the house being then disused and pulled down, and when subsequently application was made to the magistrates clerk for the document of renewal which the magistrates had signed, the clerk said that having kept it until after the 10th October, when the previous license lapsed, he had destroyed the document. The delay in the application was owing to the illness of Mr. Fenn, who was interested in the license, and who was intending to have it transferred from Trevitt to himself, and the contention of Mr. Umbers that the license had fallen through had caused an inconvenient complication of affairs, because Mr. John Edward Stevens, who had purchased a portion of the land from Mr. Fenn, and had levelled some old mounds, was going to build a first-class property near to the disused tavern, and make an oasis in the desert of Rough Hill, and it was intended to have the license passed over to this new house. He (Mr. Underhill) contended that Mr. Umbers was clearly wrong in tearing up a document signed by the magistrates, but if the licensing justices held that the license had lapsed, then he applied for a provisional license to Mr. Stevens.

[A license was not granted to Stevens nor was the license renewed to Trevitt as the magistrates did not consider there was one to renew.]

“At the Police Court yesterday, Mr. Joseph Underhill (instructed by Mr. Stirk) again appeared in support of the application for the transfer of the license of the ROUGH HILLS TAVERN from Mr. Trevitt to Mr. Stevens. Mr. H. Underhill (instructed by the Chief of Police under the authority of the Watch Committee) opposed the transfer.

It may be remembered that the old house was pulled down owing to its subsidence by reason of the underground mining operations, and the new tavern was built some yards away from the original site. At the last Licensing Sessions the Bench refused to grant the renewal of the license, and an appeal was made to the Quarter Sessions and a license was granted. Since that time Mr. Trevitt has been selling under the license obtained from the Excise authorities.

The Town Clerk now asked that the case should be adjourned in order that the transferor might be summoned for selling excisable liquors on unlicensed premises. If the magistrates then decided that the new house was substantially the same as the old one there would be no conviction, and the question at issue would be settled. The case was then adjourned until the 16th inst, when it is understood that both the charge of illegally selling and the application for transfer will be heard.”

“James Trevitt, of the ROUGH HILLS TAVERN beerhouse, was summoned for selling a pint of ale on unlicensed premises. Mr. Henry Underhill (town clerk) appeared to prosecute on behalf of the police authorities, and Mr. Joseph Underhill (instructed by Mr. Stirk) defended.

The Town Clerk, in explaining the facts for the prosecution, stated that at a former court an application was made for the license held by the defendant to be transferred from him to Mr. J. E. Stephens, but it was adjourned until the present Court, in order that the real question should be decided as to whether the new house, which had been erected, was licensed or not. The magistrates decision on that point would rule the application for the transfer. Up to four or five years ago there was situate on the Rough Hills estate, which was between Monmore Green and the Parkfield Road, an old beerhouse known as the ROUGH HILLS TAVERN, which was originally licensed by the Excise authorities before the magistrates had jurisdiction over beerhouses. Mr. J. E. Stephens has since become the owner of the property. Owing to the mining operations in that locality the old house became in such a dilapidated state that it was pulled down, and a new house had since been erected. At the last licensing sessions for the borough, the magistrates refused either to grant a license for the new house which was not then built, or to renew the license for the old house which had at that time been pulled down. The defendant appealed to the succeeding Staffordshire Quarter Sessions when the Court reversed the borough magistrates decision, and granted a license for what they described as ‘the ROUGH HILLS TAVERN,’ although there was no such house in existence at the time. The point for the Magistrates now to decide was whether the new house could be considered as a restoration of the old house in the shape of a substitution of the new house. The Town Clerk went on to argue that as the new house had not been built on the site of the old house it could not be considered a substitution for the old one, and therefore it could not be deemed to be licensed.

Police-constable Thomas Smith was then called and proved the sale of a pint of ale by the defendant’s wife in the new house on the 1st instant.

Police-sergeant Day said the new house had been erected 60 yards from the spot where the old house stood, and was that distance nearer to the road which ran near to the property. When the old house became in a ruinous state, there were numerous sinkings of the surface from mining operations, but some of them had since been filled up and the surface levelled.

Thomas Hampton, landlord of the LION public house, Parkfield Road, said the new house occupied by the defendant had been built within 100 yards of his house. The ground surrounding the old house was all open, and not fenced in. There was, however, a road which led by the defendant’s house, from which a cart-road branched off on to the Parkfield Road.

Henry Gwillam, miner, of Rough Hills, said he had known that locality for many years. The old road which went past the defendant’s house was at one time a tram road between Ettingshall Colliery and the old Wolverhampton furnaces, now pulled down, besides being used generally by the public.

Cross-examined: There was a bowling green by the side of the old house, but not the side nearest the new house.

Mr. Joseph Underhill, for the defence, said he failed to understand the continuous litigation and extraordinary opposition in this case. The public had been benefitted by the old house having been pulled down and an excellent new house erected in its place. The owner of the property had invested his capital and provided a new house without any intimation being given him that the license would be withheld from him. The only reason given for it was that he had not built upon the ruinous foundation of the old house, but had chosen instead those of a safe and sound foundation 60 yards away from the old site. At the time the annual Borough Licensing Sessions were held the old ROUGH HILLS TAVERN was not in existence, but the holders of licenses were told that their licenses would be renewed. When, however, the license was asked for, it turned out that it had been destroyed. The learned counsel went on to refer to the appeal to the Quarter Sessions, when the borough magistrates' decision was reversed.

Mr. Umber (magistrates clerk) said the Court of Quarter Sessions refused to hear witnesses on behalf of the magistrates.

Mr. Joseph Underhill said that all that the Court of Quarter Sessions refused to do was when it was proposed to go into the question of rating, they said only the question of the old license was at issue and not that of a new license, and, therefore, the value of rental was irrelevant to the question. There was no concealment because the Court was informed that the license was for the new house, and he complained bitterly of the opposition in the case. The Court of Quarter Sessions refused a case for appeal because a question of fact only was at issue, though the borough magistrates had a right of certiorari, but they did not avail themselves of it.

A long discussion took place between the learned counsel and the Town Clerk, during which the latter contended that 'where a licensed house ceased to exist the license lapsed also,' the remedy for which was the erection of a new house and a new license altogether.

Mr. Joseph Underhill then submitted that the new house was a substitution for the old house, and called Mr. William Fenn, coalmaster, the former owner of the property, who said he worked a portion of the mines under this property within 18 yards of the surface. It would have been very unsafe to build on any portion of the ground between the old and new house. The mines were got from under the new house 25 years ago, and therefore all the subsidence there had taken place.

The magistrates then retired to consider their decision. On returning into court after a long absence, Sir John Morris said they had decided to dismiss the case.

The license was afterwards transferred from Mr. Trevitt to Mr. J. E. Stephens, the owner."

“Yesterday, at Wolverhampton Borough Police Court, Samuel Walters, ROUGH HILLS TAVERN, appeared upon three summonses charging him with permitting gambling on his licenses premises. Mr. Brevitt (town clerk) prosecuted for the Watch Committee; and Mr. Dallow defended.

The offences were alleged to have taken place on the 19th, 26th, and 28th ult, and they were proved mainly by Policeman John Astle (a new member of the force) and Police-constables Naginton and Bennett.

Astle deposed to betting at ninepins on the 19th, as much as 5s passing from hand to hand. Defendant was present, and remarked that Naginton was about. When Naginton appeared the betting was suspended, but renewed when he had left. There was a running track attached to the house, and at seven in the evening defendant took away the bowls, because a race was coming off. Witness heard one man say that he had lost a sovereign, and another that he had lost his week's wages, all but one shilling. Later in the evening six men were playing cards in the bar in the defendant's presence. A quart of ale and afterwards sixpence were the stakes. A second lot of men also obtained cards from the defendant, and ale was played for. Dice were used on the 26th, the defendant being present. Policeman Bennett came in, and the defendant saying, 'Here's a copper,' took away the dice. When Bennett had left witness saw a bookmaker booking bets on a race, and he heard half a crown to a penny staked as to Bennett being a policeman. On the 28th there was card playing for money or money's worth.

Mr. Dallow complained that his client had not until the 8th inst received any intimation that he would have to account for proceedings happening on the 19th August. Defendant, doubtless, had been guilty of misconduct, but he desired to conduct his house within the strict letter of the law, and on race days he engaged a policeman to enforce order and keep down betting, which he prohibited by placard.

Defendant, upon being sworn, said he was the mortgagee of the premises, and in October last entered to defend his interests. Whenever he saw betting he stopped it, and did not know that during card playing stakes were played for. He proposed to close the bowling alley forthwith.

In cross-examination by the Town Clerk, defendant admitted that he had been three times warned by the police about betting.

The magistrates imposed a penalty of £5 in each of the three cases, and endorsed defendant's license in respect of one case.”

Mr. Dallow, solicitor, applied to his Honour, Judge Griffith, for a discharge in the case of Samuel Waters, late of the ROUGH HILLS TAVERN, near Monmore Green, on whose bankruptcy an unfavourable report had been made to the Court by the Official Receiver. Mr. Dallow said that the bankrupt was formerly engaged in the cabinet trade, in which he acquired a considerable sum of money. He disposed of that business and took to the ROUGH HILLS TAVERN, and also spent £4,000 in building a manufactory and two houses for Mr. Beard, japanner, Temple Street, who had himself since become a bankrupt. By Mr. Beard's failure Mr. Waters had lost rather heavily; and he had also had sustained other reverses in the timber trade. He had handed over all his property for the benefit of his creditors. It was stated that the committee of inspection did not object to the discharge being granted. The Official Receiver opposed the application on the ground that the debtor's books had not been kept properly. After going into the style of book-keeping, his Honour held that the bankrupt had not had fraudulent intention, but that he had been careless in his book-keeping. He suspended the grant of the discharge for three months.”

Mr. Rhodes applied for a music license for the ROUGH HILLS TAVERN and Grounds. He explained that Mr. Richard Bate, the present occupier, was desirous of having brass band contests in his grounds, and also to have music at bicycle races. He was determined not to revive the low demoralising sports which took place at the grounds under a former occupier, and the Bench might rest assured that nothing but what was respectable and elevating would be introduced.

Major Hay inquired if the applicant desired to have a license for dancing as well. Mr. Rhodes replied that Mr. Bate did not intend to have dancing as a regular thing, but he would nevertheless like to have the license.

Major Hay said he should strongly oppose dancing, but he did not objection to music. Mr. Rhodes said that his client would be satisfied with a music license, and the Bench thereupon granted the application.”

Mr. H. Brevitt (Town Clerk) appeared to prosecute, and Mr. Alfred Young (Birmingham) defended.

On the case being called, Mr. Young observed that it was practically impossible for the case to be determined that day, inasmuch as certain alterations would require to be made in the form of summons. Mr. Young said the summonses as they now appeared enclosed no offence in law, and, in point of fact, the magistrates had no jurisdiction to investigate what did not appear in the charges. Mr. Umbers (magistrates clerk) suggested that the summonses might be amended at once. Mr. Young objected, and declined to enter into the case at this, the eleventh hour. The Bench allowed the summonses to drop, and ordered fresh ones to be issued on the original information.”

Major Hay said that he would, with the permission of the Bench and because of certain promises on Mr. Bates’s behalf by his solicitor, withdraw the charge. Mr. Young pointed out that Mr. Bates had already taken precautions to prevent betting, and that, by a ruling of Mr. Justice Hawkins, responsibility for betting did not attach to the owner of any grounds unless he wilfully permitted the practice. On the understanding that defendant would publish notices in his grounds that all persons found betting would be ejected, the Bench permitted the case to be withdrawn.”

Akers, suffering from scalp wounds and concussion, was detained, and the other two were sent home after treatment.”

“The Wolverhampton Borough Coroner on Tuesday inquired further into the death of John Edward Fellows (18), 53, Bank Street, Bradley, which followed injuries resulting from the collapse of a roof and wall of a stable at the ROUGH HILLS TAVERN.

Ernest Henry Akers, 172, Wednesfield Road, said on the night of July 13th, six of them went to Rough Hills running ground to practice running. They changed in the stable. They had finished running and had gone back into the stable to get into their ordinary clothes when he heard the roof crash. He ran for the door, but when he got outside he remembered nothing more. The landlord had given them permission to use the stable.

Samuel Heath said he was there to train the boys. As they went to the door part of the roof caught some of them. Some bricks fell on Fellows.

Arthur Gascoyne, manager of the tavern, said he knew the boys had been using the stable, but it was not with his permission.

Mr. Marcus Brown, architect, Wolverhampton, who inspected the premises the day after the accident, said the roof had been wrongly constructed in the first instance. The pressure outwards had been going on ever since it was put up 47 years ago. It had eventually pushed out the weakest wall.

For the owners (the Wolverhampton and Dudley Breweries), Mr. F. L. Steward said plans for alterations with a view to improving the house had been made before the accident. These would have involved the pulling down of the building in question.

The Coroner said he did not think the jury would think there had been any negligence which amounted to criminal liability. The jury found a verdict of Accidental Death."

Evidence was given by the two detective officers that two women were served beer after 10 o'clock. The bar was full of men and women. Washbrook, when questioned, said, 'I admit there has been a little laxity on the part of the servants. I shouted 'Time' at 10 o'clock, but you know what it is to get them out.' When asked to explain the number of people in the house at 10.20pm he said, 'Only that it's Bank Holiday. I'm sorry this has happened.'

Cross-examined by Mr. F. L. Steward (for the defence), Detective-sergeant Marsh said Washbrook told him that the girl who served Miss Screen was a domestic servant.

Washbrook said so far as he was aware beer drinking definitely ceased at 10 o'clock. He was not in the bar between 10.1pm and 10.19pm. He said the domestic servant had definite instructions never to touch the beer pulls. Mr. Steward said Washbrook had been a licensed victualler for ten years and there had been no proceedings against him before. Mr. Steward said it must be proved that the offence had been committed either by the licensee himself or by his servant or agent. That servant must mean an authorised servant, and if the magistrates accepted Washbrook's evidence, the girl was not a barmaid and not authorised to sell beer.

Fines as stated were imposed."

“The pub in this faded photograph might be familiar to some of our Ettingshall readers. Brought in by Bob and Pat Wright, of Durberville Road, on the Rough Hills Estate, the pub in the picture is the old ROUGH HILLS TAVERN, which once stood on Rooker Avenue, before being replaced by a newer establishment of the same name. ‘The chap who kept the pub four of five years ago had this photo up behind the bar,’ Mr. Wright told us, and I talked him into letting me borrow it to get a copy done. The old alehouse evokes particularly fond memories for the Wrights – it was there that their son Gary got his first taste of beer – by dipping his dummy in a pint of Banks’s!”

South Wales Echo 2/6/1898

"A lamentable drowning case took place at Moxley, near Bilston, on Tuesday night. It appears that a young woman named Alice Richards (20), the daughter of James Richards, a locksmith, of Moffatts Lane, Willenhall, was keeping company with a man named Martin, who resides at the ROUND COUNTER INN, Bradley, Bilston, and on Tuesday night they went for a walk with a female friend. On reaching Moxley a quarrel occurred, and Richards took off a ring she was wearing and gave it to her female companion with the remark, 'Keep this in remembrance of me.' She then walked to the Birmingham Canal, a short distance away, and jumped in. So far as can be gathered, her companions did nothing to rescue her, and the body was taken from the water on Wednesday morning, after Martin had given information of the affair to the Willenhall Police. When questioned why he did not attempt to save the deceased, the excuse was given that he could not swim. The body was removed to the JUNCTION INN, Catherines Cross."

Birmingham Mail 5/6/1898

"Yesterday afternoon Mr. H. A. Pearson (County Coroner) held an inquest at the JUNCTION INN, Catherines Cross, Darlaston, respecting the death of Alice Richardson (20), a single woman, residing in Walsall Street, Willenhall, who had committed suicide by drowning at Herberts Park under very distressing circumstances.

John Richardson, the father, said deceased had a child 17 months old, and a young man named Thomas Martin was alleged to be the father. Martin had promised to marry the deceased.

Thomas Martin, a miner, residing at Bradley, said he had known the deceased about three years. On the night of the 31st ult he accompanied the deceased and a young woman named Florence Ward, and in the presence of the deceased he was guilty of misconduct with Ward. Subsequently, on arriving at Herberts Park Canal, he saw the deceased throw off her hat and jump into the canal. He was unable to swim, and was consequently afraid to attempt to rescue her. He saw the deceased rise to the surface of the water twice, but he was unable to reach her.

Florence Ann Ward, who stated that she was 15 years of age and resided with her parents at Bilston, gave corroborative evidence.

The jury returned a verdict that the deceased committed Suicide when of Unsound Mind.

At the request of the jury, the Coroner severely censured Martin for his horrible and despicable conduct in the presence of the deceased, and also for his unmanly behaviour in making no attempt to rescue the deceased."

Wolverhampton Chronicle 8/12/1858

“Ann Burke, described as a prostitute, was charged with uttering base coin, in the month of September last. Evidence was given to show that on a certain evening, in September last, she had passed a bad crown piece at Mr. Bache's liquor shop, in High Street, Bilston, and another at the HIMLEY ARMS, kept by Mr. Tombs; she also on the same night offered another at Mr. Peck's liquor shop in Oxford Street. She had absconded immediately afterwards, and was only recently arrested in Wolverhampton, where she was living, somewhere in the neighbourhood of the notorious ‘Cat-yard.’ She was remanded for a week to give time to communicate with the authorities at the Mint.

AND

“Staffordshire Quarter Sessions.....

Ann Burke, alias Durkin, 21, no occupation, was indicted for uttering two counterfeit crown pieces, at Bilston, well knowing the same to be false and counterfeit. On the 22nd of September last the prisoner, late in the evening, went to Tome's liquor vaults, in High Street, Bilston, and called for a glass of porter, in payment for which she tendered a crown piece. The coin was taken, and was put by the daughter of the landlady into the till. On counting, the same evening, the money in the till, the landlady discovered that this crown piece was counterfeit, and having marked it, she gave it to the police. It was afterwards discovered that the same evening the prisoner went to Peck's liquor vaults, in Oxford Street, and called for a glass of ale, for which she tendered another counterfeit crown piece. On being told that it was counterfeit she said that it had been given to her by a gentleman, and that she did not know it was counterfeit. She paid for the ale with three half-pence, and then went to Bache's spirit vaults, and there offered another counterfeit crown piece in payment for some drink, repeating, on being told it was counterfeit, the same story that she had, told at Peck's. Information was given to the police, but as the prisoner had been allowed to leave, she made her escape, and was not apprehended until the 1st of December.

Mr. S. Hill, who appeared for the prisoner, submitted to the Jury, as the defence, that these counterfeit crown pieces had, as she stated, been really given her by a scoundrel who had been wicked enough to take advantage of the unhappy calling which the unfortunate woman followed, and contended that considering the facilities which unprincipled men had for passing off bad money under such circumstances, nothing could be more likely to be true than the story told by the prisoner.

The Jury found the prisoner guilty. The learned Chairman, in sentencing her to twelve months' hard labour, reminded that two and a half years previously she had been convicted of stealing money.”

Evening Despatch 11/4/1929

“Exciting scenes were witnessed at Bilston today, when the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Chapel Street, was destroyed by fire. When the Bilston Brigade arrived, they found the building burning furiously. Flames were pouring from the doors and windows. The landlord and his family had escaped by jumping through the windows. The outbreak was discovered by a son of the landlord, who, feeling thirsty, got out of bed for a drink, and found the room full of smoke. He raised the alarm, and when the brigade arrived two minutes later, they found a serious task set before them. Adjoining the licensed house were a number of cottages, and to prevent the fire extending to these the firemen stripped the roofs. A policeman, who was assisting to fight the fire, fell through the roof of the house and sustained injury to his hands and legs. The ROYAL EXCHANGE was completely gutted and the contents of four rooms destroyed. The cause of the outbreak is at present unknown”

Daily Mirror 12/4/1929

‘Wonderful bravery was displayed by Mrs. May Higgs, of the ROYAL EXCHANGE HOTEL, Chapel Street, Bilston, Staffordshire, when, with four of her children, she was trapped by fire in her bedroom yesterday. Although badly burned by the flames that leapt about her she threw her children one by one from the window to rescuers in the street. She then jumped to safety but immediately collapsed.’

Mr. Stewart submitted plans for the re-construction of the ROYAL EXCHANGE, Chapel Street, Bilston, which was badly damaged by fire in April 1929. Mr. Stewart said that the plans provided for a new house, with excellent modern arrangements, and he hoped the plans would meet with the approval of the Bench. The Bench approved the plans.”

“Ernest Clarence Whitehead, aged 36, against whom there were previous convictions, and who gave an address in Corser Street, Wolverhampton, was at Bilston yesterday sent to gaol for two months for obtaining 3s by false pretences from John Knight, licensee of the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Chapel Street, Bilston.

Evidence was that accused called at the inn and represented that he was consulting engineer to a company who were going to start on a job at Mount Pleasant, Bilston, and asked Knight to find him six men for excavation work, a boy about fourteen for odd jobs, and a girl about sixteen to answer the telephone. As a guarantee that he would get the men Knight handed over 3s.”

Sandwell Evening Mail 21/5/1994

“Down Your Local. The ROYAL EXCHANGE, Bilston.

Woe betide anyone who does not join in that Saturday night singalong at the ROYAL EXCHANGE – they’re likely to get a red hot poker where it hurts! It isn’t some strange Black Country ritual, but landlord Mo Davy’s attempt to get everyone to join in the fun. ‘Last Saturday, some of the old dears were not getting involved,’ said 42 year-old Mo. ‘So I chased them round the bar with a red hot poker. They soon joined in then! The other week I hit someone else with a piece of French bread, and they too soon got the message.’

Strange, you might say. But you’ve got to remember, this is deepest Black Country we’re talking about. Mo’s military background – he spent eight years in the Royal Navy – might explain his somewhat unconventional methods aimed at customer participation. ‘It’s obviously all done for a laugh and everyone takes it well,’ he said, adding, ‘Just as well really.’

Judging from the bar room banter he shares with his lunchtime customers, you would not think he’d been at the pub only three months. He has rapidly become a favourite for these diehard locals who are even prepared to overlook the fact that he and his wife Jan, age 42, are originally from Sussex. Prior to the ROYAL EXCHANGE, the couple, who have a one-year-old daughter, lived in Coventry for 12 years where Mo, a self-confessed motorbike freak worked for the local council on a motorcycle project. But they had harboured ambitions of running a pub for some time and were more than happy to move to Bilston where they have friends. ‘I’ve been in the pub trade only a couple of years,’ he said. ‘People I know in the business have been great and have taught me all I know. The pub has been well-known for years for one thing in particular – monster sarnies. Lorry drivers pull into a nearby haulage firm for a wash and brush up and then nip across the road for some tasty grub. ‘We pride ourselves on not serving any frozen food,’ said Mo. ‘Even the pork scratchings are home-made. It restricts what you can serve, but I believe you get too much of that frozen stuff in pubs nowadays.’

The ROYAL EXCHANGE is one of the town’s oldest pubs, dating back to the last century. It has a small lounge and slightly larger bar with real coal fire and wooden beams – plus a piano for those evening singalongs. The latest Black Country Good Beer Guide describes it as, ‘A superb, unspoilt pub. An example of what a pub should be like – long may it remain unspoilt by progress.’ It has won several awards from Father Hudson’s Homes for collecting the most money in the area over the years.

South Staffordshire Times 8/3/1924

“The adjourned Licensing Sessions for the Bilston Division were held yesterday, before a full Bench of Justices, Mr. E. Hickman presided.....

Considerable opposition was offered to the provisional application for a license to new premises it was proposed on land in Parkfield Road. Mr. Skidmore made the application. Mr. Turton opposed on behalf of the owner and tenant of the RED LION, Parkfield Road, and Mr. J. F. Bourke (instructed by Messrs. Landon and Barrows) on behalf of the owner and licensee of the PARKFIELD TAVERN. The application was opposed by the Rev. W. E. Richardson, Primitive Methodist Church, Parkfield Road; the Vicar of Ettingshall (Rev. W. H. R. Gipps); Mrs. Hodgetts on behalf of herself and neighbours; Mr. Geo. Watkins, on behalf of the Vicar of Blakenhall; Mr. Staghouse, on behalf of the trustees of the Primitive Methodist Church, Parkfield; and Mr. Joseph Hately, on behalf of the residents and trustees of Parkfield Primitive Methodist Church.

Mr. Skidmore, in his remarks to the justices, said the proposal was to remove the GIFFORD ARMS, Codsall Wood, which was a rural district and already well served, to a proposed site in Parkfield Road. The site to which it was proposed to transfer the license was a different proposition. The site was directly opposite the new estate which was being developed by the Wolverhampton Corporation and a large number of houses had been run up there. The new road to Birmingham would run within a very few yards of the site. He knew it was unusual to ask for the removal of a license in one district to another, and the justices might say that Codsall would lose one license and this district get one more. If the justices granted the removal of the license of the GIFFORD ARMS, the applicant was prepared to give up the license of the ROYAL EXCHANGE, Queen Street, Bilston, an ‘on’ beer license. So at any rate they would get rid of one license in the county for nothing. They would get a license transferred from a place where it was not particularly required, to a site where it would be of great public convenience, and he ventured to suggest that the justices should not take too narrow a view. Mr. Skidmore added he should produce plans by which it would be seen that the house it was proposed to erect upon the site was most modern and up-to-date in every way.

Mr. Tomlins, Wolverhampton, explained the plans and spoke of the increase in dwellings which would take place by a housing scheme which was being pressed forward.

Mr. F. B. Housiaux, the owner of the estate upon which it was proposed to build the new premises, said he was a general dealer and he approached Mr. Myatt with a scheme suggesting it would make a good site for a licensed house, and agreed to sell it to him.

Mr. Bourke, in his opposition to the application, emphasised the fact that the justices were asked to remove a license which was outside, into their district. Much had been said on housing and the new road, but under the present conditions he urged that the district was well supplied with licensed houses.

Mr. Turton expressed the opinion that the present was not a suitable time to grant such an application.

The Rev. W. E. Hutchinson, speaking on behalf of the petitioners against the granting of a license, said one point was that there were sufficient licensed houses in the neighbourhood to meet requirements. They felt the future should take care of itself and they asked the justices to wait and see what may be the conditions in the future. Within half a mile of the proposed site were seven places where refreshments could be obtained. Nearly seventy-five per cent of the people living in the new houses had signed a petition against it.

The Justices retired, and after a brief absence, the chairman announced that they had given careful attention to the application, and the petition against it, and were unanimous in declining it.”

“John Smith, beerhouse keeper, of Shropshire Row, was charged with selling ale at midnight on the 4th inst. The case was adjourned from that day fortnight, when the police stated that having suspicions that the defendant was in the habit of selling ale after hours they watched the house, and saw some men who worked during the night take bottles to the house, and on their coming out they found that they were filled with ale. Smith called the men referred to, who swore that they never entered the house, but found the bottles filled outside. Today persons who lived opposite were called, who confirmed the evidence of the police, and swore positively to seeing the parties enter the house. Smith was fined 40s and costs.”

Darlaston Weekly Times 15/9/1883

“Mr. W. H. Phillips, district coroner, held an inquest at the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Bradley, on Thursday afternoon, touching the death of Frederick William Murty, aged eight years, of Arthur Street, Bradley.

Deceased was crossing a plank placed across the Birmingham Canal, as a means of communication with the Caponfield furnaces, when (it is supposed) he fell into the water and was drowned.

William Murty, father of the deceased, said he last saw the lad at home on the morning of the occurrence, and he was about to go out gathering manure for some mushroom spawn he had. In about half an hour after, witness heard that the body of his son had been found in the canal, about 200 yards from his house. He had never known the boy go near the canal before, as the place was so very unsafe. A number of persons had been drowned by falling off a plank about two feet wide, placed as a bridge across the canal. It was almost a daily occurrence for some one to fall in the water there. Although he could not blame any one for his son's death, he strongly complained of such a trap being left.

Elijah Pickering, labourer, employed at Caponfield Works, said he was on the towing path of the canal near the stop, when he saw a small barrow laden with manure on the revolving plank across the canal. Part of the contents of the barrow were upset, and near was a quantity of water, as though there had been a splash. The handles of the barrow were partly in the water. The appearances caused him to think some one had fallen in the water. He got a boat shaft, and dragged the water, when he found the body of the deceased about two yards from where the barrow was standing. Had any boat passed, the barrow would have been knocked into the water, as the plank was placed on a pedestal and revolved for the purpose of allowing boats to pass. The lock-keeper's house was about ten yards away, and the lock-keeper was at home. It was a very awkward place for a boy to cross.

William Amos, boatman, of Cross Street, Bradley, said he saw the boy picking manure, with a borrow, a few minutes before the body was taken out of the water. He was then on the tow path, and about three yards from the place where the body was got out. In a quarter of an hour afterwards, he saw the dead body got out, and recognised it as the boy he had previously seen, and who had in the meantime crossed the plank to come home. He heard no splash, but was positive that no boat had come by in the interim.

The jury explained to the coroner that the place was in a very defective state, and positively dangerous to any one crossing.

The coroner said he had held an inquest before on a person who was drowned in the same place, and a recommendation was then made that a rail should be placed along the plank.

The foreman of the Jury said the rail had been placed there, but the boats passing had knocked it to pieces. If the bridge were removed, the men would have to go a quarter of a mile round for their beer.

The coroner commented on the danger of the bridge, and the jury, in returning a verdict of Accidental Death, added a rider, urging an immediate alteration of the place."

"John Roberts, son of the landlord of the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, Salop Street, Bradley, was charged with assaulting Daniel Turner.

Complainant said that he went to the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN on Sunday night, when defendant came up to him and gave him a punch in the eye. He turned, and defendant then gave him another blow in the face. Then defendant and his brother got him down and kicked him.

William Turner, of Salop Street, Bradley, was charged with assaulting Watson Roberts; Daniel Turner, of Salop Street, Bradley, and Alfred Turner, of Field Street, Bradley, and William Turner, of Salop Street, Bradley, were charged with being disorderly and refusing to quit. The evidence went to show that the Turners quarrelled in the ROYAL EXCHANGE INN, and were ejected by the landlord. Daniel Turner then broke two panes of glass with his fist.

The charge against Roberts was dismissed, and the Turners were each fined 5s and costs."

“At Wolverhampton Police Court, this afternoon, Frederick John Hibbell, licensed victualler, of Wolverhampton and Coventry, and a town councillor of Coventry, was charged with embezzlement. The defendant was in the employ of the Wolverhampton and Dudley Breweries Company Ltd., as traveller, at £3 a week and commission. He obtained a large circle of customers in Wolverhampton and district, and in the course of his business he received money and allowed discount, eventually running his yearly income to £600. The prosecution, which was conducted by Mr. R. T. Lawrence, barrister, adduced the case of Mrs. Roberts, licensed victualler, of Bradley, upon whom the defendant called every week, and it was clearly proved that the defendant allowed a certain discount to the customer, but charged a larger one to his firm. In the case mentioned the overcharge was 4s 6d. There were several other cases, averaging from 2s to 10s 6d. In Mrs. Roberts’s case he was instructed to allow her 22½ per cent, but only allowed her 20 per cent discount. When brought before the directors of the company he said he was unable to give an account of the matter. The Stipendiary said it was a serious case, and defendant would have to go to Stafford for three months with hard labour.”

"The committee of gentlemen appointed to conduct local celebrations of the marriage of the Prince of Wales brought their labours to a very happy and imposing close on Wednesday evening last, by a complimentary dinner to their Chairman, and the Chairman of the Board of Town Commissioners. The repast, of excellent character, was served up by Mr. George Hyde, of the BULLS HEAD INN, at St. Leonard's Old Schoolroom, which had been so well decorated that its aspect was entirely changed, and bore a tasteful and most pleasant appearance. "Yesterday, the adjourned inquest on the body of John Hollingsworth, the young man who, as reported in Monday's Gazette, was killed by being thrown out of a gig on the Bilston Road, was held at the BULLS HEAD, Church Street, Bilston, before Mr. T. M. Phillips, Coroner.

Mr. Pearce, landlord of the SPRINGFIELDS INN, Wolverhampton (where the deceased had been prior to starting on his drive), was called to prove that he left the house perfectly sober, and Mr. Best, surgeon, deposed that death resulted from fracture of the skull and depression on the brain, caused by the accident.

A verdict of Accidental Death was returned, but the jury censured Butler, the publican, to whose house deceased was removed, and Price, the young man who was in the gig with him, for their lack of discretion in not having called in a medical man until several hours after the accident."

“Staffordshire Winter Assizes.....

Daniel Kyte, 25, pump maker, and Josiah Jackson, 24, joiner, were indicted for uttering two forged notes, at Sedgley, on the 23rd of September. Mr. Hill prosecuted, and Mr. Kenealy appeared in defence.

Mr. Hill opened the case by stating the facts as deposed by the following witnesses.

Mr. Baker, UNION MILLS INN, Catchems Corner, proved that the two prisoners, with a third man, and John Wedge, called at his house, on the 23rd of September. A note (Macclesfield Bank) was given him by his servant, and he took the change into the bar, and offered it to Wedge, whom he knew, but Wedge pointed to Jackson. Witness gave Jackson the change, and Jackson wrote the name ‘Williams’ upon it. The note also bore the name of Wedge.

John Wedge, Catchems Corner, said he saw the two prisoners in the street on the afternoon of the 23rd of September, one of whom he knew personally, and they asked him to get change for a £5 note on a distant (Macclesfield) bank. They told him it was good, and he took it to the house of a grocer named Eadie, but Eadie refused to change it. Witness then went home, and the prisoners followed him, and Kyte asked him to go and have something to drink. He went with them to Mr. Tippers’s, the BULLS HEAD, and a third man, who now joined the prisoners, offered the note again, but Mr. Tippers refused to change it. They then went to Mr. Baker’s, the UNION MILLS public house, but they did not stay there many minutes. Witness and the two prisoners next went to a foot race, at Sedgley, and when they returned they went to the ROYAL OAK. While there, Jackson offered another note, but the landlord would not change it. The next place they visited was Pennington’s, the BRIDGE INN, going afterwards to Owen’s, the ROYAL OAK, again. On the way Jackson asked what sort of house Tippers’s was, and made inquiries about the ‘strong box.’ In consequence of other conversation witness asked what had become of the first note they showed him, and they told him they had ‘passed’ it at Baker’s. In the course of this conversation Jackson placed a second note in witness’s hands, and witness told him he should keep it till he ascertained that the first was a good one. When this was told to Kyte and the third man, Kyte threatened to kill him. Witness said that unless he killed him outright he should appear against him. Kyte, Jackson, and the other man then attacked witness, and he became insensible. When he recovered himself he found his money gone – about £30 or £40. They did not, however, take the note he had just received from Jackson. This note was subsequently given to the police.

Cross-examined by Mr. Kenealy: The robbery took place in the ROYAL OAK INN. They did not offer witness any money to change the note; they told him that if he wanted a sovereign out of it he could have it, but he took no notice of them. When the first note was presented at the BULLS HEAD INN it had witness’s name upon it; it had been written in order to assist him in passing it.

By the Judge: The third man joined the two prisoners after they had been to Tippers’s.

Thomas Pennington, Bridge Street, proved that early in the afternoon of the 23rd, the prisoner Jackson offered him what he represented to be a £5 note. He considered it to be a bad one, and he told Jackson he didn’t like the look of it. Wedge was with Jackson when this occurred, and they were afterwards joined by Kyte and another man.

Cross-examined by Mr. Kenealy: Wedge seemed as anxious to change the note as the other man; he said he wanted 10s out of it.

William Vickers, WHITE HART INN, Bilston Street, Wolverhampton, proved that on the morning of the 23rd September, the two prisoners and a third man called at his house. The third man showed several notes in a handkerchief, and the prisoners asked witness to change them. They told him that if he offered £12 for three of them, they thought the man would take it. He was a simple man, they said, and wanted to spend his money, and subsequently they told witness that this third man had got the notes from his ‘woman,’ who ‘took’ them from a farmer. He had no money in the house, and he gave them no change.

Superintendent M’Crea produced the two notes – the one passed to Mr. Baker, and the other retained by Wedge.

Detective-officer Stokes proved having apprehended the prisoners in Park Street, Birmingham. A third man, named Brown, was apprehended, but the Magistrates discharged him. The prisoners told him they were aware the police were after them, and they could have got away if they desired.

In defence Mr. Kenealy alleged that the two prisoners were the victims of the third man, who had succeeded in making his escape. He pointed to different parts of the evidence to support this view, and especially to that of the witness Vickers.

The Judge returned a verdict of guilty, and the prisoners were each sentenced to ten years’ penal servitude.”

“On Saturday, at the ROYAL OAK INN, near Ettingshall Road Station, Mr. W. H. Phillips, district coroner, held an enquiry into the causes of the death of John Mowbray (55), platelayer, who was killed on the line on the previous Thursday.

William Mowbray, brother of the deceased, gave evidence as to his age, which he stated to be 55. Deceased was a platelayer, and for many years in the employment of the London and North Western Railway Company.

George Challenger, platelayer on the London and North Western Railway, who had been with the deceased when the accident happened, gave evidence showing that in avoiding a down goods train deceased had stepped on to the four-foot. The noise of the goods train prevented him from hearing an engine coming down the four-foot. Witness did not know whether the engine driver whistled. When the goods train was passing, witness's attention was drawn to it. After it had gone by he turned round, and saw Mowbray lying quite dead between the rails, on the four-foot. The accident occurred about twenty-five minutes to five pm.

By the Coroner: Witness had read the company's rules for platelayers. He was aware that they ought not to go on the four-foot.

After Moses Aston, platelayer, had given confirmatory evidence, the coroner said that the stationmaster could not too strongly impress on the company's servants the necessity for observing the rule not to go on the four-foot.

A verdict of Accidental Death was returned.”

“The Friezland Colliery, situate near to the gasworks, at Ettingshall, was the scene of an unfortunate accident yesterday afternoon, by which two men lost their lives. The colliery, which is only of small dimensions, is worked by Mr. Richard Lett, a beerhouse keeper, who resides at Ettingshall, but who has been the lessee of collieries at Spring Vale and Ettingshall for many years, and as an indication of the care with which he causes the working places and machinery to be inspected, there has not, until yesterday, been a fatal accident in any of the pits for thirty-two years.

The miners went to work about eight o’clock in the morning, after the ‘doggy’ had reported the working places to be in a safe condition, and the operation of coal-getting in the headings proceeded safely until about half-past one o’clock. At that time Robert Hawkins (37), a married man, of No.5, Nelsons Yard, Bridge Street, Bilston, and John Tranter (35), single, of Temple Street, Bilston, were working in a heading, when a quantity of coal fell and partially buried them. The noise of coal falling attracted the attention of four other men who were working near, and they at once hurried to the place and set to work to release their unfortunate fellow-workmen. The weight of coal was, however, so great that they could not be extricated until after half-an-hour’s hard work, and it was then found that both the men were dead. The bodies were removed to their late homes to await an inquest. The deceased man Hawkins leaves a widow and three small children.”

“Mr. A. B. Smith (deputy county coroner) opened an inquest at the SHIP AND RAINBOW INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, yesterday evening, touching the deaths of the two men, Robert Hawkins and John Tranter, who were killed in the Friezland Colliery at Ettingshall, under circumstances already reported. Mr. Wassall appeared for Mr. Lett, the owner of the colliery.

Mary Ann Hawkins, widow of Robert Hawkins, said she never heard her husband complain of anything at the colliery.

Mary Ann Bayley, housekeeper to John Tranter, to whom she was to have been married in a short time, also gave evidence to the effect that he had never complained about his work.

The inquest was then adjourned until Tuesday next.”

“On Tuesday an inquest was held on the bodies of John Tranter, 64, Temple Street, and Robert Hawkins, 35, Bridge Street, both miners, who met with their deaths in the Friezland Colliery, Ettingshall, belonging to Mr. Lett, on the 6th inst, under circumstances already reported. Mr. Wassall represented the owner of the colliery. Mr. Pickering, assistant inspector of mines, was also present.

According to the evidence, the working places in the mine were properly examined before the men went to work, and the slip in the roof was quite unexpected, as the sprags were set within the distance required by the provisions of the Mines Regulation Act. Mr. Pickering said he did not think anyone was to blame, and a verdict of Accidental Death was returned.”

“A post mortem examination was being held today on a 49-year-old woman who was found dead at a Bilston public house. She was Mrs. Patricia Kettle, wife of the licensee of the ROYAL OAK in Ettingshall Road. Her husband, Mr. Sidney Kettle, who was also found unconscious on the premises by a cleaner is now recovering in hospital. Workmen from the West Midland Gas Board were called to the public house after three other people, including a police constable, were overcome by fumes. They were all treated at the Royal Hospital, Wolverhampton, and later discharged. A spokesman for Wolverhampton Borough Coroner’s Office, said today, ‘A post mortem is to be carried out on Mrs. Kettle. We understand she had been suffering from flu, and although there is evidence of gas fumes being present, they may not have been directly responsible for her death.’”

“Obadiah Batte, collector of taxes and a parish constable, was on Tuesday summoned on the charge of assaulting Samuel Egerton, landlord of the ROYAL OAK, Hall Fields. Mr. Waterhouse was retained for the defendant.

Complainant said he was in the house of Mr. Hollingsworth, about 12 o'clock on Saturday night; there were several other persons present, and amongst them the defendant. The latter began to upbraid him about leaving a tax paper at his (complainant's) house. Witness told him he was a liar, upon which the company fined him glasses round for using that language. Mr. Batte asked him whether he would had a d—d punch in the mouth, or pay glasses all round. The complainant replied he would have the punch in the mouth. The defendant then kicked his shins and struck him in the mouth, cutting his lip. The witness attempted to hit him in return, but was prevented by some of the gentlemen present. A scuffle, however, ensued, and three of four of them tumbled down together.

By Mr. Waterhouse: He had formerly resided at Dawley, and the defendant had served him with a process for unpaid taxes; there had been a bet made about closing his house at ten o'clock, and that was what the company at Hollingsworth's wanted him to spend. Mr. Hollingsworth had ordered him (the complainant) to quit the house, and the company said he was annoying them.

Mr. Loxdale observed that it was very discreditable and improper for a public officer to upbraid a man in a public house respecting his taxes.

Mr. Waterhouse urged that being called a liar three or four times by the complainant was enough to exasperate any one; he then called Mr. Skidmore, who stated that he was present on the occasion, and that the complainant was monopolising the whole conversation. He called Mr. Batte a liar three of four times, and then a scuffle took place.

The witness added that he was compelled to take the complainant away to the kitchen, his conduct was so bad.

The Magistrates inflicted a penalty of 2s 6d and costs.”

“On Tuesday last Samuel Egerton, a licensed victualler, near Daisy Bank, was summoned by Charles Griffiths on a charge of assaulting him. The complainant went to have refreshment at the defendant’s house, and, according to his statement, the latter, without any provocation, approached him and struck him a violent blow on the eye. The defendant also struck him several violent blows on the face, by which he became insensible. A penalty of 40s and costs, or one month’s imprisonment, was inflicted.”

“The annual meeting of Magistrates for the purpose of the renewal and granting of licenses for the township of Bilston and the neighbourhood was held at the Bilston Police Court on Friday last.....

Mr. Bowen applied for a license for the ELEPHANT AND CASTLE at Hall Fields, occupied by Mr. Brywood. Mr. Bowen dwelt at some length upon the requirements of the district, and with respect to the house itself said it was commodious, was provided with ample stabling, and in every way adapted for a licensed house.

Mr. Shipman, who was instructed to oppose the application, said that within half a mile of Mr. Brywood’s house there were already two licensed houses, besides a number of beerhouses. The persons for whom Mr. Shipman opposed were Mr. Knight and Mr. Holloway, both of whom occupy licensed houses in the same street as the present applicant. Refused.”

“Yesterday, the inquest on the body of the carter, Samuel Walker, of Hall Street, Bradley, who was killed on Monday afternoon, by the bursting of a high-pressure engine boiler, at the Bradley New Ironworks, in the tenancy of Mr. T. Rose, ironmaster, of the Millfield Works also, was opened at the ROYAL OAK, Bradley, before Mr. T. M. Phillips, Coroner. Mr. Waterhouse, solicitor, was present to represent Mr. Rose.

The works, we may remark, are used to make puddled bars only, and have in them ten puddling furnaces. There are two high-pressure engines there – one of eighteen and the other of about forty horse-power. To drive these there are three boilers, two firing and one furnace boiler. The firing boilers lie parallel, and the furnace boiler runs in a horizontal direction at one of the ends of the other two. All the boilers were connected, and the one that exploded was one of the firing boilers, No.1. It was a cylinder boiler of about 33 feet in length and 6 feet in diameter. Its sister boiler, No.2, is a British tube boiler of about 30 feet in length, and the furnace boiler, No.3, is of the tube construction, and is about 28 feet in length. The small engine is used for working the forge hammer, and the large one for driving the forge rolls. No.2 boiler was started at about two o’clock to work the hammer engine, and it ought to have been so employed when the accident happened; but about three minutes before the explosion the shinglers were obliged to gag-up the hammer for want of steam. During this time steam was being got up in No.1.

The first witness called was Samuel Walker, the engineer who had charge of the boiler up to one o’clock on Monday. He had been there all the day up to that time, and his fellow engineer, Joseph Hawthorne, was with him, and he left him in charge of the engine. Witness and Hawthorne were in the boiler and cleaned it out early on Monday morning. There was then very little scurf in it, and all the valves and the clack were in good working order. If there had been a crack in the boiler at that time he should have seen it, if it had been on the inside. Both of them examined the wheel and the water gauge buoys, and they were in perfectly good order. Water was turned in, and the fire put under by half-past eight. At that time the stop-valve that communicated with No.2 and with the engine was screwed down, as was usual, until the steam was got up. Hawthorne would know when to open the connection by the blowing off of the steam through the steam clack or safety valve. This valve should blow off at 38lbs pressure, and the engines were worked at a pressure of 40lbs. All 3 clacks were in good order on Monday morning, for he tried them, and if they had remained in that condition, and the stop valve had been opened at the proper time, there would have been no explosion. On Monday No.1 would be fed with water from a tank. When he left the boiler at ten minutes to one there was water enough in the engine to keep it supplied without danger till he returned at night. He left the steam clack up at the same time.

The Coroner: Can you get the pressure up above 40lbs? Witness: I have known it up to 42lbs or 43lbs, when we have had the engines stopped; but the noise of the blowing off would be tremendous.

About six weeks ago (the witness continued) the boiler was repaired by Phillip Lloyd, who put two new plates in it near to the fire, and caulked with a hammer and chisel a seam near to them. When he got to work at six on Monday evening he found that some persons had been lowering and raising the stop valve; but Jacob Higgs told him that he was about the first who examined it after the explosion, and he found it raised, which would have enabled steam to escape from the boiler into No.2, and to the engine. Some of the plates were ripped through the solid, but most of them along the seams. He felt satisfied that the plates had not been red-hot....

Phillip Lloyd, boiler maker, of Hall Fields, said he repaired the boiler about three years ago, and several times since that date. The last occasion was about six weeks ago, when he took out two plates from over the fire and put in two other plates, and otherwise repaired it. He left everything in good working order. After the explosion he examined it. He attributed the bursting of the boiler to some one having interfered with the steam valves or the clack. The clack was blown away. When he arrived at the spot, ten minutes after the explosion, he saw Hawthorne on top of the boiler unscrewing the stop valve. Witness said to some men around him, 'That's wrong; neither valves nor clacks ought to be interfered with till they have been properly examined.' Witness had not time on the occasion he spoke of to examine the boiler thoroughly.

Mr. Bridgewater, the manager of the works, said that two months ago the boiler was examined by Mr. Martin, the engineer of the Midland Boiler Inspection and Assurance Company, but Mr. Rose determined not to put the boiler in the association. On Tuesday, Mr. Martin and the engineer of the Manchester association both examined the boiler after it had exploded.

The Coroner said there was strong circumstantial evidence of neglect, but upon that he would not at present make any remarks.

The inquest was adjourned till Tuesday next, to enable Mr. Martin to report upon the boiler to the Coroner and Jury."

Wolverhampton Chronicle 4/11/1863

"The adjourned inquest on the body of the man Samuel Walker, killed by the explosion of a boiler at the works of Mr. Thomas Rose, Bradley Bridge, was held at the ROYAL OAK INN, Bradley, before T. Phillips, Esq, coroner. The inquiry lasted nearly five hours, several witnesses having to be examined, but their evidence was in effect merely corroborative of the statements made on the first inquiry.....

Mr. Martin, engineer to the Boiler Assurance Association for this district, next read a report he had drawn up as to the state of the boiler. After explaining the position, size, and general character of the boiler, the original strength of which had been considerably reduced by frequent repairs, he said that from his examination of the boiler since the explosion, there did not appear any indication of a shortness of water, overheating, or corrosion, and there was very little scurf. In his opinion the cause of the explosion was owing to the boiler being exposed to a greater pressure than it would bear, and greater than the usual working pressure. There appeared no doubt that just before the explosion the steam was so unusually low that it would not even work the small hammer engine, and if all the boilers were connected then, No.1 must have exploded whilst exposed to a less pressure than ordinary, and this seemed scarcely likely. An unusual pressure could only be accounted for by supposing that the stop valve and safety valve did not act as usual.

The Jury then consulted together, and ultimately returned a verdict of Accidental Death, being of opinion that the boiler burst in consequence of an accumulation of gas occasioned by the safety valve between No.1 and No.2 boilers being opened out, and the steam got up in No.1, hence the explosion."

“Thomas Paul, landlord of the ROYAL OAK, Bradley, was, at Bilston Police Court, yesterday, before the Stipendiary, summoned for having permitted drunkenness in his house on the 26th inst.

Police-constable Parsons proved to having found three drunken men in the defendant’s premises at seven at night on the day in question.

Mr. R. A. Willcock, Wolverhampton, who defended, urged that, through illness, alike the defendant and his wife had been unable to attend to the business, which, therefore, mainly devolved upon servants, and he asked for the case to be treated leniently, as the defendant had conducted his business for three years without prior complaint. His Worship, under these circumstances, dismissed the case, with costs.”

“Dudley Bankruptcy Court, Thursday. (Before Mr. Deputy-Registrar Walker.)

Re Thomas Paul. The bankrupt was described as a shingler, of Rose Street, Batmans Hill, Bradley, formerly carrying on business as a licensed victualler, at the ROYAL OAK INN, Hall Street, Bradley.

The statement of affairs showed liabilities £254 19s 4d; assets £6 10s. A large amount of liabilities were in respect of ale supplied by brewers. The bankrupt said he had had transactions with money-lenders, re-paying loans at the rate of £29 for £20. In consequence of this high rate of interest he had to go on borrowing to pay off previous loans. He sold the public house for £100, £50 of which he handed to a creditor to divide among the others. The other creditors would not accept a composition, so the creditor who had the money kept it. He had had an altercation with a man named Anslow, in which he sustained a broken rib, and Anslow a fracture of the leg. Anslow brought an action against him, and recovered £28, which was not yet paid.

The bankrupt was allowed to pass.”

“Worcestershire Assizes.....

Wilson v Wainwright. The plaintiff was Mr. Richard Wilson, and the defendant, Mrs Wainwright, formerly landlady of the Bell Inn, Pensax In 1879 Mr. Wilson became owner of the house. The allegation was that the defendant did not keep the house in repair, nor cultivate the lands, nor conduct the inn in an orderly manner.....

The defendant, who now manages the ROYAL OAK, High Street, Bilston, said that the house was in worse repair when she went into it than when she left it.....

The jury found a verdict for the defendant.”

“Wolverhampton County Court. Hunt v Cattell.

In this case Mr. J. T. Hunt, auctioneer, Bilston, sought to recover from Mr. John Cattell, of Bradley, the sum of £45 on a promissory note. Mr. Haden Corser (instructed by Mr. Stratton) appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Dallow for the defendant. There was a counter claim for £50 for damages alleged to have been sustained by the defendant.

The plaintiff offered the license, goodwill, and possession of the ROYAL OAK INN, High Street, Bilston, to the defendant Cattell for £50. Defendant paid £5 on deposit, and gave a promissory note for the balance, £45, on plaintiff undertaking to pay £12 10s due for rent and £3 4s 2d for gas. He, however, failed to pay either of these amounts, and after Cattell had removed to the house, his goods were distrained upon for the arrears, and on this account he made the counter claim.

Mr. Dallow contended, for the defence, that no consideration had been given for the promissory note, inasmuch as Hunt never got the license transferred to Cattell, who suffered considerably by the transaction.

His Honour gave judgement for the defendant on the original claim, and the counter claim was withdrawn.”

“Staffordshire Summer Assizes Hardy v Holland and Another.

This was an action to recover the sum of £39 12s 10d upon a promissory note. The defendants pleaded that £20 had been paid on the note, and they paid the balance into Court. Mr. Huddleston, QC, Mr. Hill, and Mr. Henry James were counsel for the plaintiff; and Mr. Powell and Mr. Motteram for the defendants.

Mr. Huddleston, in opening the case, said the question for the jury to consider was a very simple one, and they would have to say whether £20 paid in the month of October, 1858, was paid on account of the promissory note upon which the action was brought or on account of money which was due at that date to a Mr. Thomas Fellowes by a Mr. Isaac Brereton. The note was dated January, 1858, was for £39 12s 10d, and was made by Jacob Brereton in favour of Thomas Fellowes, Thomas Hardy being the nominal, and Thomas Fellowes the real plaintiff in the present action

In November, 1857, Isaac Brereton, son of Jacob Brereton (who had since died, and whose executors were the defendants in the action), kept the ROYAL OAK, Bilston. He became insolvent, and there was a sale of his goods. Mr. Fellowes had known Isaac Brereton, and at the sale he purchased furniture of the value of £39 12s 10, and paid the money. He consented to allow Isaac to have the goods back, to enable him to carry on business at the ROYAL OAK, his father, Jacob Brereton, becoming security for the money, and giving the note of hand now under their consideration. In October, 1858, Isaac Brereton requested his wife to pay Mr. Fellowes £20 in respect of an account for coal, malt, hops, and other goods sold to him by Mr. Fellowes, which account commenced in 1856. Mrs. Brereton paid the money, and took a receipt for it on the general account, Mr. Fellowes also giving credit for it in his account book. This was denied by the defendants, the executors of Jacob Brereton; and the question for the jury was whether it was paid in respect of the money due by Isaac for the furniture [sic], or upon the promissory note.

Mr. Thomas Fellowes, stonemason, Shropshire Road, Bilston, deposed that in 1857 Isaac Brereton kept the ROYAL OAK, and he had a sale there. Witness purchased goods to the amount of £34 5s 4d at the sale, and afterwards paid £5 7s 6d for some other goods, all of which were removed to the premises of Jacob Brereton. He sold the goods to Jacob for the same amount that he purchased them at. A promissory note was given for the money, and the goods went back to the ROYAL OAK, where the business was carried on as before. Jacob Brereton died about a years ago, and had paid nothing upon the note. He supplied goods to Isaac Brereton, beginning in 1856, consisting of coal, slack, malt, hops, cheese, meat, &c. Upon that account there was a balance of upwards of £40 still due, and he had given credit in that account for £20 paid in the year 1858. It was paid to him by the wife of Isaac Brereton, who said it was on that account, and not on account of the promissory note, and who received a receipt acknowledging that it was paid in respect of the general account.

Elizabeth Harthill stated that she was present when Mrs. Brereton, wife of Isaac Brereton, paid the £20, and she remembered Mrs. Brereton saying it was paid on account of goods, and there was nothing said about the promissory note. There was no one present but herself, Mrs. Brereton and Mr. Fellowes. Mrs. Brereton looked at the receipt. Mr. Thomas Waterhouse, attorney for the plaintiff, deposed that the defendant’s attorney informed him that the defendant’s plea was that the note had been obtained by fraud, but that plea had been withdrawn.

That being the plaintiff’s case, Mr. Powell addressed the jury on behalf of the defendants. He said it was true that the defendants had originally denied their liability on the ground that the note was obtained by fraud, and did not carry it out for the simple reason that the defendants did not deny that Mr. Fellowes paid the money for the goods which Isaac Brereton had returned to him by Mr. Fellowes, and that notwithstanding the way in which the note was obtained it was irrelevant to the issue. He urged that the £20 had been paid in respect of the furniture for which the note had been given, and the balance had been deposited in the court, so that the real plaintiff, Mr. Fellowes, would not lose one farthing in respect of the note.

Mrs. I. Brereton, Mary Brereton, her daughter, and Miss Clara Crutchley, deposed that the witness Harthill was not present when the £20 was paid, and that it was given to Mrs. Fellowes with the distinct understanding that it was in respect of the promissory note. Mrs. Brereton added that there was nothing due from her husband in respect of anything but the note for the furniture; and she paid the money to satisfy the old man, who was anxious that the money should be paid.

Isaac Brereton stated that he never had any transactions to make him indebted to Mr. Fellowes, though his wife had dealings with him.

The learned counsel on either side having replied upon the case, His Lordship summed up, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for £22 6s, which included interest upon the money due."

When she awoke at seven o'clock the child was dead. The bed clothes were not over its face. Deceased had cut three teeth, and had occasionally showed signs of convulsions. "A meeting of the ironworkers of the Bilston district was held at the ROYAL OAK INN, Salop Street, on Monday, to consider whether it would be advisable for them to join the Employers Liability Assurance Company Limited, and to hear explanations in reference thereto. Mr. Lloyd, a workman, presided, and expressed his conviction that recent legislation had stirred the masters up to take more care of their workmen's lives than they did before. He was in favour of the society, from which, for a small sum, men could receive benefits it would be impossible for them to get in any other way. Mr. Gibbs explained that in 19 out of every 20 accidents which occurred, the masters would be found not to be liable. The contributions to be paid were in proportion to the wages earned, and if no wages were earned, no contributions would have to be paid. Mr. Capper having spoken, all present voted in favour of joining the society. The meeting was then adjourned for a fortnight."

The evidence showed that Jones, who had since died, received a Post Office order for £2, which he entrusted to the defendant to cash. Defendant went to the Post Office, and returned, stating that the advice note had not come. In a day or two after, however, he cashed the order, but failed to give the money to the widow.

The defence was that Jones had borrowed the money from the defendant, and that the case was one for the County Court.

"Yesterday, at the ROYAL OAK INN, Bradley, Mr. W. H. Phillips (borough coroner) held an inquest as to the death of Emanuel Simpkins (11) and Elias Simpkins (9), late of Salop Street, who were drowned in a disused claypit 10ft deep, at Thorneycroft's field, on Sunday.

Joseph Hall, a lad, stated that he was with the two boys on the afternoon of the 10th inst. The younger lad got into the water first, and immediately began to sink. His brother went to his assistance, but, as he also was unable to swim, both were eventually drowned. Witness had never seen anyone bathe in the pond before. There was no notice against bathing in the pool.

The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

In reply to a suggestion from the coroner, the foreman said that he did not think any recommendation as to the posting of a notice was needful, since the pond was a considerable distance from the road.

Another juryman remarked that there were a number of such dangerous pools about the district – pits from which fireclay or coal had been taken.

The Coroner observed that such places were of necessity dangerous, since their formation made it difficult for a bather to get out. He was of opinion that swimming should be made an article of education in all Board schools. He believed that at some places it was already taught; but the practice should be universal."

Emma Jones, of Union Street, deposed to seeing the deceased on Monday night, when she told witness that she would do away with herself, as her parents were against her. Her father, she said, would never forgive her, as she left home in defiance of him.

Fanny Atkins, a girl, said that she saw the deceased going in the direction of the canal on Monday or Tuesday morning. Deceased said to her, 'Good night, Fanny; you won't see me anymore. God bless you. I shall do something to myself before the night is over.'

Other evidence having been given, the jury returned a verdict that the deceased committed Suicide whilst in a state of Temporary Insanity."

This, the Coroner said, was most probably done to soften the blow to his wife.

Mrs. Clara Willett said that her husband went to the bank last Monday afternoon and when she went to open the house at 6pm she found an envelope addressed to her son in his handwriting. The Coroner read the note in the envelope. It stated, ‘Son and daughter. Look after Mum till you hear again. Reason in desk on counter. Dad.’ Mrs. Willett explained that there was a letter in the desk terminating his services, but he had not told her anything about it.

A verdict of Suicide while his mind was temporarily upset, was returned.”

“At the Petty Sessions, on Tuesday, Mr. Whitehouse applied for a transfer of the license of the ROYAL OAK, Wolverhampton Street, Bilston, to the ELEPHANT AND CASTLE, in Hall Fields, and from the tenant of the one house to the tenant of the other. The application was opposed by Mr. Shipman, on behalf of Mr. Millward, who has the reversion of the ROYAL OAK property on the death of his mother, an old woman nearly eighty years of age. The transaction was also opposed by the landlords of the adjoining public houses to that to which it was proposed to transfer the license, and by a person named Fellows, who has a mortgage to the extent of £350 on the property. It was stated on the part of applicant that owing to the effects of mining operations the house had been rendered unfit for an inn, and that the transfer was contemplated for the benefit of the life-renter. Mr. Shipman objected that the transaction was not bona fide, Legge, the tenant of the ROYAL OAK, being only the nominal tenant, not having occupied the premises for four or five years, his client, Millward, having kept up the licence during that period, except for the last year, when payment was forestalled by his mother, with a view to the present application. Mr. Shipman’s objections were sustained, and the transfer refused.”

“At Bilston Police Court, on Tuesday, a long investigation took place respecting a dangerous affray which occurred on Saturday night. A woman named Price, who appeared with a large bruise on her forehead, charged Barnard, Margaret, and Peggy Cullen, with assaulting her with a poker on Saturday night. The complainant stated that about a quarter past eleven she was coming from the bottom of Hangmans Row, in Bilston, and heard a noise at the back of the defendants house. She went up the entry to see what was the matter, when the three defendants rushed on her and severely beat her with staffs and other weapons, one of them striking her with a poker upon the head, which cut it severely. Her cap, apron, and shawl, which she produced, were covered with blood.

In defence it was stated that the complainant went from the SADDLE AND STIRRUPS public house, to the door of the defendants, and tried to break it open; and that she caused a hundred people to assemble, and make a great disturbance, because some little difference had occurred between them between them.

The Bench fined each of the defendants 1s and costs.

Thomas Price, the husband of the complainant, then charged Barnard and Francis Cullen with assaulting him, but the case was dismissed.

John Marsden then charged the same defendants with assaulting him, and this case being made out the parties were fined 5s and costs."

Wolverhampton Chronicle 14/4/1847

"James Cartwright, a navigator, having been remanded a few days ago, was now brought up for examination on a charge of breaking and entering the dwelling house of Mr. John Parker, a pawnbroker, at Bilston, in the night of February last, and stealing therefrom a great quantity of wearing apparel, a gold ring, two silver watches, and some money. Henry Mason (a returned transport) and another man named Charles Hughes, were both tried and convicted at the late Stafford Lent Assizes, as participators in this burglary; Mason receiving a sentence of transportation for life, and Hughes for ten years. The evidence now produced against Cartwright was as follows.

Mr. John Parker stated that his dwelling house was feloniously entered on the night of Monday, the 22nd of February last (an entrance having been made through the window), and that two watches, a gold ring, and a large quantity of wearing apparel were stolen, and that the silver watch produced by Edward Thompson, police officer, was one of the watches stolen.

James Nash, a parish constable of Bilston, proved taking the prisoner into custody, in the SADDLE AND STIRRUPS public house, at Bilston, on the 7th instant, and that on asking him his name the prisoner said it was Cartwright, when witness told him that there was a charge of burglary against him for breaking into the house of John Parker. The prisoner asked witness when it was, but he could not then tell him the exact day. The prisoner said, 'It is what I expected.' Witness and Police Officer Thompson then took the prisoner to the shop of Mr. John Dean, at Bilston, to see if Mr. David Slater, the assistant of Mr. John Dean, knew the prisoner, and, upon seeing him, Slater said he (prisoner) was the man who had pledged a watch with him, in the name of Daniel Ross, the day following John Parker's robbery, whereupon the prisoner said, 'I will not deny it. I did; but I had it from a man named Daniel Ross, and I gave him the money in the passage adjoining the pawnshop.'

David Slater proved receiving the watch produced in pledge from the prisoner, on the 23rd of February last, about three o'clock in the afternoon; also that he pawned it in the name of Daniel Ross, and that he (witness) gave the prisoner a ticket to that effect; that the prisoner said he lodged near the new church at Bilston; that immediately the prisoner left the shop, witness saw Henry Mason join him, and they both went across the street into a butchers shop together. Witness gave up the watch to Thompson, police officer, on the 23rd of March last.

Edward Thompson produced the watch (which was identified by the prosecutor), and proved finding the pawn ticket of the same watch upon the said Henry Mason, when he apprehended him the day following the burglary; he also proved hearing the prisoner say that he pawned the watch for Daniel Ross, and that he gave him the money in the gateway at the pawnshop; also that when at the station the prisoner inquired from witness when the offence was committed, and on his telling him the 22nd of February, the prisoner said he could prove that he slept thirty miles off that night, and that on the day on which he pawned the watch he went straight to Dudley, and slept there, and that he never slept at Bilston in his life.

John Lewis, a labourer, of Bilston, proved that he saw the prisoner and Henry Mason in company together between nine and ten o'clock in the morning after Parker's robbery, in Church Street, at Bilston; that he (witness) spoke to Mason; that they went into the PRINCE OF WALES beershop, adjoining 'The Berry,' together; that between twelve and one o'clock the same day witness had occasion to go into the above beershop to look for a person, and saw them in there still; that they asked him to drink, but he refused; that about one o'clock on the following day witness saw the prisoner at Wolverhampton, near to the SWAN HOTEL.

Eliza Watkins, a servant at another beershop, in Bilston, kept by one Henry Whitaker (near to the above pawnshop), proved that the prisoner and Henry Mason were in company together drinking at her master's house, and dancing to music, about two o'clock in the afternoon of Tuesday (the day after Parker's robbery); that they had two jugs of ale, and left together. She never saw nor heard anything said about a watch by either of them.

William Heseldine, of Bilston, labourer, proved seeing the prisoner and Henry Mason eating steaks and drinking together in the MALT SHOVEL public house about three or four o'clock on the above Tuesday; that he heard the prisoner say to Mason, 'Harry, let's go to Wolverhampton.' This witness also spoke of seeing them together in the street at Bilston, tipsy, and going into the PRINCE OF WALES beershop, the same afternoon.

Catherine Jennings also spoke to the prisoner and Mason together, twice, in the night of the above Tuesday. The prisoner (who was much affected, as was his wife), on being asked if he had anything to say, admitted pawning the watch for Mason, and giving him the money in the passage. He said, however, that what Heseldine had sworn was true, but that what Lewis had said was not. Committed to the assizes.”

“Staffordshire Summer Assizes.....

James Cartwright, charged with breaking into the dwelling house of John Parker, in the night of the 22nd of February last, at Bilston, and stealing two silver watches, a gold ring, and a quantity of wearing apparel, his property, was, after the examination of four witnesses, discharged, the evidence being insufficient to support the indictment preferred against him. The Jury, by the direction of the Court, returned a verdict of not guilty, and he was immediately discharged.”

“On Tuesday last, at Bilston Public Office, a miner, named William Rowley, was brought up on the charge of cutting and wounding, with intent to do grievous bodily harm, a journeyman blacksmith named John Walton, residing in Bilston. It appeared that on Saturday night the prosecutor and some of his companions had been in the SADDLE AND STIRRUP public house, where they remained for about half an hour, and while they were there, some Irishmen made some reflections upon the characters of the English, to which the prosecutor foolishly thought proper to reply. The prisoner, who was along with the Irishmen, asked the prosecutor what he had to do with them, and said if he interfered again he would give him a brace of pistols; but some uproar having been caused by this the prisoner and his party were turned out of the house. In about ten minutes afterwards the prosecutor and his companions left to go home, and while standing in the street for an instant, the prisoner came up to them. Angry words and blows having ensued, the prisoner took a knife from his pocket and struck the prosecutor several blows with it about the left groin, but it was afterwards found that only one wound was inflicted, the knife in this instance, however, having penetrated to the hip-bone to the depth of an inch and a half.

The prisoner was taken into custody the same night at his lodgings, by Inspector Thompson, although the door had to be broken open before this was done, and on being searched at the station a knife was found upon him.

Under the care of Mr. Hancox, surgeon, the prosecutor soon recovered from the loss of blood he had sustained.

The evidence of the several witnesses having been given, the Bench committed him to take his trial at the assizes. On the depositions being read over, he complained that they had been packed only for the purpose of transporting him, but said that if the Magistrates would not send him to gaol he would go off to Canada without putting the country to any trouble, and would take his two children with him!”

“Bilston Public Office on Tuesday.....

William Rowley, a rough-looking fellow, was charged by John Walton with stabbing him on Saturday night, at Bilston. It appeared from the evidence of the prosecutor and two young men, that the prosecutor went into Peck's public house, in New Town, Bilston, on Saturday night, where some Irishmen were abusing the English, whose cause he advocated, when the prisoner threatened him. Mr. Peck then turned the Irishmen out of the house, and upon the prosecutor and his companions leaving, the prisoner, who was waiting at the door, threatened to stab him, upon which the prosecutor struck him, and then walked away; but the prisoner followed after, and with something like a knife stabbed him.

Mr. Hancox, surgeon, who was immediately sent for, examined the prosecutor, whilst sitting in a chair in Gozzard Street, and stated that his clothes were torn, and saturated with blood, which flowed from a wound in the groin, about three-eighths of an inch in breadth and an inch and half in depth, and which had been caused by a stab from a sharp-pointed instrument.

Sub-inspector Thompson, who broke into the prisoner's house, and after a violent struggle apprehended him, stated that the prisoner acknowledged that he had stabbed the prosecutor, and, upon searching him, he found two pocket knives and a dagger knife. He was committed for trial to the assizes.”

“On Thursday morning last, a fellow who had been sleeping during the night at the BULLS HEAD, Wednesbury, decamped with a silver watch and gold guard chain, which he stole from off the table in a room adjoining his own. The owner of the watch heard some noise during the night, but did not miss his property until the morning, when he ascertained that the supposed thief had left as soon as the house was opened. He is supposed to be the same who stole £3 or £4 worth of jewellery, in a similar manner, from the house of Mr. Peck, of the SADDLE AND STIRRUPS INN, Bilston, on Saturday.”

“At Bilston Public Office, on Tuesday, John Magrath, an Irish shoemaker, was charged with committing a violent assault on a man named Charles Worrall. Complainant stated that he lived with Mr. Peck, at the SADDLE AND STIRRUPS, Oxford Street. On the evening of Christmas-day the prisoner came into his master’s house, accompanied by several others, and without the least provocation assaulted several of the company. He was ordered by his master to turn the prisoner out of the house, and while doing so the prisoner struck him a violent blow across the head with a poker, which he carried in his sleeve. He became insensible from the blow, and had been attended by Mr. Hancox, surgeon, ever since. The prisoner was fined 40s and costs, or to be committed to Stafford for two months.

The prisoner was then charged with assaulting William Comby at the same time and place. Comby stated that he had been singing in the bar, when the prisoner came in, and after wishing him a merry Christmas, and a happy new year, he wanted to shake hands with him, and upon his declining that civility, the prisoner struck him a blow in the eye. For this offence he was fined 5s and costs, or to be committed fourteen days to hard labour.”

The defendant went into the house of the complainant on Wednesday afternoon last, and called for something to drink. He was served with it. On the landlord going into the place where the defendant was sitting, he perceived that he was in liquor, and accordingly instructed his servant not to fill any more for him. The defendant shortly afterwards broke a glass, and the landlord asked him to pay for it. He refused to do so, and became disorderly, and eventually struck Mr. Peck. In the meantime the constable entered the house, and tried to persuade the defendant to pay for the glass. Instead of doing so, he struck the constable, and Davis subsequently bit the barmaid severely on the leg. Mr. Hancox pronounced the wound to be a serious one. The Magistrate, after commenting upon the disgraceful behaviour of the men, said he should have inflicted a heavy fine if another Magistrate had been on the Bench (assault cases requiring two Magistrates), but, under the present circumstances, he should order the defendant to find two sureties to keep the peace for six months, and to pay the surgeon’s bill and other expenses. The expenses amounted upwards of £2 each.”

“On Tuesday, at the SADDLE AND STIRRUPS INN, Bilston, T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, concluded the inquest upon the body of Edmund Harris, one of the unfortunate persons who were killed by the boiler explosion at the works of Messrs. Rose, Higgins, and Rose, on the night of Monday, the 29th ult. The inquest had been adjourned from the Wednesday previous, in consequence of the opinion of the coroner and jury that the evidence before them on that occasion was defective and unsatisfactory, and that Mr. E. T. Wright, engineer, of Wolverhampton, who had examined the boiler, should be requested to attend, and give his testimony.

On Mr. Wright being called, he deposed that on the morning after the explosion he carefully examined the exploded boiler. The appearance of the rivetted joints of that portion which was exposed to the fire indicated that they had been red hot. The pieces of the boiler which he caused to be cut off and now produced, clearly indicated that the boiler had been without water, and the plates over the fire red hot at the moment of the explosion. The accident could not be strictly called an ‘explosion,’ because it resulted, not from any increase of pressure within, but from the weakening of the plates of the boiler by their being red hot, which rendered it incapable of sustaining the ordinary working pressure. It did not always follow that because the plates of an exploded boiler were red that the explosion took place from a scarcity of water in the boiler. Plates were often red, as were the pieces of the exploded boiler which he produced, but redness was often caused by the oxide of iron. It was from the appearance of the fracture of the iron that he judged the plates had been red hot. If the boiler had been filled at six o’clock in the evening, it could not have exploded at a quarter to seven from want of water. It would have taken two or three hours to work that boiler empty. He agreed with what had been said by other witnesses that it was equally the duty of the man who came to work an engine, as of a man who was leaving off, to see that the boiler was full of water. The exploded boiler was a good one; and he should not have hesitated to work it at between sixty and seventy pounds to the square inch. Mr. Wright having finished his evidence, was thanked by the coroner and jury for his attendance. Mr. Wright said, that for the good of the public he felt a pleasure in being present.

William Plant, an engineer, deposed that he left the boiler which exploded in the care of William Tuckley, at four o'clock on Monday. It was then full of water, and the valves and buoy were in working order. He closed the steam valve, so that no steam could get from the other boilers into that which exploded, and also the water valve with which it was supplied with water, because Tuckley said he would not fire the boiler. He afterwards saw Tuckley firing. Henry Smith took charge of the boiler at six o'clock.

Mr. Stephen Thompson, boiler maker, and the manufacturer of the boiler in question, corroborated the evidence of Mr. Wright.

Henry Smith, having been cautioned in the usual manner before he made any statement, said that the boiler in question was as full when he came to his turn as it was regularly worked. About half a minute before the boiler exploded he thought that something told him to stop a distance from the boiler. He did so, and immediately afterwards the explosion took place.

The coroner conceiving this statement to exonerate Tuckley, called him as a witness. He stated that when he left the boiler at six o'clock it contained plenty of water, enough to last five or six hours. He left the valves open when he gave up the charge of the boiler to Smith.

This being the whole of the evidence, the coroner briefly summed up, pointing out the questions for the jury to consider.

After a short deliberation, the jury returned a verdict of Manslaughter against Henry Smith and William Tuckley, giving it as their opinion that the story told by them had been concocted between them. The coroner therefore made out his warrant for their committal to the assizes.

On Wednesday the adjourned inquest was held at the NAVIGATION INN, upon the bodies of Benjamin Plant and Joseph Hill, the two engineers at work at the time of the catastrophe. Similar evidence was given as in the other case, and the same verdict of Manslaughter returned against Smith and Tuckley."

"Staffordshire Summer Assizes.....

.....His Lordship considered that the case against Smith should be decided by the jury; but with respect to Tuckley, who had given up the care of the engine before the explosion took place, he thought a verdict of not guilty might be returned.....

The learned Judge summed up the evidence favourably for the prisoner Smith, observing that before they could find him guilty of the serious offence with which he was charged, the death, from gross negligence, of the deceased, they must be satisfied that no other circumstance could have caused it, but that it resulted from the act and deed of the prisoner. His lordship then observed that the prisoner had received an excellent character for sobriety and steadiness, that there was no proof that he had absented himself from his work, and that it was scarcely probable, lamentable as the result was, that such result was caused from negligence.

The jury immediately afterwards returned a verdict of not guilty, and both prisoners were discharged."

“Ann Burke, described as a prostitute, was charged with uttering base coin, in the month of September last. Evidence was given to show that on a certain evening, in September last, she had passed a bad crown piece at Mr. Bache's liquor shop, in High Street, Bilston, and another at the HIMLEY ARMS, kept by Mr. Tombs; she also on the same night offered another at Mr. Peck's liquor shop in Oxford Street. She had absconded immediately afterwards, and was only recently arrested in Wolverhampton, where she was living, somewhere in the neighbourhood of the notorious ‘Cat-yard.’ She was remanded for a week to give time to communicate with the authorities at the Mint.

AND

“Staffordshire Quarter Sessions.....

Ann Burke, alias Durkin, 21, no occupation, was indicted for uttering two counterfeit crown pieces, at Bilston, well knowing the same to be false and counterfeit. On the 22nd of September last the prisoner, late in the evening, went to Tome's liquor vaults, in High Street, Bilston, and called for a glass of porter, in payment for which she tendered a crown piece. The coin was taken, and was put by the daughter of the landlady into the till. On counting, the same evening, the money in the till, the landlady discovered that this crown piece was counterfeit, and having marked it, she gave it to the police. It was afterwards discovered that the same evening the prisoner went to Peck's liquor vaults, in Oxford Street, and called for a glass of ale, for which she tendered another counterfeit crown piece. On being told that it was counterfeit she said that it had been given to her by a gentleman, and that she did not know it was counterfeit. She paid for the ale with three half-pence, and then went to Bache's spirit vaults, and there offered another counterfeit crown piece in payment for some drink, repeating, on being told it was counterfeit, the same story that she had, told at Peck's. Information was given to the police, but as the prisoner had been allowed to leave, she made her escape, and was not apprehended until the 1st of December.

Mr. S. Hill, who appeared for the prisoner, submitted to the Jury, as the defence, that these counterfeit crown pieces had, as she stated, been really given her by a scoundrel who had been wicked enough to take advantage of the unhappy calling which the unfortunate woman followed, and contended that considering the facilities which unprincipled men had for passing off bad money under such circumstances, nothing could be more likely to be true than the story told by the prisoner.

The Jury found the prisoner guilty. The learned Chairman, in sentencing her to twelve months' hard labour, reminded that two and a half years previously she had been convicted of stealing money.”

“The inquiry respecting the death of Timothy McCarthy, aged forty, an unmarried man, who, on Sunday night, met his death at the Bilston Brook Furnaces, now in the occupation of Mr. Benjamin Gibbons, junior, was yesterday opened by the Deputy Coroner, Mr. W. H. Phillips, at the house of Mr. Rowley, the SADDLE AND STIRRUP INN, Oxford Street. The Jury was composed of some of the most respectable inhabitants of the locality, Mr. D. Kendrick, chairman of the Wolverhampton Board of Guardians, being foreman.

The first witness called was Thomas Smith, who sated that he was a blast-furnaceman, and was acquainted with the deceased, whose body he had identified. The deceased was a fireman in the employment of Mr. Benjamin Gibbons, junior, and was engaged in his usual work on Sunday night. Witness heard an alarm, and on going to the ash-hole, which was full of water, found the deceased lying there very much scalded all over his body. Witness helped to get him out, and life was quite extinct. He (the witness) had never heard any complaints respecting the state of the boiler, and was of opinion that the accident had been caused by one of the plates suddenly leaking, and thus generating steam, out of the way of which the deceased was unable to get.

Mr. Enoch Phillips said he was principal engineer at the works, which had been in operation for about six months. The deceased was in charge of No.4 boiler, which supplied the blast furnace engine. It was his duty to be in the ash-hole, attending to the fire, on Sunday night. The boiler was an egg-shaped one, forty feet in length by eight feet in diameter, and it was usually examined and cleaned out every month. The last time it had been examined was a week yesterday (before the inquest), and there was then nothing the matter with it, and it was thought to be in good working order. Two months since the boiler had been repaired by having a new plate attached to the bottom of it, and this was the plate which had burst. Witness had examined the boiler that (yesterday) morning, and found that the plate in question had been ripped or burst, in two directions, in the middle, about fourteen inches in the one direction, and about eight inches in the other. It appeared as though there had been a slight flaw in the plate when put in, but such an one as could not be perceived. The plate was three-eighths of an inch in thickness. Witness had examined the boiler after it had last been repaired, and observed nothing to find fault with. The repairs had been executed in a workmanlike manner. The pressure was 15lbs to the square inch. The repairs to the boiler had been done by Mr. Clark, and the plate had been supplied from the works of Mr. Rose, at Millfields. Witness saw the plate after it had been attached to the boiler, and could observe no defect in it. He entertained no doubt that the bursting of the plate had caused the water to run into the ash-hole, and thus scalded the deceased. Witness was of opinion that the strength and thickness of the plate would have borne a pressure of twenty-five pounds.

Mr. Isaac Bradley, manager of the works, stated that they had been in operation for about five months, and that everything had been done at the commencement to ensure the safety of the men. It was beyond the power of the engineer to increase the pressure of fifteen pounds to the square inch, because the supply of water would not enable him to do so. Witness did not attribute the slightest blame to the manufacturer of the plate, as such a flaw might have occurred in any plate without being discernible.

The Deputy-Coroner having briefly but lucidly summed up the evidence, the jury, with one consent, returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

The Coroner requested the police to apprise the friends of the deceased, resident in Ireland, of the result of the inquiry.”

“Betsy Oakley (43), Hall Street, and Mary Ann Ashley (27), Vine Street, married women, were charged with stealing an umbrella, the property of Robert Hunt, landlord of the SADDLE AND STIRRUPS, Oxford Street, Bilston. Prosecutor visited the BOARS HEAD INN, Church Street, on Thursday last, and, after being there some time, he went away, leaving his umbrella behind him. Returning about a quarter of an hour afterwards, he missed his umbrella from the place where he had left it. Information was given to the police, and the women were found in possession of the article trying to sell it. Each was sentenced to 14 days' imprisonment.”

“At the Bilston Police Court, yesterday, four little girls, named Harriett Jones (15), Mary Ann Petley (14), Louisa Emberton (13), and Eliza Emberton (12), all of Bridge Street, were charged with stealing three dozen of scarves, value 10s, from the shop of John Nolan, general dealer, of Oxford Street, on the 15th ult.

Prosecutor stated that the goods were safe in the shop at two o'clock on the day in question, but at six o'clock they were missing.

John Toole, bailiff, of Gozzard Street, said he bought eight of the scarves from Petley in the SADDLE public house for fivepence.

Daniel Darby, licensed victualler, of Moxley, said he bought two of the scarves from Petley for sixpence, thinking this a fair value for them. He had previously bought matches from the same child.

The landlord of the SADDLE spoke to the prisoners Jones and Petley offering the scarves for sale in his house.

William Matthews, manager of an Oxford Street public house, was called as a witness, but Chief Superintendent Longden stated that the witness had said he'd see the Court d— before he gave evidence. A summons, however, was issued to compel his attendance.

Detective Hayward said he arrested Petley and Jones. They denied the offence at first but afterwards said that Eliza Emberton stole them, and they shared the money. The prisoner Eliza Emberton told him it was the fault of a woman named Sarah Jones, or Folden, who beat her until she went into the shop and stole. He, unfortunately, could not connect the woman with this particular case, although there was no doubt that the woman was the instigation of the thefts.

The case was adjourned for seven days, to compel Matthews's attendance, and the children in the meantime to be sent to the workhouse. Louisa Emberton was discharged.”

Darlaston Weekly Times 16/12/1882

“Yesterday, at the Bilston Police Court – before E. Dixon, F. A. Homer, and H. B. Whitehouse, Esquires – three little girls, named Harriet Jones, 13 years of age, Elizabeth Emberton, aged 11 years, and Mary A. Pethley, aged 14 years, were charged with stealing three dozen scarves, from the shop of John Nowlan, Oxford Street, under circumstances reported in our last issue.

The witnesses called last week recapitulated their evidence, and in addition, William Matthews, publican, of Oxford Street (who appeared on a summons), said Pethley came into the MALT SHOVEL alone, and offered several scarves for sale, some of which he bought, but he declined to swear whether the scarves (produced) were those he bought. He was not certain of the price he bought the scarves at, nor did he refuse to give them up to Detective Hayward when requested. He knew the child as a general hawker, having bought other things from her at different times.

The mothers of the children appeared before the Bench, and gave several versions of the matter, concluding by an appeal for mercy.

Emberton was discharged, Pethley and Jones were each fined 5s and costs, or 21 days' hard labour.

Matthews and Tool, the witnesses, were called before the Bench.

Detective Hayward stated that Matthews objected to produce the scarves, and when told that he would have to appear as a witness, said he would see the Court d— first.

Matthews denied this, and said that the officer had a spite against him.

Witnesses were severely reprimanded, and their expenses disallowed, the Bench stating that both witnesses seemed to be encouraging rather than repressing theft.”

“Thomas John Ryan, Stafford Street, Bilston, was charged with committing a violent assault with a brass mounted whipstock, on John Gallagher of Oxford Street, in the SADDLE AND STIRRUPS INN, on the 8th instant. Ryan was arrested on a warrant on his return from the hunting field on Thursday.

Prosecutor stated that he was in the SADDLE AND STIRRUPS INN, when he made a jocular observation to the defendant, who then became violent, and in consequence of being further ‘aggravated’ by the prosecutor, struck him with the whipstock, necessitating medical attention, and keeping him to his bed for a week.

Remanded for a week.”

“Thomas John Ryan, Stafford Street, Bilston, was charged on remand with assaulting John Gallagher, in the SADDLE AND STIRRUPS INN, Oxford Street, on Saturday the 8th inst. Mr. Huff (of Dudley) defended.

Gallagher and a witness named John Hayes testified to the assault, alleging that no provocation had been received. For the defence, Mr. Bridgman, the landlord, deposed that he saw Gallagher striking Ryan across the neck, and when he was prevented, rushed at Ryan again, when the latter struck him with the whip.

John Hayes, George Hayes, and John Gallagher were then charged with assaulting Ryan, by knocking him down on the night in question.

Ryan and the Hayes brothers were discharged, and John Gallagher was fined £2 6s, including costs.”

“The members of the Britannia Lodge of Free Gardeners held their annual dinner at the SADDLE AND STIRRUPS INN (Mr. Bridgman’s) on Wednesday, when the host ably catered for a large number of members. District Master Sirett occupied the chair, and Bro. Banks the vice-chair. The usual loyal and patriotic toasts were drunk, and a most enjoyable evening spent.”

“John Malia, labourer, of Warwick Street, Bilston, was charged with drunken and disorderly conduct, and also with committing an assault on his son, John Malia, a child five years old, on Monday night. The child appeared in court with a severe wound on its face.

The evidence showed that the defendant was celebrating St. Patrick’s day by a drinking bout. About seven o’clock at night PC Jackson was called to the defendant’s house, and there found him ‘raving mad’ with drink. In consequence of what he was told by a neighbour, the witness made enquiries, and ascertained that the defendant, on his return home, had been met by his little child, and had lifted his foot and kicked the poor little fellow into the street. When the child was seen by the officer, it was bleeding badly from a wound on the face, and was partially insensible. It was taken to the SADDLE AND STIRRUPS INN, and its injuries attended to, while the father was taken to the station.

In reply to the magistrate, defendant said he was mad drunk and did not know what he was doing. He promised never to repeat the offence.

Mr. Dixon said it did not appear that defendant was responsible for his actions, which was the consequence of the drunkenness of which there seemed to be an extraordinary amount in Bilston.

For the drunkenness, defendant was fined 5s and costs, and a like penalty was imposed for the cruelty.”

“On Monday afternoon, W. H. Phillips, Esq, coroner, held an inquest at the SADDLE AND STIRRUPS INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, over the body of Eliza Ward, wife of Thomas Ward, of Warwick Street, Bilston.

From the evidence, it appeared that Ward arrived home early on Saturday evening, and gave his wife 11s, having earned 12s during the week. He again left home for Wednesbury, to secure some money owing to him. His wife went out of the house after his departure, for marketing, and returned shortly after nine, when she appears to have left her husband’s supper on the table, and gone upstairs to bed. Unfortunately, when at the top of the stairs, deceased’s feet must have gone from under her, and she fell down the stairs, partly injuring herself, and lay at the bottom. Ward returned home shortly after one on the Sunday morning, and had to force an entrance into the house, as he could not get any one to open the door. After striking a light, he perceived his wife lying on the floor, apparently resting her head on one hand, and snoring; and, as he thought, sleeping all right, a custom she had before adopted, after having had ‘a little drink.’ He did not attempt to arouse her, because on such occasions, it took so long to get her again to sleep. After partaking of supper, he went upstairs to bed, thinking that his wife was all right sleeping. He came downstairs about seven in the morning, and saw the body of his wife in the same position, but found that she was dead. He called in a neighbour, and also police-officer Buckley. The deceased had occasionally taken a little drink.

One witness, who resided next door, stated that about eleven o’clock she heard a great noise, like some one falling; and she wanted to get up but her husband advised her not. She also heard Ward knocking at the door early on Sunday morning, and heard him force open the door.

The body of the deceased was slightly injured, apparently from a fall.

The Jury returned a verdict that the deceased had come to her death by falling down the stairs.”

“This (Tuesday) morning Mr. W. H. Phillips, district coroner, held an inquest at the SADDLE AND STIRRUPS INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, touching the death of Bernard McIlroy, aged 67, labourer, late of Warwick Street. Alfred Harthill, an ironworker, deposed that on Sunday morning he saw deceased walk towards a waggon in which he, with several other people, were about to proceed to Tenbury for hop-picking purposes. He was seated on the front of the waggon, when witness noticed him fall suddenly, and death ensued in a few minutes. Elizabeth McIlroy said the deceased, her husband, complained on the morning in question of feeling unwell, and had at different times suffered from a pain in the left side. He, however, left home apparently in his usual health, but a short time afterwards was brought home dead. The jury were of opinion that death arose from heart disease, and returned a verdict of Natural Causes.”

Darlaston Weekly Times 10/10/1885

“On Tuesday afternoon W. H. Phillips, Esq, coroner, held an inquest at the SADDLE AND STIRRUPS INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, touching the death of James Hayward, brewer, late of 49, Gozzard Street, Bilston. From the evidence of the widow, Sarah Hayward, it appeared that deceased was 66 years of age, and had formerly worked as a puddler, but of late years he had taken to the profession of brewing. On Monday he partook of his dinner as usual, and then lay down. He got up and whilst having his tea he complained of feeling unwell. Shortly afterwards he turned pale and fell on to the floor, dying immediately. Deceased was a member of the Free Gardeners. A verdict of Death from Natural Causes was returned.”

Thomas Talbot, landlord of the SADDLE AND STIRRUPS INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, was summoned for permitting drunkenness on his premises. Police-constable Insley spoke to finding a drunken woman in the house, and a companion of the woman said they had shared with others sixteen quarts of beer during the day. For the defence it was contended that there was no evidence of a sale of drink to the woman who was said to be drunk. The case was dismissed.”

“On Thursday last, as Mr. Joseph Hateley, landlord of the SAMPSON AND LION INN, at Bilston, was proceeding in a light spring cart, accompanied by two friends, to join a coursing party, the vehicle, on turning a corner of the road at Penn, near Wolverhampton, was upset, whereby Mr. Hateley, falling on his head, was killed on the spot, the collar-bone of one of his companions broken, and the other a good deal bruised.”

“On Wednesday se’nnight a most distressing accident happened in the neighbourhood of Bilston, in which Mr. Joseph Hateley, keeper of the SAMPSON AND LION, Green Croft, Bilston, unfortunately lost his life. It seems that the deceased and Mr. Thomas Evans, a butcher, accompanied by two other persons, were proceeding in a cart driven by Evans, to a coursing match near Penn. When the party turned a corner near Penn, the wheel of the cart, either by accident or carelessness, was run up a bank and the cart was overturned, by which Mr. Hateley’s neck was

“The following inquisitions have been held before H. Smith, Esq, coroner.....

On the 15th inst, and by adjournment on the 21st inst, at Bilston, on Joseph Hateley landlord of the SAMSON AND LION public house in that town. The deceased, who was about fifty-three years of age, was, it appeared, on the forenoon of Thursday, the 13th inst, proceeding with three other persons, named Evans, Lane, and Adderley, in a spring cart, from Bilston to Patshull, on a coursing excursion. Evans, who drove, is a butcher living at Bilston, and was a little tipsy; they stopped twice to have something to drink, at Penn, after which they continued their journey, and when they came near a place called Ox Barn, the cart was completely overturned in consequence of one of the wheels passing over a large stone which lay in the road. The deceased fell under the cart, and was killed almost instantaneously; and Lane was much injured.

The jury, after considerable deliberation, returned a verdict of Accidental Death; but considering there was great blame to be imputed to Evans, from his being in a state of intoxication; and considering also his former similar habits, and that the journey was a kind of larking and drunken excursion, they found the horse and cart a deodand, and adjudged the value thereof at £10.”

“A complimentary match, for the benefit of Joseph Tetsall, a local player, who has recently been injured, was played on Tuesday at Prouds Lane Grounds, between the St. Luke’s Football Club, and the Wednesbury Wanderers. A large number of spectators were present, and the game was an enjoyable one. After some exciting play, Wednesbury won, scoring seven goals to nil.

After the match, a convivial gathering of the two teams was held at the club house, SAMPSON AND LION, Greencroft, where a capital spread was provided by the host, Mr. J. Williams, and thoroughly enjoyed. We understand that the profits from the game will be a welcome help to Tetsall.”

South Staffordshire Times 4/3/1922

“At the adjourned Licensing Sessions, at Bilston, yesterday (Mr. Victor Hickman presiding) Mr. Graham Milward made application on behalf of Thomas Alfred Webb and Butler's Brewery Company, Wolverhampton, for the removal of the license of the SAMSON AND LION INN, Green Croft, Bilston, to a house yet to be built in the neighbourhood of Fraser Street, Bilston.

Mr. Milward said before proceeding to put his case to the Bench he would like to know if there were any objection to the application.

Mr. R. Tildesley said he appeared to oppose it on behalf of Mr. John Chilton, owner and licensee of the PRINCE OF WALES INN, George Davies, licensee of the COCK INN, Willenhall Road, and the owners of the same house.

Sister Josephine presented a petition from various temperance societies against the application.

Mr. Milward said he made a similar application a year ago, and it was then refused, but since that date there were a good many altered facts which placed the application that day in a much stronger position than it was before. Today they knew exactly what was the opposition to the application. With regard to that which was being made by the licensees or owners of other public houses, he accepted that as a compliment, because if it meant anything at all it meant that those licensees or owners knew that there were people using their houses because they could not go to any other in the neighbourhood which they would prefer if it were in existence, and because they felt that their houses would stand no chance if such a house as his client proposed to erect came into existence. With regard to the lady who had presented the petition from the temperance societies, they must always respect any feeling of that sort, but it was a question whether, when people signed petitions of that description, they were thoroughly acquainted with the circumstances. If his application was worth a snap of the fingers, it was essentially, an application for the betterment of the neighbourhood, and for the promotion of temperance rather than intemperance. It would remove that bogey that the granting of a license to the new house was going to spread intemperance. The license proposed to be removed to the new house was that of the SAMSON AND LION, Green Croft, Bilston. It was a valuable license, as the house was doing considerable trade, and would entail heavy compensation if taken away, but when they came to look at that locality they would find that there were so many licensed houses that the people would not be penalised if the license of the SAMSON AND LION were removed. That appeared to be the view of the Licensing Justices, for they had already scheduled a house in Green Croft on the grounds of redundancy. It was proposed to build the new house at the corner of a large piece of bare ground near Fraser Street, and having access to Willenhall Road. A good road would be made through the land, and it would have excellent frontages, so that the land could be developed as a building estate, and there was not the slightest doubt that this would be due, although the brewery company only undertook the making of the road. Perhaps the most important point was as to what class of house was going to be put up, and what was the class of house already existing in Bilston. They knew perfectly well what the old idea was, when licensees wanted to sell drink and nothing else. They had a lot of small rooms on their premises – the more of them the better – in which people could go and sit drinking the whole of the time. They had plenty of such houses in Bilston today. The house his clients proposed to build was one of a different character. The rooms would be large and commodious, its appurtenances complete, and the whole could constitute the latest thing in public house architecture. There was no house in Bilston at present like what that would be. It would attract the most decent people and set a high standard. People would not want to go to the dirtier place. It was also proposed to have a bowling green attached to it, regardless of cost, for the purpose of recreation, and he understood that the Bilston people appreciated few things as much as a game of bowls. The Brewery Company would also surrender the license of another house in the division.

Plans were put in, and formal evidence was given on behalf of the application.

Mr. Tildesley said the opposition was similar to that of last year, and it ought not to be set aside. Some consideration should be given to the small owners of licensed houses. It was not quite fair for wealthy companies to come along, shaking their money bags, and to say that they were going to put up a house of a high standard to keep people from going to smaller houses. It was not fair that there should be a monopoly in the licensed trade by people who could afford to spend larger sums of money than anyone else. There were already in the neighbourhood referred to a number of houses in good condition and they were entitled to consideration.

The Justices retired to consider their decision, and afterwards the chairman said they had decided to grant the removal of the license.

Mr. Pratt (magistrates clerk) said it would be understood that the license would continue at the SAMSON AND LION until the new house was completed.”

Birmingham Daily Gazette 5/4/1922

“The County Licensing Committee at Stafford yesterday granted an application for a provisional order for the removal of the SAMSON AND LION INN, Greencroft, Bilston, to a house proposed to be erected on land near Beckett Street, Bilston. Mr. V. Graham Milward, who made the application, said the Bilston justices had granted a similar application. The proposed site was in a very respectable and growing neighbourhood. There was a definite need for a house in that particular locality, in Bilston. Bilston, he said, was perhaps not very up-to-date in its public houses, but it was proposed to put up the latest type of house. A petition in favour of the application had been signed by 272 persons, and only two were against it.”

“At Bilston Police Court, on Tuesday, before Messrs. C. W. Harris and G. W. Sankey.

Joseph Statham, licensee of the SAMSON AND LION, Greencroft, Bilston, was summoned for permitting music in a public room in his house, for which no license had been obtained, on 21st, 23rd, 27th and 28th May.

Mr. J. A. Sharpe, who prosecuted on behalf of the police, said part 4 of the Public Health Act provisions could be adopted by any district. That had been done in Bilston, and under them it became necessary that all licensed victuallers who wished to have public music in their houses must apply to the magistrates for a license. He understood that the Bilston magistrates were averse to granting such licenses, and defendant had taken the law into his own hands. He had not applied for a license, but, it was alleged, had permitted public music without one. He had a piano in the room, and a pianist was paid to play it.

PS Maddox stated that about 8.40pm on the 21st May he and PC Durrant went into the SAMSON AND LION to make inquiries about certain matters, and while there he heard a piano being played. In the presence of witness defendant asked the pianist her name and she said it was Florence Matton, and that she lived at Wolverhampton. He then asked her if she was employed by defendant to play the piano. She said she was, for three nights per week, and was paid for her services. On the 26th, 27th and 28th May witness and PC Durrant again visited the house, and on each occasion saw the same pianist playing the piano.

Mr. A. J. Glover, who appeared for defendant, asked witness if on any of the occasions on which he visited the house he told defendant it was an offence to allow the piano to be played in a public room without a license, and he replied that he did not.

Mr. Glover said that after very careful consideration of the circumstances he had advised his client to plead guilty to the charge. He (Mr. Glover) had been informed that in Bilston, although music, singing and dancing licenses should be applied for, up to the present time no such license had been granted. He had been further informed that within the last two or three months licenses had been applied for, but the justices had refused them. No application had been made by defendant at any time. To get a conviction in a case of this kind many things had to be taken into consideration. It was not an offence for a piano to be used on licensed premises for an impromptu concert which might be suggested by the customers amongst themselves, and for which no payment was made to the performers, but in the case before them it now seemed that Mrs. Matton was paid to play the piano on certain nights every week, and when he found that to be correct he could come to no conclusion other than in law defendant was guilty in allowing it to be done. He believed that was the first case in the district, and he thought justice would be met if the Bench dismissed the summonses on payment of costs. He had no desire to find fault with the police, but he thought that when they heard the piano on the first occasion they ought to have warned the landlord that he was committing an offence.

The Chairman said that he and his colleagues considered that if defendant did not know the regulations, he ought to have known them, and he would be fined £2 on each of the four summonses, with three guineas special costs."

AND

"Joseph Statham, defendant in the previous case, was then charged with permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises on Sunday, May 20th.

Mr. Sharpe explained that on the night of May 20th, three young men – Joseph Patrick O'Connor, William Henry George Thompson, and William O'Connell – were seen by the police in a disgraceful state of drunkenness about 100 yards from the SAMSON AND LION. They were singing and tumbling about. The police gave them every opportunity of clearing off, but they were so much overcome by drink that they could not go home. They were arrested, locked up at the Police Station all night, bailed out the next morning, and brought before the magistrates on the 22nd May. They were then convicted for being drunk and disorderly. It was ascertained that on the night of the 20th May they had been visiting the SAMSON AND LION. That was a Sunday night. They went in about nine and remained till closing time. Evidence would be called to show that each man had about six glasses of ale during that time, and when they came out of the house they were drunk. It might be said in the defence that defendant did not see them, but the onus was on him. It was his duty to take reasonable precaution to prevent drunkenness on his premises.

John Patrick O'Connor (19), labourer, 3, Southampton Street, Wolverhampton, said he came to Bilston on the night of the 20th May with Thompson and O'Connell. They went into the SAMSON AND LION about nine o'clock and stayed till closing time. Witness had a least six half-pints of beer. He felt all right while in the house, but queer on getting outside. He and his companions were quite sober in the house, and he assumed the air got over them when they were outside. The room in which they had been sitting was hot and stuffy.

Mr. Sharpe drew witness's attention to a written statement which witness admitted he had made. He said it was read over to him, and he signed it. Mr. Glover objected to quotation being made from it, as witness had not shown himself to be in any way hostile. The Bench upheld the objection.

Continuing, witness again admitted that he felt a bit queer on getting outside the house. The other two men were also all right in the house, but seemed under the influence of drink when they got outside. They had been drinking in the public bar. The landlord came in once, about a quarter to ten. Witness had had no beer before he went to the SAMSON AND LION. He and his companions were afterwards brought before the magistrates and convicted.

Cross-examined by Mr. Glover, witness said that that was his first visit to the house. He and his friends left about ten minutes to ten, after 'time' had been called. Witness saw an assistant in the bar. It was not until witness got outside that he felt queer. When a policeman first went up to them in the street O'Connell was singing 'Blue Bird' and the officer said that it would be 'black eyes' not 'Blue Bird' if they did not get off. Witness and Thompson then got on a tramcar for Wolverhampton, but as O'Connell was staying behind, they got off the car and went for him. They then got too late for the car, and started to walk home. They had not gone far before they were arrested.

William Henry George Thompson (23), 10, Inkerman Street, Wolverhampton, gave similar evidence, he said he had only six glasses of beer at the SAMSON AND LION, and felt all right while he was there.

Mr. Sharpe: Do you remember making a statement to the police which you afterwards signed? – Witness: Yes.

Mr. Sharpe: Is that the statement (handed up)? – Witness: Yes.

Mr. Sharpe (to the Bench): This statement contradicts what the witness has just said, and I submit that I am entitled to put it in, so as to show the nature of the contradictions.

After authorities had been quoted, the Chairman said they would allow Mr. Sharpe to put questions from the document.

Mr. Sharpe (to witness): In this statement you say, 'I only had beer. It made me queer. I was queer when I left the public house. I managed to get out without assistance. I was drunk, but not disorderly at all. I got drunk in the public house, the SAMSON AND LION.' – Witness: I did say that, but when I came out I could walk as straight as anyone. It must have overcome me when I got into the street.

The Clerk: You were quite sober when you left the house? – Witness: Yes; but when I made that statement I said I was queer.

Witness admitted that he fell down in the street, but that was owing to the slippery ground. When the police arrested him and the other men they were 'stumbling about a bit.'

Cross-examined by Mr. Glover, witness said he had had no intoxicants before going to the SAMSON AND LION, where they had bitter beer. He saw the landlord once or twice in the public bar, and also an assistant named Elliman. All the time witness was sitting down he felt all right, and did not feel queer until he got into the street. He gave no indication of having been drunk while in the house, and acted there in a perfectly rational manner.

PC Adams stated that about 10.15pm on May 20th he was in Church Street, accompanied by PC Durant. They saw the three men referred to. They were drunk, and singing and shouting. At that time they were about 30 yards from the SAMSON AND LION. Witness spoke to them about their conduct, and gave them every opportunity of going away. They went in the direction of the Town Hall, and when the Wolverhampton car came up two of them got on it, but afterwards got off and joined the one who remained behind. They all started to walk in the direction of Wolverhampton, and again began to sing and shout. PC Bates intercepted them, and in consequence of their conduct they were taken into custody.

Mr. Glover: When you first spoke to them in the street, you did not think it necessary to arrest them? – Witness: We believe in giving people a chance to go home.

PC Bates and PC Durrant gave similar evidence.

Sergeant Maddox said he was at the Police Station on the night of May 20th when the three men referred to were brought in. They were drunk. They were placed in the cells and bailed out the next morning.

Mr. Glover raised a point as to whether Sergeant Maddox and a constable visited the SAMSON AND LION on the night of the 20th May, but all the officers who had given evidence stated that they did not go in the house that night at all.

Supt. Higgs afterwards said that he had made enquiries, and could not find that any officers went into the house that night. Some of them visited it on other nights.

Addressing the Bench for the defence, Mr. Glover in the first place submitted that there was no case which defendant should be called upon to answer, but the Bench ruled against him. Mr. Glover then contended that there was not the slightest evidence to show that the three men were drunk on the licensed premises, and he thought that, when they had heard the evidence to be adduced, they would agree that his client took reasonable precautions to prevent drunkenness. They had heard that no officer visited the house on the night of 20th May, but he would call witnesses who would contradict that.

Defendant stated that on the 20th May he was assisting in the business at his house from 7 to 10pm. At different times he was in all the rooms of the house, and helped to serve customers in the public bar. During the whole of that time no person in the house showed any signs of drunkenness, or he would have noticed it. During the evening Sergeant Maddox and a constable came in, and looked through the house. That was about half-past nine. He asked the sergeant if everything was all right, and he said, 'Yes.' The sergeant and the constable then went out together. He (defendant) saw all the customers leave the house at closing time, and not one showed any signs of drunkenness. There was no staggering at all. There were between fifty and sixty people in all the rooms of the house.

In cross-examination Mr. Sharpe asked defendant how many rooms there were in the house in which drink was served, and he replied, 'that there was a tap room, a smoke, bar parlour, and a children's room.'

Mr. Sharpe: Do you serve drink in the children's room? – Defendant: Occasionally.

Mr. Sharpe: Do you mean that you serve the mothers with drinks while the children are there? – Defendant: Yes, sometimes.

Mr. Sharpe: That is very strange! How many mothers would be in the children's room when you had to serve on this night? – Defendant: About nine or ten.

Mary Jane Statham, wife of defendant, said she was assisting in the house from 7 to 10pm on May 20th. She served drinks at one of the bar-parlour windows, and a daughter served at the other. On that night she did not serve anybody who was drunk. Nobody who went to the windows for drink showed any signs of intoxication. She was very strict on that point. She saw the customers as they left the house at closing time, and everyone was all right. The same night Sergeant Maddox and a constable came in, and looked through the house. She heard the sergeant say to her son-in-law (Elliman), 'You have a full house tonight.' That would be about half-past nine.

Cross-examined by Mr. Sharpe, witness said she did not go into the public bar that night, nor did she see who was there. She saw them going out, and they were all right.

Mabel Statham, daughter of the last witness, said that on the night referred to she was serving at one of the bar-parlour windows. She served nobody who was either drunk or showing any signs of it. She saw Sergeant Maddox and a constable there during the night, and she remarked to her mother, 'They are here again.' Both were in uniform. Joseph Statham, son of the defendant, said that on the night of May 20th, he was serving in the public bar and also in the children's room. He saw no customers who showed any signs of intoxication. He saw Sergeant Maddox and a constable going through the house. Witness saw all the customers as they left the house at closing time, and not one showed any signs of drunkenness.

Mr. Sharpe: Are women served in the children's room? – Witness: Sometimes.

Sidney Elliman, defendant's son-in-law, said he was assisting in the public bar and other rooms from 7 to 10pm on May 20th. Everyone who left the house at closing time was sober. He saw the sergeant and a constable in the house. The sergeant said to him, 'You have got a full house.' The sergeant made no complaint.

Mr. Sharpe: Do you sometimes serve in the children's room? – Witness: Yes, but the children are left outside on the verandah.

Florence Henrietta Matton said that in addition to playing the piano she helped to serve drink in the house on the night of May 20th. Nobody in the house on the night showed any signs of drunkenness.

A young man who gave his name as Frederick Wedge, said he was in the house on the night referred to, but saw nobody who showed any signs of intoxication.

This concluded the evidence for the defence.

After retiring to consider the decision, the Chairman said the Bench were of opinion that there was not sufficient corroborative evidence of drunkenness to justify a conviction, and the case was dismissed."

"Bilston Licensing.....

Plans for erecting new premises on land leading from Fraser Street to Willenhall Road, passed on the 3rd March, 1922, were now completed, and an application for the removal of license of the SAMSON AND LION, Greencroft, Bilston, to these new premises was to be made that day. If granted, an undertaking was given by the owners to surrender the license of the ELEPHANT AND CASTLE, Oxford Street, which would close simultaneously with the house in Greencroft.....

Mr. Wright gave particulars of the application for the license of the new premises in Fraser Street. The house to be known as the SAMSON AND LION, he said, satisfied the authorities, and it was necessary to get a final order. The ELEPHANT AND CASTLE, which was surrendered, and the SAMSON AND LION, Greencroft, Bilston, if the licenses were transferred to the new premises, would be closed at two o'clock that day.

The application for transfer of the license of the old SAMSON AND LION to Robert Collins Robson was granted."

Mr. Milward said he made a similar application a year ago, and it was then refused, but since that date there were a good many altered facts which placed the application that day in a much stronger position than it was before. Today they knew exactly what was the opposition to the application. With regard to that which was being made by the licensees or owners of other public houses, he accepted that as a compliment, because if it meant anything at all it meant that those licensees or owners knew that there were people using their houses because they could not go to any other in the neighbourhood which they would prefer if it were in existence, and because they felt that their houses would stand no chance if such a house as his client proposed to erect came into existence. With regard to the lady who had presented the petition from the temperance societies, they must always respect any feeling of that sort, but it was a question whether, when people signed petitions of that description, they were thoroughly acquainted with the circumstances. If his application was worth a snap of the fingers, it was essentially, an application for the betterment of the neighbourhood, and for the promotion of temperance rather than intemperance. It would remove that bogey that the granting of a license to the new house was going to spread intemperance. The license proposed to be removed to the new house was that of the SAMSON AND LION, Green Croft, Bilston. It was a valuable license, as the house was doing considerable trade, and would entail heavy compensation if taken away, but when they came to look at that locality they would find that there were so many licensed houses that the people would not be penalised if the license of the SAMSON AND LION were removed. That appeared to be the view of the Licensing Justices, for they had already scheduled a house in Green Croft on the grounds of redundancy. It was proposed to build the new house at the corner of a large piece of bare ground near Fraser Street, and having access to Willenhall Road. A good road would be made through the land, and it would have excellent frontages, so that the land could be developed as a building estate, and there was not the slightest doubt that this would be due, although the brewery company only undertook the making of the road. Perhaps the most important point was as to what class of house was going to be put up, and what was the class of house already existing in Bilston. They knew perfectly well what the old idea was, when licensees wanted to sell drink and nothing else. They had a lot of small rooms on their premises – the more of them the better – in which people could go and sit drinking the whole of the time. They had plenty of such houses in Bilston today. The house his clients proposed to build was one of a different character. The rooms would be large and commodious, its appurtenances complete, and the whole could constitute the latest thing in public house architecture. There was no house in Bilston at present like what that would be. It would attract the most decent people and set a high standard. People would not want to go to the dirtier place. It was also proposed to have a bowling green attached to it, regardless of cost, for the purpose of recreation, and he understood that the Bilston people appreciated few things as much as a game of bowls. The Brewery Company would also surrender the license of another house in the division.

Plans were put in, and formal evidence was given on behalf of the application.

Mr. Tildesley said the opposition was similar to that of last year, and it ought not to be set aside. Some consideration should be given to the small owners of licensed houses. It was not quite fair for wealthy companies to come along, shaking their money bags, and to say that they were going to put up a house of a high standard to keep people from going to smaller houses. It was not fair that there should be a monopoly in the licensed trade by people who could afford to spend larger sums of money than anyone else. There were already in the neighbourhood referred to a number of houses in good condition and they were entitled to consideration.

The Justices retired to consider their decision, and afterwards the chairman said they had decided to grant the removal of the license.

Mr. Pratt (magistrates clerk) said it would be understood that the license would continue at the SAMSON AND LION until the new house was completed.”

“Lord Hatherton, CMG, presided at a meeting of the County Licensing Committee, held at the Shirehall, Stafford on Tuesday afternoon.....

Mr. Graham Milward, on behalf of all parties interested, applied for confirmation of the removal of the full license of the SAMSON AND LION INN, situate at Greencroft, Bilston, to new premises proposed to be erected on a piece of land lying between Ashley Street and Beckett Street, Bilston, and belonging to Messrs. William Butler and Co., brewers, of Wolverhampton. The application had been twice before the justices at Bilston, who suggested certain small improvements, and it was eventually approved by a full bench. Counsel maintained that there was a definite need in the district for the license which it was proposed to transfer, and said it was a very respectable and growing neighbourhood. One advantage of the removal, if sanctioned, would be that 12 to 16 dwelling houses would be put up on the land. A contract had been signed for building the house and making the road. Bilston, said Mr. Milward, was not very up-to-date in regard to its public houses, and Messrs. Butler and Co. were going to erect the latest and most up-to-date house, to which a large bowling green would be attached. There was some opposition to the application before the justices, but there was none that day, because he inferred that those who then opposed had since seen the plans and proposals. A petition in support of the application was signed by 272 householders, and only two persons signed against it. The Brewery Company proposed, if the application were granted, to surrender an ante '69 'on' beerhouse in the neighbourhood, and this met with the approval of the local justices.

Replying to the Chairman, counsel said that none of the bedrooms in the new licensed premises would be available for the public, and with Wolverhampton and Birmingham in close proximity he did not think there was any call for hotel bed accommodation to be provided. The nearest public house, a full license, was 383 yards away.

Mr. Newman, in the employ of Messrs. Joynson, architects, gave details of the accommodation at the proposed new premises; and Mr. Lowe, estate manager at the Springfield Brewery, was also called. He said the agreement made provided for the laying out of the road, and the contractor was to have, in part payment thereof, the land fronting the road on either side.

Thomas Alfred Webb, prospective tenant of the house, said he was chief stocktaker at Messrs. Hickman's Ltd., where he had been employed 26 or 27 years. In the management of the house he would be assisted by his wife, who had had considerable experience.

In answer to Lord Hatherton, Mr. Milward said that after the license removal the old premises would be converted into a dwelling house.

The Committee granted the application for a provisional order for the removal of the license.”

“Bilston Licensing.....

Plans for erecting new premises on land leading from Fraser Street to Willenhall Road, passed on the 3rd March, 1922, were now completed, and an application for the removal of license of the SAMSON AND LION, Greencroft, Bilston, to these new premises was to be made that day. If granted, an undertaking was given by the owners to surrender the license of the ELEPHANT AND CASTLE, Oxford Street, which would close simultaneously with the house in Greencroft.....

Mr. Wright gave particulars of the application for the license of the new premises in Fraser Street. The house to be known as the SAMSON AND LION, he said, satisfied the authorities, and it was necessary to get a final order. The ELEPHANT AND CASTLE, which was surrendered, and the SAMSON AND LION, Greencroft, Bilston, if the licenses were transferred to the new premises, would be closed at two o'clock that day.

The application for transfer of the license of the old SAMSON AND LION to Robert Collins Robson was granted.”

It opened in 1924.

Roper captain, Mr. A. Rhones vice-captain, Mr. Herbert Davies hon. secretary, and Mr. R. C. Robson hon. treasurer. The green was opened by Major Addenbrooke, who referred to the opportunities it would afford for outdoor sport and sociability during the summer. He and Mr. A. Roper played a friendly game, which was followed by a match between the captain's and vice-captain's teams, the latter winning by 20 points.”

“Thousands of Midland drinkers will be forced to change their drinking habits next year – because of a Government report. Three major breweries are to swop 437 pubs – leaving drinkers to choose between their favourite public house or their favourite beer. The deal was announced yesterday by Ansells, owned by Allied Breweries, Mitchells and Butlers, owned by Bass Charrington, and Courage. The move, involving public houses valued at £11,000,000, was prompted by a Monopolies Commission report seven years ago which claimed that breweries had too much of a stranglehold in certain towns and cities Tenants and managers are being given the opportunity to stay on new terms or change to another establishment. Managers can also opt for voluntary redundancy.....

“It was once a bustling boozer at the heart of the community, but now it is a target for vandals and a shadow of its former self. The SAMSON AND LION, in Newbolt Road, Bilston, closed more than 15 years ago and has been derelict ever since. Last year, it appeared as if work was under way to replace the eyesore with flats, but to the frustration of nearby residents no work completed for months. The pub’s walls look as if they are falling away and the ground around the building has become a hotspot for fly-tipping.

Liz Swancutt, aged 47, who lives nearby, says the situation is now worse than ever and she is fearful of an arson attack. Speaking to the Express & Star, she said, ‘They had started doing work on it last year some time, but suddenly it all stopped, and that was some months ago now. It is now being used as a tipping site. Kids are coming there at night and are dragging out the mattresses and sofas that have been left there and are using them to play with. It is just not good at all. I am worried now that somebody is going to set it on fire. If that building goes up then all the houses around it will be affected and their windows are going to go.’

The SAMSON AND LION closed more than 15 years ago and has been derelict since. It has also been the target of several break-ins, where vandals have carried out significant internal damage. In 2009 a fence was set on fire by the pub in a suspected arson attack. Plans to transform it into five two-bedroom apartments and two one-bedroom apartments were approved in 2015, but the scheme has not come to fruition.

Wolverhampton South East MP Pat McFadden said: ‘The pub has been derelict for a long time and with derelict pubs they can often be a magnet for fly-tipping and anti-social behaviour. It is really important that the owners secure the site and keep it in a decent state because residents should not have to live next to a dumping ground.’

Bilston East councillor Stephen Simkins last year said the pub had once been at the heart of the community. He added, ‘It’s been a bit of a blight on the area for quite a long time because people regularly fly tip there, and we’re up there cleaning it quite a lot. I welcome the development because it will be good to get the site back in use, and that’s the name of the game. But seeing the pub go will leave me with a heavy heart, because I think it’s quite an iconic building in the area. It used to be a brilliant community pub in the 80s and 90s, but it must have been vacant for about 15 years now. It’ll be a bit sad to see another pub disappear.’”

Express & Star 9/9/2017

“An eyesore derelict pub targeted by vandals has been sold at auction for £200,000. The SAMSON AND LION, in Newbolt Road, Bilston, closed more than 15 years ago and has been derelict ever since. It is now hoped the new owner will breathe new life into the eyesore as it was sold with planning permission for 10 new homes. It was auctioned off on Wednesday by agents SDL Bigwood. Planning permission has already been granted for two one-bedroom apartments and five two-bedroom apartments as well as three two-bedroom houses. The buyers’ names have not yet been released, so it remains unclear as to whether the planning permission will be acted upon in this way.....”

It was converted into housing. [2023]

“On Saturday last, an inquest was held by T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, at the SEVEN STARS, Bilston, on the bodies of Charles Cook and Samuel Woolley, miners, whose deaths occurred under the following circumstances.

The deceased were employed in putting a cub piece to the brickwork of a shaft at the Farmer's Glory colliery, and repairing it, in consequence of a body of fire being behind the brickwork. In consequence of their crying out they were drawn up, and found to be badly burnt and scalded; they soon after died. The occurrence, it is supposed, was caused by a body of fire falling into the water at the bottom of the shaft, and burning and scalding the men; the mine dust was red hot, and occasioned a large body of steam to come out of the mouth of the pit. Verdict, Accidental Death.”

Staffordshire Advertiser 29/8/1846

“An inquest was held on Friday week, before T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, at the SEVEN STARS, Bilston, on the body of Thomas Cooper, a miner, who lived in Wolverhampton Street, Bilston. The deceased, it appeared, was at work in a coal pit in the Bull Holes colliery, on Wednesday week, when a large quantity of clod fell upon him, and covered him. The clod was removed as soon as possible, when the deceased groaned once or twice, and immediately died. The deceased had been cautioned about the clod, but he said it was hard, and would not come down. Verdict, Accidental Death.”

"An inquest was held on Saturday, the 26th ult, and by adjournment on Thursday last, at the SEVEN STARS INN, Bilston, before T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, on the body of Charles Henry Hampton Perry, a puddler, whose death was occasioned by the explosion of a steam-boiler at the works of Mr. Vernon, the Stonefields Ironworks, Bilston, on Saturday, the 17th of December last. Mr. Brown, solicitor, of Bilston, attended the inquest on behalf of Mr. Vernon, and claimed to take part in the investigation as a matter of right, which the coroner refused to admit. Subsequently, at the adjourned inquiry, Mr. Serjeant Allen, attended to watch the proceedings on behalf of Mr. Vernon, mentioning that what questions he might ask would be put by permission of the coroner, but not as matters of rightful claim. The evidence was of great length, the inquiry lasting, on Thursday, from ten o'clock in the morning until ten o'clock at night.

The death of the deceased was shown to have arisen from scalding owing to the bursting of the boiler, which Robert Blaze, boiler-maker, and Thomas Lewis, David Cooper, Thomas Cornfield, and Samuel Busbery, workmen on the premises, declared to be unsafe. It was in some places only the sixteenth of an inch thick, and had been screwpatched instead of being properly repaired. Its condition, one of the witnesses (Cornfield) stated was known to Mr. Vernon. He had, he said, told Mr. Vernon and Mr. Banks, the manager, that the boiler was not safe, and Mr. Vernon said that the boiler must be screwpatched, and carried on that way until Christmas. Robert Probert, it appeared had screwpatched the boiler in August last, and had then told Mr. Vernon the boiler was safe to work. Other screwpatches had since been put on, but not in a workmanlike manner. John Wassall and Mr. Joshua Horton, and Mr. Thomas Horton, boiler-makers (who were examined at the instance of Mr. Serjeant Allen) were of opinion that the explosion was caused by want of water in the boiler. Verdict, Accidental Death."

"Inquests held before T. M. Phillips, Esq, Coroner.....

On Monday, at the SEVEN STARS INN, Bilston, on the body of Joseph Harper, aged 29. It appeared that the deceased was at work at a pit in Messrs. White and Lester's field, about five pm on Friday. Harper, with another man named Joseph Parfitt, ascended the shaft, foolishly hanging on by the water barrel; when, about half-way up, the deceased jumped off on to the scaffolding, which immediately gave way, and he was thrown to the bottom. On being brought up, his neck was found to be dislocated. Verdict, Accidental Death."

"Yesterday (Tuesday) T. M. Phillips, Esq, concluded an inquiry at the SEVEN STARS, Bilston, into the death of Richard Millroy, who was alleged to have been killed by being run over by a gig driven by John Taylor, assistant to Mr. Baker, of Wolverhampton, on the 6th of May; and the principal circumstances will be found detailed in our report of the proceedings before the Borough Magistrates on Wednesday, when John Taylor was fined 40s for negligent driving. In addition to the evidence then given several witnesses were examined at the inquest to the effect that Taylor was driving at great pace, and that the horse was galloping, and ran against the deceased and knocked him down. The deceased was carried to Bilston on a door, and was attended by Mr. Cooper, surgeon, but died from the injuries he received. The Jury returned a verdict of Manslaughter against John Taylor."

[In July 1855 at the Staffordshire Summer Assizes, John Taylor was found guilty of manslaughter, the jury recommending mercy. He was imprisoned for six weeks, without hard labour.]

"On Monday night a meeting, convened by placards headed 'The War for not against Russia,' was held at the SEVEN STARS, Bilston, the large room of which was about half filled. A collier named Samuel Hammersley occupied the chair, and the meeting was addressed by Messrs. Rafferty and Dalzeil and two other persons from Birmingham, connected with the 'Conference' of which Mr. Urquhart is the leader. The audience was chiefly composed of colliers and working men. Resolutions denouncing Lord Palmerston and the Government as traitors were passed. Towards the close of the meeting a few respectable individuals went into the room, and Mr. John Griffiths proposed a resolution to the effect that Lord Palmerston deserved support until the nation could find some one better able to conduct the government of the country, and supported it in a brief speech. The motion was seconded by Mr. Howl, and declared carried by its supporters, but the meeting abruptly terminated, with the announcement another meeting would be held on Monday week."

"Wolverhampton Police Court....."

William Clark, who had been several times remanded, was brought up today and committed for trial for passing base coin. It appeared that he first attempted to put off a counterfeit florin at the house of Edward Foster, the LEOPARD INN, Bilston, on Monday, the 13th ult, but it being discovered to be a bad one it was returned to him. He then went to the SEVEN STARS INN, offered the coin in payment for something to drink, and it was received, and not discovered to be spurious until after he had left the house. On the same day he attempted to utter a bad shilling at the shop of Mr. Dangerfield, provision dealer, in the same town. The prisoner was apprehended by Sergeant Heath, but denied the charge."

"Staffordshire Adjourned Sessions....."

William Clarke, 27, labourer, was indicted for uttering and putting off a false and counterfeit florin, well knowing the same to be false and counterfeit. Mr. Davis appeared on behalf of the authorities at the Mint; the prisoner was undefended.

From the evidence it appeared that the prisoner went to the provision shop of Joseph Dangerfield, at Bilston, and tendered a shilling in payment of some small purchases which he made. Mr. Dangerfield told the prisoner that the shilling was counterfeit and broke it with his teeth, upon which the prisoner tendered a good shilling, and appeared very desirous that the counterfeit coin should be returned to him, but this was not done. At a later period of the same day the prisoner went to the SEVEN STARS public house in Bilston, and called for a pint of ale, for which he tendered a florin, which was counterfeit, and which he had previously attempted to put off at a shop in Bilston, where he had been warned against trying to pass it at any other place.

The fact of the coins being clumsy counterfeits was proved by Mr. Lithgoe, of Stafford, who stated that the florins were without dates. In the many years experience which he had had in attending as a witness in cases of this description he had never before met with so singular a mistake.

The jury at once found the prisoner guilty, and he was sentenced to one year's imprisonment."

“A robbery of an unusually daring character was effected at the house of Mr. Thomas Dickenson, the SEVEN STARS, High Street, Bilston, on Monday night last, and, from the systematic manner in which it was accomplished, it would lead to the belief that the thieves were well acquainted both with the premises and the habits of the occupants. Access was obtained to the house by means of the chamber window, and thus a free range of the premises was secured. The following is a list of the articles carried off: A yellow bag containing 60 sovereigns in gold; about £23 in silver; £8 in crown pieces, old and dirty from not being used; three or four spade-ace guineas; two five-franc pieces; a pair of silver tongs; and several silver spoons. The house was not closed until a late hour, so that the thieves must have been at work while the house was full of customers. The police are actively engaged in tracing the offenders, and a reward of £10 has been offered for their apprehension.”

“Yesterday, at the Police Court, before J. Leigh, Esq, Mr. Joseph Blewitt, the secretary, and Mr. Thomas Dickinson, described as the treasurer to a friendly society called the Nelsonic Crimson Oak Society, were summoned by one of the members, named William Homer, for the recovery of twenty-four weeks’ sick pay, at 7s 6d per week; the total amount claimed being £9. The society’s meetings are held at the SEVEN STARS INN, High Street, Bilston; and Mr. Dickinson being the landlord of that house, the monies belonging to the society are handed over to him by the treasurer. Mr. Waterhouse conducted the case for the complainant, and Mr. H. Langman for the defence.

According to the complainant’s statement it appeared that in October last year, he was one of the passengers in the excursion train, on the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway, when that well-remembered and fearful accident occurred, and he received such severe injuries that since he had been unable to follow his employment. In January, however, the Oxford, Worcester and Wolverhampton Railway Company gave the complainant £450, by way of compensation for the injuries he had sustained, and also allowed him £25 for medical expenses. Up to this time complainant had been receiving 10s a week from the society, but having been upon the sick funds more than twenty weeks the allowance was reduced to 7s 6d a week. After he had obtained compensation from the Railway Company he discarded the club surgeon (Mr. Sandford), and called in a Mr. Banks, from Stourbridge. The treasurer to the society refused to pay him any more money from this period, and it was for arrears of sick pay since then that the defendants were now summoned.

The defence was that after the change of surgeons the complainant had failed to comply with the 10th rule of the society, by not sending a printed note to the secretary or treasurer, signed by the surgeon every week. This, it appeared, had only been done occasionally.

Mr. Leigh considered the complainant had not strictly complied with the rules of the society, and made an order for 15s, the amount admitted to have been owing.”

“An inquest was held at the SEVEN STARS INN, High Street, Bilston, on Friday, before the Deputy Coroner, on the body of Joseph Pitt, a boy only fifteen years of age. On the previous Wednesday the deceased with another lad went to bathe in the canal near a place called the Hot Holes, and got out of his depth. His companion gave an alarm, and deceased was rescued as promptly as possible, but he expired directly after he was taken out of the water. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

“Yesterday, Mr. T. M. Phillips, the Coroner for the borough of Wolverhampton, opened an inquest at the BEE HIVE, Portobello, near that town, on the body of William Reece Burnisher, a collier, of Portobello, aged twenty-eight, whose dead body had been found in a pond of water near to the Machine Cottage, at Portobello, having marks of violence upon the throat as of strangulation.

It seemed, from the evidence of Mary Fox, Isaac Bennet, Selina Roberts, and Benjamin Egglinton, that the deceased had been drinking at the SEVEN STARS public house, Bilston, from eight till twelve o’clock on Saturday night last, in company with his wife, and Egglinton and his wife, and others; and that all these left the house at about the same time. On the road home, deceased, who was intoxicated, became unable to walk, and he was taken to the door of the Machine Cottage, and a request made that he might stay there till Egglinton could return from taking his wife home. Selina Roberts, the wife of James Roberts, who lives at the cottage, refused to admit him, saying, according to the statement of Egglinton, that she had ‘one drunken man in the house already, and did not want another.’ Deceased, however, was left at the door; but when Egglinton returned, he said in half an hour neither he nor others could find him, and Mr. Roberts professed to know nothing about him. On Sunday morning at about eight o’clock Mary Fox enquired if she had seen the deceased. She replied that on the overnight a drunken man had kicked at her door for two hours, till she thought he would have kicked it down. Whilst they were talking at the door, Mrs. Roberts said, ‘Look there,’ and pointed with her finger towards something black-looking in a pool of water twenty yards distance, and then added, ‘It looks funny, does it not?’ This turned out to be the body of the deceased.

Egglinton in concluding his evidence said, ‘I believe deceased’s death was caused by foul means. I noticed marks of violence upon the deceased’s neck after death; there are also scratches and bruises upon the deceased’s body. I believe the deceased was too drunk to get over the double-chain fence between the public road in which the Machine Cottage is, and the field in which the body was found.

Mrs. Roberts deposed that she told Egglinton that she was waiting up for her husband, and would not admit the deceased; and that she heard no more of his kicking at the door after. In two hours she heard voices in the road. Mrs. Roberts’s husband was away from home at the time in question, yet it is understood that there was a man in the house with her.

The Coroner and jury remarked upon the exceedingly suspicious character of the case, and the inquest was adjourned for a post mortem examination, and further evidence. In the meantime the police are investigating the matter.”

“The enquiry into the death of James Robinson, miner (not William Reece, burnisher, as stated in the Post of February 1st), found drowned in a pool of water, near the Machine Cottage, on the morning of the 29th ult, was resumed at the PLOUGH INN, Portobello, on Monday.....

Mr. J. Hartill deposed that he had made a post mortem examination of the body of the deceased. He had found a contusion on the upper part of the left arm, and a bruise upon the left side of the neck, which, however, on dissecting he found to have been occasioned by the body lying in the position in which it was found. The internal appearances left no doubt that the deceased had been drowned. The Coroner observed that there was not a particle of evidence to warrant any other than an open verdict The Jury returned a verdict of Found Drowned.”

Mrs. Hughes discovered it was base, informed the toll collector, and he giving information to a police officer, the prisoner was apprehended in Dudley Street. ‘I beg to submit to the Magistrates the attached list of licensed victuallers who have been complained against during the year. Twenty-five have been convicted, and three have paid costs; one had been convicted three times, and five convicted twice. This is a large increase on last year’s list; but I think it has arisen from the police being more particular in reporting cases of permitting drunkenness – as it was found to be an evil rather on the increase. I believe it has caused landlords to be more careful in supplying drink to persons intoxicated.’

Birmingham Journal 19/12/1868

"On Monday, an inquest was held before Mr. W. H. Smith, Deputy Coroner, at the SEVEN STARS, Bilston, to investigate the cause of the death of Mrs. Mary Ann Bruce (23). The case caused considerable excitement in the town, and Chief-superintendent McCrea was present during the investigation.

The circumstances of the case, as shown by the evidence of Mrs. Maty Ann Anderson, were that the deceased was the widow of a Scotch gentleman, and she had been housekeeper to Mr. Larkin, surgeon. She was the daughter of James Kendon, of Hurst Street, Birmingham. On the 25th of October, deceased came to Mrs. Anderson's house, and said she was very poorly. Subsequently, on the same evening, she came again, and she was then under the influence of chloroform, or something else. She appeared to be in great trouble. A fortnight afterwards she again went to Mrs. Anderson's house, and asked to be allowed to lie down on the sofa. Permission was granted. Deceased appeared very ill, and Mr. Anderson gave her some brandy. Mrs. Anderson went to fetch Mr. Larkin, but he refused to come; but on a second application being made to him, he went to the house, and when he saw deceased he said she was suffering from typhoid fever. Mr. Larkin recommended that her parents should be written to. Afterwards Mr. Hancox, Mr. Malin, and Mr. Gray, the chemist, visited her. She had no medicine given to her but a few resting pills. A few days after deceased went to Mrs. Anderson's house, Mr. Larkin performed an operation upon her, and in a short time she had a miscarriage. In the progress of the enquiry it was elicited that the deceased begged Mr. Larkin to perform the operation himself, and that deceased's father said he should be satisfied if Mr. Larkin performed the operation. Some questions as to the paternity of the child were raised; but the Coroner said it was not his business to go into that, and it was not the subject of the enquiry. Mrs. Anderson stated that Mr. Malin told her that the operation was performed in consequence of deceased having a fistula, and it was decided to adjourn the enquiry to Thursday morning, in order that a post mortem examination might be made. The Coroner instructed the new house surgeon at the South Staffordshire Hospital to make the examination, assisted by another surgeon, and the Jury expressed their satisfaction at it being put in the hands of a medical man not connected with Bilston.

The enquiry was resumed, and concluded on Thursday. Mr. Waterhouse appeared on behalf of Mr. Larkin, who was in the room during the enquiry, together with Mr. Griffiths, surgeon, of Bilston, and Mr. Ballenden, junior, surgeon, of Sedgley. Mr. Malin, surgeon, and also Mr. Gray, chemist, were in attendance, and gave evidence.

Mr. J. H. Love, surgeon, Wolverhampton, gave particulars of the post mortem, which he had made at the instance of the Coroner, and conjointly with Mr. Delane his partner. The deceased, it was plain, suffered from a complication of maladies. These partly account for the intense pain which the woman Anderson described her to have been suffering before the surgical operation which was performed during life was made. Mr. Love's opinion was that deceased died from exhaustion consequent upon abscesses in the left lung and back. Witness would not think it reasonable, or discreet, or expedient to perform an operation when a woman was pregnant. It was one of the great maxims of the profession not to operate when a person was in that state.

Mr. Waterhouse: You say that you would consider it indiscreet to perform an operation when a women was enceinte. Do you lay that down as a general rule? Supposing the patient was suffering extreme pain from fistula, would you not have operated to relieve it?

Witness: I should not. The pain suffered from the fistula would not be so likely to cause miscarriage as the operation. The abscess itself would not cause premature birth. He had never know an operation for fistula performed whilst the woman was enceinte.

In answer to a Juror, the witness said that supposing there had been no miscarriage, he thought the woman would have been likely to have died from the abscess.

At the request of the Jury, Mr. Malin, surgeon, was examined. The witness said he considered an operation for fistula requisite in the case. When he visited the woman he did not know that she was pregnant, but he should not consider that pregnancy was a bar to the operation. The operation would not necessarily cause miscarriage.

Mr. Charles Gray, chemist, Bilston, said he had not prescribed for the deceased in any way. He saw the deceased, when he was in company with Mr. Larkin, a day or two after the first visit, and also about a fortnight after her confinement. In his opinion the pain she suffered was likely to have caused miscarriage.

James Kingdom, father of the deceased, was examined, at his own request. He stated the he last saw deceased alive about three weeks ago, at Mrs. Anderson's. After he knew that she was suffering from some disease, he came to Bilston three times a week to see her. She told him that the operation was about to be performed. After the operation she was much easier. He was in the house at the premature birth. She did not desire any other medical attendant than Mr. Larkin, between whom and his daughter there had been a long correspondence. Witness then handed to the Coroner some letters that his daughter had received. The Coroner read one, and said that everything in it was perfectly harmless; but there was no signature to the letter. Statements were then made by the witness, in reply to Jurors, and Mr. Waterhouse, as to the paternity of the child; but the Coroner more than once said that that question was not being enquired into. The point seemed to be thought a great deal of by some of the Jury, but the Coroner was very prompt in checking any evidence on this point, which he said did not form part of his enquiry.

The Jury, after consulting half an hour, returned a verdict that the deceased died from exhaustion, consequent upon abscesses in her chest and back. The Jury accompanied their verdict with a written statement to the effect that 'Mr. Larkin acted indiscreetly in operating for fistula, when the patient was about again to become a mother.' The Coroner refused to take the addendum to the verdict, as the medical opinion upon which it was founded was contradicted."

“John Adamson, senior, of High Street, and John Adamson, junior, Oxford Street, were summoned for having assaulted William Gregory, the parish constable, on the 24th ult. There was also a summons against Gregory for having threatened the elder Adamson. Mr. Bowen appeared for the Adamsons, and Mr. Fellows for Gregory.

From the evidence at appeared that on the afternoon of the date named, the Adamsons were in the SEVEN STARS, public house, High Street, Bilston, when Gregory entered and informed the elder of the two that he had two executions for gas accounts against him. The three adjourned into the street, and high words were used. A young man named Tudor came up at the time and asked what was the matter, and he was at once knocked down by the younger Adamson, and on the latter being remonstrated with by Gregory he turned upon the constable, and struck and kicked him. It was alleged that the elder Adamson also assaulted Gregory, but it appeared rather that his interposition was more with a view to prevent further violence on the part of his son.

The summons against the elder Adamson, and also that against Gregory, was dismissed. The younger defendant was fined 40s and costs.

It will be remembered that he was last week fined 30s and costs for the assault on Tudor.”

Evening Despatch 12/12/1938

“There was a good entry for the trial organised by the Bilston and District Automobile Club, starting from the SEVERN [sic] STARS, Bilston, yesterday. The 50-mile course included six observed sections, each of which were inches deep in mud, with a particularly deep water-splash (which brought N. Cheshire (Standard) to a standstill) and a driving test which created many failures due to the depth of a rut concealed by water. Competitors, however, enjoyed their ‘mudlarking’....”

“Bilston Petty Sessions, on Friday, the 4th instant.....

Edmund Bate, a puddler, was charged with attempting to utter a counterfeit shilling. George Parkes, an assistant to Mr. Banks, the HILL HOUSE, Shropshire Row, stated that on Thursday afternoon the prisoner came into his master's house and called for a pint of ale, in payment of which he tendered a shilling, which on examination proved to be counterfeit. On being told that it was bad, he produced a good one, paid for the ale, and left the house. Information was given to the police, and the prisoner was shortly afterwards apprehended, and on being searched, four counterfeit shillings were found in his pocket. Police-constable John Oldridge stated that he searched the prisoner's house the same evening, and found two counterfeit shillings in his clothes on the bed. They all appeared to have been made in the same mould. On searching the pantry he found a Britannia metal coffee-pot hid behind the lumps of coal, and upon making inquiries he found that it had been stolen from Mr. Henry James Lester, landlord of the SHAKSPERE INN, and that the prisoner had been drinking there the same day. The prisoner, who said nothing in defence, was remanded till Tuesday, in order to communicate with the Mint authorities.”

“Staffordshire Adjourned Sessions.....

Edmund Bate, 22 (who yesterday pleaded guilty to a charge of having uttered a counterfeit shilling at Bilston), was charged with stealing a coffee-pot from the house of Henry James Lister, at Bilston. The prisoner was found guilty. A prior conviction at the Adjourned Epiphany Sessions of last year, for uttering counterfeit coin (when he was imprisoned for six months), was proved against the prisoner. For stealing the coffee-pot he was sentenced to one month's imprisonment; and for the uttering, twelve months' imprisonment, the sentence to commence at the expiration of the former.”

Richard Corbett was also a maltster and corn dealer. [1851]

Staffordshire Advertiser 29/3/1851

“At Bilston Public Office, on Friday, Charles Gough was charged with uttering two base shillings at the house of Mr. Richard Corbett, SHAKESPEARE INN, Hall Street. It having been ascertained that the Mint authorities would prosecute, the prisoner was committed to the sessions.”

Charles Gough, 37, was indicted for uttering and putting off at Bilston, two false and counterfeit shillings, with intent to defraud Richard Corbet. Mr. Kinnersley, with Mr. Gordon, prosecuted; the prisoner was undefended.

The prisoner, who has but one leg, was stated by Peter Hughes, a hostler and brewer, at the SHAKSPERE public house, Bilston, kept by Mr. Richard Corbet, to have come to his master's house, on the evening of the 17th of March, and called for a pint of ale. The ale being supplied, the prisoner handed him what purported to be a shilling, and received ninepence in change. This coin Hughes said he noticed had a peculiar mark upon it. From the testimony of Charles Roberts, a waiter at the SHAKSPERE, on the evening in question, it seems that in about ten minutes after passing the first shilling, the prisoner called for another pint of ale, and tendered a second shilling, which was immediately discovered to be a bad one. This led to the first shilling being more closely examined, when it was also found to be counterfeit. The prisoner was consequently transferred to the custody of police-constable Hall, who, on examining his pockets, found upon him a shilling and three sixpences in good silver coin, sixpence in copper, a box of mercurial preparation, and some whiting. Mr. Lithgoe, silversmith, of Stafford, proved that the coin was base and counterfeit, and explained in reference to the mercurial preparation, that it was calculated to impart to metals a temporary bright silvery appearance. The prisoner being found guilty, was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment.”

“An inquest was held on Thursday last, at the house of Mr. Richard Corbett, SHAKESPEARE INN, Bilston, before W. W. Ward, Esq, on the body of Thomas Price, aged three years, son of William Price, a miner, residing in Bristol Street. It appeared from the evidence, that on Tuesday morning the mother left home with her husband’s breakfast, leaving a child of 15 months old asleep in bed, and the deceased and an elder brother in the kitchen, when by some means his clothes caught fire. His brother opened the bed-room door (which is on the same floor), and the deceased crept under the bed. The sacking and bedding was instantly ignited; an alarm was raised, and a neighbour named Clamp ran in and rescued the infant from the bed, when it was surrounded by flames. The unfortunate child all this while lay under the burning mass, which had to be removed before he could be extricated. The poor little sufferer was literally roasted; he died in a few hours afterwards. A verdict in accordance with this evidence was returned. The youngest child, we are happy to state, is progressing favourably.”

“Before the Judge of the County Court of Shropshire, holden at the Shirehall, at Shrewsbury, on the 25th day of January, 1853, at Ten o’clock in the Forenoon precisely.
Richard Corbett, heretofore of Bilston, in the county of Stafford, Licensed Retailer of Wines, Spirituous Liquors, Ale, Beer, and Tobacco, and Dealer in Malt and Corn, afterwards of the same place, Licensed Retailer of Wine, Spirituous Liquors, Ale, Beer, and Tobacco, afterwards of the same place, in no business or occupation, and late of Newport, in the county of Salop, in no business or occupation.”

The grounds upon which Mr. Whitehouse opposed were that the insolvent’s petition and schedule was incorrect, the withholding of books and papers, fraudulent preference, contracting debts without reasonable expectation of payment, and with having parted with the whole of his estate, so that he was not a person entitled to the benefit of the court within the meaning of the act. Mr. Edmonds likewise opposed on the same grounds.

The examination of the insolvent by Mr. Whitehouse and Mr. Edmonds lasted for several hours. The detaining creditor was James Dabbs, of Bilston, butty collier, to whom the insolvent owed a debt of £21 16s contracted by a bill and for a bacon pig. It appeared that the insolvent was in business at Bilston, as the landlord of the SHAKSPEARE public house, which he rented from Mr. Cremonini at the annual sum of £39, he also occupying another house at the rent of £30 in Newtown, Bilston. In October 1850, the insolvent had about £50 in cash, in furniture about £100, and eight copyhold and freehold houses worth £670, which realised about £60 per year. Shortly after that time he borrowed money upon mortgage of those houses, and was in the habit of drawing and accepting bills from various parties, until he became so involved, towards the close of the past year, that there were no less than nearly a dozen executions and judgments against him. His system of trading, according to his own account, was by the bill system, and his transactions, which were pretty extensive, were very loosely kept, being merely copied from a board or slate into a small memorandum book.....

The insolvent was examined at great length regarding his bill transactions, and also respecting the book in which he said he had entered his accounts, which he said, after much fencing with the question, was at Mrs. Thompson's, the stamp office, Bilston. He had copied the items from it in order to enable Mr. Senior to make out the balance sheet. The whole of his good debts amounted to £7 10s 2d, and he had no ready money. Insolvent's debts and liabilities amounted to upwards of £700.....

The Judge said he should adjourn the case till Monday, in order to give the insolvent an opportunity of filing the book in which he stated he had entered his transactions, withholding any opinion of the case until that time."

"In Re Richard Corbett.....

"At the Public Office, Wolverhampton, on Wednesday, before J. Leigh and S. Cartwright, Esqrs, William Skillett, butty collier, was summoned by Abraham Roper, miner, who had been in his employ, for paying the latter £1 14s wages on the premises of the SHAKSPERE INN, Bilston, on the 9th of May.

The inn was kept by Mr. Glover, son-in-law to the defendant, and according to Roper's statement the wages were paid in an unoccupied house at the back of the inn, never used for any other purpose. A little girl belonging to the inn, he said, attended at the pay table invariably and deducted sixpence from each of the men's wages, which was to be expended in ale. Roper also stated that he had been discharged without receiving the usual fourteen days notice on account of his being supposed to have been instrumental in bringing the condition of the pit before the Government inspector, a certificate from whom was read stating that it was in a condition which justified the complaint.

Mr. Bartlett appeared for the complainant; and for the defendant Mr. Clayton called two miners, each of whom deposed that the house where the wages were paid had for many years been occupied, and that they had never received their wages in the SHAKSPERE; and Mr. Glover deposed that the tenant of this house paid his rent to the same landlord as himself, totally independent of him.

The bench dismissed the case, but did not allow the defendant costs."

“Brown v Cremonini. This was a jury case heard at the County Court yesterday. The plaintiff was Mr. George Brown, auctioneer, Bilston, who was represented by Mr. Thurstans; and the defendant, Mr. Cremonini, a furniture broker of the same place, who was represented by Mr. Waterhouse, also of Bilston.

The claim was for £10, for services rendered under the following peculiar circumstances. In the early part of December last defendant was the owner of a public house at Bilston, called the SHAKESPEARE INN, which he had let to a man named Glover. This person sub-let the house to a person named Leek, and afterwards gave Leek notice to quit. Leek then found it would be necessary to sell the fixtures in the house, and other matters which he had, on entering, taken to from the previous tenant at a valuation. He being ill in bed at the time, his wife called in Mr. Brown for the purpose of making arrangements for the sale. As it was found that the fixtures would have to be sold at a great sacrifice, it was determined that plaintiff should wait upon the defendant as owner of the property, and ask him either to take the fixtures off Leek’s hands at a valuation, or accept him as tenant of the house. This defendant refused to do, but offered to sell Leek the house and premises adjoining for £1,250, and promised to give Mr. Brown £10 if he succeeded in effecting the bargain, as consideration for his thereby losing the commission he would have realised by having to sell the fixtures, &c. The plaintiff afterwards saw Leek and told him of the offer, which the latter agreed to accept, and by his instructions he called upon his (plaintiff’s) brother, Mr. Charles Brown, the solicitor, and gave directions for a draft of agreement to be prepared. Plaintiff did not consider it necessary to see Mr. Cremonini on the subject till some three days after, and when he did so and asked for his promised commission was astonished by the latter telling him that he did not consider he had anything to do with the matter, and that the agreement for the sale had in reality been effected through the agency of a hair-dresser and tax-collector, named Rogers. On this plea Mr. Cremonini refused to pay him any commission.

The defence was that the sale of the property had really been effected through Rogers, who called upon the defendant, on behalf of Leek, for the same purpose as Mr. Brown, the day following the first interview with that gentleman. It was contended by Mr. Waterhouse that if the plaintiff had been acting in the matter as the agent of defendant, it would have been his first duty after he had stated to Leek what Mr. Cremonini had offered, to have seen the latter gentleman at once, and let him have known the result of his interview, but instead of that he did not see him for several days after, when he came to claim commission. Mr. Cremonini also denied having ever made such an offer to Mr. Brown as had been stated.

Several witnesses were called on each side, and the Jury, after a short consultation, returned a verdict for the plaintiff.”

Wolverhampton Chronicle 3/2/1864

“We have great pleasure in being able to announce what will be to many families the gratifying intelligence that the colliery proprietors in the Wolverhampton district, and also those ironmasters who are likewise the owners of coal mines, came to a resolution, at their meeting on Wednesday last, that the daily wages of the men in the Bradley district, in which thick and thin coal are both being worked, shall be 3s 6d a day, and increase of 3d upon the wages previously offered by the master; but they have also resolved that the wages in that portion of Wolverhampton district in which thin coal is being worked shall remain at 3s 6d a day, an increase of 3d upon the wages previously offered by the masters; but they have also resolved that the wages in that portion of the Wolverhampton district in which thin coal only is being worked shall remain at 3s 3d a day. By this resolution the difference of 6d a day, which has hitherto existed between the men in the West Bromwich and thick coal district on the one hand, and the thin coal district on the other, is maintained, but a concession of 3d a day is thereby made to the men who work in the Bradley district in which thick and thin coal are found in the same field. There has been for some time past a movement, on the part of the men in the Wolverhampton district, to make the wages assimilate somewhat more nearly to those in the West Bromwich district; and by the decision thus come to by the masters this object has in a great measure been attained. At the time the resolution was passed, the colliers on strike in this neighbourhood were those employed by Messrs. G. B. Thorneycroft and Co., and as many as could be in the time were informed of the decision by Messrs. Thorneycroft's agents at Bradley, by communicating with the men in the usual way. Desirous of showing their gratitude for the concession thus made to them, the men themselves held a meeting at the SHAKESPEARE INN, Bilston, on Monday last, when the following resolution, moved by Enoch James, secretary of the District Association, seconded by Samuel Smith, was carried unanimously.

That we, the miners in the employ of Messrs. G. B. Thorneycroft and Co., upon returning to our work, desire to express our grateful satisfaction at the manner in which our employers have acceded to our wishes, and to assure them of our determination to use our best efforts to promote the interests of a firm which has for so many years found labour for a large number of hands, believing that as we best serve them, we shall best serve ourselves."

"At the Police Court yesterday, a woman named Mrs. Leek, landlady of the SHAKSPERE public house, was charged with having her house open during improper hours. Mr. Fellowes defended.

Police-sergeant Harrison stated he was on duty in Market Street on Saturday morning last, about three o'clock, when he saw a drunken man sitting on the door-step of the defendant's house. While talking to this man he heard a noise in the house, as if some one was unlocking the house door. He waited, and presently a man came staggering out of the house. He took hold of him to prevent him from falling. He then went inside the house, and found a man asleep, with his head on the table.

For the defence, it was stated that the man who was in the house with his head upon the table was the auditor of the Working Men's Union, which was held at the house. The meeting carried on until a late hour, and the auditor was asked to stop and help the son of the landlady to brew. The auditor said he had not had any drink, but it was the fumes arising from the ale, while brewing, that had intoxicated him.

The defendant was fined £5 and costs. This makes the seventh time she had been convicted since 1861."

"The collier's strike, which has been languishing all the week, received its death-blow at a meeting of the men held this afternoon at Bilston. The meeting was called by the following handbill.

'A meeting of the Bilston colliers and miners will be held at the old ground at the back of the Market Place, at two o'clock this day, Saturday, October 15th. All men are requested to attend, as Mr. Samuel Griffiths will address the meeting on the present important juncture. The committee having resolved to ask this gentleman's advice, Mr. Griffiths has promised to be here. Robert Davies, sec.'

It is hardly necessary to add that the Mr. Samuel Griffiths in question is the well-known metal broker of that name, who is a native of Bilston, and highly popular with the working classes of the town and neighbourhood. Notwithstanding the shortness of the notice, between two and three thousand persons had assembled in the open space at the back of Bilston Market, facing the SHAKESPEARE, and it was resolved to address them from an open window.

Mr. Griffiths addressed the meeting at some length and in a speech replete with sound argument and good feeling told them that, while they were amply justified in striking, and while, with one or two exceptions, for which the general body of the colliers were not responsible, they had conducted themselves in a most exemplary manner, yet the iron trade, by which nearly the whole of the coal raised in the district was consumed, was in a condition that rendered any further continuance of the struggle hopeless.

The patient attention paid to this address was most remarkable. The truths told were evidently most unpalatable, but the upturned features alone told the feeling.

Mr. Lloyd, miner and member of the committee, moved 'That, subject to the approval of the central committee, held at the SHAKESPEARE INN, Bilston, the colliers and miners now on strike in the Bilston district do resume work on Monday next, the arguments brought forward by Mr. Samuel Griffiths that this is the best course to be adopted, in the present condition of the strike in Bilston, having proved so convincing.' This resolution was seconded by Mr. Benjamin Owen, another member of the committee.

If it was unpalatable for the men to hear this, it was still more unpalatable to these two leaders of the strike to commend the motion to their followers, and their evident trepidation was hailed with shouts of laughter several times renewed.

Mr. Griffiths then put the motion to the meeting, but to thus sign the death-warrant of the strike was more than they could do, and the proposition was received in dead silence, shortly followed by laughter at the puzzled look of Mr. Griffiths and some cries of 'We will play on' from the committee of miners of the Dudley district. Mr. Griffiths briefly thanked them for their attention and good behaviour, and retired below with the committee, who, after a brief consultation, resolved to follow in the humour of the meeting, to leave every man to do as he pleased, abnegating their functions.

So ends the strike as far as the Bilston district is concerned."

"On Friday at Bilston Police Court, before T. J. Perry and G. P. A. Pudsey, Esqs, a man, named Clement Styche, a collier, residing at March End, Willenhall, was charged with having stolen a bottle of gin and a decanter of wine, the property of Mr. [sic] Leake, landlord [sic] of the SHAKESPEARE INN, Bilston. It appeared that on Wednesday evening last the prisoner went to the prosecutor's house, and sat in a small room which adjoins the bar. Whilst he was there Mrs. Leake, who was the only person in charge of the bar, had occasion to leave it for a few moments and go into the kitchen, and on her return she at once missed from a shelf in the bar a bottle of gin and a decanter of wine. At the same time it was noticed that the prisoner was attempting to conceal something underneath his coat, and Mrs. Leake's daughter being suspicious that he was the thief went and lifted up his coat and there found the missing bottle of gin. The prisoner then made his escape out of the house, but was immediately followed and caught and handed over to the custody of Police-constable Chatfield. A search was then made for the decanter of sherry, but this could not be found. The prisoner pleaded guilty to stealing the gin, and was sent to prison for one month."

“Staffordshire April Sessions.....

John Layton, 22, miner, was indicted for stealing five bottles of whisky and sherry, the property of Margaret Leake. Mr. Brindley conducted the prosecution.

It appeared that on the evening of the 24th ult, the prisoner and a man named John Barnett called at the SHAKESPEARE INN, Bilston, which is kept by the prosecutrix, and were supplied with some ale. They remained in the house about a quarter of an hour, and after they had left several bottles of whisky and sherry were missed from the bar. The men were followed and apprehended, and the bottles which they had emptied, were found on the road. On being taken before the magistrates Barnett admitted his guilt and was sentenced to two months' imprisonment. He now gave evidence against Layton.

The jury found the prisoner guilty, and it appeared that he had previously been convicted of felony, for which he was sentenced to three years' penal servitude. The Assistant-Chairman said this was the fifth time the prisoner had been convicted there, and he must now sentence him to be kept in penal servitude for seven years.”

Bilston Division, August 31, 1866.

‘I beg to submit to the Magistrates the attached list of licensed victuallers who have been complained against during the year. Twenty-five have been convicted, and three have paid costs; one had been convicted three times, and five convicted twice. This is a large increase on last year's list; but I think it has arisen from the police being more particular in reporting cases of permitting drunkenness – as it was found to be an evil rather on the increase. I believe it has caused landlords to be more careful in supplying drink to persons intoxicated.’

Mr. Underhill, of Wolverhampton, applied on behalf of Mrs. Margaret Leek, for a license to sell excisable liquors, to the SHAKESPEARE INN, Market Street. Up to some two years ago, the SHAKESPEARE was an old-licensed house, when Mrs. Leek was fined £5, and had her license taken away, for permitting drunkenness. At the next licensing meeting the Magistrates refused to renew Mrs. Leek's license. Mr. Underhill considered that having paid a penalty of £5, and having been two years excluded from a license, Mrs. Leek had been sufficiently punished.

Mr. Underhill also appeared on behalf of Mr. Cremonini, of Bilston, who is the mortgagee to a considerable extent upon the SHAKESPEARE. Mr. Underhill handed in a testimonial in favour of the application, numerously signed by ratepayers; and Mr. Dimmock remarked that Mr. Hancock, surgeon, had attended for several ratepayers, and spoken to them (the Magistrates) in behalf of Mrs. Leek. There was no opposition Deferred to the adjourned licensing meeting.”

“Yesterday the annual Bilston Licensing Meeting was held at the Public Office.....

The first application for a new license was made by Mr. H. Underhill, who appeared on behalf of Mrs. Leek, of the SHAKSPERE INN, Market Street, Bilston. Mr. Underhill stated that the house in which the appellant resided had been kept by her husband for five years, but he died some time back, and she kept on the business in the stead of her husband. Some time after his death she was charged on a summons before the Stipendiary at Bilston with permitting drunkenness at her house. The Bench thought the case fully proved, and fined her the full penalty of £5 and costs. She had also been fined 1s for a similar offence. At the next licensing day her license was refused. She now kept open the place as an ordinary beerhouse, and he applied for a victualler's license for her. Considering the punishment that she had received in the heavy penalty which she had to pay, and the experience she had had in keeping a licensed house, he did not think that the Bench would refuse the application. The Bench stated that Dr. Hancox had attended at the Court on behalf of several ratepayers who resided in the neighbourhood in which the appellant lived, to request that the application for a license should be granted on the ground that a licensed house was greatly needed in the neighbourhood.....

The Bench deferred the consideration of the case until the adjourned licensing day.”

“The annual Licensing Sessions for Bilston district was held yesterday, at the Police Court.....

Mr. Best applied for a license for Mr. W. Rogers, to the SHAKESPEARE INN, Bilston. The house had formerly been a licensed one, but in consequence of the misconduct of the then occupant it was withdrawn, on the intimation, however, that if a suitable tenant could be obtained the license would be renewed; hence the present application. Mr. Thurstans opposed on behalf of Mr. Evans, of the HOP POLE, a licensed house on the opposite side of the street..... In the case of William Rogers, the license would be granted on the promise that the part of the house now used as a lodging house should be added to the house.”

"To the Editor of the Daily Gazette.

Sir. Under the head 'Willenhall,' your reporter was in error in stating that Thomas Richards, publican, Bilston, was fined 10s and costs for causing some obstruction in the footpath on the Willenhall Road. It should have read Thomas Rogers, SHAKESPEARE INN, Bilston. Myself and John Richards, of the ANGEL INN, Bilston, never having kept any dogs, we should wish it to be fully stated in your tomorrow's paper that neither I, Thomas Richards, nor John Richards, innkeepers, of Bilston, had anything to do with the case.

Yours truly, Thomas Richards, RED LION INN, Dudley Street. John Richards, ANGEL INN, Hall Street. Bilston, May 30."

"At the Bilston Petty Sessions on Friday, before Captain Perry and Mr. W. Hatton, Christopher Pooler, fishmonger, of Kidderminster, was charged with assaulting his wife Elizabeth and causing her grievous bodily harm. The prosecutrix appeared in Court with her head bandaged, and in a very weak condition. She confirmed the depositions which she had previously given to the Magistrates' clerk. They were to the effect that a fortnight ago she left her husband, owing to his ill-treatment, and went to reside in Bilston, hoping that during her absence he would become better. On Tuesday morning, however, he went to the SHAKESPEARE INN, Market Street, where she was staying, and tried to persuade her to accompany him home. She declined at first, but afterwards consented, and they became reconciled. In the afternoon they went for a walk together in the town, and returned to the SHAKESPEARE INN about half-past seven. The prisoner was then, according to prosecutrix's statement, somewhat excited by drink. They sat down near the fire in the bar, no angry words having passed between them. The landlord told a servant to stir the fire, when the prisoner remarked, 'I will stir it,' and, taking up the poker, immediately turned round and struck his wife upon the top of her head. She was at once rendered insensible, and when she recovered her head was bleeding, and her shoulder was wounded.

The landlord (Mr. Thomas Rogers) corroborated the evidence of the prosecutrix, adding that, when the woman fell against the sofa from the first blow, the prisoner struck her a second time upon the shoulder. He then took the weapon from him and gave him into the custody of the police officers. When charged with attempting to murder his wife, he said, 'I have done it, and I hope she's dead.' He repeated these exclamations several times.

The prisoner, during the examination, displayed much contrition, and cried like a child. When asked by the Bench if he had any defence to make, he replied in the negative.

He was then formerly committed for trial at the Assizes."

[At Staffordshire Summer Assizes, in July 1872, Henry Pooler was charged with unlawfully wounding his wife, with intent to do her grievous bodily harm; he was found guilty and sentenced to six months' imprisonment.]

"Kate Burke, a domestic servant, was charged by Thomas Rogers, landlord of the SHAKESPEARE INN, Market Street, Bilston, by whom she was employed, with stealing 3d from a till at his house.

Prosecutor stated that having suspected theft for some time past, he yesterday marked some money and placed it in the till. The defendant afterwards came into the room and he went out, and on his return, in three minutes, he missed two pennies and two halfpennies. He called in Inspector Harrison, and charged the girl with the theft, and, after denying the charge, she ultimately took the missing coins out of her pocket, and gave them to him. Witness had no wish to press the charge, and the girl had been very well behaved as a rule, and he believed she had been incited to the theft by some unscrupulous relatives.

The defendant was ordered to find a surety for her appearance for sentence two months hence."

“Staffordshire Quarter Sessions.....

Matthew Ward, blacksmith, was charged with obtaining £7 10s by false pretences on account of a piano from Herbert Beach, furniture dealer, of Bilston, on November 4th 1881. Mr. Haden Corser prosecuted, and Mr. Little defended. It appeared that shortly before the day in question prisoner, at that time manager of the SHAKESPEARE INN, went to prosecutor and asked him to buy a piano. Prosecutor agreed to buy it for £13, of which he paid £7 10s down. When the prosecutor went to remove the piano he was prevented by Mr. Harper, the landlord of the inn, who stated that the piano was his. It was bought for him by a Mr. Casswell, a music teacher, of Bilston, to save commission. He had an old piano from the prisoner in payment of an old debt, and gave Casswell a cheque for £20 for payment for the piano. He had no papers about the debt.

Called for the defence, Joseph Caswell stated that he bought the piano of Messrs. Bishop and Son, of London, on behalf of prisoner, who was his son-in-law. He received 30s from the prisoner as commission.

In defence Mr. Kettle urged that the old piano had been given to Mr. Harper in part payment for the new piano. Harper paid the £20, and was thus £10 in debt to him; but the piano belonged to prisoner. Prisoner made the bargain with the prosecutor, but when the latter went to get the piano Harper, seeing that what was security while it remained in his house was being taken away, prevented it. He asked the jury to look upon it as merely a question of account between the prisoner and Harper.

A verdict of guilty, with a strong recommendation to mercy, was returned. Sentence was deferred.”

[Matthew Ward was required to enter into his own recognizances of £20 to come up for judgement when called upon.]

“Thomas Ellitts, chimney sweep, Stafford Street, Bilston, was charged with stealing a gold watch, value £11, from the person of James Wigley, a carrier, of Horseley Heath, Great Bridge.

On the 25th instant, the prosecutor was drinking and treating a number of men in the SHAKESPERE INN, Market Street. Prisoner was among the number, and sat next to the prosecutor. After having been drinking for some time, prosecutor went outside, and prisoner followed. While outside prosecutor felt a tug at his watch chain, and missed his watch. A witness named Doyle, who knew the prisoner and saw him snatch the watch, gave information which led to his arrest.

When charged with having stolen the watch on his return to the liquor vaults, accused strongly denied the theft. The next morning accused sent his son with the watch to Mr. Valentine, the manager of the house, with a statement that as he was going out, he found the watch in a gutter at the back of the SHAKESPERE INN, and that it might be the one which the ‘bother had been about.

Detective Hayward stated that when he arrested the prisoner, the same statement was made, but on going to the place where the watch was stated to have been found, it proved to be one of the most frequented parts of the street. Prisoner was committed to the Sessions, bail being accepted; two sureties of £10 each, and a personal security of £25."

Reuben Valentine was married to Elizabeth.

"At Bilston Police Court, yesterday....."

Mr. Tildesley applied for the transfer of the SHAKESPEARE INN, Market Street, from George Anson to Alfred Waters. Anson said he objected to the transfer simply from the manner in which he had been treated by Messrs. Showell, brewers, the owners of the house. Mr. Tildesley said Anson had agreed to the transfer of the license and signed the notices, but this Anson denied. A blank agreement with Anson's signature was thereupon produced, but Anson said he had not signed the papers within the last month. Mr. Hall's clerk explained that it was a practice with some brewers to get managers to sign blank forms, agreeing to the transfer of the license at the time when the transfer was made to them. The application was refused."

Evening Despatch 12/12/1952

"Police objections were raised at Bilston Court today to the transfer of the license of the SHAKESPEARE INN, Bilston, from John Wallbank to Samuel Thomas Swinburne, of Wolverhampton. Inspector H. C. W. Bates said that Swinburne had a part-time job in the Territorial Army and had five previous convictions, the last being for assault whilst a licensee at Wolverhampton in 1946. Swinburne's application was dismissed, and a temporary license was granted to Louis Victor Baker, a licensed house supervisor, who said his brewery had no knowledge of the convictions."

Tipton Herald 6/8/1955

"Witness of an alleged attempt to snatch a wages bag from an elderly clerk, a Bilston publican changed his mind more than once, at the local court on Friday of last week, about the identity of the person who was alleged to have made the attack.

The prosecution alleged that the attack was made by John Baden Oakley (29), builder's labourer, 2, Grange Road, St. Chad's Estate, Coseley, and that when he was unsuccessful he made a getaway on the pillion seat of a motor cycle driven by Samuel Steen (21), general labourer, of 39, Denbigh Road, Denbigh Estate, Tipton.

Jonah Spencer, licensee of the SHAKESPEARE INN, Market Place, Bilston, at first identified Steen. He then hesitated and said that Oakley was the man. As his answer was about to be recorded, he again told the court he had identified wrongly and added, 'My eyesight is not very good this morning.'

Asked by Mr. J. R. Scott (defending): 'You cannot say definitely that either of the men here is the man you saw snatch the bag?' Spencer hesitated, and then, pointing to Steen, said, 'That's the chap.'

When Mr. Scott observed: 'Then that is Steen' Spencer said, 'Just a moment. He then pointed to Oakley and said, 'That's the chap I can tell now with the moustache, but he was wearing a dirty old mack at the time.'

Spencer was wearing spectacles which he removed several times, and, agreeing with Mr. Scott that he was not quite sure, said that his glasses had steamed up. He further agreed that after removing his spectacles he was still not quite sure of the identity of the man who was alleged to have made the attack. He explained that the man at the time of the alleged attack had a moustache and wore an old mackintosh.

Oakley and Steen elected to go for trial on a charge of attempting to steal from the person of Arthur Stanley Gould, a bag containing £281, the property of Perks and Gould Ltd., builders, Shale Street, Bilston.

Mr. Ernest Brown, (prosecuting) alleged that the two men conspired to waylay Mr. Gould following his weekly visit to Barclays Bank to draw wages for the employees. The incident, he said, took place at about 10.30am on July 7th when Mr. Gould, a man of 64, was walking along Market Street back to his firm's office.

Mr. Brown alleged that after the attack Oakley got on the pillion of a motor cycle on which Steen was waiting in Bankfield Road. At the bottom of Bankfield Road, Oakley's coat got entangled in the rear wheel of the motor cycle and the men abandoned it. They ran along Brook Street into Oxford Street where they caught a bus to Wolverhampton. There they were seen by the police in connection with a report which Steen had made that his motor cycle had been stolen. They were eventually brought to Bilston by PC Stirland and when charged, Steen said, 'I know nothing about it, and Oakley replied, 'I plead not guilty.'

Mr. Gould, who lives at 40, Dudley Walk, Goldthorn Park, Wolverhampton, gave evidence that as he crossed the mouth of Bankfield Road to the opposite footpath, he felt 'a very big tug or snatch' at the money bag which he had in his left hand. Holding on to the bag he turned and saw a man running down Bankfield Road. The man got on the pillion seat of a motor cycle which another man immediately drove away towards Bradley.

Gould said that he suffered from shock. A number of people gathered round and he eventually found himself in the fire station, where he was seen by the police.

Cross-examined, Gould said he would not recognise either man as he did not see their faces, or get a good look at the men.

Spencer, in his evidence, said he followed a young man whom he had seen acting suspiciously near the sleeping quarters opposite the fire station. Mr. Gould was a few yards ahead and the young man, said Spencer, attacked him from the rear and made a grab at the bag. When witness shouted the man looked round and ran down Bankfield Road.

Mrs. Irene Sweizy, a sweep shop assistant, of 31, Brierley Lane, Bradley, said she was cycling along Bankfield Road towards Bilston when she saw a man whom she had known by sight for four or five years run to a motor cycle. As soon as he got on the motor cycle it went off at a terrific speed. She added that she later picked out a photograph of Oakley at Coseley Police Station.

Chief Insp. W. E. T. Hinckley stated that an identification parade was held at Bilston Police Station on July 8th when Steen was picked out by two witnesses, Edward Arthur Simmons, 2, Bankfield Road, groundsman at Sankey's sports ground, and Jeffrey Lester Poole, carpenter and joiner, Electra, Mountford Lane, Bilston. No person picked out Oakley, the Chief Inspector added.

Simmons, in evidence, identified Steen as the driver of the motor cycle which he saw the two men abandon at the junction of Bankfield Road and Brook Terrace. There was a mackintosh entangled in the rear wheel of the motor cycle.

Poole said that he was working in the vicinity of Bankfield Road and saw Steen astride and revving up a stationary motor cycle. 'He seemed very anxious for something to happen, and kept looking behind him towards Market Street. He glanced towards me occasionally. After two or three minutes, another man came running down Bankfield Road and jumped on the back. The motor cycle moved off at a terrific pace.'

PC Hart (Wolverhampton) said that at 12.6pm on July 7th he was directed to a telephone box in Bilston Street, Wolverhampton. Steen came out of the kiosk, and with Oakley crossed the road, where Steen reported that his motor cycle had been stolen. Both men went to the police station.

PC Stirland said he saw the accused at Wolverhampton Police Station, and brought them to Bilston, where they were charged. Oakley, who was then wearing a moustache, said, 'I plead not guilty,' and Steen replied, 'I know nothing about it.'

Both men pleaded not guilty and reserved their defence. They were committed to Stafford Quarter Session in September."

[At the Staffordshire Quarter Session, in October 1955, John Baden Oakley and Samuel Steen, were found guilty and each sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment.]

".....Walsall Wood Working Men's Club's pile of pennies amounted to £50 at the official counting ceremony, which followed a knock-out punch to dismantle the pile by boxer Randolph Turpin on Saturday. Randolph Turpin was brought along to perform the knock-out by Mr. Jonah Spencer, of the SHAKESPEARE, Bilston The total proceeds from the pile of pennies, together with an on-the-spot effort, amounted to £54 10s, in aid of the Bedford Fund of the Walsall and District Infantile Paralysis Fellowship."

Cannock Chase Examiner 9/1/1875

“John Knight, of Bilston, a young man, was summoned for assaulting his mother, Mary Knight, a respectable looking woman, on the 28th December. Complainant at first did not desire to give evidence against her son, but the Stipendiary threatened to commit her to gaol if she refused. She then reluctantly stated that on the day in question her son merely pushed her, and she fell against the door, causing her to sustain the injuries she bore upon her face, which still had traces of considerable violence.

PC Smith said he saw complainant in Oxford Street the same evening, when she appeared very much exhausted. She complained that her son had struck her.

Complainant: I hope you will look over it this time.

Mr. Spooner: No, I cannot, but shall reduce the sentence according to your wishes, and he will be committed to gaol for six weeks, with hard labour, which is a small punishment for his wickedness.

Defendant was then charged with assaulting the police.

PC Owen Smith said he took the prisoner into custody upon a warrant for assaulting his mother at the SHAMROCK INN, Temple Street. Defendant came a short distance, when he became violent, and threw him down. PC Howard came up, but nearly half an hour elapsed before they could get him to the police station. He also threw Howard down. Witness had to go upon the sick list for a week afterwards.

Defendant: I don't remember anything at all about it.

Witness: He did not appear drunk, but was excited, and bit like a dog.

PC Howard gave corroborative evidence.

Defendant was, for these assaults, committed to six weeks' imprisonment, to commence at the termination of the other sentence.”

Birmingham Daily Gazette 3/8/1875

“At the Sedgley Police Court, yesterday, before Mr. Isaac Spooner (Stipendiary), Thomas Collins, landlord of the SHAMROCK INN, Temple Street, Bilston, was summoned for adulterating ale, on the 22nd of June. Samuel Toy, assistant to Mr. J. G. Horder, inspector, said that on the day in question he visited the defendant's house, and was served with two quarts of ale by Mrs. Collins. He told her that he was having the ale for the purpose of being analysed, and sealed it up in her presence. Mrs. Collins told witness that the ale was out of a barrel from a brewery in Bilston. He afterwards took the ale to Mr. Horder. Mr. Horder proved receiving the ale, and forwarded it to Mr. Jones, county analyst, on the 23rd of June. He received, on the 19th ult, a certificate proving that the ale was adulterated with common salt, of which it contained 65.62 grains in the imperial gallon. Defendant said he only put a halfpenny worth of salt in the whole of the brewing, and did not know that he was doing any harm. Mr. Spooner said, as it was not a bad case, he should only fine defendant £2 and costs.”

Wolverhampton Express and Star 13/11/1875

“John Skelly, of Temple Street, was summoned for assaulting a woman named Mary Curran, of the same locality. On Saturday night the woman went into the SHAMROCK public house, Temple Street, and the defendant, who was there, began to chaff her. She returned his chaff by calling him a ‘Grecian,’ whereupon he threw a jug of ale in her face. The Magistrates imposed a penalty of 20s and costs.”

“Stephen O’Connor, landlord of the SHAMROCK INN, Temple Street, Bilston (who was defended by Mr. R. A. Willcock), was charged with being drunk on his own licensed premises.

PC Wilson stated that at 10-30 on the night of the 26th ult, he was called to a disturbance in Temple Street, when he found defendant inside the passage of the house quite drunk. Upwards of 50 persons were round the door. He was then charged with being drunk, and replied that he didn’t care if he was summoned.

Mr. Willcock contended that an animus existed on the part of the officer, and that defendant was only excited on account of a disturbance with his wife. The officer strenuously denied this.

PC Mountney corroborated, but admitted that he heard about the quarrel with the wife.

Defendant was put into the box, and swore that he complained to Mr. Longden about the annoyance of PC Wilson, on the morning of the alleged offence, and that the report was in consequence of this. He also swore that the officer never charged him with being drunk.

Superintendent Longden acknowledged that defendant did come and see him about Wilson, on the morning of the alleged offence, but that Wilson knew nothing of it.

A number of witnesses corroborated Mr. Willcock’s statement, one witness stating that ‘it was easy to get a crowd in Temple Street,’ and that women had a stubborn way of their own (laughter).

The bench said the officers could not be mistaken, and that the evidence of people who hung about a public house was worthless.

Defendant was fined £1 3s 6d including costs.”

Darlaston Weekly Times 25/11/1882

“Stephen O’Connor, beerhouse keeper, of Temple Street, Bilston, was charged with being drunk in the police station, on the 22nd instant. Defendant went to chief-superintendent Longden to prefer a charge against a police officer, but he was found to be so drunk that he was ordered into custody. Fined 19s or 14 days. PC Buckley proved the case.”

“Stephen O’Connor, publican, of Temple Street, Bilston, and Timothy Noon, were charged with assaulting Thomas Brady. Complainant was at work at Messrs. Groucutt’s, Bradley, on Tuesday night, when O’Connor came up and charged him with being a teetotaler, who had run up a score, and left the house without paying, and threatened to ‘knock it out of him.’ O’Connor and Noon then set upon him and knocked him on some red hot iron, severely burning him on the wrist. O’Connor was fined 2s 6d and costs and Noon was discharged.

Stephen O’Connor was then charged by PC Johnson with being drunk and disorderly on the same night. The officer stated that he found defendant beastly drunk in the taproom of his own house. Defendant pleaded that he was so knocked about by the complainant in the last case that any policeman would think he was drunk. Defendant was fined 20s and costs or one month.”

Darlaston Weekly Times 29/9/1883

“William Forrester, Warwick Street, Bilston, was charged with being drunk on licensed premises. Defendant was found in the SHAMROCK INN, Temple Street, on the 22nd inst, by PCs Mannering and Johnson. Fined 5s and costs.

Stephen O’Connor, landlord of the SHAMROCK INN, Temple Street, was summoned for permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises. Mr. Fellows appeared for the defence. PC Johnson proved the case. Fined 20s and costs.”

"A sad death was yesterday the fate of a workman at the Britannia Ironworks of Mr. Harris, Bradley. A young man named George Henry Blockley (21), of the SHAMROCK INN, Temple Street, Bilston, was taking his father's place as a shingler, the father being absent from work through illness. He appeared to have put the 'staff' too far under a steam hammer, and the hammer caught it, with the result that the staff struck Blockley a fatal blow on the head, fracturing his skull, and killing him instantly."

"Mr. A. B. Smith (deputy coroner) held an enquiry at the SHAMROCK INN, Temple Street, Bilston, on Saturday, touching the death of George Henry Blockley (21), a shingler's assistant, who had lived with his parents at the above named house. Mr. T. Rose, of Bradley, appeared to represent the owners of the Britannia Works, Bradley.

On Thursday morning the deceased was working with Enos Stanley Salt, a shingler, at the works, when his foot slipped and he fell forward, and his head was struck by the steam-hammer, causing instantaneous death. No blame was attached to anyone, and a verdict of Accidental Death was returned.:

Thomas Blockley died intestate on 27th June 1892.

Rachel Blockley = Rachael Blockley

Rachel Blockley was convicted on 13th December 1893 for using unlawful measures.

"At the Wolverhampton Police Court, yesterday, Rachael Blockley, of the SHAMROCK INN, Temple Street, Bilston, was summoned for selling intoxicating liquors by retail in an unstamped measure.

Several months ago the Staffordshire County Council issued notices to publicans calling their attention to the law with regard to the necessity of selling drink by retail in stamped measures. The defendant was, however, found to be still using measures which did not bear a stamp, and a pint of ale so sold was found to be two ounces deficient. This was the first case of the kind that had come before the Stipendiary, and a fine of 20s and the costs only was imposed."

Rachel Blockley married Richard Roberts in the 1st quarter of 1895.

"An inquest was held yesterday, at the SHAMROCK INN, Temple Street, Bilston, on the body of Julia Hart (38), wife of Patrick Hart, bricklayer's labourer, of that thoroughfare, whose body had been found in the canal.

According to the husband's evidence, he had had no quarrel with her for months, but she had been subject to fits, and at times had been greatly distressed owing to the misfortunes of her children. When she went out on Saturday she told one of her children that she would not be seen again. As she did not return home witness made enquires, and, finding his wife's shawl on the towpath, had the canal dragged, and the body was discovered. The deceased had had fourteen children, the youngest being three months old.

Other witnesses having given evidence, a verdict of Suicide was returned."

Evening Despatch 16/4/1910

“William Chew, licensee of the SHAMROCK INN, Temple Street, Bilston, was summoned at Bilston yesterday for permitting drunkenness on his licensed premises, and for selling liquor to a drunken person, whilst George Hardwick, Shamrock Yard, Temple Street, Bilston, was summoned for being drunk on the licensed premises.

Mr. W. A. Foster, who appeared to prosecute, said that on April 2 Police-constables Craddock and Pitt were attracted to the SHAMROCK INN by the noise inside the bar. They found twenty men and women in the bar, shouting and behaving in a disorderly manner. Hardwick was one of the number, and he was in a drunken condition. He had a quantity of ale in front of him. At this time the business was being conducted by the landlady.

Police-constable Craddock said that when he entered the house he saw Hardwick staggering about with his arms round a woman's neck. When the landlady's attention was called to him she said, ‘He's not drunk. If he is I have not noticed it.’ Witness accused Hardwick of being drunk, and the latter replied, ‘I am sure I am not. I have only had three half pints. If I am drunk, lock me up.’ The landlady afterwards said that Hardwick had been putting some bunting across the street in preparation for the election.

In answer to Mr. T. H. Hunton Carter, who defended, witness said that when he went into the house defendant was trying to dance with a young woman, and a young man was playing the piano. He did not hear any talk about the election.

Police-constable Pitt said Hardwick was ‘palpably drunk to anyone.’

Mr. Carter: If a number of persons come today and say he was not drunk what would you say? – That they were not telling the truth. (Laughter.)

Superintendent Pilliner said that when Hardwick was brought to the police station he was ‘crying drunk.’ He leaned across a desk and was ‘blubbing like a child.’

For the defence Mr. Carter admitted that Hardwick had had some beer, but submitted that he was quite capable of taking care of himself. He contended that it must be shown that he was not capable.

The Magistrates' Clerk (Mr. Pratt): Where do you get that from? – Section 1 of the new Act.

Mr. Foster: I must say I have never heard such a theory put forward before. The prosecution is under Section 13 of the Licensing Act of 1872.

Dr. T. Ridley Bailey said he saw Hardwick at the police station. He was then under the influence of drink, but was not incapable and could speak coherently. He would not dispute the evidence of the police, however, as to his condition earlier in the evening.

Hardwick said he had only had ‘two pints’ at home. ‘Two pints’ meant two quarts, as they got the ‘long pull.’

The Magistrates' Clerk: That's another side-light on the licensing trade.

Chew was fined 40s and £3 2s 6d costs on one charge, the other being withdrawn, and Hardwick was fined 10s and costs.”

Walsall Observer 24/2/1912

“A case was brought by the Walsall Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals against Frederick Blockley, SHAMROCK INN, Bilston, for cruelly illtreating a mare on February 10th. Mr. H. A. Tucker appeared to prosecute on behalf of the society, and Mr. T. P. Haslam (Wolverhampton) defended.

Mr. Tucker explained that on Saturday morning, the 10th inst, the society’s inspector noticed a horse standing in Whittimere Street. His attention was attracted to it because the animal was resting its off foreleg, and appeared to be suffering pain. The defendant, who was the driver, was about to hook the mare on to the front of a four-wheeled waggon when the inspector intervened, and said he could not allow a horse to go on in that unfit condition. Blockley then said, ‘Yes, sir, it is very lame, but it was not lame when I left the stable. I hope you will summons me, and not the master.’ He also added that he first noticed that the animal was lame in Hollyhedge Lane, which was about a mile from where he was stopped. When examined by Mr. Paley (veterinary surgeon), it was found to be suffering from sprained tendons in the off foreleg.

The society did not allege that the mare was lame when it left the stable, but contended that when the defendant saw it was going lame, he should not have continued to work it.

Evidence was given by the society inspector (Abraham James) and Mr. A. E. Paley, who said the animal was in good condition, but was extremely lame on the off foreleg, caused by sprained tendons, the sprain being of recent occurrence.

Mr. Bayliss (presiding magistrate) said that Blockley would be fined 10s and costs.

Mr. Haslam: But you haven’t heard the defence yet. This is rather unusual. While you have been discussing, I have been waiting to proceed.

Eventually Mr. Bayliss directed him to proceed, and Mr. Haslam said that although it seemed that the Bench had made up their minds, he submitted that there was no case for him to answer. The evidence showed that there was a slight strain in the beginning, and that this gradually got worse, the animal eventually being taken to the veterinary surgeon’s and rested. What evidence was there to show that defendant had cruelly illtreated that horse?

Mr. Bayliss: There is evidence that the animal was brought from Hollyhedge Lane to Whittimere Street, when it was found to be in a lame condition. According to the evidence of the vet, the animal was going on three legs. It is a case of extreme cruelty. The Bench adhered to their decision.”

Staffordshire Advertiser 31/7/1915

“George Smith, of the SHAMROCK INN, Temple Street, Bilston, was summoned by his wife, Gertrude, for assaulting her. She said that he assaulted her by striking her on the face because she refused to serve a woman with beer. He said that she got into a temper about serving a woman. They were struggling for a jug, when she caught her face against a window. He was fined 40s and costs.”

George Smith was fined £5 and costs, on 7th January 1916, for permitting a person to take intoxicating liquor from licensed premises during prohibited hours.

“At Bilston, yesterday, George Smith, licensee of the SHAMROCK INN, Temple Street, was fined £5 for a contravention of the Order of the Central Board of Liquor Control.

Mr. J. S. Sharpe, who prosecuted for the police, stated that at 10.45pm on 8 December two policemen saw a man named Frank William Connor, a miner, come out of defendant’s house and attempt to place a bottle in one of his pockets. On going up they found he had in his possession six bottles of stout. The landlord denied that he had served him, but Connor declared that he had, and defendant’s wife ultimately admitted that she served him but this was at 8.15.

For the defence Mr. W. A. Foster submitted that Connor received the stout in part settlement of an account for coal, early in the evening. After receiving it Connor went out, and returning just before eleven was served with an Oxo, the landlord being ignorant that he still had the stout with him.”

“The sitting Magistrate at Bilston Public Office, on Tuesday, was James Foster, Esq. There was an average amount of business, but none of the cases possessed any public interest. A most disgraceful exhibition, however, took place in the Court, in consequence of a number of prostitutes, residing in the sink of iniquity known as ‘The Berry,’ being brought up on the charge of being drunk and disorderly, and creating a disturbance in the streets. Their names were Hannah Pritchard, Elizabeth Bibbins, Mary Ann Clifton, Elizabeth Robinson, and Selina Yates. It appeared they had been drinking that forenoon at the SHIP AND RAINBOW public house, in Oxford Street, from which they were expelled by the landlord, who followed them to the street, where a great disturbance took place, and in the melee Yates gave him a very severe blow, which disfigured his face. Inspector Thompson and his men had them immediately taken before the Bench, but they used very obscene and disgusting language in Court, and behaved themselves in the most indecent manner conceivable. As they were all intoxicated, Mr. Foster ordered them to be brought up on Wednesday morning, and the Magistrates’ Clerk’s Office, when they were committed to the House of Correction for fourteen days, with hard labour.”

Wolverhampton Chronicle 18/10/1848

“At the Public Office, on Tuesday, before John Leigh, Esq, Emanuel Jennings, landlord of the SHIP AND RAINBOW public house, Bilston, was summoned to answer a charge of uttering a counterfeit half-crown and a counterfeit shilling to a brassfounder named Thomas Kenworthy. The complainant had gone into a house kept by defendant’s daughter, for the purpose of having a quart of ale, and having a sovereign to pay for the liquor, the defendant offered to change it. The offer was accepted, but on the complainant giving the change to the person from whom he had received the sovereign, it was found that one of the half-crowns and a shilling were bad. Kenworthy immediately returned and told Jennings, who at first would have nothing to do with the bad money, but ultimately offered to bear one-half of the loss. This was refused, and the present charge was the consequence. The Bench ordered Jennings to enter into his own recognizances to appear to answer any charge which might be preferred against him at the sessions.”

“On Friday last, at Wolverhampton Police Court, before J. Leigh, Esq, John Lewis was brought up on a charge of embezzlement.

Thomas Chapman, of Lichfield, gardener, stated that he attends Bilston market, with garden stuff for sale, and has been in the habit of employing the prisoner there to take it about the town to his usual customers; that he employed him on the 12th instant to sell, and receive the money for six bags of potatoes, delivered to him for that purpose, and with which he went with a horse and cart, of which a youth, who came with witness from Lichfield, had the care. The youth proved that the prisoner sold four bags of potatoes, one to each of four customers, and then sent him with the remaining two, with the horse and cart to the SHIP AND RAINBOW, where Chapman was, and said he would follow him directly. Chapman further stated that the prisoner never came there, and that he had never seen him since, till he was apprehended on a warrant obtained against him for embezzling the money for which he had never accounted to him. Three of the customers, to each of whom he had sold a bag of potatoes, one for 6s 3d and the others for 6s, each party buying them proved paying the money to the prisoner. A police constable of Bilston proved apprehending the prisoner under a warrant, and that on being charged he said he had first bought the potatoes from Chapman, which the latter now denied, and said he never on any occasion sold garden stuff to him, but had always employed him to sell it for him, for reward according to employed time. The prisoner was committed for trial at the sessions.”

“On Sunday night, between eleven and twelve o'clock, Police Constables Blood and Johnson were called upon to quell a disturbance at the SHIP AND RAINBOW public house, in Oxford Street, Bilston. On reaching the house, they found a number of men outside, stripped for fighting. The constables expostulated with them, persuading them to go home. They appeared for a moment to act upon the advice, but when they had gone about a hundred yards, two of the men re-commenced fighting. The policemen were proceeding to take them into custody, and Blood had hold of Williams, one of the belligerents, when a man named Stanton struck him with a brick so violently that it cut through his hat, inflicting a serious wound on his head, and felled him senseless to the ground. Johnson attempted to seize Stanton, when he was likewise throw down. A cowardly attack was then made on the prostrate men, and with violent oaths, an intention was expressed of murdering them; when Police Constables Collins and Devonport opportunely came up, and after a desperate struggle succeeded in rescuing their brother officers. Blood lay all night in a critical condition, and has since been incapacitated from duty. Stanton and two of his companions have been arrested.”

The evidence went to show that the deceased had incautiously gone down a disused part of the pit with a lighted candle in his hand, when an explosion occurred, and he was killed upon the spot. Mr. H. J. Longridge, the Government Inspector of Mines, stated that having examined the pit, he considered that no blame was to be attributed to the owners, but suggested that in places where there was any danger the road should be stopped up, and a board placed to indicate danger. Verdict, Accidental Death.”

Prosecutrix made a long statement, from which it appeared that the assault took place at the SHIP AND RAINBOW on the evening of the Wake Monday. One of the defendants came in selling some laces. A dispute arose amongst them, and then all of them pitched into the prosecutrix and her husband. The prosecutrix admitted that Michael Connor never struck her.

A cross summons taken out by Michael Connor against Larey, husband of the complainant in the last case, charged him with assaulting him that night. A witness named Witten said that he was standing near the door of the SHIP AND RAINBOW, about eight o'clock on the evening of the day in question. Connor was near the spot, and the defendant, as he came out of the house, struck him on the eye, fanged him by the hair of the head, and pulled him down to the ground.

The Bench said all were in fault, and dismissed both summonses."

"At Bilston Police Court, on Friday, before H. Ward and J. Perks, Esqs, a woman named Bridget Foy was charged with stealing 10s. It appeared that on one night during the week, the prisoner went to the SHIP AND RAINBOW public house, kept by Mr. Thomas Proud, in Oxford Street, and asked for a quatern of rum. She was attended to by the servant girl, to whom she gave a half-sovereign in payment. The latter, not having change, applied to Mrs. Proud, who went upstairs for some silver, and on returning handed to the prisoner 19s 6d, being, at the time, under the impression that she wanted change out of a sovereign, instead of a half-sovereign only. The mistake was discovered when the prisoner had left the house, but when applied to for the return of the extra money, she persisted in saying that the coin she tendered in payment was a sovereign. She repeated this statement before the Magistrates, but they being satisfied as to her guilt, committed her for trial."

"Staffordshire Quarter Sessions.....

Bridget Fahy, on bail, was indicted for stealing the sum of 10s, the moneys of Thomas Proud.

The facts of the case are rather peculiar. On the 20th of November the prisoner went to the prosecutor's public house at Bilston and tendered a half-sovereign in payment for some liquor. The barmaid placed the coin in the drawer and asked Mrs. Proud to give the prisoner change. Mrs. Proud, supposing that the prisoner had tendered a sovereign, handed her 19s 6d, and the prisoner then left the shop. Mrs. Proud afterwards discovered her mistake, and spoke to the prisoner about it upon the latter coming to the shop later in the day. The prisoner, however, refused to return the 10s and she was accordingly given into custody. The jury convicted the prisoner, but recommended her to mercy, and she was sentenced to 21 days' imprisonment."

She was not present at the time the accident occurred, but on hearing the deceased's cries, ran in, and helped to put out the flames. When witness asked the deceased how she had been burnt, she said, 'I was striking a match, and a spark 'fled' on to my clothes.' After a brief consultation, the jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death."

"An inquest held yesterday (Friday), at the SHIP AND RAINBOW, Oxford Street, Bilston, touching the death of Thomas Green, shoemaker, an old man of 66, who for some time past lived by himself in a house in Stone Street. Deceased was found dead in his house on Tuesday morning last, at 6.30, by a man named Thomas Astley, who on the previous evening had spoken to him. The old man, it was believed, had had nothing to eat for two or three days, and had refused to eat food given to him by the neighbours. He had been at one time an out-patient at the Wolverhampton Hospital, as he suffered from skin disease. Lately he had not attended the hospital, and he had become dreadfully emaciated. He was destitute, but he declined to go to the Workhouse. There was no food in the house at the time of his death, and no bed. The jury believed no one was to blame in the matter, and a verdict of Death from Natural Causes was returned."

“We regret to have to record a serious accident to our well-known local tradesman, Mr. J. H. Watkiss, of the SHIP AND RAINBOW INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, by which he has sustained injuries of a very severe character. It appears that Mr. Watkiss, having been to Great Bridge on business, on the 5th inst, was returning homewards by way of Gospel Oak, in the evening, having with him a young man named Samuel Hadley. As they proceeded near Ocker Hill, a trap driven in the opposite direction ran into Mr. Watkiss’ trap, with such force as to completely sever the wheel from the body of the trap, smash the shafts, and do other damage. The occupants of the trap were thrown out, and Hadley fortunately fell without sustaining any injury beyond a severe shaking; Mr. Watkiss was not so fortunate. He was pitched out with such force that, through his head coming into contact with the curbing of the pavement, his ear was almost severed from his head. In addition to this he received severe internal injuries. He was promptly conveyed home, where Dr. Larkin examined him, and found that several ribs were dislocated if not broken, necessitating his confinement to his bed.

The horse, a young animal, was taken out on the following morning, and a trap was borrowed from Mr. James Nash, Hartshorn Street. In proceeding down Church Street, driven by Hadley, the animal bolted, and ran into a vehicle standing near Caddick’s butchers shop. The shaft of the borrowed trap was broken, and Hadley was pitched out with such force as to cause him to be confined to his bed several days.”

John Watkiss, licensed victualler and mineral water manufacturer, of Bilston, claimed £150 damages from Henry Osborne, of Hill Top, West Bromwich, for injuries in a running down case. Mr. Underhill, QC, and Mr. Plumptre appeared for the plaintiff; and Mr. Alfred Young and Mr. Jesse Herbert for the defendant.

Plaintiff stated that he was driving in the evening from Great Bridge to Bilston, and when nearing Ocker Hill was met by defendant driving a gig in the middle of the road at a great pace. When about 20 yards away defendant pulled the wrong rein and ran into plaintiff. Plaintiff received extensive injuries, and the pony and trap were also damaged. The case was withdrawn by plaintiff, defendant made application for costs.”

“The application of Mr. J. H. Watkiss, SHIP AND RAINBOW INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, for a license to sell in the Town Hall, on the 17th instant, on the occasion of a soiree, was granted.”

Birmingham Daily Post 7/3/1884

“On Wednesday Mr. W. H. Phillips (corner) held an inquest at the SHIP AND RAINBOW INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, on the body of Anna Maria Astley, five months old, who died suddenly on Monday, at her parents’ home, in Bridge Street.

Mary Ann Astley, wife of Henry Astley, underhand-puddler, mother of the deceased, stated that the child had died from a cold, contracted on Sunday night.

The father deposed that he had applied several times for relief, but had been refused.

The Coroner remarked that the case was another example of the wretchedness peculiar to the township. The only piece of furniture in the house was a chair. The bed was on the floor, and its only covering was an old coverlet. There was a great necessity that some organisation should be promoted to provide such poor people with the needful requisites during a confinement.

The jury returned a verdict of Death from Natural Causes, and added a rider expressing surprise that the child had lived so long considering its surroundings.”

"A number of tradesmen and others met on Wednesday at the SHIP AND RAINBOW HOTEL, Oxford Street, Bilston, to establish a Ratepayers' Protection Society.

Mr. J. Noonan, who presided, announced that whilst the association was intended for looking after local interests and watching the actions of the ruling bodies, it would not necessarily act in a hostile manner to those authorities, but rather assist them to carry on the business of the town at the smallest expense to the ratepayers. Whilst he believed in the town being in complete harmony with its officers, the ratepayers must be protected; and when, as in Bilston, very good salaries were received by those officers, they must be taught that the town expected and would have a fair equivalent in work.

Mr. J. P. Hilton said the rates had been gradually increasing year by year without any corresponding increase in benefit. Taking occasion to refer to the Wolverhampton Union, he said the cost of officers' salaries there was a heavy item, amounting to as much as £4,674 a year.

Other speakers gave instances in which men who had been in receipt of regular wages of 15s and 34s a week respectively had received parish relief.

It was resolved to form a society, of which the president should be Mr. E. Cooper; the secretary, Mr. W. J. Knight; and the treasurer, Mr. H. Watkiss."

“Mr. W. H. Phillips, district coroner, held an enquiry this (Saturday) afternoon, at the SHIP AND RAINBOW INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, into the circumstances attending the death of John Kilavey (23), late of Stone Street, who died on Friday from the result of drinking a quantity of carbolic acid.

Margaret Walker, wife of James Walker, said the deceased, who was her half-brother, had lived with her in Stone Street, together with Mrs. Kilavey, since January. For some time he had been unable, through slackness of work, to follow out his employment as an ironworker. On Tuesday, the 18th inst, he appeared to be very cold and chilly, and gradually got worse until Friday morning, when he desired to have his bed carried downstairs. The request was complied with, witness being of opinion that deceased was suffering from fever. That morning he complained of lumps in his throat, and, getting out of bed, went upstairs, and directly afterwards Mrs. Kilavey, hearing a slight noise, ran into the room and found deceased lying on his stomach, there being marks of burns about his mouth. Witness also went upstairs and found in her mother’s hands a cup, which had been left in the back bedroom, containing carbolic acid, obtained from the Town Hall for the purpose of disinfection. She was satisfied deceased had taken the poisonous liquid.

Mrs. Kilavey gave corroborative evidence, adding that her son, who was subject to fits, was ill from fever, and on Thursday night appeared to be wandering in his mind.

Mr. Henry Gilbert, surgeon, deposed that he was called to see the young man on Friday morning, when he found that he had evidently swallowed a quantity of carbolic acid, from the effects of which he rapidly became unconscious, and died in less than an hour. He was suffering at the time from typhoid fever, a disease which, witness added, was very prevalent in the neighbourhood just now, and which might have affected deceased’s mind.

The jury returned a verdict to the effect that deceased poisoned himself by taking carbolic acid whilst he was in an unsound state of mind.”

“At the Wellington Police Court, yesterday, before Mr. J. H. Anstice, William Woods, a coal-merchant, of Aston, Birmingham, was charged with perjury.

At the previous court, on March 18, Harry Boulton, the landlord of the Bucks Head, Wellington, was charged by the police with having allowed gambling on his premises. This he emphatically denied, and the case was dismissed. One of the witnesses was the present defendant, Woods, who swore that there had been gambling on Boulton’s premises on the 1st of March. At the conclusion of the case the Bench said that they had decided to dismiss the case against Boulton, and were further of opinion that there was a prima facie case for a charge of perjury against Woods; and therefore they bound the chief of police over to prosecute him. Mr. Vachell (instructed by Messrs. Fallows and Cochrane) now appeared for the defendant, and Superintendent Galliers prosecuted on behalf of the police.

Harry Boulton, the landlord, said he heard the defendant at the last court say in evidence that several persons had asked for cards at his house, and also that he (Boulton) offered to back a particular hand at cards. This was absolutely untrue. There had been a pigeon shooting match, and Woods claimed some portion of the stakes, to which he was not entitled. He would swear he never had a pack of cards in the house. He did not remember Woods saying that he would report him for allowing card-playing.

J. H. Edwards, a reporter representing the Birmingham Gazette and Wolverhampton papers, said he was at the shooting match and the subsequent proceedings, and saw no card-playing.

Evan Vaughan, Samuel Rowley, William Harper, and Thomas West all swore that, having been at the Bucks Head on the occasion in question, they saw no card-playing.

For the defence, John Henry Watkiss, of the SHIP AND RAINBOW, Bilston, said Woods claimed £4 out of the stakes, but they refused to pay him. At the bottom end of the room there were several playing at ‘nap’ – two from Birmingham, one from Wolverhampton, and a local man. Witness did not think Boulton knew about the card-playing. He heard Woods speak to Boulton about it. When Woods spoke, he thought the playing was stopped.

Henry Jones, landlord of the WHEATSHEAF, Wolverhampton, said he was at the shooting and the subsequent dinner. He saw the cards on the table, and saw several people around it. He saw no gambling. The cards were produced by a Birmingham man.

Johnston Holmes, a wholesale chemist and druggist, Wolverhampton, said he saw cards produced after dinner. He believed one of the Birmingham men brought the cards. He did not see the landlord there.

Solomon Harris, of Wellington, said he was playing cards, but he did not play for money.

The Bench subsequently dismissed the case.”

“Mr. W. H. Phillips (coroner) opened an enquiry at the SHIP AND RAINBOW INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, yesterday, into the cause of death of George Cornelius Young, six weeks old, whose parents lodge in Bridge Street. On Friday night the parents of the child were going home, and on reaching Stone Street a quarrel took place between George Young, the father of the child, and a labourer named Peter Trennonian, alias Ryan.

Phoebe Young, the child’s mother, said she and her husband were insulted by Ryan and two more men, who began to fight. She pushed one of the men away from her husband, and the man stuck at her, but hit the child, which was lying across her breast.

Other witnesses spoke to the quarrel taking place, and Sarah Jane Pruden, a single woman, said that Ryan hit the child, whose nose began to bleed. She remarked to Ryan that he had killed the child, and he ran away. The child died shortly afterwards.

Mr. A. Smith, surgeon, who had made a post mortem examination of the body, deposed that there was a clot of blood in the nostrils, but no internal or external evidence of violence. He would not state the actual cause of death, but was of opinion that it was due to shock.

Other witnesses spoke to seeing the blow struck, and the enquiry was adjourned for a week for Ryan to call witnesses.

Mr. R. Tildesley appeared on behalf of Ryan, who was afterwards brought up at the police court, charged with causing the death of the child, and was remanded until January 7.”

“Mr. W. H. Phillips (coroner) resumed the enquiry, at the SHIP AND RAINBOW INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, yesterday, into the cause of the death of George Cornelius Young, aged six weeks, whose parents reside in lodgings in Bridge Street, Bilston. Mr. Tildesley watched the proceedings on behalf of Peter Tremonian, alias Ryan, who was last week remanded on a charge of causing the death of the child.

The evidence given previously was to the effect that the parents of the child were going home on Christmas night when a quarrel took place between the child’s father and Ryan. Mrs. Young, who was carrying the child, at her breast, interfered, and it was alleged that a blow intended for her by Ryan struck the child, who died almost immediately.

Mr. Ashley Smith, surgeon, who had made a post mortem examination of the infant, was unable to state the cause of death, but gave it as his opinion that it was the result of shock to the system.

Several witnesses were now called on behalf of Ryan. They spoke to the fight between the father of the child and Ryan, and to Mrs. Yong interfering; and John Jackson, a steelworker, of Bridge Street, said that Mrs. Young was scarcely able to walk, and that she dropped the child.

Lucy Ellen Jackson, wife of the last witness, said Mrs. Young was ‘beastly boozed,’ and fell with the child in her arms.

Other witnesses spoke to Mrs. Young being intoxicated; and Peter Ryan, after being cautioned, said that Mr. and Mrs. Young were passing him and talking about having some pudding, when he remarked, ‘Go home you — fool.’ Young replied, ‘What! I’ll break your — nose.’ He and witness then had a fight and fell.

A verdict of was returned that the child Died from Shock, the result of a fall; and Ryan was censured by the coroner, at the request of the jury, for commencing the disturbance. Had they been of opinion that he had caused the death of the child they would have returned a verdict of manslaughter against him.”

“The Friezland Colliery, situate near to the gasworks, at Ettingshall, was the scene of an unfortunate accident yesterday afternoon, by which two men lost their lives. The colliery, which is only of small dimensions, is worked by Mr. Richard Lett, a beerhouse keeper, who resides at Ettingshall, but who has been the lessee of collieries at Spring Vale and Ettingshall for many years, and as an indication of the care with which he causes the working places and machinery to be inspected, there has not, until yesterday, been a fatal accident in any of the pits for thirty-two years.

The miners went to work about eight o'clock in the morning, after the ‘doggy’ had reported the working places to be in a safe condition, and the operation of coal-getting in the headings proceeded safely until about half-past one o'clock. At that time Robert Hawkins (37), a married man, of No.5, Nelsons Yard, Bridge Street, Bilston, and John Tranter (35), single, of Temple Street, Bilston, were working in a heading, when a quantity of coal fell and partially buried them. The noise of coal falling attracted the attention of four other men who were working near, and they at once hurried to the place and set to work to release their unfortunate fellow-workmen. The weight of coal was, however, so great that they could not be extricated until after half-an-hour's hard work, and it was then found that both the men were dead. The bodies were removed to their late homes to await an inquest. The deceased man Hawkins leaves a widow and three small children.”

“Mr. A. B. Smith (deputy county coroner) opened an inquest at the SHIP AND RAINBOW INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, yesterday evening, touching the deaths of the two men, Robert Hawkins and John Tranter, who were killed in the Friezland Colliery at Ettingshall, under circumstances already reported. Mr. Wassall appeared for Mr. Lett, the owner of the colliery.

Mary Ann Hawkins, widow of Robert Hawkins, said she never heard her husband complain of anything at the colliery.

Mary Ann Bayley, housekeeper to John Tranter, to whom she was to have been married in a short time, also gave evidence to the effect that he had never complained about his work.

The inquest was then adjourned until Tuesday next.”

“On Tuesday an inquest was held on the bodies of John Tranter, 64, Temple Street, and Robert Hawkins, 35, Bridge Street, both miners, who met with their deaths in the Friezland Colliery, Ettingshall, belonging to Mr. Lett, on the 6th inst, under circumstances already reported. Mr. Wassall represented the owner of the colliery. Mr. Pickering, assistant inspector of mines, was also present.

According to the evidence, the working places in the mine were properly examined before the men went to work, and the slip in the roof was quite unexpected, as the sprags were set within the distance required by the provisions of the Mines Regulation Act. Mr. Pickering said he did not think anyone was to blame, and a verdict of Accidental Death was returned.”

“Why the long face? A man brought a horse into this Wetherspoon pub in the Black Country – but he wasn’t going to be served. Stunned staff tried to shepherd the man and his horse out of the SIR HENRY NEWBOLT pub, in Bilston. People enjoying a quiet drink suddenly heard hooves only to turn around and see the horse among the tables. As people craned to get a better look, others tried to pose for pictures with the animal inside the High Street pub.”

“On Monday last, at Bilston, W. Mooney, a hawker, charged William Ward with robbing him of two silk and two cotton handkerchiefs. It appeared that on the 27th of November the prosecutor went to the SPREAD EAGLE in Bilston, and offered his goods for sale. Seeing Ward there, he sat down and treated him, and they stayed for some time. On Mooney leaving he was followed by Ward, who pushed him against the wall, and took the handkerchiefs out of his pocket. He then walked away, and next morning the prosecutor having ascertained his loss, gave information to the police, and the prisoner was taken into custody. In defence, he said that the prosecutor gave him the handkerchiefs. He was committed.”

“On the morning of Wednesday week, a most extensive robbery was effected at the house of Mr. Samuel Glover, SPREAD EAGLE INN, Lichfield Street, Bilston, by some daring thieves, who entered a room and carried off £110 in money. It appears that the money was deposited in a box in Mr. Glover’s bedroom, and consisted of a ten-pound note, £7 10s in crown pieces, five packets of silver, £5 in each, and the rest in gold. On the Tuesday night the money was quite safe, but on Wednesday morning it was missed. The box was opened with a chisel, and the marks left in forcing it corresponded with an iron chisel which Mr. Glover kept in his brewhouse. The entrance to the room was effected by some person opening a door in the brewhouse which led into a malt-room, from which there was a communication with the sleeping room next to the one where the money was deposited; and suspicion, from this circumstance, fell upon Mr. Glover’s brewer and his brother, named James and William Richardson, who were let in to brew on the Wednesday morning, at four o’clock. They were in consequence arrested by Sub-inspector Thompson, who, in company with Inspector Hogg, made every inquiry about the matter, but could obtain no evidence implicating the prisoners in the transaction, and on Tuesday last they were discharged, but ordered to enter into their own recognisances to appear when called for. Whoever committed the robbery must, we are informed, be well acquainted with the premises, and have effected it in the dark, as there was £130 in a handkerchief, lying upon the top of Mr. Glover’s clothes.”

Birmingham Daily Gazette 15/2/1916

In the afternoon E. J. Peedle, Old College Inn, Springfield, Birmingham (rec.245), beat W. H. Mathews, SPREAD EAGLE, Bilston (rec.10), by 400 to 214. The handicap proved too much for the backmarker, though he put on breaks of 32 and 28. He was not consistent enough, however, to overcome Peedle, who, while not making any break of note, was steady and enjoyed most of the luck in the run of the balls.”

“Drawing the first pint of beer after formally opening the rebuilt SPREAD EAGLE HOTEL, Bilston, last night, the Mayor of Bilston, Coun. E. Beards, handed it to Mr. Tom Webster, the famous cartoonist, who proceeded to toast ‘the revived pub.’ Mr. Webster was born at Bilston 65 years ago and the new lounge of the hotel is named after him. The last time he went to Bilston was to open the town flower show on 1921. Prominent among the contemporary furnishings is an original drawing of his famous racehorse Tishy, which always contrived to cross its legs. In the 1920s, Tishy was a national joke – it came home a comfortable winner even over Webster’s renowned ‘Chelsea director.’ Tom Webster was a railway booking clerk who became a cartoonist after winning competitions in local papers.”

MALONES BAR in Bilston, which had its license suspended following the incident on November 7th last year, was unable to convince council officials that the premises should keep its license in the meeting.

CCTV footage, which was provided by PC Mitch Harvey of the West Midlands Police licensing department, showed a young man being punched once in the face and hitting his head on the end of the bar as he fell to the floor....”

[There was also evidence of smoking being allowed inside, and drug taking.]

“A once-popular pub near Wolverhampton that has been closed for more than ten years looks set to reopen after being purchased by a new owner. The SPREAD EAGLE in Lichfield Street, Bilston, closed suddenly in 2011 and has remained boarded up since. New owner Vijay Kumar has now applied to Wolverhampton Council for planning permission to build a new function room at the rear of the pub.

A report by Paul Simkin of Wolverhampton-based Thorne Architecture, sent alongside the application, said, ‘The existing pub has been derelict for years and has fallen into disrepair. Our client has recently purchased the premises and is currently undertaking renovation works. As the layout of the existing pub is cramped and has had a variety of small rear extensions over the years to provide additional room, these are not now adequate and are in a poor state of repair. The proposals are to demolish the existing rear extensions and incorporate the area in a new flat-roofed extension, providing kitchen and toilet facilities together with an additional restaurant and function room. There will also be a small rear deck area. Car parking facilities will remain unchanged. Also, the building extensions will use material to match the existing building and have no impact on neighbouring properties. The extensions will be lower than the height of the existing building and will have no detrimental impact on the surrounding area.’

When it finally closed in 2011, the pub was thought to have been struggling financially.”

“A once-popular pub near Wolverhampton that has been closed for more than a decade is to be extended and converted into five new flats. The SPREAD EAGLE in Lichfield Street, Bilston, closed suddenly in 2011 and has remained boarded up since. New owner Vijay Kumar had initially planned to build a function room at the rear of the pub with a view to reopening, and was granted permission in February. However, a new application to develop the building into five two-bedroom apartments with a new rear boundary wall and gates was submitted this week.

A report by Paul Simkin of Wolverhampton-based Thorne Architecture, sent alongside the earlier application, said, ‘The existing pub has been derelict for years and has fallen into disrepair. Our client has recently purchased the premises and is currently undertaking renovation works. As the layout of the existing pub is cramped and has had a variety of small rear extensions over the years to provide additional room, these are not now adequate and are in a poor state of repair. The proposals are to demolish the existing rear extensions and incorporate the area in a new flat-roofed extension. Car parking facilities will remain unchanged. Also the building extensions will use materials to match the existing structure and have no impact on neighbouring properties.’

When it finally closed in 2011, the pub was thought to have been struggling financially. Planning chiefs will make a decision on the application in the near future.”

[Planning permission was granted.]

“On Thursday evening, a young man, named William Blakemore, a private in the 38th Regiment, whose mother keeps the STAR INN, Lichfield Street, Bilston, attempted to commit suicide by cutting his throat with a razor. Shortly after tea he went upstairs, and in the course of a few minutes was found in an exhausted condition and blood flowing from a wound in his throat. As quickly as possible he was conveyed to the Wolverhampton Hospital, where, owing to his violent conduct, it was found necessary that a constable should remain with him. Blakemore had only returned to see his mother on Saturday, after going through the Soudan war, where he received wounds on the head and wrist. The attempt to destroy his life is attributed to his taking an excessive quantity of spirits, which affected his brain. Upon inquiries made at the Hospital this morning we learnt that Blakemore was progressing favourably.”

Bilston and Willenhall Times 22/6/1946

“Charges of receiving a quantity of cigarettes, knowing them to have been stolen, were preferred against Alfred James Draisey, licensee of the STAR VAULTS, Swan Bank, Bilston, and his wife, Alice Draisey, at Bilston on Tuesday, when they were committed for trial at Staffordshire Assizes.

Mr. E. E. Brown outlined the case for the prosecution, and said that Draisey was alleged to have purchased a quantity of cigarettes from a man named Walter Kendrick, 24, Hickman Road, Bilston. Kendrick and his brother, Alfred, of 12, St. Johns Road, Darlaston, were last week committed for trial on charges of stealing cigarettes from the premises of Mrs. Griffiths, Wolverhampton Street, Bilston, and Mr. T. E. Pursehouse, Oxford Street, Bilston.

Mr. Brown went on to say that on a Sunday in April, a customer was told by Mr. Draisey that he had no cigarettes, whereupon Walter Kendrick, who was in the bar, said, ‘Do you want to buy some?’ and Draisey said, ‘Have you got some?’ and Kendrick replied, ‘Yes, I have got some here for another customer. You can have them if you like and I’ll get some more.’ A parcel was handed over and when opened was found to contain two cartons each containing 500 cigarettes. Draisey checked up the price from a bill which he had in the bar and said, ‘£3 19s 2d is the price,’ but Kendrick said, ‘£3 15s 0d is all I want,’ and this was the price paid over.

On a later date, May 3rd, to be exact, said Mr. Brown, Kendrick again called at the STAR VAULTS and asked Draisey if he wanted some more cigarettes. Later he brought 2,000, and was told to take them into the kitchen, where Mrs. Draisey paid him.

Mr. Brown then read out a statement made to the police by Mrs. Draisey, in which she said she thought the man was in the cigarette business. He did not give any receipt for the money he received. She did not ask him who he was or anything. It was the first time since the beginning of the war that they had bought any cigarettes from anybody except their regular dealer.

Evidence was given by Mrs. Griffiths that her shop was broken into on the night of April 13th and cigarettes stolen, and Mr. Pursehouse said that on the night of May 1st 15,000 cigarettes were stolen from his lock-up shop.

Walter Kendrick was called to give evidence and said he went to Draisey’s public house on a Sunday morning with some cigarettes, which he had had from Mrs. Griffiths’s shop. After hearing a customer refused cigarettes he told Draisey that he had some cigarettes with him and he could have half. He eventually had the lot, and on looking at a price list, said, ‘They are £3 19s 2d.’ Witness said, ‘You can have them for £3 15s 0d,’ and Draisey paid him that amount. He did not remember Draisey asking him where he had had the cigarettes from. He had been to the public house on two occasions since with cigarettes. On one of them Mrs. Draisey paid him for the cigarettes and remarked,

'Do you want it keeping dark?' and he replied, 'Yes.' These cigarettes which he sold had been taken from Mr. Pursehouse's shop. He had not purchased any of the cigarettes which he had sold to Draisey.

Cross-examined by Mr. J. F. Bourke, for the defence, Kendrick said that when he was first approached by the police he denied stealing any cigarettes but after they found something at his house, he admitted the theft.

In answer to a further question he said he sold some cigarettes to a publican at Willenhall at something under retail price.

PS H. Willetts said that he interviewed Mrs. Draisey and after she had made a statement he told her it would appear that her husband had bought cigarettes that had been stolen and that it would have to be considered in that light.

Cross-examined by Mr. Bourke witness said that of the 16,000 cigarettes alleged to have been stolen by Kendrick, 4,500 only were accounted for in the charges against the Draiseys, and 3,000 which were sold at Willenhall.

Mr. Bourke submitted to the Bench that on the evidence offered he had no case to answer. The only evidence they had heard that incriminated the Draiseys was that of a thief.

After retiring the Bench said that they had considered Mr. Bourke's submission, but in their opinion there was a case to answer.

Accused, who pleaded guilty, reserved their defence, and were committed to the Assizes for trial."

"Arising out of transactions concerning the cigarettes which Kendrick admitted stealing, Alfred James Draisey (55).....

It was stated that Kendrick had given the impression that he was a tobacco dealer, and had the Draiseys known the cigarettes were stolen they would never have purchased them. Both the Draiseys had unblemished characters....."

[The charges against them were dismissed.]

"Mrs. A. J. Draisey, wife of the licensee of the STAR VAULTS, Bilston, went 'all of a tremble' to Bilston Magistrates' Court yesterday. Escorting her was a lanky Jamaican wearing a wide Texan hat and an almost baby blue suit. His name, it took the court more than five minutes to discover, was Alan Samues, and he is the organiser of Bilson's first Jamaican dance to be held in the Town Hall Assembly Rooms.

Mrs. Draisey was applying for a license for drinks to be sold at the dance between 8 and 11pm. She sat anxious-faced and listened tensely while the superintendent of police and the magistrates tried to find out all about the proposed dance. It was fixed for Friday, July, 27. There would be a Jamaican band. But would only Jamaicans be admitted? Would there be a colour bar in reverse? At first this seemed likely, but when the superintendent asked, 'Could I come to your dance?' Mr. Samues' black face beamed with pleasure; 'Yes, sir,' he answered eagerly. 'You can come.' 'Can other white people?' continued the superintendent. 'Oh yes, they can come,' and the Jamaican looked round the court as if to discover how many others might be applying for tickets.

It took quite a while for Mr. Samues to understand what was meant by the no-admission-after-10 rule, and the need for supervisors at the entrances.

Several attempts were made to find out whether the dance was being held in aid of some charity or what was to happen to the profits. Mr. Samues did not know about charity, and he didn't seem to be expecting any profit. 'We just want to dance,' he explained patiently.

Mrs. Draisey sat with wrinkled brow and troubled eyes. 'You know the conditions attaching to this license?' she was asked. 'Oh, yes,' she exclaimed, and added, 'I would not have asked for it, sir, only they asked me to help them and they might think I was spiteful if I refused.'

The license was granted."

"Bilston police investigating a stabbing incident in the yard of a public house are trying to trace a man who they think can help in their enquiries. The man was seen running from the rear of the STAR VAULTS, in the town centre, as Mrs. Florence Maud James, aged 31, of Clinton Road, Bilston, was found in the yard with arm and leg stab wounds. She received treatment at the Royal Hospital, Wolverhampton, but was not detained.

Mrs. James was found by Mrs. A. L. Draisey, wife of the licensee, who heard a scream. She also found an open clasp-knife, which was handed to the police."

"Bilston Annual Licensing Sessions.....

Mr. Waterhouse, solicitor, applied on behalf of Samuel Thompson, beerhouse keeper, Oxford Street, Bilston, for a full license. The premises for which the application was made had been used as a beerhouse for twelve or thirteen years, for ten years of which time they had been held by the present applicant. Mr. Waterhouse said he based his application upon the accommodation afforded by the house for the convenience of the public. He wished it to be understood that he did not apply on order to make the premises into a drinking shop. A great deal of money had been spent in improving them, and he was sorry that the Bench had not been able to personally inspect the premises The Bench, without retiring, refused the whole of the applications."

An inquest was subsequently held at the STAR AND GARTER INN, Lester Street, when from the evidence then adduced it appeared that the mother of the deceased, being a charwoman, had left the child in charge of her sister, but at the time of the accident the sister was in the STAR AND GARTER, where the mother of the child also found her. Prisoner, who had been drinking about his premises during the day, was suspected, and information was given to Police-constable Kitson, who apprehended the prisoner, and found in his cellar the missing fowl dead, but quite warm.

Prisoner pleaded guilty, and attributed the theft to drink. Prosecutor asked for as lenient a sentence as possible, as the prisoner had worked for him for seven years, and had a wife and a large family dependent upon him. Prisoner was committed to hard labour for a month."

“Before the Bilston magistrates yesterday, Mary Ann Groves, widow, of Oxford Street, Bilston, was charged with telling fortunes.

Evidence was given by a young woman named Davis to the effect that on Thursday she went with her sister to the accused’s house. They adjourned to the STAR AND GARTER INN, Lester Street, and Mrs. Groves produced a pack of cards. At her request witness shuffled them, and turned up the nine of diamonds, and prisoner then said she (witness) liked to court a young man between night and day, which was correct. Groves also told her that she had received a letter from her young man, and that she would receive another one; also correct. Prisoner further said that witness was a bit upset about her young man, and that both had strong tempers, which was not true. Prisoner told her that she would have to be very humble to him or he would not keep her. Witness paid sixpence for the information.

Nellie Davis, witness’s sister, spoke to cutting the cards and turning up the king. Mrs. Groves told her that she had a dark young man and she was jealous of him, and that another young man wanted her, but witness did not believe what the woman said. She was asked to pay sixpence, or ‘anything she liked.’

The Bench sent Groves to prison for three months.”

“On Thursday last, and by adjournment on Monday last, an inquest was held at the sign of the SWAN, Hall Fields, Bilston, before T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, on the body of Edward Reeves, a boy about ten years old. The deceased, who was a healthy boy, it appeared, had been sent to bed on Monday night without his supper, for disobedience. On Tuesday morning, between six and seven o’clock, he was called by his sister, and answered her in a manner which indicated that he was quite well. Between seven and eight o’clock his mother, finding he had not got up, went upstairs, and found him lying on his face across the bed, in a violent perspiration, and quite insensible. He seemed to be dying, and she sent immediately for Mr. Hancox, surgeon, who promptly attended; but the deceased remained insensible to the time of his death, which took place the same evening. In a room adjoining that of the deceased there were two bottles containing rum and brandy, each about a half a pint, and after the deceased was taken ill it was found that about half the contents of each bottle had been taken by some one. On a post mortem examination Mr. Hancox found in the stomach of the deceased about three ounces of spiritous fluid, which had caused congestion of the coats of the stomach and of the brain. In his opinion the deceased died from congestion of the brain, caused by having taken a large quantity of ardent spirits. Verdict accordingly.”

“On Monday last an inquest was held at the WHITE SWAN, Hall Fields, near Bilston, on the body of Francis Oaks, an engineer, 67 years of age, who died suddenly on the previous Saturday morning. The deceased left the house of William Baker, of Shropshire Row, about seven o’clock on the previous evening, apparently very ill. He staggered but walked out of the house alone. He afterwards went to an engine house, where he was accused of being tipsy, but denied the charge. He was afterwards removed from the engine house to the boiler side, where another engineer talked with him about a quarter of an hour, but could not tell whether he was tipsy or not. Oaks then got up and walked down the engine steps as well as ever he did in his life. He was afterwards taken to a hovel and provided with a little hemp to lie upon. In the course of the night he coughed violently. About ten minutes before five on the following morning he was found dead, lying upon his back. Oaks had come to Hall Fields from Madeley Union, on the previous Tuesday. The jury returned a verdict to the effect that the deceased was Found Dead, but that there were no marks of violence on his body sufficient to cause death.”

“On Thursday last, at the SWAN INN, Hall Fields, near Bilston, T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, held an inquest on the body of Morris Browne, who was killed on the previous Monday evening, by being run over by a van near Moxley. Deceased had been to Darlaston wake, and was returning with a number of companions in a light spring cart. On nearing Moxley deceased got out into the road, and as he was about to reascend he fell, and before he could get up was run over by a van drawn by two horses, and so injured that he died before morning. It appearing that no blame attached to any one, the jury returned a verdict that the deceased had met his death accidentally.”

Mr. Longman appeared for the complainant, and Mr. N. B. Jackson for the defence.

It appeared that the society had fallen to pieces, and that the defendant, dubious as to whom he should deliver the money in his hands, had placed the amount in a bank.

The Bench made an order that he should give up the £45 and pay the costs, but desired it to be understood that they did not consider that there had been the slightest stain on his character in the transaction.”

‘I beg to submit to the Magistrates the attached list of licensed victuallers who have been complained against during the year. Twenty-five have been convicted, and three have paid costs; one had been convicted three times, and five convicted twice. This is a large increase on last year’s list; but I think it has arisen from the police being more particular in reporting cases of permitting drunkenness – as it was found to be an evil rather on the increase. I believe it has caused landlords to be more careful in supplying drink to persons intoxicated.’

“Mrs. Jane Lloyd, licensed victualler, of Bilston, pleaded guilty to an information, charging her with unlawfully using grains of paradise in brewing beer. Mr. Bolton, solicitor, who appeared for the defendant, said she was a widow, and seventy-three years of age; she had kept the house for thirty-three years, and never had had a charge of any kind preferred against her; and as to the present case, the fact was that she had used two ounces of grains of paradise, in brewing twenty-five gallons of beer for her own consumption.

The Bench convicted the defendant in the mitigated penalty of £50. Mr. Bolton earnestly urged the Magistrates, under the circumstances he had stated, to recommend to the Commissioners of Excise, that the penalty should be reduced to £30. Mr. Gillespie, collector of excise duties, said the defendant was in good circumstances, and the Bench declined to comply with Mr. Bolton’s request.”

“An action was tried by a jury, on Friday, at the Wolverhampton County Court, before A. M. Skinner, Esq, judge, in which William Whitehouse, a working man, residing at Darlaston, sued John Lloyd, landlord of the SWAN public house, Bilston, to recover damages for injuries sustained by his wife by reason of her having been bitten by defendant’s dog. Mr. Young, of the Oxford Circuit, was counsel for the plaintiff, and Mr. H. Underhill appeared on behalf of the defendant.

The facts, as stated by Mr. Young, were simply as follows. On the 16th of April last, the plaintiff and his wife (the latter who had then been confined only three weeks previously) came together from Darlaston to Bilston to purchase some clothing for the children. After completing their purchases they both went into defendant’s house to warm themselves, and to obtain some refreshment. Shortly after they had entered the house plaintiff’s wife got up and went into the yard for the purpose of going to the water closet. When she got into the yard she saw some one like a servant girl come out of a door, which she accordingly went in. She had, however, as it appeared, made a mistake, and gone into a building where the defendant’s dog (a pointer bitch) was kept. Being a total stranger to the premises she did not at first discover the mistake which she had made, and whilst she was looking round, the dog, which she had not before perceived, suddenly flew at her and bit her in two or three places, underneath her arm and breast. Fortunately the animal had got to the length of its chain and the poor woman was enabled to shake it off and get back to the house, or, as Mr. Young put it, she might have been very seriously injured. The defendant, on hearing what had occurred, expressed his regret, and also gave her a note to his brother-in-law, a druggist, at Darlaston, to supply her with some ointment for the wounds at his expense. This was done, but as the wounds did not immediately heal up the plaintiff called in a regular surgeon, and he continued to attend her until she had recovered. In consequence of the injuries she had received she was, however, unable to attend to her domestic matters as she had done previously, and was obliged to get her sister, who had been attending her during her confinement, to stay with her seven weeks longer, paying her, in addition to her keep, the sum of 3s per week. When the defendant was applied to in the matter he refused to pay anything more than the doctor’s bill which amounted to £4, hence the present action.

After proving the above facts, Mr. Young, in order to show that the defendant was well aware that the dog was of a vicious nature, and in the habit of biting people, called a witness named Perry who proved that when he went, on plaintiff’s behalf, to see the defendant, and ascertain what he would give to settle the matter, the latter admitted that that was not the first time the dog had bitten people, as on one occasion it bit a policeman, and further that the brewer employed about the premises was himself so afraid of the dog, on account of its vicious nature, that he dare not go near it except when he took it some food. This was the case for the plaintiff.

The defence set up was, first, that the dog was not vicious; secondly, that plaintiff’s wife was told by the brewer that a dog was kept on the premises, and that he particularly directed her to keep on a certain side of the wall, and that if she had followed these directions she would not have made the mistake she did, and gone into a building which was private, and where she had no business to go.

After hearing the evidence and the arguments of the learned gentlemen on each side, his Honour briefly summed up, and the jury then returned a verdict for the plaintiff, damages £12, with costs.”

“On Sunday night a fire broke out on the premises of Mr. Lloyd, of the SWAN INN, Bilston. It originated in a chimney, where a beam first became ignited, next some furniture and the floor of an adjoining room took fire, and the aid of the police was secured, who, with the assistance of a small hand water engine, extinguished the flames before any serious damage was done.”

Wolverhampton Chronicle 9/12/1868

“Yesterday, at Bilston Police Court, before I. Spooner, Esq, John Smith, landlord of the BALL COURT INN, Stafford Street; Evan Griffiths, BRICKMAKERS [sic] ARMS, Greencroft Street; and John Lloyd, SWAN INN, Swan Bank, were charged, for that they being ale house keepers, did knowingly suffer gaming in their houses. Mr. Young, of the Oxford Circuit, instructed by Mr. Bowen, appeared on behalf of the defendants. The case against John Smith was heard first.

Police-sergeant Chatfield stated that at between seven and eight o’clock on the evening of Saturday, the 7th November, he visited the bowling alley of John Smith, in company with Police-constable Moffatt. When he went in, there were about ten or twelve persons (men and boys) there. Four of them were bowling, and the landlord was present with a book in his hand, taking down the number of pins that each bowler knocked over. When they had done bowling the two losers paid the defendant twopence each, and he then gave the winners a brass 'cheque' each, similar to the one produced, which would entitle the holders to two penny worth of liquor in the defendant's house, or a cigar.

Cross-examined by Mr. Young: He was in the house about half an hour, and saw four or five games. He was known well there as a Bilston police officer, and notwithstanding his presence the defendant continued to superintend the bowling and to carry on the transactions with the cheques during the whole time he was there. He believed that the defendant's house had been well conducted; but he could not go so far as to say that it was as well conducted as any in the town. There had been no complaint made respecting it. There had been a bowling alley at the house for about six months. It was one of the first opened in Bilston, and they had been only recently introduced into the town. He had heard that the defendant was under the impression that his allowing the bowling for cheques was not illegal.

No other witness was called on the part of the prosecution, and Mr. Young, on behalf of the defendant, said that, as he had intimated at the commencement, he did not intend to plead 'not guilty' to the charge; but he was anxious that Mr. Spooner should have the facts in reference to the case brought before him, because it appeared to him to be very different to that class of cases where offences were committed rather in defiance than in ignorance of the law. There was no doubt that the defendant had committed the offence, but there was also no doubt that he did so under the impression that what was taking place in his house was not illegal, but on the contrary was a legal act. The law had been clearly laid down that bowling 'for money, or money's worth' was alike illegal, but the question in the present case, was whether, under the circumstances, the defendant was a person against whom anything like a severe penalty should be inflicted. There was no doubt, although they had not got at that in a strictly legal form, that it had come to the knowledge of the police-officer that the defendant had been acting under a wrong impression in the matter, before he visited the house. Bowling alleys had only been recently introduced into Bilston, and that probably might somewhat account for the ignorance of the law relating to them; but he was sure that after receiving this legal notice, as it were, of the illegality of such transactions as referred to, they should hear of no more offences of that character. Mr. Spooner said there had been no previous complaint against the defendant, and he should impose a fine of 1s and costs. That kind of thing must be put a stop to, however, and if it was continued the utmost penalty must be inflicted. Mr. Young observed that the cases as against the other two defendants were exactly similar.

Chief-Superintendent McCrea, in reply to Mr. Spooner, said he had received numerous complaints recently from the parents of boys who visited these bowling saloons.

The two defendants, Griffiths and Smith [sic], pleaded guilty, and the same penalty was imposed on each as in the previous case; but Mr. Spooner observed that he was empowered at once to fine them £10, and he was sure he should not hesitate if another case came before him, because, as had been shown, so much mischief was done by that kind of thing, and especially to boys."

"In re Solomon Cross, of Spon Lane, Westbromwich.

This insolvent described himself as previously of Smethwick, iron safe and bedstead maker, ironfounder, bill broker, general agent, ale and porter agent, and licensed victualler at the SIR JOHN MOORE INN, Bilston.

The debts were £1,479 4s 1d, and the credits were put down at £423 13s.

Mr. Motteram and Mr. Young supported, Mr. Barber opposed for Messrs. Salt and Co., brewers, of Burton.

The insolvent was bankrupt in 1858. He was again insolvent last year, his debts then being £1,000, and he received his certificate in July last at Warwick. The present proceedings against him were taken in January last. It appeared that he had dealt in accommodation bills. He had represented himself as possessed of considerable means when he obtained credit from Messrs. Salt and Co.

The Judge said the debt to Messrs. Salt was evidently contracted without any reasonable prospect of payment, and remanded the insolvent for three months, so far as that debt was concerned. As, however, Messrs. Salt had not lodged a detainer against the insolvent he was at once released, but is liable to arrest by that firm."

"Henry Peplow and James Robinson were brought up at the Police Court, on Tuesday, charged with having stolen two pairs of boots, a German silver watch, a shirt, and several other articles from the house of a man named Cooper, at Princes End, with whom they had lodged. Peplow, who was defended by Mr. Jackson, was also charged with having stolen a two shilling piece from the till of Mr. Houlton, the GENERAL MOORE public house, High Street. It appears that one morning in Easter week the two went into the above house and called for some drink, and whilst the attention of the little girl who was attending them was attracted elsewhere, Peplow put his hand over the counter and into the till, and abstracted a florin. He was trying to repeat the theft, when the attention of the little girl was aroused, and she called out. The two prisoners then made off, and, as it afterwards appeared, went home to their lodgings, took the articles above referred to, and then absconded, and they were only apprehended a few days ago. Peplow was ordered to be imprisoned for 28 days for the till robbery, and was committed for trial along with the other prisoner on the second charge."

“With anything from free helpings of beer, absorbing mashed potatoes to a ‘protest trip’ in a horse and cart, landlords tried to woo Midland motorists to the pubs yesterday on the first day of the breathalyser tests. But by closing time it looked as if the breathalyser had won. Though by 11.15pm Birmingham police had still not used a breathalyser, most publicans had admitted to a drop in trade. The man in the horse and cart was Mr. Travers Turley, who runs the SWAN INN in Bilston High Street. Describing the new legislation as ‘an encroachment on personal freedom’ he drove to a neighbouring pub in a horse and cart borrowed from a friend. “A historic Bilston pub is facing demolition following proposals by supermarket giant Lidl to build a major new flagship store in the town. The SWAN in High Street, which dates back to 1898, will fall victim to bulldozers if the German-based retail chain is given the go-ahead to build a larger store on the site of its existing premises. Despite the landmark pub’s long existence, heritage bosses have said the once popular watering hole – which closed in June this year – is of little real significant historic interest.

In a report submitted to Wolverhampton Council planners alongside the application, Sarah Watt, Director of Asset Heritage, said, ‘The site lies over 400m from the boundary of the Bilston Town Centre Conservation Area and does not form part of its immediate physical setting. The majority of it is comprised of car parking with the existing food store. The SWAN is of relatively low heritage interest and demolition will result in better-defined access to the car park.

Lidl entered into pre-application discussions with the council in September 2020. The pub was previously owned by Marston’s Brewery and operated on a tenancy arrangement until it was purchased by the retailer in June 2021. In a further supporting statement Jake McLeod, from Cheshire-based Walsingham Planning, the agents acting on behalf of Lidl, added, ‘The site is currently occupied by the existing Lidl, a pharmacy and Subway fast food restaurant at ground floor level and office space at first floor level. An adjacent McDonald’s and its associated drive-thru and car park is also accessed via the site. The redevelopment will include two new commercial units to accommodate the pharmacy and Subway. The existing foodstore was formerly a Co-op and was one of Lidl’s first stores in the region. It is now very dated and offers a poor customer experience. As a consequence of this, Lidl has concluded that the appropriate approach is to provide a new, modern, purpose-built food store. The proposed new store will employ up to 40 staff. Lidl has a policy of employing local people from all backgrounds to work at their stores in a range of positions and levels of seniority. This allows for a short commute to work and a range of training opportunities for local people. The SWAN is a small pub and we understand from Marston’s that even prior to the Covid-19 pandemic, it was not a sustainable business. Beer sales were very low with average of 186 barrels per annum sold between 2016 and 2019. It had earnings of £30,000 before interest and tax per annum over the last five years, which is not profitable or viable.’

The plans also include allowance for 119 car parking spaces, seven disabled spaces, eight parent and child spaces, two electric vehicle charger spaces and 12 cycle storage bays. Wolverhampton planners will decide on the application in the near future.”

“On Tuesday morning last, T. M. Phillips, Esq, the Coroner, held an inquest at the house of Mr. Thomas Holland, the SWAN INN, near Bilston, on the body of a man named Thomas Huggins, a guard, in the service of the Great Western Railway Company, who met with his death on Sunday last under circumstances of a peculiarly shocking character. It would appear that the deceased, who was a single man, about twenty-seven years of age, and who resided in Birmingham, has been in the service of the company for several years; he was employed in the first instance as porter, and afterwards as travelling porter, his duty in the latter situation being to ride with the express train on the tender of the engine, in order to see that no irregularity took place in the carriages. For some weeks past, however, he had fulfilled the duties of ordinary guard, and in this capacity he left Wolverhampton on Sunday, with a train departing thence to Birmingham, at one o’clock in the day. It would seem that shortly after entering the tunnel near Wolverhampton the deceased dropped his cap, and that as the train approached the end nearest Ettingshall Station, he, as is supposed, with a view of notifying this circumstance to the signal man on duty, placed his head through the window of the guard’s van. In some of the carriages on this line the guard’s box is placed in the centre of a third class carriage, so that the guard is visible to the passengers in the other compartments. On the train emerging from the tunnel one or two of the passengers had their attention directed to the deceased, and were horrified to find that the upper part of his skull was cloven open, and that a ghastly wound presented itself. The motionless attitude of the guard – his right arm and a portion of his body being half way out of the carriage door – convinced them that the man was dead, and on arriving at Ettingshall Station this was found to be the fact. The deceased was forthwith removed to the station, and a messenger was despatched for Mr. Chamberlain, surgeon, of Wolverhampton. That gentleman speedily arrived; but life must have been extinct some time prior to the deceased being first observed by the passengers. The outside of the guard’s van was besmeared with the scattered brains of the deceased, and on a search being made in the direction of the tunnel, spots of blood were discovered here and there for the whole distance; as also to a distance of one third of the tunnel towards Wolverhampton. It was also seen by the appearance of the brickwork that at this portion of the tunnel it must have been where the unfortunate deceased first projected his head from the carriage, for there were marks of blood, &c, on the side. Further on towards Wolverhampton the deceased’s cap was found. The deceased was stated to have been when he left Wolverhampton in a perfectly sober and fit state to undertake the duties of guard, and no other person was in the same compartment of that carriage. The train consisted of broad-gauge carriages, and these, it may be stated, necessarily project nearer to the wall of the tunnel than do the carriages on the narrow gauge. The witnesses examined at the inquest were Mr. Robert Bushel, the station master at the Great Western station at Ettingshall; John Mayne, pointsman at the same place; Cuthbert Davison, engine driver of the train; and Mr. W. J. Humphrey, superintendent of the Low Level, Wolverhampton. The opinion of the latter was, as stated above, that the deceased, having lost his cap, was preparing to call out to the signal man at the Ettingshall end of the tunnel to see that it was not lost. The Coroner considered it necessary to adjourn the enquiry in order to procure some of the persons travelling in the same carriage as the deceased, and the Jury concurring, the inquest was adjourned till Thursday.”

“Valuable Freehold Property, near Ward Street, in the New Village, Bilston.

To be Sold by Auction, on Wednesday Next, the 17th day of November, at the house of Mr. Thomas Holland, SWAN INN, John Street, in the aforesaid Village, at Six o’clock in the evening.....”

London Weekly Mail 6/2/1859

"An inquest has been held at the SWAN INN, New Village, Staffordshire, before W. H. Phillips, Esq, the deputy coroner, on the bodies of Emanuel Lees and George Jarvis, the sufferers by the accident on Tuesday morning week at the New Friesland Colliery, Ettingshall.

Michael Roper, a sinker, stated that the deceased were ten or eleven yards down the shaft when the chain broke. The pit is 30 yards deep. The deceased were let down by the butt. In witness's opinion the chain was broken by a jerk, caused by its slipping from the gin about two feet.

Lees lived about two hours after the accident, and Jarvis till about seven o'clock at night.

J. G. Longridge, Esq, her Majesty's inspector of mines, stated that the day after the accident he examined the gin and chains, and found them in a most insecure and dangerous state. All iron chains were liable to become dangerous, owing to the change of nature of the iron at the working part. The present chain had become quite crystalline at such parts, so that a jerk would break it like glass.

The jury returned a verdict in accordance with the facts adduced in evidence, accompanied by an opinion that the pit and machinery connected with it were in a very unfit state for work, and with a recommendation that all pits and machinery connected therewith should be inspected by her Majesty's inspector before being allowed to commence work."

"An inquest was held before W. H. Phillips, Esq, (Deputy Coroner), on Thursday, at the SWAN INN, Bilston, on the body of Joseph Smith, aged 62, a butt miner, employed at the Spring Vale Colliery. It appeared from the evidence that on Tuesday, the 8th inst, the deceased was at work on the pit bank assisting to take off and send down skips. An empty skip was hanging over a pit mouth, which was not covered at the moment with the waggon, when the deceased, apparently in ignorance of the circumstance, pushed forward a 'tram' to the top of the shaft, and the result was that he and 'tram' fell to the bottom, a depth of 150 yards. He was dead when picked up. The Jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death."

"Richard Tranter, a publican, living at Priestfield, and Richard Matthews, formerly in the employ of the Great Western Company, were committed for trial charged with stealing a quantity of cloth, valued at £12, from a railway truck at Priestfield. The cloth had been consigned from Bristol to Mr. Bishop, draper, of Bilston. It was missed at Priestfield and one portion found in a hay-loft on Tranter's premises and the remainder at Matthews's lodgings. Sureties in £400 were offered and accepted as bail for the appearance of Tranter."

"Staffordshire Midsummer Sessions.....

Richard Tranter, on bail, and Richard Matthews, 23, labourer, were indicted for stealing 50 yards of woollen cloth, the property of the Great Western Railway Company, at Bilston, on the 10th March. Mr. Motteram appeared to prosecute on behalf of the railway company; Mr. Young and Mr. Bosanquet defended Tranter, and Mr. Browne the prisoner Matthews.

During the night of the day in question, a package containing 25 yards of pilot cloth and 25 yards of quilted cloth, consigned from Bristol to Mr. Bishop, of Bilston, was stolen from a truck at Priestfields station. Matthews was employed at the station at the time, and was on duty that night in charge of the truck. Tranter kept an inn, which was his own freehold property, near the station. Suspicion became attached to Matthews and Tranter, and some pilot and quilted cloth was afterwards traced to their possession. This cloth, it was sought to show, was the same that was taken from the truck, but the prosecution failed to do so to the satisfaction of the jury, who returned a verdict of not guilty with respect to both prisoners. Tranter received a high character from a number of gentlemen.”

Thomas Wingfield = Thomas Winfield

“Thomas Jones, alias ‘Red Tom,’ and David Findley were charged with stealing a ‘billycock’ hat, the property of Thomas Winfield, SWANN INN, New Village. On Sunday last the prisoners and another man were in the house and had some drink; prosecutor had left his hat in the room, and as soon as they were gone the hat was missed, but was found by Police-constable Denstone on Findley’s head. When charged with stealing it prisoner said it had been put on his head in the public house. Both prisoners were committed for trial. Jones was also committed on a charge of stealing a sheep belonging to Mr. Richard Pearson, butcher, of Bilston, from a field at the Lunt, on the 24th November, 1859. On the night in question prisoner went to the field and slaughtered the animal and stole the hind quarters, but hid the remainder in a hovel close by the place. He absconded immediately, and was not seen again till last Sunday.”

Thomas Jones, 37, fitter, and David Finley, 47, engine tender, were charged with having stolen a hat, the property of Thomas Wingfield, of the SWAN INN, Bilston, on the 1st of May. Finley was found guilty, and sentenced to twenty-one days’ imprisonment. Jones was found not guilty.

The same Thomas Jones was charged with having stolen a sheep, the property of Richard Pearson, butcher, Bilston, on the 24th of November, 1859. The sheep was stolen from the Lunt, Bilston, and a reward was offered for the discovery of the thief, who was supposed at the time to be the prisoner. He managed to keep out of the way till recently, and when apprehended he said he killed the sheep with a brick, and that it was an old tup. He was found guilty and sentenced to twelve months’ imprisonment.”

“At the Petty Sessions, yesterday, before Messrs. E. B. Dimmack and W. Hatton, two puddlers, named Samuel Dodd and Henry Pearce, were charged with assaulting John Winfield, of the SWAN public house, Priestfields, and also with stealing three bagatelle balls. About two o’clock on Tuesday the prisoners, in company with three others, entered complainant’s house. Mr. Winfield was in the passage at the time, and in passing one of the party put his hand in complainant’s pocket. This aroused his suspicion, and on going into the room shortly after he missed three bagatelle balls. The prisoners then left, and he followed them up the street and asked for the balls, but they refused to give them up, and threatened the complainant with violence. He then went for the police, and during his absence one of the prisoners returned and replaced the balls.

As both prisoners had good characters they were discharged with a caution.”

“Thomas Winfield, landlord of the SWAN INN, New Village, was summoned by Chief Superintendent McCrea for permitting drunkenness in his house on Saturday night last. Mr. C. Barrow, solicitor to the Licensed Victuallers’ Association, defended.

On Tuesday last a miner named Reuben Blunt, of New Village, was fined for being drunk in the defendant’s house, and on that occasion Mr. Homer, the presiding magistrate, ordered a summons to be issued against the defendant. This was done, and yesterday the man Reuben Blunt deposed that on Saturday night he was supplied by the defendant with a pint of ale, a glass of whiskey, and seven glasses of rum and peppermint. A number of witnesses were called, and eventually the magistrates fined the defendant 40s and costs, ordering the conviction to be endorsed on his license.”

“Adam Lee Richardson (24), was charged under remand with stealing 5s from a till at the house of Richard Tysoe, the SWAN INN, Priestfield. On the 19th inst the prisoner went into prosecutor’s house and asked for a pint of ale. He was served by Mrs. Tysoe, who gave him 9d out of a shilling which he tendered. Mrs. Tysoe left the bar for a short time, and on returning she saw the prisoner with his hand in the till. On seeing her he dropped some money on the counter and ran away. She called her husband down stairs and he at once started in pursuit of the prisoner, and after an exciting chase for three miles over colliery mounds he succeeded in catching him. Prisoner was brought back to the house and given into custody. In the meantime Mrs. Tysoe had discovered that the money he dropped amounted to 5s. Prisoner was committed to hard labour for a month.”

“Publicans and Grocers. To the Editor of the Daily Post.

Sir, On reading the leading article which appeared in your paper on Monday last, on the case decided in the Court of the Queen’s Bench on Friday last, Arnold v Thatcher, I felt very much the remark therein stated to have been made by the Lord Chief Justice, condemning, as he does, in one fell swoop, the whole of the publicans in this country with regard to the quality of wines and spirits sold by them. Now, sir, I maintain that, as a rule, articles sold by publicans are quite as good in quality, and as reasonable in price, as those sold by any other class of tradesmen; and if I thought for one moment that the publican was not quite as respectable as his neighbours, the baker, butcher, draper, or grocer, I would give up my calling as such at once. If the publican’s business is supposed not to be a legitimate one, let the Government say so, instead of demanding, for the benefit of the country, the chief part of his profits with one hand, and cutting his throat with the other.

Your, &c, R. G. Tysoe. SWAN INN, Priestfield, Wolverhampton.”

“Mr. W. H. Phillips, Coroner, held an inquest at the SWAN INN, Priestfield, on Monday afternoon on the body of Thomas Bayliss (62), nursery seedsman and florist, of Pennfields, near Wolverhampton, who met with his death on the Great Western Railway, at Priestfield, on Saturday morning, under very melancholy circumstances. Mr. W. H. Tinsley, of Sedgley, appeared for the relatives of the deceased, and Inspector Ledbrook watched the proceedings on behalf of the railway company.

Evidence was given as to the deceased passing over the level crossing at the station, the only means of reaching the centre platform, and to his being knocked down and run over by a fast goods train while standing in the four-foot. The only officials at the station were the stationmaster and a porter, and at the time of the accident there was only the porter on duty. During the past eleven years the stationmaster stated that no one had been killed, and he had always been able to work the station with one porter. Owing to many of the passengers having to cross the four sets of rails a foot-bridge would be very useful.

A verdict of Accidental Death was returned, and the jury added a recommendation that the railway company should erect a foot-bridge over the lines, and always have two men on duty at the station.”

He refused to serve it, and defendant commenced to use abusive language, and threatened him. As it was a first offence, defendant was fined 5s and costs 10s 6d.”

“Mr. A. B. Smith, deputy coroner, resumed the enquiry at the SWAN INN, John Street, Priestfield, Bilston, yesterday evening, on the body of Alfred Cox Hodgkinson (9), son of Charles Hodgkinson, iron-plate worker, of John Street, who died on the 19th inst. The investigation had resulted from enquiries made by the inspector for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and at the previous enquiry evidence was given to show that the deceased had been neglected.

The post mortem examination was stated to reveal that death had resulted from inflammation of the lungs.

The father of the deceased was recalled, and asked by the coroner whether he wished to amend his statement previously made that he had had little work to do, and only earned 13s per week. The witness said he did not wish to do so. The Coroner said he had received a statement from the witness's employer which showed that he could have had more work, but did not avail himself of the opportunity.

The jury returned a verdict that the deceased Died from Natural Causes, and the inspector for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children intimated that legal proceedings would be instituted against the father of the child.”

“Mr. T. A. Stokes held an adjourned inquest on Monday at the SWAN INN, Ettingshall, touching the death of George Marston, of 3, Ward Street, Priestfield.

The deceased was employed at the Spring Vale Steel Works of A. Hickman Limited as a bogey man. His duty was to assist in steering trolleys which carried pig-iron to various parts of the works. On October 6, while a trolley containing three hot blooms, weighing about 4cwt each, was being unloaded, the deceased, who was standing near the handle, fell dead. At the same time the handle, according to one witness, flew up.

Dr. Ashley Smith, who had made a post mortem examination, said there was a bruise on the man's right cheek and ear. The skull was slightly fractured, and there was evidence of extensive heart disease. There was no truth in the rumour that the man's neck was broken. With regard to the injuries, these would not, in his opinion, have caused sudden death if the man's heart had not been in a diseased condition.

The Coroner said there was no evidence to show how the injuries were sustained, but the jury, after deliberating in private, returned a verdict of Accidental Death, accelerated by heart disease.

The Coroner suggested that the jury should say death from heart disease, accelerated by an accident, but they refused to alter their verdict.”

“An inquest was held on Thursday last at the SWAN, Lower Bradley, before T. M. Phillips, Esq, on the body of Mary Adams, an old woman 72 years of age. It appeared that on Sunday the 21st inst, the deceased was cooking her dinner, when her clothes caught fire, and she was severely burnt. The poor creature lingered until Monday when she expired. Verdict, Accidental Death.”

Brierley Hill Advertiser 20/6/1857

“On Tuesday last, W. H. Phillips, Esq, attended at the WHITE SWAN INN, at Bradley, for the purpose of resuming the adjourned inquest upon the body of Elizabeth Hopley, who was found drowned in the canal at Bradley, on the 29th of April last, under circumstances calculated to excite suspicions that she had met with her death by foul means. Owing, however, to the continued absence of the witness Powell, whom the unceasing exertions of the police have failed to discover, no additional evidence was offered. The inquest was therefore further adjourned for a month, and in the meantime a reward will, we understand, be offered for the apprehension of Powell, respecting whose absence various rumours are afloat in the neighbourhood, all of which are, however, we are informed upon the best authority, totally unfounded. On the same day the accused was placed before J. Bagnall and J. Lonsdale Esqrs, when Mr. Waterhouse, who appeared to watch the proceedings on his part, submitted to the magistrates that the seriousness of the charge against the accused was equalled by the improbability of any evidence being forthcoming to substantiate it. It was hard that his client should be continually kept in prison upon a charge of mere suspicion, for, in reality, the present charge amounted to no more than that.

Mr. Lonsdale, however, said that they did not consider themselves justified in incurring the responsibility of discharging the prisoner as the evidence on a former occasion had been taken before J. Leigh, Esq, and they would, therefore, remand him until the succeeding day, when the examination would be resumed at Wolverhampton.

Accordingly, next day prisoner was placed at the bar, before J. Leigh and S. Cartwright, Esqrs, and again further remanded for a week.”

[Several adjourned inquests were held up to September, when the Jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder. He was committed to the Assizes. For the final inquest see WHITE LION, Bradley.]

Sheffield Independent 26/12/1857

"A remarkable case occurred at Stafford assizes. Philip Clare, a miner, was tried for the murder of Elizabeth Hopley, a young girl, at Bilston. Her body was found in a canal; death had resulted from suffocation. She might have accidentally fallen into the canal; such casualties are frequent thereabouts. She had worked for Clare at a pit's mouth, and they had a dispute about wages. The case against the prisoner rested almost entirely on the testimony of Samuel Wall. He swore that he had seen Clare knock the girl down, late at night, on a railway bridge, and then carry her body to the canal, where he thrust it under water. If the Jury believed this man, conviction was inevitable; but they did not believe his minutely circumstantial story, and at once acquitted the accused."

"At Bilston Police Court yesterday, before Messrs. R. Bagnall and E. B. Dimmock, a young man named John Reynolds was brought up on a warrant charged with refusing to quit the house of Ann Wall, of the SWAN, Bradley. It was stated that on the evening of the 4th inst, the defendant was in the complainant's house. A lad went in with a horse's nose-bag. The defendant caught hold of it and picked it up. The lad began to cry, and another man taking up the cause of the boy, a fight ensued. The defendant was requested to leave the house many times, but he refused for a long time. In about half-an-hour he went out and created a disturbance. He soon came in again and behaved in an indecent manner, as he did also when the servant went out to put the shutters to.

For the defence it was alleged that the bag was taken up in a playful manner, that the defendant was first assaulted, that he was not ordered out of the house, but went of his own free will, and that the allegations of indecency were untrue.

The Magistrates fined the defendant 20s and costs.

At the close of the case the Magistrates re-called Mrs. Cooksey, the person who had charge of the house at the time, and said she had not done her duty either to the girls in her house or to the public, because if he (the defendant) had been proved guilty of the charges of indecency they would have sent him to prison for six months. She was responsible, and if she allowed such conduct in her house she was not fit to have it."

The bankrupt had also been in the receipt of a good salary prior to his failure, and the creditors were anxious to have the deficiency fully accounted for. A cash account and a deficiency account were then ordered, and the meeting was adjourned to the 22nd July.”

“At the Bilston Police Court, yesterday, before Messrs. W. Hatton and F. A. Homer, Thomas Barnbrook, landlord of the SWAN INN, Bradley, was summoned for having permitted gambling and drunkenness on his premises.

The prosecution, which had been instituted by the police, mainly rested on the testimony of an old woman named Jones. From her statement it appeared that on the 25th ult her son left home early in the morning, and went with other companions to the defendant's house. At noon she went there and desired him to return home, as he had to go to work at two o'clock. At that time he and the majority of the others present were drunk, and they were tossing for quarts of ale. Her son refused to do as requested, and she then learned that the landlord had advanced him 1s 6d on his hat, so that he might continue the gambling. He remained drinking there until near closing time, when, owing to some disagreement about the payment of a bet, he became so obstreperous that Police-constable Lawrence had to be sent for to eject him from the premises. The officer was called, and spoke to Jones having been drunk.

Mr. Bowen, who defended, urged that the witnesses for the prosecution were prejudiced, and that the persons whom he called for the defence, and who repudiated the offences, were more reliable.

The Magistrates said that the case revealed a disgraceful state of things, and that if the defendant repeated such conduct they should have no hesitation in declaring him as a person wholly unfit to take charge of licensed premises. It was his duty, and he must have known it, to prevent the gambling; but, according to the evidence, not only had he sanctioned it, but he had participated in it. He would be fined £10 and the costs, the full amount that they could inflict.”

Birmingham Mail 16/10/1874

“At the Bilston Police Court today, Thomas Barnbrook, landlord of the SWAN, Bradley, was charged with selling liquor to a person under sixteen, and with permitting drunkenness. Some colliers had taken three girls to the defendant's house and treated them to hot brandy and water; one of them, aged fifteen, becoming intoxicated. The charge of selling to the girls was not proved, but on the other case defendant was fined.”

AND

“At Bilston Police Court, on Friday, before Messrs. W. Hatton and W. H. Rogers.....

Thomas Bolingbrook [sic], landlord of the SWAN INN, Bradley, was summoned for having sold liquor to a girl under sixteen, and also for having permitted drunkenness. Mr. Barrow (Wolverhampton) defended.

On the morning of the 5th inst, three colliers, with three girls, one under sixteen, went to the defendant's house, and the men paid for two glasses of spirits for the two elder girls, and they gave a portion of the liquor to the younger one, which made her intoxicated.

Mr. Barrow held that the liquor had not been sold to the girl, but to the men, and that it was given to the young girl without the knowledge of the landlord. The first charge was dismissed; for the second, however, Bolingbrook, already once convicted this year, was mulcted in £10, and had his license endorsed.”

“Yesterday, there was an annual licensing meeting for the Bilston Petty Sessional Division.....

Chief-superintendent McCrea presented the ‘black list.’ The licensed victuallers who had been fined during the year were.....

Thomas Barnbrook, SWAN INN, Sedgley, thrice permitting drunkenness, £1 and costs, and £10 and costs twice.....

All the old licenses would be renewed, excepting those of holders who had been convicted. Their applications would be deferred until the adjourned licensing day. In the case of the SWAN and the FOX, both at Bradley, special applications for renewal must be made, for most probably the license of each would be revoked.”

“Bilston Adjourned Brewster Sessions.....

Mr. Joseph Underhill (Oxford Circuit) appeared for Lady Emily Foley and Sir E. D. Dolman Scott, the joint owners of the SWAN INN, Bradley; and Mr. A. Young (Oxford Circuit) represented the tenant, Mr. Jackson, the renewal of whose license the magistrates had intimated might be refused because of convictions. It was explained by counsel that the convictions related not to the applicant, but to a previous landlord License renewed.”

On Sunday week the deceased went on to the top of one of the boilers at the works, although it appeared that he had been warned not to do so by the engineer. Shortly afterwards he was heard to cry out, and upon a fellow watchman going to him he was found in the ash-hole, and he then stated that he had fallen off the boiler on to some bricks on a barrow. “Newtown Recreation Grounds, Bilston.....

Young Bowen, of Bilston, and Young T. Riley, hailing from Bradley, met to test their superiority, over a distance of 120 yards, for £5 a side. Both lads were backed by the most knowing of Bilston sportsmen – Bowen by that genial sport, Mr. Groom, whilst Sam Hughes, in conjunction with Joe Martin, of the SWAN INN, Bradley, stood the Bradley ped. Bowen, who is by far the younger, being only a mere lad, was trained privately by the well-known Bilston ped, Tom Astley. Riley was trained by Joe Martin from the latter’s hostelry.

Over 400 spectators assembled, and so confident was each ped that they bet the gate money, &c. Speculation was of a very heavy nature considering the stake competed for, opening at 6 to 4 on Riley. This was gradually reduced to evens, and when the lads disrobed odds of 5 to 4 on Bowen were laid. Great was the excitement when the lads took their marks, and at the second attempt Charley Harper, champion pedestrian, despatched the contestants to a most even start. Riley assumed a slight lead, which he maintained amidst tremendous cheering from the Bradleyites, till twenty yards away from the worsted, when Bowen, with apparent ease, shot to the front, and with a look at his opponent, finally broke the worsted a winner by a yard and half. His partisans displayed great enthusiasm at the result.”

Joseph Martin died in the 4th quarter of 1915.

License refused at adjourned licensing meeting, on 10th March 1916, on the grounds of structural unsuitability. An appeal was heard at Stafford Quarter Sessions. It was dismissed.

Staffordshire Advertiser 8/4/1916

“Thomas Marsh and Joseph Marsh (the owners) appealed against the refusal of the Bilston justices to renew the license of the SWAN INN, Lower Bradley. Mr. J. Wylie appeared for appellants, and Mr. V. G. Milward represented the respondents.

Mr. Milward said that the license was refused on the ground that the house was structurally unsuitable. After a tenant named Martin died, the house ceased to be used for the sale of drink. A caretaker was put in, and when the police superintendent visited the house on January 10, 1916, he found it empty – no furniture, no drink, and no one living there, with the exception of a day caretaker. The house was in a most tumble-down condition. Mr. Milward put in a number of photographs of the building, and the Chairman remarked that they were extremely like pictures of the war they had had.

Supt. Robotham described the condition of the house, and said parts of it were dilapidated, dirty, and damp, and out of repair, there being a hole in the ceiling in one room.

Mr. C. H. Barnett, architect, of Wolverhampton, said the floor boards and the window sashes were rotten, rain was coming in through the roof, and the house was in a general state of dilapidation. The house had been damaged through mining operations.

For the appellants, Mr. Wylie said the late tenant had not carried out covenants to keep the house in good and substantial repair, and also to insure the license for £1,000. They had also had to pay £20 to the widow of the late tenant to get her out, and had spent £71 in putting the place in repair, but they were prepared to do more and put the house in a state satisfactory to the licensing authorities. The appellant Joseph Marsh, of Dudley, gave evidence as to the purchase of the house and of repairs done to it. They were prepared to put it in a satisfactory state.

Mr. A. T. Butler, architect, of Dudley, said the building was perfectly stable, and he considered it suitable for a licensed house. There would be no difficulty in putting the premises in a reasonable state of repair. Mr. Alfred Dando, architect, of Dudley, and Mr. J. B. Boswell, auctioneer and surveyor, Wolverhampton, gave similar evidence, the latter stating that the house was in a good state of repair, considering its age, with the exception of the outbuildings.

Replying to Mr. Milward, Mr. Boswell said that if he took learned counsel to 40 others in this district and brought him to this one he would want to settle down there. (Laughter.)

The appeal was dismissed, with costs.”

Dance, Esq, collector of inland revenue, Lichfield, conducted the prosecution. Both the charges were proved by Mr. Sergeant, supervisor of excise, and the mitigated penalties of £12 10s and £5 were inflicted, the magistrates intimating an intention to recommend a further mitigation by the Board of Inland Revenue.

Detective Moreton stated that on Sunday the first of the present month, he watched the house, and at 10-15pm he saw a woman named Pearce knock the street door and then go and stand in the middle of the road. The landlord then came out, spoke to the woman, and re-entered the house. He returned immediately with the bottle produced, and gave it to the woman who placed it under her apron. The officer took the bottle from the woman, entered the house and asked the landlord how he accounted for filling the ale. He replied that the ale had been drawn some time. The officer however stated that the ale was quite fresh. The house was closed and in darkness. Defendant was fined 10s and costs."

"We have to record the death of Mr. Thomas Fieldhouse, of SIDNEY VILLAGE, Bradley, whose funeral took place at Coseley Church, on Wednesday, and was attended by many friends. Deceased was well known in the district as one of the oldest bellringers in the neighbourhood, and was specially identified with the campanological art at St. Martin's Church, Bradley, he having been assiduous in the labour of training the first band of bellringers there, after the gift of the peal of bells to the church. He leaves a widow and eight children, whose loss is shared by all who knew him. Accompanying the funeral were deputations from the United Order of Free Gardeners and Odd Fellows, of which the deceased was a member. The deputations were clad in appropriate regalia, and the usual ceremonies were gone through at the grave."

"On the 17th instant upwards of 50 friends of the late Mr. T. Fieldhouse assembled at his late residence, SIDNEY VILLAGE INN, Bradley, and partook of an excellent repast, prepared by the hostess (his wife). After the cloths were drawn, Mr. Smith, of West Bromwich, took the chair, and Mr. T. Beech, of Bradley, the vice-chair. After several toasts had been submitted and duly honoured, the chairman referred in sympathetic terms to the purpose for which they were assembled, viz, to express their commiseration for the abrupt bereavement the hostess had sustained in the loss of her husband, and he felt assured that the goodly number present was indicative of their condolence. Mr. T. Beech and others ably responded, and hoped the wife and children so abruptly left would by their assiduity and united assistance of their many commiserators still continue to support themselves creditably and comfortably. The remainder of the evening was spent in harmony appropriate to the occasion."

"On Saturday evening, August 22nd, the members of the Water Lily Lodge of the Wolverhampton and Willenhall District of the National United Order of Free Gardeners held their third annual dinner at the SIDNEY VILLAGE INN, Bradley. Brother E. J. Hingley, of Bradley, was voted to the chair, and Mr. Gettings to the vice-chair. The usual loyal and patriotic toasts were proposed and suitably acknowledged. Brother T. Hodson said he was pleased to inform them that, notwithstanding the lamentable depression in trade, and the many extenuating circumstances to which some of their members had been subjected, that their lodge was in a healthy and prosperous condition, and he trusted that the same brotherly feeling which had characterised the members of the lodge for the last three years would still continue. He was exceedingly pleased to tell them that the order for the year ending December 31st, 1884, had made considerable progress. They had 91 districts, 721 lodges, and upwards of 45,000 members, and the aggregate worth of the Lodge and District Funds exceeded £117,000. He thought those figures spoke volumes as to the prosperity of the order (hear, hear)."

“A general meeting of the workmen in the metallic bedstead trade was held on Wednesday night at the SYDNEY INN, Bradley, to support the branch already formed in Bilston, and to test the feelings of the operatives on the matter of a bonus of 15 per cent. An influential deputation from Birmingham attended, and addressed the meeting.

Mr. Swindel, one of the deputation, said the association had been formed to improve the condition of the working men in that trade by uniting themselves together, so that they would be able to resist the tyranny of unscrupulous employers. There had been a meeting in Birmingham, and they had resolved that the time had come when a demand should be made for an advance of 15 per cent. Some of the large employers had been waited upon on the subject, and they expressed their approval of it if it were made general in the trade.

Mr. Mills (secretary to the association) gave an outline of the objects of the society, and of the progress made.

Mr. Annan (vice president) said there had been a retrogression in the wages of the workmen in the bedstead trade for many years, caused by the disunion of the men. A man by himself could not stand against the onslaughts of an unscrupulous employer, for they knew the mean subterfuges he would resort to to grind him down to the lowest depths of poverty. As to the idea that all firms should pay the same rate of wages, he did not think that would be fair, because some employers had their work got up a great deal better than others.

The Chairman remarked that he had been requested to state that before an application for an advance would be entertained by their employers the workmen must be in a position to satisfy them that other firms were paying the same rate of wages as an advance would make theirs. If all employers paid the same rate of wages they could rest assured they would take care to have the work done well. He did not altogether agree that employers were ready to screw their workmen down to the lowest farthing. If an association like this was to be carried on with any degree of success it must be based upon sound and just principles. There must be a standard rate of day wages all through the trade, and a scale to regulate piece work, then such a society would command the sympathy of the employers, and be an advantage and blessing to workmen.

After further remarks, the following resolution was passed. That this meeting pledges itself to support the association in its endeavour to get an advance of 15 per cent, on December 1st.”

“The Strike in the Bedstead Trade.....

About forty strikers arrived in Bilston at mid-day yesterday from Dudley. A visit was paid first to all to the works of Messrs. Perry and Son Limited, Highfields, and a deputation was appointed to ascertain from the heads of the firm whether they were willing to give the 15 per cent bonus, but nothing definite was decided upon. In the dinner-hour there was a meeting of the employés, at which the Dudley strikers were present. It was stated that a definite decision was very desirable, and a further deputation of six men were appointed, three from the iron department, and three from the brass, to wait upon the heads of the firm again in the course of the afternoon, and to report their answer to a meeting to be held when work was over in the evening. The men then proceeded with their work as usual.

The strikers next proceeded to the Atlas Works of Messrs. Wilkes; but Mr. Wilkes being away, they dispersed until two o'clock. At this hour they had an interview with that gentlemen. Mr. Wilkes afterwards called together all his workpeople, and stated that he was willing to give whatever advance was conceded by the Birmingham employers, and if the men would remain at work they could be paid as from Thursday. He was a member of the masters association, and he could not, therefore, break faith with the other members of that association by acting until he knew what the other masters were going to do. After some discussion the operatives left the factory in a body.

Before the operatives left work for the day at Messrs. Perry's they held a meeting on the premises, at which they resolved to remain at work another fortnight pending the issue of the revised price-list which has been promised by the masters in the bedstead trade within that time. About 200 men, women, and boys are interested in the matter at this works. Later on in the evening there was a joint meeting at the SYDNEY VILLAGE INN, Bradley, of the operatives at this establishment and of the Dudley strikers. The former put in a written copy of the resolution mentioned above, and announced their intention of abiding by it. Work will therefore be carried on as usual at Messrs. Perry's this morning.”

"At Bilston today, Arthur Fieldhouse, licensee of the BIRD IN HAND, Hill Street, Bradley, was committed to take his trial at the Assizes upon a charge of attempting to discharge a loaded revolver at his brother, Thomas Fieldhouse, licensee of the SYDNEY VILLAGE INN, Wright Street, Bradley. Twelve months ago prisoner's widowed mother died, leaving an estate, and prisoner, being dissatisfied with his share, took to drinking rather heavily. Shortly after midnight on Tuesday last prisoner, it was alleged, scaled the wall at the rear of his brother's premises, entered the house, and endeavoured to extract a promise from his brother, threatening, if it were not given, he would settle it by having his brother's life. As he levelled the revolver, however, prosecutor's wife knocked his hand down, and after a struggle the weapon was taken from him. He then snatched up a poker, but prosecutor's wife clung to him and held him while her husband called in assistance."

Staffordshire Sentinel 8/3/1910

"Staffordshire Assizes.....

Arthur Fieldhouse (28), publican, was charged with having committed an assault upon his brother, Thomas Fieldhouse, and his wife, at Coseley, on January 12th. On the advice of Mr. R. J. Lawrence, who defended, prisoner pleaded guilty.

Mr. V. G. Milward, prosecuting counsel, said that prisoner was a license holder, and he had been indulging very heavily in drink. At the time of the occurrence he was suffering very much from drink, and went to the house of the prosecutor, where there was a struggle with the brother and his wife. There was an assault, but the brother had no desire to press the case.

For the prisoner, Mr. Lawrence said that Fieldhouse had a very good character. Some years ago he had served in Thorneycroft's Horse in South Africa. Prisoner went to the house with a loaded revolver, but it was obviously a silly, drunken freak in an utterly absurd drunken frenzy. There was a struggle, but the prisoner refrained during the assault from firing the weapon.

Having regard to the appeal made for prisoner, the Judge said he would bind him over in £50 to come up for judgement if called upon."

"Bilston Licensing Justices on Friday of last week refused to sanction a new public house at Lower Gornal after the brewery company had declined to close two of their houses at Bradley.

The application by Ansell's Brewery Limited was for a full license in respect of a new house to be erected at the junction of Ellowes Road and Park Road, Lower Gornal.

When the matter was originally before the justices a fortnight ago the brewery company offered to close the BULLS HEAD INN, John Street, Bradley, and pay £1,000 cash to make up the difference between the value of the license of the BULLS HEAD and the proposed new house. The Bench then announced that the application would be granted on the condition that the company closed the SIDNEY VILLAGE INN, Wright Street, Bradley, in addition to the BULLS HEAD, and the hearing was adjourned to allow Mr. Ernest Brown (for the applicants) to consult the brewery company.

Mr. Brown, on Friday last, said his instructions were that the SIDNEY VILLAGE could not be offered by the brewery company in addition to the BULLS HEAD. Mr. G. W. Cornwell, assistant managing director of Ansell's Brewery Limited, said that to comply with the justices' request would make the provision of the new house an uneconomical proposition. The District Licensing Valuer, he said, had estimated the value of the BULLS HEAD license at £4,850, which was £1,000 less than the estimated value of the license of the proposed new house. The SIDNEY VILLAGE license was valued at £4,500, though the company's own estimate was £5,000. The company estimated the proposed new house would cost in the region of £29,000, as they did not want to build a shoddy place. 'But to have to surrender two licenses, which really means we are called upon to give another £4,000, becomes the last straw, and makes it totally uneconomic for us to proceed,' said Mr. Cornwell.

Questioned about the possibility of closing another house in place of the SIDNEY VILLAGE, Mr. Cornwell said that the company could not afford to, because all their houses in the Bilston area were good trading houses.

The justices retired to reconsider the application, and on their return the Chairman announced it would be refused."

“Henry Oakley and William Smith, both of Bilston, were brought up by the police, and by the Bench ordered to find a surety each for their future good behaviour. The former defendant having been taken in the act of fighting at the TALBOT INN, Bilston, very late on the Saturday night, the 5th instant, and Smith having endeavoured to rescue the defendant Oakley from the police, and kicked the latter.”

Thomas Chidlow, 39, was indicted for stealing two bottles of British wine, the property of John Bradshaw, at Bilston.

The prosecutor keeps the TALBOT INN, at Bilston. On the 29th of October the prisoner called there, and asked for a glass of rum and water, which was supplied. On his leaving the house, he was suspected of having taken something out of the window, and on being searched, two bottles of wine were found in his possession, which the prosecutor stated was his property.

Guilty; to be imprisoned four months.”

“William Bevington, a labourer, was charged with embezzling £1 5s, the moneys of his master, James Barnes, a carter, living in Oxford Street, Bilston. It appeared that on Wednesday last, the prosecutor sent the prisoner to Wolverhampton market, with a horse to sell for 25s. The prisoner sold the horse, but, instead of giving up the money to his master, he got drunk, and on being taken in custody on the following day, he admitted that he had spent 8s, and that the remainder was in the hands of Mr. Bradshaw, landlord of the TALBOT. Committed to the Sessions.”

“Staffordshire Adjourned Sessions.....

The Chairman briefly addressed the Grand Jury.....

There was one case in the calendar (that of William Bevington) in which the prisoner was charged with embezzling 8s 6d, the moneys of his master; but this charge, unless there was more evidence than appeared in the depositions, could not, in his opinion, be sustained. The circumstances were these. The master deputed his servant (the prisoner) to take a horse to a third party for him (the third party) to sell; but instead of taking the horse as directed, the prisoner himself sold the horse and appropriated a portion of the money to his own use in drinking at a public house. The prisoner had no authority to receive the money, but whatever other offence the prisoner might be charged with, he was not guilty of the offence of embezzlement.....

The bills against the following parties were ignored William Bevington.”

"The last show for the season of the Bilston Floral and Horticultural Society took place on Tuesday last, at St. Mary's School Rooms. The day was fine, and the company numerous and respectable. Many of the specimens shown were of great merit. There appears to be a growing feeling in favour of this infant society, which will, we hope, be more fully developed in a future season. Great praise is due to Mr. Chas. Tizzard, head gardener to W. Riley, Esq, of Millfields, and who is honorary secretary, and to Mr. Bradshaw, of the TALBOT INN, Oxford Street, treasurer, for the exertions they have made to promote the success of the society.....

At the close of the proceedings the committee, judges, and supporters of the society, to the number of sixty, sat down to an excellent dinner at the TALBOT INN, provided in Mr. Bradshaw's best style. A most agreeable evening was spent, and the company did not separate until a late hour."

"Mr. H. Underhill, solicitor, appeared at the instance of the Association of Licensed Victuallers, to defend John Bradshaw, of the TALBOT INN, Bilston, who was charged by the Inland Revenue authorities with having in his possession and using grains of paradise. The extremity to which those authorities had pushed the recent case of Cotterill, had, Mr. Underhill said, caused his clients to determine to test the truths of the numerous charges which were now being preferred against members of their body; and to ascertain whether the evidence of chemists could be depended upon to prove the guilt or innocence of the parties so charged; they were ready, if necessary, to go to the Court of Exchequer. Mr. Underhill then applied for an adjournment of the case, as witnesses who had analysed the spent hops, from which the grains were alleged to have been taken, were not then present. No opposition was offered by the complainants and the application was granted."

"John Bradshaw, landlord of the TALBOT INN, Bilston, was charged with having in his possession and using grains of paradise.....

Mr. Underhill said that he had Mr. Cooper, a talented surgeon of Bilston, present, who would give evidence that he subjected the samples submitted to him to a careful analysis and could discover no grains of paradise, but he (Mr. Underhill) could not prove that they were the same samples as were taken away by the excise.

The bench fined the defendant £100, being half the fine to which he was liable for the offence."

"On Friday last, at Bilston Police Court, Thomas Jewkes was charged with wilfully damaging the door of the TALBOT INN, Mrs. Bradshaw's, on the previous Monday night. It seemed that the prisoner had been drinking at the house, that he went away, and returned demanding more drink. It was refused him, and he then kicked the door and damaged it. He was fined 10s, the value of the damage done, and costs."

"Staffordshire Quarter Sessions.....

Ann Bickerton, 31, was indicted for uttering and putting off at Bilston three counterfeit sovereigns, well knowing the same to be false and counterfeit. Mr. Davis conducted the prosecution, but no counsel appeared for the prisoner. Elizabeth Ralph, servant to Mrs. Elizabeth Taylor, stated that her mistress kept a wine and spirit vaults at Bilston. On the morning of the 30th of August, the prisoner called and purchased some liquor, tendering in payment a £5 note, and receiving the change. She (witness) then went to serve another customer, and the prisoner immediately afterwards returned a sovereign saying she did not like it. She (witness) then gave her two half-sovereigns, and on subsequently looking at the sovereign she was quite certain it was not the one she had given the prisoner.

Owen Smith, police officer, said he was sent for to Taylor's vaults to receive a counterfeit sovereign. On the 10th of September he had the prisoner in custody; and the last witness selected her from among a number of other persons as the person who had passed the counterfeit sovereign.

Henry John Holland, son of a grocer at Willenhall, stated that between three and four o'clock in the afternoon of the 10th of September, the prisoner came to his father's shop and purchased articles to the amount of 4s 11d, which she paid for with a £5 note. He gave her the change from the cash box, taking out all the gold, when she asked him to wrap the goods up in paper. He had to go to the end of the shop for paper, and on his return the prisoner threw a sovereign on the counter, saying she did not like it, as it had a flaw on it. He returned the sovereign to the cash box, and gave her change in silver.

Thomas Holland, father of the last witness, stated that he examined the cash box on the night of the 9th of September, and was quite satisfied that the gold in it was good. On going into the shop after the prisoner had left he saw a counterfeit sovereign in the cash box.

Emma Bradshaw, landlady of the TALBOT spirit vaults, at Bilston, was the next witness. She stated that about six o'clock in the afternoon of the 10th of September the prisoner came into the shop and asked for two half-pints of rum, for which she produced two bottles, and for which she paid with a £5 note. She (witness) gave her four sovereigns and eighteen shillings in silver in change for the note and rum, and as soon as she had served another customer the prisoner put a sovereign on the counter, and said she did not like the ring of it; to which she (witness) said, 'I should think not; I did not give you this.' She then had her detained, and gave her into custody.

Mr. Lithgoe was called, and after examining the three sovereigns which were produced, he stated that they were counterfeit, and had all been made from the same die.

The prisoner gave a general denial to the charge; but the jury returned a verdict of guilty.

The Chairman, in sentencing the prisoner to two years' imprisonment, told her that hers was one of the worst, and at the same time most ingenious, cases of the kind which had come before the Court."

[A solicitor subsequently arrived for the defence, saying he had been sent to the wrong court, amongst other issues. The Chairman pointed out that the prisoner did not mention that she was to be defended. Eventually it was ruled that the conviction was sound.]

"We have the pleasure in reporting the celebration of the annual supper of the Great Western Railway officials and employees of Bilston Station. It was held on Friday night, at Mr. Stevens's, TALBOT HOTEL, Oxford Street, and the spread was well served up by the proprietor. Mr. Owen was unanimously voted to the chair. The usual toasts, loyal and social, were given and responded to, and the evening passed off in a most agreeable manner. It is gratifying to see these evidences of good fellowship between the servants of a large Railway Company and the townspeople, and as unusual as pleasant. It must promise well for the traffic of Bilston Station. This was the ninth anniversary, but it has been held this year, for the first time at Mr. Stevens's, whose liberality and attention has insured the continuance of the celebration at his house in future. Several many influential townspeople were present. Many really good speeches were made, and some good songs were sung. “A sudden death, under very singular and painful circumstances, took place on Monday morning, in Oxford Street. It appears that a club is held at Mr. Kirby's house, the members of which attend to pay their contributions every Monday morning. An aged woman, who is well-known in the district as 'Nurse Roberts,' living in Railway Street, was at the shop for this purpose on Monday. Having completed her business, she asked permission to rest herself, as she felt rather tired. This being accorded, she sat down upon a chair in the shop. In about ten minutes afterwards, the person in charge, hearing a slight noise, turned round in time to see Mrs. Roberts fall forward. Thinking she was in a fit, he went for a glass of water, some women who were present, attending to the poor woman meanwhile. Before his return, however, the poor woman was dead. Medical aid was obtained, but of course it was of no avail. At the inquest held at the TALBOT INN, Oxford Street, on Wednesday morning, before W. H. Phillips, Esq, district coroner, a verdict of Death from Natural Causes was returned.”

Sergeant Hayward deposed that late on the night of the 2nd inst he went to the defendant’s house and found a man named George Yeomans sitting there drunk. “The Strike in the Hollow-Ware Trade.

A meeting of the turners, who are still on strike, was held at the TALBOT INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, yesterday, at which a letter was read from the secretary of the masters association. This was to the effect that it was useless for the men to discuss their privileges or the list, as these matters were decided by the arbitrators last year. The masters still adhered to their offer of 10 per cent advance on the arbitrator’s award. The men contended that if they were to resume work on the terms offered they would have less wages than they were receiving when they came out on strike. They therefore decided to play on.

We are informed that the employees of two firms in the hollow-ware trade have returned to work on the masters’ terms, and that the example is likely to be followed by others.”

Froggart. The evidence showed that whilst the deceased was following his employment, he was noticed to have his head under a stamp, and on a fellow-workman going to him he discovered that he was dead, the stamp by some means having fallen upon him. No explanation could be given as to how the accident had occurred, and the enquiry was adjourned for Captain Bevan, the inspector of factories, to make enquiries.”

“Mr. Justice Wills and a jury, at Birmingham Assizes yesterday, heard an action in which Sarah Webster, residing with her married sister at Wednesbury, claimed damages from Edward Smith, of the CROSS KEYS, Wednesbury, for slander, which imputed to the plaintiff that she had robbed him of £1 13s.

Mr. Vachell laid plaintiff's case before the court. In August last year, he said, the owners of the CROSS KEYS asked the defendant to take charge of the TALBOT, in Bilston, and he engaged the plaintiff, who is his cousin, as a barmaid. She remained there until the date of the alleged slander, Christmas Day. On that occasion he accused her of having robbed the till of £1 13s on the previous night, and notwithstanding that charge, said Mr. Vachell, she was left in charge of the money all day. The defendant repeated the accusation in the presence of plaintiff's sister. ‘She is a thief; she has robbed me of £1 13s out of that drawer.’ These, said Mr. Vachell, were the words he used, and he called out in the presence of the people in the house that she had robbed him.

Mr. Disturnal, for the defence, urged that there could not possibly be any malice on the part of the defendant, considering that the parties were relatives. The money was counted by both the previous night, and put into a drawer. Next morning there was £1 12s 8d short, and the defendant had the honest belief that the plaintiff took the money. The defendant, in the course of his evidence, said he still believed that the plaintiff must have had the money. The jury found for the plaintiff, with £25 damages.”

"The annual licensing meeting for Bilston and its neighbourhood was held on Friday last.....

Applications for new licenses.....

Mr. Waterhouse applied on behalf of Mrs. Elizabeth Bate, of the NEWTOWN TAVERN, Oxford Street, Bilston, for a license for that house. Mr. Waterhouse stated that the house was situated at the junction of Queen Street with Oxford Street, and offered great advantages to travellers passing through Bilston towards Birmingham, or to persons coming into the town from Wednesfield or Willenhall, in doing which they must necessarily pass the applicant's house. The applicant was a widow, entirely dependant for a livelihood upon the profits of that house. A plan was handed in, setting forth the accommodation afforded by the house, and a certificate signed by many respectable residents, and also by nearly every other owner or occupier of licensed houses in that street. There was no opposition to this application, but the Magistrates considered that there was already a larger number of licensed houses in Oxford Street than the requirements of the locality demanded, and accordingly refused the application."

“Lea Brook Grounds, Wednesbury.

The above new pedestrian and shooting grounds, in spite of the weather, were well attended on Monday to witness the two miles walking match, between H. Roberts and H. Lawley (both of Bilston), for £5 a side. To complete the distance the men had to make the circuit of the grounds 13 laps and 30 yards round. The betting was 6 to 4 on Roberts, who won the toss for sides, and at the signal went away with the lead, which he maintained up to the third lap, when Lawley passed him, and kept the lead for some distance, but the men passed each other alternately up to the twelfth lap, when Roberts spurted forward, got the lead, and gradually left Lawley in the rear, finishing a winner by 12 yards. Mr. Nash of the THREE HORSE SHOES, Bilston, was referee.”

Evening Express 10/6/1881

"Lucy Legg, landlady of the THREE HORSE SHOES INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, was charged with having sold some ale during prohibited hours on the night of 4th instant.

Police-constable Wilson stated that he was on duty in Oxford Street on the night in question, about 12.45, when he saw a man and a woman up an entry adjoining the THREE HORSE SHOES. The woman was carrying the can produced, which contained a small quantity of ale. When she saw him she went back into the entry, and fell down, another woman, coming up at the time, falling over her, and he (witness) also falling. When he caught hold of the can it did not contain much ale, but when he examined the entry he found that some of it had been spilled there. The house was open at the back. Lucy Legg said the house was open because she was waiting for her son and another young man to come home by the last train. She denied the can belonged to her, or that she filled any ale in it after 11 o'clock. She also denied having fallen down.

Ann Holmes, the woman who carried the can, and daughter of the defendant, said she lived in Stone Street. The can was hers, and she had gone across to the back premises of her mother for some steam water for her sister, who was ill. The can had contained some ale, which she obtained before closing time, and it had not been washed when she took it for some water, and it might have had a little ale left in the bottom.

The Bench thought there was some doubt in the matter, and gave her the benefit of it. The case was dismissed.

Mr. Bowen defended."

"Thomas and John Fellows were charged by John Thomas Legg, THREE HORSE SHOES INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, with assaulting him in Price Street, Bilston, on October 13th, when proceeding home with a female friend. Defendants violently assaulted him, and one kicked him on the ankle, and complainant had not been able since to work, as stated by witnesses. A number of witnesses were called on both sides, giving most contradictory evidence. The case was dismissed."

Mr. Waterhouse appeared to make application for a license for the THREE TUNS, Bridge Street, Bilston, kept by Mr. Thomas Shale. “On Monday Mr. T. M. Phillips, Coroner, held an inquest at the THREE TUNS INN, Bridge Street, Bilston, on the body of Mathew Williams, a miner, about 20 years old, who died from the effects of an explosion of sulphur, which took place in the Bradley Colliery, the property of Messrs. Thorneycroft and Co., on the 9th instant. It appears that a part of the pit was fenced out, and the men had orders not to go near it; there was also a notice board fixed bearing the words ‘Danger here,’ and the deceased could read. On the day in question the deceased was quarrelling with another man, when he ran off in the direction of the place where the sulphur was with a lighted candle. An explosion immediately took place, and the deceased was dreadfully burnt about the head, face, neck, and arms. He was carried to his home, where he died on Friday last. The witnesses stated that the pit was well ventilated and properly worked, and the jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death. The Government Inspector of Mines attended the inquiry.”

“On Monday night, Mr. W. H. Phillips, Coroner, held an inquest at the THREE TUNS INN, Bilston, on the body of James Crook (50), wheelwright, of Church Street, who was run over by a brake belonging to Mr. Riley of Wednesbury. The evidence showed that on Saturday the workmen in the employ of Mr. Henry Smith, contractor, West Bromwich had been having a trip to Bridgnorth, and on returning through Bilston, about nine o’clock at night, the deceased was knocked down whilst crossing Oxford Street, and run over. He was removed home, but died a few minutes afterwards. It was admitted that he had had a quantity of beer during the evening, and the witness stated that he paid no attention when the driver called out to him. It was impossible for the driver to pull up in time to prevent the accident. A verdict of Accidental Death was returned.”

It was known locally as the "Trumpet".

Black Country Bugle 17/8/2022

'Supping with the spirits at haunted hostelries' by Steve James

"In Bilston, the TRUMPET was originally the BUTCHERS ARMS dating from 1833, later renamed the ROYAL EXCHANGE and now a popular jazz venue. But cold spots appear, mysterious bangs can be heard and lights flash off and on. There's also the feeling of a foreign spirit in the cellar."

It had a beerhouse license.

Wolverhampton Chronicle 3/12/1851

"At Bilston Police Office, on Tuesday, Daniel Hogan, James Smith, and Rosana Smith (husband and wife), were charged with uttering counterfeit coin. It was clearly proved that Hogan had passed two base sixpences at the TURKS HEAD, High Street, kept by William Stretton, on Sunday night, and a bad shilling at the house of William Rhodes, the KINGS HEAD, Chain Lane, as well as 2s 6d, all in bad money, at the house of Mrs. Lester, in High Street. The connection of the other prisoners with Hogan was also established. Inspector Thompson, in searching the house of the prisoners, discovered some other counterfeit coin, and the requisite materials for such nefarious manufacture. They were remanded until the decision of the mint authorities as to their prosecution should be known. The money was a very bad imitation.”

Staffordshire Advertiser 6/12/1851

“Daniel Hogan, Rosanna Smith, and John Smith, remanded from Tuesday, were brought before W. Baldwin, Esq, on Monday last, charged with uttering base coin, at the house of Mr. Stretton, TURKS HEAD, High Street, Bilston. The evidence being conclusive against Hogan, the Mint authorities were determined to prosecute, and he was committed to the sessions. The other prisoners were discharged.”

“Staffordshire Quarter Sessions.....

Daniel Hogden was charged with uttering counterfeit coins at Bilston, in November last, knowing them to be false and counterfeit. Mr. Kynnersley and Mr. Gordon conducted the prosecution.

Mr. Kynnersley opened the case, which was more fully detailed by the several witnesses, and also stated to the jury the law respecting the uttering of base coin.

It appeared that the prisoner, who is a labouring man, went to a beerhouse in Bilston kept by Mrs. Lester, about five o'clock in the evening of the 23rd of November, and, in company with another man, called for a pint of ale, which was given to them by the servant, Fanny Brevitt, and for which they gave her fourpence. They then asked for more ale, and gave Brevitt a base sixpence, which she subsequently marked and placed on the mantelpiece. About half an hour afterwards the prisoner returned with a bottle, and asked for a gallon of ale, putting down two base shillings in payment. Brevitt told him they were counterfeit, and took them to her mistress, during which time the prisoner decamped. Scarcely an hour had elapsed before the prisoner went to the TURKS HEAD public house, and Mrs. Stretton, the landlady, stated that he brought a bottle for half a gallon of ale, in return for which he gave her two sixpences, which she almost immediately discovered to be counterfeit. In less than an hour a woman brought the same bottle for half a gallon of ale, when Mrs. Stretton made some remarks to her about the bottle and the sixpences, upon which she went to the door, where it appeared the prisoner was standing, and returned with two good sixpences and paid for the ale. Mr. Stretton stated that whilst his wife was filling the bottle, he went round the house to the front door, when the prisoner ran away, but was almost immediately captured. When caught he spit a shilling out of his mouth, which, with three sixpences found in his pocket, were also counterfeit. The whole of the coins, which were marked, and produced by Inspector Thompson, were proved by Mr. Lithgoe, silversmith, of Stafford, to be counterfeit.

The prisoner, in his defence, said he had received the coins in changing some silver.

The jury found him guilty, and he was sentenced to be imprisoned one year to hard labour.”

[A few weeks after being discharged from prison Daniel Hogden was again passing counterfeit coins at Bilston. At the Sessions in March 1853 he was sentenced to eighteen months.]

As, however, no further evidence was given on this charge, it was withdrawn.

Prisoners were then charged with being in possession of a skeleton key. Police Sergeant Hayward and Police Constable Moss gave evidence that on taking the prisoners into custody on the charge that had been withdrawn, they found, on searching O’Brien the skeleton key produced. “Going on stage in a pair of scruffy jeans and a tee-shirt may be OK for some pop stars – but not for Dave Hill, lead guitarist with Britain's chart-busting super-group Slade. On stage Dave dresses up to the nines because that, he believes, is what a showman owes his public In the past, Walsall-born Dave designed his own costumes and had them made in Kensington market, but now his outfits are designed by a young married couple he met in one of his favourite pubs, the TRUMPET in Bilston.....”

“Customers have re-named their local pub without changing the sign outside. The name of the ROYAL EXCHANGE in the High Street did not suit the reputation the one-bar pub has gained in this country, in Europe and America, for live jazz – so now unofficially everyone calls it the TRUMPET. Landlord, Les Megson, has built the pub into one of the last outposts of grass roots jazz, renowned for its private jazz parties still going when Bilston workers pass by the pub in the early mornings.

‘We don't have darts, cards or dominoes here – just jazz,’ said Les, who has been at the pub for 14 years.

Bilston celebrity pianist-entertainer, Tommy Burton, was the first of many famous musicians to patronise the TRUMPET. And Wolverhampton-based pop group Slade, when not on tour, make the pub their local.....”

Express And Star 2/4/1983

‘Jazz With The Landlord And A Half’

“.....which often sees bemused visitors wandering around Bilston High Street asking ‘Do you know a pub called the Trumpet?’

When Les Megson took over the license of the ROYAL EXCHANGE in 1965 it had yet another name. BAD. Its reputation was so low that the pub couldn’t boast a single regular customer. Often a whole night would pass by without Les seeing a soul. With nothing to lose, he decided to enjoy himself in solitude as best he could. ‘I have been a jazz fan since the age of ten, and I had an old gramophone and a stack of records which I’d collected. It was nothing like the gear of today, there were no speakers or anything, but I just started to blast out the jazz.’

Fortunately for Les, someone passing by heard some of his favourite music and popped into the pub for a drink, a listen and a chat. It was none other than pianist, jazzman and comedian Tommy Burton – and that chance meeting saw a change in the fortunes of the TRUMPET Before long, jazz fans from around Wolverhampton were packing the place out to hear a combination of Tommy, Les’s collection of jazz records, and occasional visits from other jazzmen in the area Sadly for Bilston, and jazz fans everywhere, Les is retiring soon – but he’s leaving his pictures, the ceiling records, and 100 of his specially recorded tapes to his successor, Tony Swinnerton, his head barman, who has worked in the pub for the past 12 years.....”

“Black Country pop stars Slade are getting together a gallery of superstars tonight – at a Bilston pub. Special guests asked to the band’s pop star party include George Best, Oliver Reed, Eric Bristow, Jim Davidson, and Ian Botham. Others invited include Alex ‘Hurricane’ Higgins, Daley Thompson, John Conteh, David Essex, Freddie Star, and Stafford rock singer Ozzy Osbourne.

The stars have been asked along by Slade singer Noddy Holder, to celebrate the launch of a new album titled ‘Rogues Gallery.’ Noddy Holder said today, ‘We would like to make it clear that these people are friends who we really like. They are the sort of people – lovable rogues – we want at our party.’

The band shunned the bright lights of London when they decided to hold the party, and plumped for the ROYAL EXCHANGE in Bilston High Street, Noddy’s ‘regular’ for 14 years.

Delighted licensee Tony Swinnerton said, ‘It’s a great idea, and it’s going to be one hell of a night. Noddy has been drinking here for years because he likes the crowd and the jazz we put on.’”

Renamed TRUMPET. [1987]

The front of the building was replaced in 1988, due to rotting timbers.

Rob Clee was born in Bilston.

He was married to Julie.

Musti Bouameur played drums.

His partner was Diane Elcock.

“As pubs continue to battle the cost of living crisis, the Express & Star continues its Love Your Local series which celebrates our local inns. The TRUMPET in Bilston is known as a jazz venue thanks to its rich history of playing the music in the pub since the late 1950s where owner at the time, Les Megson would play jazz records due to his love for the music genre. Today, the pub is run by Musti Bouameur, 75, who is a fascinating character with an incredible story on how he came to run the pub. Musti, originally born in Algeria, spent many years playing in bands in North Africa and Southern France, before moving to England, where he discovered the TRUMPET and eventually took over as landlord. Before becoming the landlord, Musti was a school teacher that would visit the pub several times a week to listen to the music, and he eventually started playing the drums there each week, and the tenancy became available and after some encouragement from friends, he went for it and has been there ever since— coming up to 17 years of running the pub this year. Thanks to the pub’s rich history with Jazz music, and Musti’s love for the music, he was recently interviewed on International Jazz day and he said that before becoming the landlord, he would tell himself that one day the pub would be his, but he meant it as in calling it his own as his local pub, but today, he is the landlord of the pub and loves every minute of running the establishment where he gets to celebrate his love for music and still to this day, he gets to play the drums. He runs the pub with the assistance of his partner, Diane Elcock, 49, who is a teacher but helps out with the pub in the evenings. Speaking about the TRUMPET and its historic affair with jazz music, Diane said, ‘The big thing about the pub – before covid it was exclusively a jazz venue, but after covid it changed things a little. A lot of clients and musicians were a little reluctant to go out and as a consequence of that we have diversified to different genres of music and that has continued. It is now considered a jazz and blues club. Covid was a tough period for pubs everywhere and for us too of course. It affected everything, but every day we were allowed to open, we would open. Wolverhampton council allowed us to start doing gigs in the garden and so we were among the early adopters of socially distanced events with them taking place in the garden. We were fortunate to be able to do gigs in the garden, and in order to do that we have a massive help from our regulars, who helped paint fences, decorate the outdoors – everyone came together to make the garden beautiful.’ Diane has worked at the pub for around 10 years now, and she is very proud of Musti and his love and passion for the pub and the whole jazz music genre.....”

The prisoners were also charged with uttering two base sixpences at the house of Mr. Rhodes, Middle Field Lane; also to Mrs. Mary Lester, High Street.”

AND

“At Bilston Police Office, on Tuesday, Daniel Hogan, James Smith, and Rosana Smith (husband and wife), were charged with uttering counterfeit coin. It was clearly proved that Hogan had passed two base sixpences at the TURKS HEAD, High Street, kept by William Stretton, on Sunday night, and a bad shilling at the house of William Rhodes, the KINGS HEAD, Chain Lane, as well as 2s 6d, all in bad money, at the house of Mrs. Lester, in High Street. The connection of the other prisoners with Hogan was also established. Inspector Thompson, in searching the house of the prisoners, discovered some other counterfeit coin, and the requisite materials for such nefarious manufacture. They were remanded until the decision of the mint authorities as to their prosecution should be known. The money was a very bad imitation.”

“Daniel Hogan, Rosanna Smith, and John Smith, remanded from Tuesday, were brought before W. Baldwin, Esq, on Monday last, charged with uttering base coin, at the house of Mr. Stretton, TURKS HEAD, High Street, Bilston. The evidence being conclusive against Hogan, the Mint authorities were determined to prosecute, and he was committed to the sessions. The other prisoners were discharged.”

“Staffordshire Quarter Sessions.....

Daniel Hogden was charged with uttering counterfeit coins at Bilston, in November last, knowing them to be false and counterfeit. Mr. Kynnersley and Mr. Gordon conducted the prosecution.

Mr. Kynnersley opened the case, which was more fully detailed by the several witnesses, and also stated to the jury the law respecting the uttering of base coin.

It appeared that the prisoner, who is a labouring man, went to a beerhouse in Bilston kept by Mrs. Lester, about five o'clock in the evening of the 23rd of November, and, in company with another man, called for a pint of ale, which was given to them by the servant, Fanny Brevitt, and for which they gave her fourpence. They then asked for more ale, and gave Brevitt a base sixpence, which she subsequently marked and placed on the mantelpiece. About half an hour afterwards the prisoner returned with a bottle, and asked for a gallon of ale, putting down two base shillings in payment. Brevitt told him they were counterfeit, and took them to her mistress, during which time the prisoner decamped. Scarcely an hour had elapsed before the prisoner went to the TURKS HEAD public house, and Mrs. Stretton, the landlady, stated that he brought a bottle for half a gallon of ale, in return for which he gave her two sixpences, which she almost immediately discovered to be counterfeit. In less than an hour a woman brought the same bottle for half a gallon of ale, when Mrs. Stretton made some remarks to her about the bottle and the sixpences, upon which she went to the door, where it appeared the prisoner was standing, and returned with two good sixpences and paid for the ale. Mr. Stretton stated that whilst his wife was filling the bottle, he went round the house to the front door, when the prisoner ran away, but was almost immediately captured. When caught he spit a shilling out of his mouth, which, with three sixpences found in his pocket, were also counterfeit. The whole of the coins, which were marked, and produced by Inspector Thompson, were proved by Mr. Lithgoe, silversmith, of Stafford, to be counterfeit.

The prisoner, in his defence, said he had received the coins in changing some silver.

The jury found him guilty, and he was sentenced to be imprisoned one year to hard labour.”

[A few weeks after being discharged from prison Daniel Hogden was again passing counterfeit coins at Bilston.

At the Sessions in March 1853 he was sentenced to eighteen months.]

".....The proposition of the masters that one hundred puddlers should go into North Staffordshire was anything but favourably received by the puddlers in Bilston. They declare that they have done all they can do to convince their masters that they do not and will not countenance the strike in North Staffordshire, and to be not only locked out for the existence of circumstances over which they have not control whatever, but to be asked to leave their homes and risk their lives in a quarrel between masters and men at the other end of the county they regard as cruel and preposterous. There was a meeting of puddlers held at the TURKS HEAD, High Street, but it was of course private, and attempts on the part of our correspondent to glean some particulars resulted in no further information than that the men would not consent to go to North Staffordshire."

“Staffordshire Epiphany Sessions.....

Sarah Trevolte, on bail, was indicted for stealing a brown-paper parcel, containing 18 yards of velvet and other articles, the property of Richard Dyke, at Bilston, on the 29th of November. Mr. Bosanquet conducted the prosecution, and Mr. J. Rose appeared for the prisoner.

The prosecutor, a miner, of Sedgley, and his wife were at the TURKS HEAD INN, Bilston, on the evening of the day named, and the prisoner and some other people were there. Mrs. Dyke had with her a basket and the parcel in question. When she left she forgot the parcel, but afterwards sent her husband for it. The landlady (Mrs. Legge) informed him that the prisoner had taken it with her, and subsequently Mrs. Dyke and a Mrs. Yeomans visited the prisoner's house and there saw a piece of paper with a label upon it, which the former recognized as the paper in which her goods were wrapped. The prisoner's husband made a snatch at the paper, and succeeded in getting the greater part of it, which he immediately threw into the fire. When they left the prisoner followed them and told Mrs. Yeomans she had got the things, but would return them. She afterwards went to Mrs. Dyke and denied all knowledge of the parcel.

Mr. Rose, having addressed the jury for the defence, called William Bennett, who said the party at the TURKS HEAD were gambling with a machine like a clock. The parcel was passed into the bar to be taken care of until Mrs. Dyke left, and was received by the landlady. Both Mrs. Yeomans and Mrs. Dyke were drunk, and tried to sing and dance, but they could not – they were ‘rather too tight for the music to leave their tongues.’ When the prisoner left the house she only had her baby and a basket with her. He was certain she carried no parcel.

The jury found the prisoner guilty, but recommended her to mercy. She was sentenced to one month's imprisonment in the common gaol without hard labour.

The witness Bennett was called into the box, and the Assistant-Chairman, addressing him, said the jury had dealt with his evidence as he thought it deserved, and he only refrained from giving him into custody for perjury because he knew there might be a technical difficulty arising from the state of the law as to the materiality of the evidence on which an indictment is framed. He should consult the learned Chairman and other members of the Court on the matter, and although he refrained at present from ordering him into custody, yet if it was found that his evidence was material to the issue of the case he should have no hesitation in instructing the Clerk of the Peace to prosecute him for perjury.”

Although they have competed in handicaps, this was their first engagement of any importance. Both men had experienced a special course of training, and on disrobing looked in capital fettle, and as each fancied his chance some spirited wagering ensued. Anderson, however, had the most followers, and ere the men toed their marks he was established a warm favourite at evens. It was very late before the men went to their marks, but at the first attempt they were despatched to a splendid start. Then one of the most exciting races of this description was witnessed, and at the half-distance Anderson had gained but very little. However, he piled on all steam, and inch by inch overhauled Foster. Foster, however, who ran very gamely, and finishing in grand form, finally, amidst excitement, won by half a yard. Black Country Bugle 15/6/2016

Family tree shock as reader finds ancestor was murdered

“.....Great, Great, Great Aunt Mary Walton was 20 years old when she married Samuel Twigg in 1845 and in the next 15 years she produced 13 children, only four of whom survived to maturity.

In the mid 19th century Bilston had many problems with the great cholera epidemic of 1849 and living conditions in the town were some of the worst in the Black Country.

Twigg, who was born in 1824, worked in iron making and then became a bricklayer, which paid well when work was plentiful, but with the slump he struggled to feed the mouths of an ever-expanding family. He took to drinking, which turned him into an aggressive man and in one violent bar-room brawl, he was never the same again after being injured by a policeman's solid staff. The sullen and morose Samuel became an habitual drunk and was heartily disliked by the locals, who had learned to fear his fists and his knife. He did not have many friends around his Bilston home. His wife once confided to a friend, 'I've always been in danger from my husband. I've had to jump out of the bedroom window several times to escape from him.'

When Twigg failed to return from work on July 24, 1860, Mary was unconcerned. She knew he was off drinking somewhere. The landlord of the UNION INN in Coseley Street said he left alone at around midnight hardly able to stand. Rousing Mary from her bed at midnight, he demanded a couple of steaks for himself and his friend. There was, of course, no meat in the house and Mary did not like the look of the stranger. She was right as well, as in front of her drunken husband, the stranger tried to assault her. 'We don't have any steaks in the house, Sam,' she whispered. Twigg roughly clapped his hand around her jaw and said if she didn't feed him 'I'll cut your throat from ear to ear.' The situation was saved when his friend made a rapid departure and Twigg himself collapsed on the floor in a drunken stupor.

Young Samuel, then 16, went downstairs to find his father passed out on a seat in front of the fire. Making him as comfortable as they could, mother and son then went back to bed. Later Twigg woke up and called for a light to see him up to bed. Mary came downstairs with an oil lamp and, as she bent over her husband, he grabbed her and said, 'Give me a kiss Mary.' 'Get off,' said Mary, used to her husband's moods, as she struggled to free herself. Enraged, he pulled out a clasp knife and thrust it deep into her stomach. All hell broke loose as Mary fled from the house streaming blood and crying out murder. Despite medical help and being taken to the hospital, Mary died at 11pm the next day. When Constable John Moffat arrived at the house he found the drunken man asleep on the living room floor. He led Twigg outside, where a small crowd had started to gather, and took his prisoner off to the police station. Twigg's trial for murder lasted for only a few hours. At no stage did Samuel Twigg show any emotion nor remorse for what he had done. Only after sentence of death had been passed did Twigg cry out what a sinner he had been as he collapsed in tears. The judge was unmoved, so too was the Home Secretary when dismissing Twigg's petition for clemency.

The day before the execution on Saturday, January 5, 1861, extra trains were laid from Bilston to cope with the large number of people flocking to Stafford to witness the hanging on a scaffold erected outside the prison gates. At 8am next day more than 4,000 people gathered behind the barricades. They jeered and catcalled as Twigg was brought out, and cheered resoundingly as George Smith, the Rowley hangman, placed a rope around his neck and Twigg plunged through the open trap-door.....”

“Staffordshire Spring Assizes.....

Thomas Howard and Timothy Glover, two very decent-looking men, were charged with assaulting James Solomon Perceval, at the parish of Sedgley, in the night of the 9th of September, and stealing from his person one hat, his property.

Mr. Corbett was counsel for the prosecution, and called Perceval, who proved that he was attacked by the prisoners after leaving a public house, the UNION MILL, at Catchems Corner; they struck him, kicked him, and one of them bit part of his ear off! (The prosecutor produced the fragment in spirits in a phial.) Some assistance came up, and he found that he had lost his hat, and three shillings in money. On the following morning, he (prosecutor) went to a field where Howard was working, and said, ‘Well, what have you got for breakfast, ear?’ (A laugh.) Howard replied that he had not bit his ear off. Prosecutor’s hat was then on Howard’s head.

Mr. C. Phillips (Counsel for the prisoners) cross-examined the witness. Howard is a Lancashire man. Witness did not know that it was considered fair to kick and bite whilst fighting. Witness had other money with him, but only lost 3s. He had attempted to make this matter up with the prisoners on the day after it happened. When he saw Howard on the morning after the affray, he had a considerable bruise on his face.

The Judge: This case appears to be one of assault, rather than robbery. There does not appear to be any evidence to shew that the prosecutor was robbed, except as regards the hat.

Mr. C. Phillips: My Lord, my man lost a better hat! The exchange was a bad one for him. (A laugh.)

Mr. Corbett had himself doubted whether he should be able to prove a robbery. He would not press the case.

Verdict, not guilty.

The Judge informed the prisoners that they were still liable to be prosecuted for the assault; and their conduct had certainly been very disgraceful.”

“Staffordshire Lent Assizes.....

John Dennis M’Carthy, a decent looking working man, who was stated to be a carpenter, and forty-eight years of age, was charged with cutting and wounding John Jones, with intent to do him grievous bodily injury. Mr. Yardley conducted the prosecution.

It appeared that on the evening of the 5th August last, Jones and a great number of his fellow miners were drinking at the MILL INN, Catchems Corner, Sedgley, when the prisoner came in. After sitting for a bit, he called Jones a thief and a rogue, and on Jones asking what he did that for, he took out a carpenter’s awl, and threatened to stab him if he approached. He then put up the awl, after which Jones went up to him and struck him, upon which a fight ensued. The prisoner had a clasp knife in his hand, and in the scuffle Jones was stabbed. They pulled off his clothes, when he fainted, and the blood ran off at the tips of his fingers. A constable was then sent for, and the prisoner was given into custody.

Mr. Hopkins, of Bilston, examined the wound, which was on the back part of the right shoulder, and was not at all of a dangerous character.

The prisoner, who was undefended, cross-examined the witnesses at considerable length, and with much ingenuity. He then addressed the Jury, stating that he was the only stranger in the room, amongst thirty drunken miners, that some words of a jocular nature passed, when Jones struck him; that he got up to make his escape, when four or five of the miners gathered round him, and a scuffle ensued; that he had a knife in his hand when the prosecutor and he fell against a screen, and it was then that the knife went into his shoulder. He was knocked down, severely injured, and then given in charge; he had been imprisoned for thirty-two weeks. The Jury returned a verdict of not guilty, and he was discharged.”

Staffordshire Advertiser 20/6/1846

“An inquest was held on Thursday last, at the UNION MILL, Catchems Corner, in the parish of Sedgley, on the body of Joseph Biggs, about nine years of age, who, on the previous Tuesday, was killed by a large quantity of clod falling upon him whilst he was at work in an ironstone pit in that neighbourhood. Verdict, Accidental Death.”

Wolverhampton Chronicle 2/8/1848

“On Saturday last an inquest was held at the UNION MILL public house, Catchems Corner, before T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, on the body of Thomas Biggs, twenty-three years of age, who was at work in the hollows of a coal pit at the Parkfield Colliery, on the previous Wednesday week, when a large quantity of coal suddenly fell upon him from the roof. He was very much bruised and crushed on various parts of his body. After lingering until Thursday morning last, he expired from the injuries he had received. Verdict, Accidental Death.”

Wolverhampton Chronicle 31/10/1849

“On Tuesday an inquest was held before T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, at the sign of the UNION MILL, Catchems Corner, on the body of William Millington, a boy between eleven and twelve years old. The deceased was employed as a dan runner in a sandpit. On the previous Saturday his mother put him and his younger brother on a horse for the purpose of taking them to the pit. The horse, in going to the pit, suddenly fell, head over heels, and threw the deceased and his brother to the ground. The deceased was picked up in a state of insensibility by his father, and in a few hours afterwards died. Verdict, Accidental Death.”

“Staffordshire Winter Assizes.....

Daniel Kyte, 25, pump maker, and Josiah Jackson, 24, joiner, were indicted for uttering two forged notes, at Sedgley, on the 23rd of September. Mr. Hill prosecuted, and Mr. Kenealy appeared in defence.

Mr. Hill opened the case by stating the facts as deposed by the following witnesses.

Mr. Baker, UNION MILLS INN, Catchems Corner, proved that the two prisoners, with a third man, and John Wedge, called at his house, on the 23rd of September. A note (Macclesfield Bank) was given him by his servant, and he took the change into the bar, and offered it to Wedge, whom he knew, but Wedge pointed to Jackson. Witness gave Jackson the change, and Jackson wrote the name ‘Williams’ upon it. The note also bore the name of Wedge.

John Wedge, Catchems Corner, said he saw the two prisoners in the street on the afternoon of the 23rd of September, one of whom he knew personally, and they asked him to get change for a £5 note on a distant (Macclesfield) bank. They told him it was good, and he took it to the house of a grocer named Eadie, but Eadie refused to change it. Witness then went home, and the prisoners followed him, and Kyte asked him to go and have something to drink. He went with them to Mr. Tippers’s, the BULLS HEAD, and a third man, who now joined the prisoners, offered the note again, but Mr. Tippers refused to change it. They then went to Mr. Baker’s, the UNION MILLS public house, but they did not stay there many minutes. Witness and the two prisoners next went to a foot race, at Sedgley, and when they returned they went to the ROYAL OAK. While there, Jackson offered another note, but the landlord would not change it. The next place they visited was Pennington’s, the BRIDGE INN, going afterwards to Owen’s, the ROYAL OAK, again. On the way Jackson asked what sort of house Tippers’s was, and made inquiries about the ‘strong box.’ In consequence of other conversation witness asked what had become of the first note they showed him, and they told him they had ‘passed’ it at Baker’s. In the course of this conversation Jackson placed a second note in witness’s hands, and witness told him he should keep it till he ascertained that the first was a good one. When this was told to Kyte and the third man, Kyte threatened to kill him. Witness said that unless he killed him outright he should appear against him. Kyte, Jackson, and the other man then attacked witness, and he became insensible. When he recovered himself he found his money gone – about £30 or £40. They did not, however, take the note he had just received from Jackson. This note was subsequently given to the police.

Cross-examined by Mr. Kenealy: The robbery took place in the ROYAL OAK INN. They did not offer witness any money to change the note; they told him that if he wanted a sovereign out of it he could have it, but he took no notice of them. When the first note was presented at the BULLS HEAD INN it had witness’s name upon it; it had been written in order to assist him in passing it.

By the Judge: The third man joined the two prisoners after they had been to Tippers’s.

Thomas Pennington, Bridge Street, proved that early in the afternoon of the 23rd, the prisoner Jackson offered him what he represented to be a £5 note. He considered it to be a bad one, and he told Jackson he didn’t like the look of it. Wedge was with Jackson when this occurred, and they were afterwards joined by Kyte and another man.

Cross-examined by Mr. Kenealy: Wedge seemed as anxious to change the note as the other man; he said he wanted 10s out of it.

William Vickers, WHITE HART INN, Bilston Street, Wolverhampton, proved that on the morning of the 23rd September, the two prisoners and a third man called at his house. The third man showed several notes in a handkerchief, and the prisoners asked witness to change them. They told him that if he offered £12 for three of them, they thought the man would take it. He was a simple man, they said, and wanted to spend his money, and subsequently they told witness that this third man had got the notes from his ‘woman,’ who ‘took’ them from a farmer. He had no money in the house, and he gave them no change.

Superintendent M’Crea produced the two notes – the one passed to Mr. Baker, and the other retained by Wedge.

Detective-officer Stokes proved having apprehended the prisoners in Park Street, Birmingham. A third man, named Brown, was apprehended, but the Magistrates discharged him. The prisoners told him they were aware the police were after them, and they could have got away if they desired.

In defence Mr. Kenealy alleged that the two prisoners were the victims of the third man, who had succeeded in making his escape. He pointed to different parts of the evidence to support this view, and especially to that of the witness Vickers.

The Judge returned a verdict of guilty, and the prisoners were each sentenced to ten years’ penal servitude.”

“The members of the Jack and the Beanstalk Pantomime Company, which had pleased the habitués of the Grand Theatre, Wolverhampton, last week, and also the members of the Wild Australia Company, which had been engaged at the Empire Palace of Varieties, met with a rude shock just as they had left the borough on Sunday. They had ensconced themselves comfortably in corridor compartments of a special theatrical train which left the London and North-Western Station about noon. The four valuable bucking animals, which formed a feature of the performances by the Wild Australia Company were properly boxed, and formed part of the train, which, all told, consisted of about a dozen coaches.

A short stay was proposed to be made at Ettingshall Road to pick up the members of the Robinson Crusoe Pantomime Company which had been performing at Bilston during the week. The latter had taken their seats, and the guard, P. C. Cox, of Curzon Street, Birmingham, was on the platform shutting one or two of the doors. As he made his way to his van, preparatory to giving the signal to be off, a local train from Wolverhampton to Birmingham which had followed the special dashed into the latter and smashed the van which Cox was about to enter into atoms.....

The Wild Australia Company occupied the rear part of the train, and their members seemed to have suffered most. Miss Cleopatra, a snake charmer, had a gash over the right eye, and her sister, Miss Bonets, the champion rifle shot of Australia, received an injury to the side of the head. Both were attended to at the UNION MILL INN, directly opposite the station entrance One of the company’s musicians was the most seriously injured. He was hurled from one side of the compartment to the other, and received injuries to his head which stunned him for the time being. He was carried from the carriage on one of the cushions to the hostelry referred to, and was attended later in the day by Dr. A. J. Bulger, who informed our representative that the man had no bones broke, and that he was suffering from injury to the head and shock, but would no doubt be fit to travel that night.....”

“Thomas Mason, licensee of the UNION MILL INN, Ettingshall, was summoned for using a room for dancing without having a license; and Robert Henry Horton, Hughes Street, and Alfred Ernest Bugg, of Wanderers Avenue, Wolverhampton, were charged with aiding and abetting. Mr. Stewart appeared for Mason.

PC Donnellan said that acting on instructions he visited Mason’s house on several occasions in June, and there heard music and dancing. On his first visit he asked Mason if he had a license, and he said he had not. Witness told Mason that he had better communicate with his firm about it. The dancing continued on various dates, but there had been no application for a license. Witness also asked Horton if he had a license, and he said he had not, but that he and Bugg had rented the room at 10s per week, and charged people 1s each to go into the room. Cross-examined by Mr. Stewart, witness said Mason had always conducted the house itself in a very satisfactory way.

PS Maddox corroborated the other officer's evidence.

Mason, giving evidence on his own behalf, said he had been at the house nearly two years. He was under the impression that it was not necessary for him to have a license for dancing or he would have taken one out. In answer to Supt. Higgs, Mason admitted that he made a great mistake in not consulting his firm when advised to do so by PC Donnellan.

Horton and Bugg said they simply rented the room from Mason, and thought that all the regulations had been complied with.

Mr. Stewart said this was a case of much importance to all licensees in the district, because of the misunderstanding which appeared to exist with regard to music and dancing licenses. The proceedings had been taken under a very old Act, the provisions of which could be either adopted or ignored in respective petty sessional divisions. These provisions had been adopted so far as Bilston and Coseley were concerned, but had not been adopted at Sedgley. Licensees at Sedgley could keep rooms open for music and dancing all night long without infringing the regulations. If Mason's house had been in Sedgley about 150 yards from where it was, he could not have had this charge made against him.

The Chairman said that if Mason had taken the advice of the constable in the first instance nothing more might have been heard in the matter, but he seemed to have made no inquiries, and took the risk. He would be fined 10s and costs. The other defendants would each have to pay 5s 6d costs."

"The adjourned Licensing Sessions for the Bilston Division were held yesterday.....

Mr. Harris (Messrs. Tildesley and Harris) applied on behalf of Helen Lloyd for a music and dancing license for the UNION MILL INN, Ettingshall. The room it was proposed to use, he said, was the club room. The applicant had several large clubs meeting at the house, and had had many applications for the facilities she was now asking for. It was felt that it would be a distinct advantage to the people coming to the house if the license was granted.

The applicant stated that the premises were used for supper, smoking concerts, and presentations.

In answer to Supt. Higgs she said the room was on the first storey. There was one staircase only. This was of wood and had two turnings. She thought that in case of panic the staircase would be a safe exit.

Mr. Myatt, on behalf of the owners of the house, said he was willing to provide an emergency exit whenever Supt. Higgs wished it. The house was quite a modern one, and on the point of whether the room was of sufficient strength, he expressed willingness to have the room examined by an experienced architect who should send the magistrates a certificate.

The Justices granted the application conditional upon a second exit being provided and the receipt of an architect's certificate stating that the building was perfectly safe for the purposes required."

Two policemen stated that shortly after one o'clock on Saturday morning last they found the landlord and four men playing at cards in the smoke room. Mr. Sheldon, for the defence, called several witnesses to prove that although the policemen heard a conversation about cards yet that no game was actually played. The Bench dismissed the case."

"Yesterday, at Wolverhampton Police Court, before Mr. I. Spooner, a powerful-looking man, named John Bumford, a publican, of Batemans Hill, Sedgley, was charged with violently assaulting his wife, Mary Ann Bumford. Mr. Turner prosecuted and Mr. Langman defended.

The complainant, when about to be sworn, begged that the prisoner might be allowed to have his liberty and be forgiven.

Mr. Spooner said he would think about that when he had heard the evidence.

The complainant did not seem disposed to give any evidence against the prisoner, and when Mr. Turner put questions to her, she, instead of answering them, maintained that nearly every couple had quarrels at times. On Monday morning she used abusive language to her husband, and they had a quarrel, but the prisoner only hit her on the head with his fist, and if they would only forgive him that time she would prosecute him to the utmost if he did the same again.

Mr. Spooner said that unless she gave evidence she would have to go to prison, and it was for him to say whether the prisoner was to be forgiven or not. Mr. Spooner, who knew something of the case on the day previous at Bilston, then put some questions to the complainant, from which it was gathered that on Monday morning she went to the Bilston station with her head plaistered up, and asked for protection. She said she had two wounds on her head and one on her hand, and that these were caused by the knuckles of the prisoner's fist.

Police-sergeant Goodall stated that on Monday morning about half-past nine the complainant came to the station with her head plaistered up, and asked for protection and advice. Blood was flowing down her face. There were two wounds on her head, and one on her hand. He also stated that when he went and served the summons personally at the prisoner's house he had only got a few yards from the door when he heard the complainant calling him back again. He went back and found the prisoner going towards the complainant; some one went between them to separate them, and the prisoner said he would put the complainant out of the house. The officer was obliged to interfere to keep the peace.

Mr. Spooner said a public complaint was made to him on Tuesday, and he instantly issued a warrant for the apprehension of the prisoner. One could hardly imagine the brutal conduct of which the prisoner was alleged to have been guilty. He should therefore remand the prisoner for a week for inquiries to be made into his past conduct.

On Mr. Langman applying for bail to be allowed, Mr. Spooner said he would not allow it in that case under any circumstances; the prisoner had been guilty of the most brutal and unmanly conduct."

"At Wolverhampton Police Court, yesterday, before Stipendiary Magistrate, Mr. Isaac Spooner, the man John Bumford, publican, of Batemans Hill, Sedgley, was brought up on remand, charged with violently assaulting his wife Mary Ann, on the morning of the 25th of July.....

No additional evidence was taken yesterday, and Mr. Spooner, in addressing the prisoner said, 'You have been convicted upon very clear evidence before me, reluctant although your wife was in giving her evidence, of cruelly beating her – beating her so badly that when she appeared at the Police Office her wounds were visible then, clearly showing the violence of the assault. A brutal man like that must look for no mercy. The case has no palliation. I will consider your wife's prayer for you, but I will inflict such a punishment upon you that I hope will deter you and all like you from assaulting your wives. The sentence of this Court is that you be imprisoned in the gaol of this county for three months with hard labour, and further, that you find two good sureties in £20 each to keep the peace for six months after the expiration of the three months hard labour.' The prisoner was then removed from the Court."

“Yesterday, at Bilston Police Court, before I. Spooner, Esq, John Bumford, licensed victualler, Westley Street, was summoned on a charge of assaulting his wife. Mr. Fellows appeared on behalf of the complainant.

From the evidence given it appeared that the defendant has been twice married, and was some years ago committed to prison for three months for assaulting his first wife. The complainant had been married to him about two years, and she was in the habit of keeping a small shop in the same street. At about twelve o'clock on the night of Saturday, the 13th inst, she returned home, after closing the shop at about twelve o'clock, and the defendant, after accusing her of behaving coldly towards some relatives of his, took up a quart pot, and, holding it over her head, threatened to split her skull with it. He struck her with his fist, and gave her several severe kicks in the thigh, and, according to the woman's statement, he ill-used her in a most brutal manner.

A servant girl corroborated her mistress's evidence in every particular.

In reply to the charge, the defendant denied having been so violent as described, and stated that she only wished the defendant to be bound over in sureties to keep the peace towards her; but Mr. Spooner, in reply, said it was impossible for him to comply with that request. The defendant had been already sentenced to three months imprisonment for assaulting a former wife, and he should have thought that punishment would have prevented him from assaulting another. Had it not been for the recommendation of his wife he should most certainly have sentenced him to six months imprisonment, without the option of a fine; but, in consequence of what she had said, he should not do so. These cases of assaulting women were, he was sorry to say, too frequent in this neighbourhood; but he had hoped that a check had been put to them. They seemed, however, to be showing up again now, and if he was to be content with simply carrying out the suggestion of the complainant he should be unfit to sit as a magistrate upon the bench. He should impose a fine of £10 and costs, or four months imprisonment, and also order the defendant to find two sureties in £25 each to keep the peace towards his wife for twelve months. His was a case in which no possible mercy could be shown, and the only difficulty was for him (Mr. Spooner) to repress his indignation.

The defendant, who was half intoxicated, paid the money, and also found the necessary sureties.”

"Yesterday afternoon, and inquest was held at the VICTORIA INN, Bradley, on the body of a newly-born male child, that had been found, at half-past five on the previous afternoon, floating in the canal, wrapped in flannel and paper. Women living near to the canal suspected that the mother was a young woman who had just passed along the waterside, and they followed and led her back to the VICTORIA INN, whither the child had been carried. She proved to be Maria Hodey, twenty-five years of age, and up to Wednesday night or Thursday morning was a servant at the Bulls Head Inn, Handsworth. The child, she said, was hers, and it had been born just before at the Soho Railway Station. This being so, she was at once placed under proper care.

During the inquest, William G. Watmore, the furnaceman who found the body in the water, said that when he put his hand under the head to give the body to a woman he observed that the mouth opened twice. This, the Coroner remarked, might have arisen from the way in which the body was moved.

Mr. S. G. Gilbert, surgeon, who has charge of the mother, gave medical testimony confirmatory of her statement as to the maternity of the child; and the inquest was adjourned till Tuesday next, for a post mortem examination to demonstrate the real cause of death."

"Yesterday the inquest was concluded before Mr. Phillips, at Bradley, on the body of a newly-born male child, found on the 11th inst in the canal there under circumstances already reported.

Mrs. Emma Perks, the landlady of the Bulls Head Inn, Handsworth, deposed that Maria Hadey, the mother of the child, had been servant at her house four years, and had so conducted herself that she could 'give her a character to go the world over.' On the morning of the 11th inst Hady asked leave to go out two hours, as she had received a letter from her mother, who lived at Wednesbury. The permission was granted, and the girl left.

The testimony of George H. Macelwin, booking clerk at the Soho Station, and of Police-constable Parsons, who arrested Hadey, went to confirm her statement as to her having travelled from the Soho station, and as to the birth having taken place there.

Mr. S. G. Gilbert, surgeon, who made the post mortem examination, deposed that the child died from suffocation, occasioned most likely during self-delivery. The child was not alive when it was put into the canal.

The jury found that the deceased was the child of Maria Hadley, and that it had been found in the canal; that it had only partially respired, and had died from suffocation; but whether such resulted at the birth or otherwise the jury could not say.

The Coroner expressed his concurrence with the verdict, and said that he was glad that the enquiry had had such a termination."

"Elizabeth Roberts, VICTORIA INN, Bradley, was summoned for permitting gaming in her house on the 30th January.

Police-constable Newman stated on the night in question about 9.15, he entered the house of the defendant, and in one of the rooms saw a number of men playing at bagatelle. One man won 3d which was put on the table, and a pint of ale was called for. The waitress came in and asked witness to go into the bar. He refused, and the lights were then put out in the room, the men going to the bar for their ale.

No other witness was called, and Mr. Barrow, who appeared for the defendant, said he had no remark to make upon the evidence.

Mr. Spooner, said that though the evidence was strong, the case was not proved. The affair would, however, be remembered against the defendant if she again came before the Court.

Mr. Barrow said that had the case had been fully heard, he could have proved that the defendant was not guilty of an offence, but that she did not know Newman was a constable, he being in plain clothes when he visited her house, and that the gas was simply put out because it was suspected that the men in the bagatelle-room were gambling.

Mr. Spooner said that if a charge of the kind was brought against the defendant again, he should inflict the full penalty, and he advised her to take warning."

Elizabeth Roberts married Henry Fellows in the 2nd quarter of 1875.

“About Wednesday afternoon, the dead body of Samuel Percy Greensill, of 21, Hall Street, Bradley, was discovered in a cistern, in the floor of a brewhouse at the back of the VICTORIA INN, Wesley Street. The infant, who was two years of age, went on a visit to his grand-mother in the same street, on Tuesday afternoon, and afterwards was seen playing about the premises of the VICTORIA INN. On Tuesday night, the child did not return home, and search was made for it. On Wednesday morning, a boatman, noticing that the cover was removed from the cistern, a further search was made with the result above stated. An inquest will be held today.”

“On Saturday afternoon, an enquiry was opened before Mr. W. H. Phillips, district coroner, at the ROYAL OAK INN, Bradley, concerning the death of Samuel Percy Greensill, who was found dead in a cistern at the VICTORIA INN, on the previous Wednesday.

Mary Greensill, wife of Author William Greensill, furnaceman, of 21, Hall Street, Bradley, deposed that she was the mother of the deceased, who was two years ten months old. She sent him, along with another little boy, to his grand-mother's, on Wednesday morning, and did not see him alive again.

Samuel Busby, manager of the VICTORIA INN, said he knew the deceased, and saw him in the yard of the VICTORIA INN, along with several other children, at three minutes to one. At one o'clock he called his own children in to dinner, and the deceased, along with two or three children, went up the yard. On Tuesday morning, the lid of the cistern, which consisted of a flag, was off. He put it on himself shortly after two o'clock.

Harriet Greensill said she was the grand-mother of the deceased. On Tuesday, at half-past one, she saw the child playing in the street with other children. He had been at her house during the morning, and when he was wanted to go to school in the afternoon, he could not be found.

A verdict of Accidental Death was returned, the coroner adding a recommendation that the cistern should be covered.”

Darlaston Weekly Times 17/1/1885

“On Tuesday, an inquest was held at the VICTORIA INN, Bradley, by Mr. W. H. Phillips, as to the cause of death of a child, seven weeks old, the son of an ironworker named William Cooper. Birmingham Daily Post 8/12/1888

“Yesterday, at the VICTORIA INN, Wesley Street, Bradley, Mr. W. H. Phillips (district coroner) held an adjourned enquiry into the circumstances attending the death of John Bumford (60), late of Wesley Street, Bradley. Mr. R. Tildesley represented the deceased's stepson.

Mr. John Martin, surgeon, Hall Street, detailed the result of a post mortem examination which he had made of the body. Death, he found, was the result of inflammation of the lungs, consequent of the fracture of the fifth rib, which had penetrated the lung. All the internal organs were congested. In answer to the Coroner, he said that there was a large bruise on the side. In reply to Mr. Tildesley, witness said that he did not think it probable, although it was possible, that these injuries were occasioned by a fall downstairs. All the other injuries might have been so caused. It would have needed a considerable amount of violence to produce the fracture.

George Fieldhouse, works manger, living in the next house to that occupied by the deceased, said that somewhat after nine on the evening of Sunday, the 25th ult, he heard the noise of a scuffle in Bumford's back kitchen, and the voices of men and a woman. Witness went outside, and heard a voice, like that of Bumford, say, 'Don't kick me any more Tom.' A woman screamed out, 'Loose the brush, and he will leave you alone.' In cross-examination, witness said that he heard no sound on the stairs.

Ann Robins, landlady of the VICTORIA INN, that when Bumford came to their house on the evening of November 25, Tennant, who was rather the worse for beer, walked out. The two men did not in her hearing exchange words. John Bumford, ironworker, son of the deceased, said that on returning home on the 25th ult he found his father ill in bed, and he went for a doctor. He had never before known Tennant assault the deceased, nor had he heard him threaten him. A few weeks ago the Tennants gave his father £5 out of some money recieved for some property. Mr. Tildesley stated that this witness had been influenced by relatives to induce him to give false evidence. The Coroner replied that the matter was one for the police.

Inspector Harrison said that the police had no more evidence to offer, and he did not think that the further adjournment of the enquiry would produce any further testimony. He thought some people were holding back still.

Mr. Tildesley called Joseph Tennant, another step-son of the deceased. He deposed that he saw Bumford on the nigh referred to. Deceased was lying at the foot of the stairs, and in answer to witness's enquiry said that he had fallen down them.

A verdict of Manslaughter against Thomas Tennant was returned.

At the Bilston Police Court, yesterday, Thomas Tennant, shearer, of Wesley Street, was charged, on remand, with unlawfully and maliciously doing grievous bodily harm to his step-father, John Bumford (65).

Inspector Harrison pointed out that the prosecutor had died since the date of the previous remand, and asked that the case might be further adjourned. Mr. R. Tildesley said he did not oppose the application, and prisoner was remanded until today."

"Staffordshire Winter Assizes.....

Thomas Tennant (33), shearer, was indicted for the manslaughter of John Bumford, at Bradley, near Bilston, on November 25. Mr. Boddam prosecuted, and Mr. Plumptre defended.

According to the learned counsel's opening it appeared that deceased made a statement in which he attributed his injuries to falling downstairs. His Lordship pointed out that the medical testimony was not such as to negative that statement, and the jury could not be expected to convict if there was a reasonable probability that the old man met with his death otherwise than at the prisoner's hands. He therefore directed the jury to acquit the prisoner, which was done, and he was discharged."

"James Tennant, ironworker, Bradley, was charged with cruelty to a parrot. Mr. Turton (Wolverhampton) prosecuted on behalf of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and Mr. Tildesley was for the defence. The accused, whilst drinking in the VICTORIA INN, Bradley, took a red-hot poker from the fire and applied it to the breast and legs of a green parrot, which was in the room in a cage, remarking that he would make the bird shift and talk. Some of the feathers were burnt off and the flesh blistered, and other feathers were singed. The Stipendiary said it was a deliberately cruel act, for which there was no excuse. The defendant would be sent to prison for one month."

“A shocking accident occurred on Tuesday night at the well-known sheet-iron works of Messrs. Tupper and Sons, Batmans Hill, Bilston. While work was in full swing one of the boilers, which was being used for the first time, exploded, and the broken metal was driven with tremendous force in all directions, while boiling water was showered on all who were near. Two men were killed almost instantaneously, and eleven others were seriously injured, several of them so badly that they are not expected to survive. They are all in the Wolverhampton Infirmary. At the time of the accident the night men only were working, and four mills only were in operation. This was fortunate, for had the full plant been working the havoc would have been much greater. Much damage was caused by the explosion to surrounding property.”

“Yesterday, at the VICTORIA INN, Bradley, Mr. T. A. Stokes held an adjourned inquest respecting the death of James Warren (41), mill foreman, Wesley Street, Bradley, and Henry Southall (39), engine driver, Stoke Street, Daisy Bank, which occurred at Batmans Hill Works. No evidence was taken, and the inquiry was formally adjourned till March 4.”

Eastern Daily Press 5/3/1903

“The inquest on two of the four men killed in the boiler explosion at Messrs. Tupper and Company’s iron and steel works, Bilston, on January 20th, was concluded yesterday. In the evidence it was stated that Mr. Francis Hill, inspector of the Scottish Boiler Insurance Company, had passed the boiler as fit for work, but upon being started it exploded. The force of the explosion blew down a chimney stack, killing two men, whose deaths were being investigated. The Board of Trade Inspector said the tube of the boiler was practically worn out, and that this was the cause of the explosion. A verdict of Accidental Death was returned, the Coroner censuring Hill, who, he said, had been guilty of gross, but not criminal, negligence.”

"The first annual outing in connection with the Social Club held at the STORES INN, Bradley (Mrs. O'Brien), took place on Saturday afternoon, and was a great success. The party was conveyed by char-a-banc to Bridgnorth. Although the weather was unpropitious at the start, it cleared up beautifully during the latter part of the day. After a pleasant ride, a stop was made at Trysull, where an alfresco lunch was partaken of. The destination was reached at 4.30, and a substantial tea was enjoyed at the George Hotel. At the conclusion of the repast, Mr. V. Tunnicliffe proposed, and Mr. H. Morris seconded, a vote of thanks to Mr. Griffiths (proprietor), for his commendable catering, alluding felicitously to the satisfaction he had given. The host suitably responded, and thanked them for their kind expressions. The visitors were subsequently photographed outside the hotel. A convivial hour was spent, songs being creditably contributed by Messrs. W. Spittle, T. Thompson, R. Piper, and H. Taylor, whose items received quite an ovation. Mr. J. Downs discharged efficiently the dual duties of soloist and accompanist. The top town received a visit, and a pleasant stroll was taken round the river. After extracting as much pleasure as possible during their limited stay, a start was made for home, which was reached at 9.30, where harmony was again indulged in by members of the Social. The outing, which was of a typical Black Country character was a signal success from every standpoint."

"Staffordshire Quarter Sessions.....

A Bilston steelworker, Jock Storrar Lowe (36), pleaded guilty to 19 charges of fraudulently converting to his own use sums totalling £101 belonging to the crib and darts club of the VICTORIA INN, Wesley Street, Bilston, of which he was treasurer between December, 1947, and June this year.

Mr. Field Hunt, for the prosecution, said when the payment of the club money became due during the summer there should have been £4 for each of the club's 26 members, but there was nothing. When interviewed by the police Lowe said he had spent the money and did not know where it had gone. He kept the money with his own and must have been living above his means.

On accused's behalf, Mr. D. R. Ellison said the offences arose through Lowe not having a good business head and getting the club's money mixed up with own.

Lowe was bound over to appear for sentence at the Easter Sessions and ordered to make restitution."

Bilston & Willenhall Times 28/2/1925

“Much interest has been taken for some months in the question of whether a licensed house should be erected on the Green Lanes estate, where council houses stand. Some of the residents are in favour, others are not. Notices, however, have been published of the intention of Messrs. Butler and Co. Ltd., to apply at the adjourned Licensing Sessions at Bilston on March 6th for the transfer of the license of the WELLINGTON INN, Price Street, Bilston to a house and premises proposed to be erected at Villiers Square, Villiers Avenue, which is part of the Green Lanes estate. Local temperance workers are likely to oppose the application.”

Bilston & Willenhall Times 11/4/1925

“The Staffordshire County Licensing Committee met at Stafford on Saturday, when an application was made by Cyril Tom Wynn, brewer’s traveller, on behalf of Messrs. Butler and Co., for provisional grant of removal of the license of the WELLINGTON INN, Price Street, Bilston, to new premises to be erected in Villiers Square, Bilston, to be known as the VILLIERS ARMS.

Mr. F. O. Langley, who appeared in support of the application, said that confirmation of the action of the Bilston Justices in agreeing to the proposal was sought. He contended that Bilston, with a population of 30,000, was entitled to a new hotel, and it would be located in a new suburb, which was rapidly growing with estate development. There was only one bedroom in the present hotel accommodation in the town. In addition to the WELLINGTON INN, the brewery company was prepared to give up a second licensed house, the name of which would be given to the committee if the application was granted.

Evidence was given in support of the application by Mr. W. J. Nash, draper, of Bilston, who said it was absolutely necessary that a hotel with bed room accommodation should be provided in Bilston. Councillor Beech (chairman) and other members of the Bilston Urban District Council also supported the application.

Mr. A. V. Haydn (Walsall) opposed on behalf of the Bilston Temperance Trust, and said those who instructed him were asked to do so by members of the working class. The Trust was not actuated by any spirit of awkwardness or vindictiveness, but they felt that the real road to progress in licensing matters lay along the road of elimination rather than repetition. He urged that the policy of elimination should be pursued, and that one license should not be merely taken from a congested area and removed to a purely residential district which was just being opened up. Mr. Haydn called no witnesses, but said a petition against the application had been signed by 485 persons over the age of 18. The committee unanimously decided to pass the application."

Dudley Chronicle 7/10/1926

"At a Transfer Sessions at the Bilston Police Court on Friday.....

Mr. C. N. Wright made an application with regard to the VILLIERS HOTEL on the Green Lanes Estate. He mentioned that the work of building the hotel had been delayed through shortage of material. The license was transferred from the WELLINGTON, Price Street, on 3rd December 1926.

"Two charges of breaking into the VILLIERS ARMS HOTEL, Bilston, were preferred at Bilston yesterday against Bertram George William Brown (23). It was alleged that Brown entered the hotel by a lavatory window between 11.50pm on June 3 and 10am on June 4, and stole £4 19s 6d, spirits and cigarettes, and again between June 7 and 8, when money was taken from a collecting box.

In a statement Brown had said that he and his girl had arranged to get married last Saturday. They had a quarrel and, to pacify her, he told her he had money and would pay it on some furniture. He had no money. That worried him and he could not sleep. He went for a walk, and, seeing the window at the VILLIERS ARMS open, he got in and took the money out of the till.

“A Black Country teenager suffered burns to his arms and face when his flat was rocked by a gas explosion. Colin Laban, aged 18, was with a friend in his seventh floor Bilston flat trying to light a gas stove when the blast tore through the kitchen. Unemployed Colin was hit by a sheet of flame, and splinters of glass from a shattered window were sent flying through the air. Colin, of Winston Churchill Court, Park View Road, Bilston, was taken to Sandwell District General Hospital. He was treated for burns to his face and arms before being allowed home. His friend, Steven Wells, aged 15, of the VILLIERS ARMS, Villiers Square, Bilston, escaped unhurt. Colin said, ‘I only moved into the flat two weeks ago and Steven was helping me to fit a gas bottle to the kitchen stove. I was kneeling on the floor putting some food away in a cupboard when suddenly there were flames everywhere. I tried to run out but the flames engulfed me and I could not see the door.’ Steven said, ‘It seems we had not screwed down the valve properly and the gas had been leaking. I lit a match because I thought the gas from the leaking cylinder had gone out of the room when suddenly it blew up in front of me.’”

“Two masked raiders armed with a sledgehammer and a knife burst into the VILLIERS pub in Bilston, Wolverhampton, and locked up the licensee before fleeing with cash. A police spokesman said the 46-year-old landlord was forced at knifepoint to open the safe by the raiders who helped themselves to £700. The robbers then locked the licensee in an office. The landlord, who has not been named, eventually managed to kick open the office door and raised the alarm.”

“A wooden walkway linking the toilets to the main building of a Bilston pub was severely damaged when flames spread from a car which was set on fire early today. The Montego was parked outside the VILLIERS ARMS, in Villiers Square, when arsonists struck shortly before 2am. Flames spread to a walkway, causing heavy smoke-logging to the downstairs of the pub.....”

It was locally listed in 2009.

“A man was stabbed today following an argument involving a group of youths at a pub in Bilston. The victim was attacked close to the VILLIERS ARMS, on Villiers Square, just before 3am. The scene was still cordoned off this afternoon as police revealed one man had been arrested in connection with the trouble.

Inspector Bryan Jones, of Wednesfield police, is appealing for witnesses. He said, ‘There was an argument inside the pub with a group of youths. Eight to ten people were moved outside and somebody has been assaulted on a car park. He’s currently in New Cross Hospital with an injury to his abdomen.’ He said it was not clear if the victim had been in the pub prior to the attack.

Wayne Dickens, manager of the VILLIERS ARMS, said, ‘There must have been some people hanging around outside at that time but we had been closed since 1.30am, which is the end of our licence on a Friday. I was woken up by the sirens and the flashing lights of the police cars but by that stage all the people involved would have run away. There was no trouble in the pub that we were aware of.’”

“A pub at the scene of a stabbing which left a man close to death was facing a security clampdown by police today. The VILLIERS ARMS in Bilston could face restrictions on its opening hours or even closure. It comes after police compiled a dossier of violence, including the attack on the 28-year-old in the street outside. Police have also criticised the management of the pub and said ‘little or no help’ had been offered to police after violence had flared. It now wants the licence reviewed. Residents, who are often frightened to report trouble, say drinkers cause a nuisance when they leave the Villiers Square pub.

In a report to council chiefs, Wednesfield licensing officer Michael Pearce said, ‘There have been several incidents of drunk behaviour, fighting and two incidents of substantial disorder at the premises. On one occasion the victim almost died after being stabbed. There have been numerous complaints of nuisance, people urinating in the street, shouting and swearing in the early hours of the morning. The manager, Wayne Dicken, has an attitude of ‘If it’s happened outside it is not my problem.’ It is the belief of the police that he has also continued licensing activities outside his permitted times, which he will dispute.’

As well as the stabbing, which happened in January, police were called to New Cross Hospital’s A&E department at 4am on February 22 where a fight had broken out. Three men and a woman were found with injuries they had received at the pub.

Vicky Averis, a spokeswoman for Enterprise Inns, the pub operator which owns the VILLIERS ARMs, said, ‘If the licensing sub-committee decide the pub has to close then we hope it will only be temporarily. We are working with the relevant authorities and it is our intention to keep the pub open.’”

It was closed in June 2009, after a police drugs raid, and a man was attacked outside, in January 2009. It reopened in 2010.

“Plans to transform the sites of two crime-hit Wolverhampton pubs into housing estates have been given the green light. The fire-ravaged BUSHBURY ARMS in Showell Circus is to be given a new lease of life along with the VILLIERS ARMS in Bilston, where a man was stabbed six years ago. Both are closed down with no signs of re-opening as pubs. Following approval at a Wolverhampton City Council planning meeting on Tuesday, the BUSHBURY ARMS will change to a development comprising 24 homes and apartments and the VILLIERS will become 13 apartments with two-semi-detached houses behind....”

It was converted into housing. [2017]

Birmingham Daily Mail 4/3/1874

“This morning the inquest on the body of Ellen Davis, aged 67, who had been found murdered in her house at Ettingshall Lane, near Wolverhampton, was opened by Mr. Phillips, coroner.

Richard Millington, landlord of the VINE INN, John Street, New Village, said deceased came to his house on Monday night for a pint of ale, and tendered in payment half-a-crown, taking away the change in her hand. Witness’s wife and daughter were the only persons besides himself in the bar at the time. Deceased did not enter the tap-room.....

Superintendent McCrea said he had searched the clothes of the deceased, and had found in a dress-pocket 2s 4½d, the money received in change from Millington.....”

[For further on this inquest see under BRIDGE, Ettingshall Road.]

Lichfield Mercury 22/10/1880

“On Friday night a man named William Brookes, twenty years of age, of John Street, New Village, met with a singular fatal accident at the Manor Iron and Tin Plate Works of Mr. Stephen Thompson, Spring Vale, Bilston. About six o’clock he came out of the shop in which he was engaged to cool himself, and lay down upon the edge of a large square iron tank used for annealing purposes, which was reared up against a wall. Another workman named Samuel Screen was sitting on one end of the tank at the time, and from the extra weight of Brookes or some other cause the tank fell forward and on to Brookes, who died immediately from a fractured skull. Screen managed to step on one side, or he must have been seriously injured.

On Monday afternoon Mr. W. H. Phillips (District Coroner) held an inquiry at the VINE INN, New Village, Coseley, relative to the death of William Brookes.

Samuel Screen, a tin plate worker at the Manor Works, deposed that after finishing their work on Friday night he and the deceased went and sat on the edge of an annealing pot which was kept in the yard on a raised platform. The weight of the deceased caused the pot to fall off the platform, and he was thrown against one of the sides of the pot with such force as to fracture his skull in a shocking manner. When the pot was falling witness jumped off, and narrowly escaped being crushed to death. In reply to the Coroner, the witness stated that the pot was 18cwt. Neither he nor the deceased had any business in the pot, and, in fact, only had themselves to blame for the accident.

"At the adjourned inquest at Darlaston yesterday on George Edwin Beebee, aged 54, a roll turner, of 128, Glover Street, West Bromwich, whose body was recovered from a marlhole at Darlaston Road, Moxley, on Tuesday of last week, witnesses stated that they had never heard the man threaten suicide. At the previous sitting Beebee's identity had not been established, and Dr. L. Lowe stated that after making a post mortem examination he had come to the conclusion that the man was not drowned. The man had obviously had an illness in the heart and the lungs and his condition was such that added shock, such as falling into water, might cause sudden death.

Yesterday John William Beebee, licensed victualler, of 34, John Street, Ettingshall, Bilston, said his brother had been out of work since March last year and had been ill since Christmas. He did not, however, appear to be depressed. Inspector Heath, of Darlaston, said no one had ever heard deceased say he was going to commit suicide.

The Coroner said the verdict would be that deceased died of shock due to sudden immersion in water at a time when he was suffering from a disease of the heart and also the lungs, and that there was no evidence to show how he got into the water."

“On Saturday night last, a quarrel took place at the VINE INN, Bilston, amongst a number of working men who were drinking there, when one of the party, of the name of Smith, succeeded in getting upon the floor a young man named Lowe, and in the most savage manner completely bit off his nose, the modern Crim-Tartar immediately making his escape. The injured party, accompanied by some friends, went to the residence of the nearest surgeon, where the denuded parts were dressed by his assistant, evidently to the satisfaction of all parties. Lowe, however, on his returning home, began to reflect upon the unpicturesque effect which a countenance bereft of the nasal appendage would produce, and he accordingly determined to have it remedied by any and every means possible. On a consultation with his friends, the idea occurred to them that all would be well if they could only restore to its original post of honour the missing remains of what was once considered by the owner to be a very respectable nose, although it was not stated whether the original nose was hooked, or hatchet, or whether it belonged to the snub, the pug, or the turned-up family. Accordingly they returned to the scene of action at the VINE, and after searching for nearly an hour, they at length discovered the object of their wishes lying in a dark corner of the room, begrimed with dirt. Having secured their prize, the party set off to a surgeon of the town, to whom they stated the case, and who very carefully united the parts together, and in a manner which completely restored the main element of facial beauty to its former shape and position, and a happy union of parts having ensued, the young man appears little the worse of his singular misfortune.”

[This was reported nationally.]

“Our readers may remember a case that occurred in June, 1847, in which a man named Thomas Lowe had a large portion of his nose bitten off while fighting with a collier named Edward Smith, at the VINE public house, Market Place, Bilston. Smith absconded at the time and went to Scotland, but subsequently found his way into the Potteries, where he was apprehended a few days ago. He was brought before J. Leigh, Esq, at the Public Office, Wolverhampton, on Friday last.

It appeared from the statement of the complainant that on the evening in question two persons were in conversation at the public house, when Smith came in ‘drunk and disorderly,’ and made some offensive remarks towards one of the two individuals, whom he ultimately seized by the collar of his coat, and said he had a good mind to knock his brains out. Lowe interfered, upon which Smith struck him twice, a scuffle ensued, and Lowe and Smith fought. Smith went out, but ultimately returned with some of his friends, when the scuffle was renewed, and defendant then bit clean off a large portion of the side of Lowe’s nose. Lowe also stated that he was attended by Mr. Hancox, surgeon, and was unable to work for fifteen days afterwards. He was obliged still to wear a plaster on his nose.

Mr. Leigh told defendant that he should fine him £5 for the assault, but if he paid complainant £4 as compensation he would reduce the fine to 1s. In default of paying either the fine or the compensation he would be committed for two months. The defendant and his friends have since given security for payment of £4, and he has therefore been discharged.”

“The anniversary of the No.4 Lodge of Good Fellows was held in a large and commodious pavilion at the back of the VINE INN, Bilston, which has been recently erected, when upwards of three hundred of the members sat down to an excellent and substantial dinner, which was served up in a manner that did credit to the host. The chair was occupied by the Rev. H. S. Fletcher, who spoke at some length on the benefits of such societies as that, the anniversary of which they were now holding. Various of the members entered into details regarding the prosperous condition of the lodge, and the singing of several of those present added materially to the enjoyment of the evening.”

“On Wednesday morning last Joseph Holland, a miner, about 31 years of age, was killed instantaneously whilst at work in a pit near Stokes’s engine on the Willenhall Road, near Bilston, by a fall of coal, from which he received many injuries. On the coal being removed, it was found that he had several cuts upon his head, that his neck was broken, and that he was quite dead. The coal was removed from his person in the course of a few minutes after he was discovered.

At an inquest held on Thursday, at the VINE, Bilston, before T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, Joseph Cox, a miner, proved the facts of the case, and stated that the pit was carefully worked, and every protection afforded the workmen that was necessary.

The jury gave a verdict of Accidental Death.”

“The anniversary of Lodge No.4 of the Good Fellows, held at the house of Mr. T. Howl, the VINE INN, Bilston, was celebrated on Tuesday last, when about three hundred members sat down to dinner in a large and commodious building erected last year for the purpose, at the back of the VINE. After partaking of a substantial and excellent dinner (and in doing which, by the bye, those present testified, in an unmistakable manner, their approval of the catering of the host and hostess).....

From the statement of the pecuniary affairs of the lodge, it appeared that money paid during the year to ‘standing’ sick members amounted to £76 6s; to the casually sick, £120 4s 6d; and the money paid for funerals amounted to £69. The contributions amounted to £327 4s 5d, and the rents to £56 16s 10d.

Toasts were given in the course of the evening, including that of the healths of the surgeons of the lodge, Mr. Edward Best and Mr. Norris Best.

The singing of several of the members of the choir of St. Leonard’s added materially to the enjoyment of this year’s anniversary, which was kept up till about eleven o’clock with the utmost harmony and good feeling.”

Staffordshire Advertiser 18/8/1849

“A man of the name of Wood was charged by Jane Pickles, wife of Stephen Pickles, a travelling comedian, with assaulting her. The complainant stated that her husband and herself had a show exhibiting in the Market Place, Bilston; that the defendant Wood was in their employ as a tragedian; that on Tuesday, the 31st of July, they went into the VINE INN, after their night’s performance, when a quarrel ensued, and Wood tore her hair and very much abused her.

Wood said in defence that Mrs. Pickles struck him, and that he did not strike her, and having called disinterested witnesses in support of this defence, the case was dismissed.”

Both the charges were proved by Mr. Sergeant, supervisor of excise, and the mitigated penalties of £12 10s and £5 were inflicted, the magistrates intimating an intention to recommend a further mitigation by the Board of Inland Revenue.”

“Movement for the Relief of the Poor. The committee appointed at the public meeting, on the 5th instant, assembled at the Commissioners Office on Saturday last. There were present Mr. Eldridge (chairman), and Messrs. Bew, Gray, M'Mahon, &c. It was stated that bread and soup would be distributed to the unemployed on two days during each week while the existing stagnation of trade continued, the relief being given at the house of Mr. M'Mahon, the VINE INN, Market Place, who has benevolently lent his premises for the good work.

There are thousands in a state of actual starvation at the present moment in the Bilston district, and those who with such commendable promptness come forward on the occasion of public misfortunes, whether in this country or among foreign nations, will doubtless require no pressing in the matter, particularly when it is remembered with what exemplary patience the sufferers have borne the privations that have fallen on them. The committee will receive subscriptions for the relief fund, and we conclude this notice by reminding those whose means enable them to assist the efforts of the gentlemen who have taken the initiative in the case, that charity is the greatest of human virtues, and that it ‘begins at home.’”

“At the West Bromwich Police Court, on Saturday, Thomas Edmonds, collector, was charged with embezzling upwards of £6, the property of Mr. Hickin, lessee of the Sedgley and Tipton Turnpike Road. Mr. Sheldon prosecuted. The prisoner was in the employ of the prosecutor, and was stationed at the Littleworth Tollgate. It was his duty to take all moneys, to deliver an account when required, and he was paid by a weekly salary. On Monday, the prosecutor sent a clerk round to collect the accounts at the various tollgates. On arriving at Littleworth he found the gate open, and the prisoner gone. He was subsequently found drunk, at the VINE INN, Bilston, and had then £1 1s 4d in his pocket. From the weekly returns found in the prisoner’s house, between £7 and £8 had been taken at the gate during the fortnight that the prisoner had been in the prosecutor’s employ. The prisoner, when apprehended, admitted having spent the money, and promised, if no proceedings were taken, to refund the money. He was committed to the Sessions.”

“Staffordshire Quarter Sessions.....

Thomas Edmunds, age 47, a shoemaker, and collector of tolls at Littleworth Gate, Tipton, was indicted for feloniously embezzling, on the 2nd inst, the sum of £6 8s 6d, the moneys of his master, Edward Hicken, the lessee of the tolls. Prisoner had been collector for many years, but was occasionally a little irregular in his accounts. He had taken the tolls from the 19th to the 28th September, and when his master, the lessee, went to receive the tolls he found prisoner at the VINE public house. When he asked him for them prisoner said he had spent them. He was found guilty, and sentenced to four months’ imprisonment with hard labour.”

Wolverhampton Chronicle 5/9/1866

Bilston Division, August 31, 1866.

‘I beg to submit to the Magistrates the attached list of licensed victuallers who have been complained against during the year. Twenty-five have been convicted, and three have paid costs; one had been convicted three times, and five convicted twice. This is a large increase on last year’s list; but I think it has arisen from the police being more particular in reporting cases of permitting drunkenness – as it was found to be an evil rather on the increase. I believe it has caused landlords to be more careful in supplying drink to persons intoxicated.’

H. McCrea, Superintendent.

Black List.....

Noah Barker, VINE INN, Vine Street, Bilston left over until the adjourned licensing meeting on the 28th of September.”

“On Saturday, John Lowe was sent to prison for one month for stealing a watch, a pipe, and about 3s, belonging to Enoch Barker, a potato vendor, of the VINE INN, Bilston. On the 9th ult the prosecutor left his lodgings to come to Wolverhampton. The watch and pipe were safe before he started, but on the following morning he missed the watch and the pipe and about 3s out of a box in his bed-room. During his absence the prisoner was allowed to go up into the bed-room. The watch was afterwards found at the shop of Mr. Wilcox, a watchmaker, of Lichfield Street, where it had been bought. Prisoner pleaded guilty.”

“William Lester, butty miner, was charged before the Wolverhampton magistrates on Friday with writing and publishing a false, malicious, and defamatory libel upon Mr. William Blakemore, mine agent of the Osier Bed Colliery, in a letter to his employer, Mr. Sparrow.....

Sir,

Having hitherto been unsuccessful in my efforts to obtain satisfactory settlement of the accounts due to me for the ironstone delivered to your furnaces, in obedience to Mr. Blakemore’s directions and as per account rendered, I beg to observe that the unsettled claim is just and correct in all respects, notwithstanding the unmanly and un-Christian denial of the accuracy thereof. Although Mr. Blakemore has been guilty of falsehood and injustice in this matter, he will scarcely have the assurance to deny his own personal liabilities. Will he deny that he has on several occasions, since his appointment to the situation he now holds, under your firm and under various pretexts borrowed considerable sums of money from me, the greater portion of which he has not repaid? I will give you two or three instances out of a many. On one occasion he borrowed £13 10s to purchase a horse, which he subsequently raffled away at Mr. Page’s, VINE INN, Bilston. On another occasion £5 to meet the payment of his rent, and another time £2. The above sums are now owing by him to me. Respectfully submitting the above for your consideration, as I am determined to have my money.

I am, Sir, your humble servant, William Lester.

Willenhall, 26th October, 1869.

The defendant now apologised, and declared that there was no money owing to him by Mr. Blakemore, and regretted that he had made any statement of the sort. The summons was therefore withdrawn as the letter had been.”

“A large meeting of mill and tonnage men was held in the large concert room at the VINE INN, Bilston, yesterday morning, to take into consideration the proposed 5 per cent reduction. Although the meeting was called for eleven o’clock so great was the interest evinced, that by half-past ten the room was densely crowded, and a large number were unable to gain admittance.

The Chairman briefly introduced the question to be discussed, after which speeches were made by representatives from the various districts in South Staffordshire, and Mr. Capper then in a lengthened speech reviewed the course of events during the last few weeks, and the breaking up of the Conciliation Board, vindicating the conduct of himself and colleagues. His speech was well received, and a vote of confidence carried with acclamation. A resolution was then proposed and carried unanimously, that the proposed reduction should not be accepted, neither allowance in lieu thereof.

A representative present expressed his opinion that, according to Mr. Kettle's version of the law on the subject, the Conciliation Board having broken up without coming to any definite conclusion, the masters had no further claim upon the men.

The large assemblage then dispersed."

"About seven o'clock on Monday morning, as a man named James Hobson, a painter, in the employ of Mr. White, was about to place a ladder against a house in St. Luke Street, Bilston, he suddenly fell. Some persons who saw the occurrence lifted him up, and carried him to the house of Mrs. Haines, which is in the same street, where, after lying two hours, he expired.

The inquest on the body was held at the VINE INN, Bilston, on Wednesday morning, before W. Phillips, Esq, coroner.

Carry Hall stated that the deceased lodged at her house, and had done so for about five months. He was about 57 years of age, and stated that he came from Shrewsbury. He was never married. He seemed to get up all right on Monday morning last. He was a man of very dissipated habits. He came home last Friday very drunk.

A verdict of Died from Natural Causes was returned."

“Recently three gold rings and some whisky were missed, the property of Richard Hyde, who until lately was landlord of the VINE public house Bilston. The matter was given into the hands of the Bilston police, and Police-constable Insley, in consequence of information, arrested a young woman named Esther Lawton, of Green Lane, Walsall, who had been staying at the VINE HOTEL. She, on being charged, pleaded guilty to the theft. The astute police officer then went in search of a young man named Charles Perkins, tinplate worker, of Heathcote Street, Walsall, whom he found in the gallery of St. George’s Hall, watching the play. Detective Insley arrested the young man in the hall, his action causing quite a commotion, and afterwards charged him with receiving the articles mentioned above knowing them to have been stolen. Both the young man and woman were brought up at the Bilston Police Court on Tuesday morning, before Messrs. F. A. Homer and J. "When William Ernest Webb (24), 22, Wood Street, Bilston, lost his temper in a public house and smashed a glass because he was refused drink, it was the means of him being sent to gaol for two months.

At Bilston on Tuesday, he was summoned for doing damage to a pint glass, and Mr. S. W. Smith, who prosecuted, said that Webb was in the VINE INN, Vine Street, Bilston, on June 24th, and had had several drinks. Shortly before 10pm the landlord placed a towel over the beer pulls and Webb went to the counter and asked for a bottle of stout. The landlord told him he had finished serving, whereupon Webb threw a pint glass into the air, smashing it, at the same time remarking, 'That's what I think of you and your — beer.' Mr. Smith added that while the wrecking of the glass might be a small thing in itself, it meant a great deal when in a public house. If people were allowed to act like this, how could the licensees do their duty.

In announcing the sentence, the chairman (Mr. W. R. Mobberley) told Webb that his record was none too good."

"At the Petty Sessions, yesterday the following victuallers' licenses were transferred.....

“Staffordshire Quarter Sessions.....

Michael Bill, 43, miner, and Benjamin Crowther, 24, stoker, were indicted for uttering three counterfeit half-crowns, at Bilston, well knowing the same to be false and counterfeit. The prisoners went to the BULL AND MOUTH public house, in High Street, Bilston, and while they were there Crowther offered a bad half-crown in payment for three-pennyworth of gin. He was told that it was bad, upon which he began to abuse the landlord, and after some time was turned out of the shop. While the altercation was going on the prisoner walked away. A short time before their visit to the BULL AND MOUTH they had been at the BALLOON public house, where Crowther offered a bad shilling in payment for drink, but it was refused. When the prisoners left they were watched, and Bill was heard to say to Crowther, with an oath, ‘Go and try Masters’s,’ that being the name of the person who formerly kept the BULL AND MOUTH. On the following day the prisoners went to the WAGGON AND HORSES, at Sedgley, and Crowther called for a pint of ale, for which he tendered half-a-crown, which the niece of the landlady said was bad. The landlady, however, whose sight was defective, consented to take it, but the course of the day she sent her niece to a neighbour’s shop to make some purchases, giving her the half-crown in question, when the opinion of the niece that it was counterfeit was confirmed. Within an hour of leaving the WAGGON AND HORSES, the prisoners went to the BRIDGE INN, at the same place, where for some drink they offered another bad half-crown, but it was not discovered to be bad until the evening of the same day. The men having got clear away, Bill went on the evening of the same day to a provision shop in the same place, and there attempted to pass a bad shilling. On being told that it was bad, he said that he was nearly blind (which appeared to be true), and that it had been given to him in his wages. He promised to bring the person who gave him the coin, but having once left with the shilling in his possession, he never returned. On the 18th of the same month, Crowther and the other prisoner were at the MOXLEY TAVERN, Bilston, where one of them offered a bad shilling in payment for a glass of gin. The police were by this time on their track, and shortly afterwards they were apprehended.

Mr. Motteram dissected the evidence in detail for the purpose of showing that it was not conclusive against the prisoners, but the Jury returned a verdict of guilty. Bill was sentenced to six months, and Crowther to twelve months hard labour.”

“On Monday last, T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, held an inquest at the WAGGON AND HORSES INN, Catchems Corner, on the body of Joseph Tranter, a collier, aged 14 years, who had been employed in a coal pit at the Rookery Colliery, the property of Mr. G. B. Bloomer. It appeared that about the middle of the day on the previous Wednesday, a quantity of coal and ‘clod’ fell in a stall in the pit, where a pikeman, named James Langstone, was at work, burying the latter and also the deceased. The duty of Tranter was to load skips and drive them from the workings to the bottom of the shaft, and it was stated that he had no business out of the road, and that if he had been attending to his duty he would not have been hurt. Langstone was covered by the coal, &c, which fell, but he was fortunately recovered without having suffered serious injuries. It was not known that the deceased had been affected by the accident until he was missed. A search was then made for him and he was found under the debris, frightfully cut and bruised about the head and face, and speechless. He was taken home in a cart and attended by Mr. Best, surgeon, but he died the same evening. It was stated that the pit was properly worked; that there was a sufficiency of timber to prop the roof, and no blame was attributed to any person in reference to the accident. The Jury therefore returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

Bilston Division, August 31, 1866.

‘I beg to submit to the Magistrates the attached list of licensed victuallers who have been complained against during the year. Twenty-five have been convicted, and three have paid costs; one had been convicted three times, and five convicted twice. This is a large increase on last year’s list; but I think it has arisen from the police being more particular in reporting cases of permitting drunkenness – as it was found to be an evil rather on the increase. I believe it has caused landlords to be more careful in supplying drink to persons intoxicated.’

H. McCrea, Superintendent.

Black List.....

William Burrows, WAGGON AND HORSES, Ettingshall, Sedgley left over until the adjourned licensing meeting on the 28th of September.”

Staffordshire Advertiser 24/8/1867

“On Saturday an inquest was held at the WAGGON AND HORSES, Ettingshall, on the body of Lydia Woodfield, who died on Tuesday week last from cutting her throat with a razor. Since the death of a daughter deceased had been in a very depressed state of mind. The jury found that the deceased destroyed herself while in a state of Temporary Insanity.”

Wolverhampton Chronicle 4/3/1868

“On Monday an inquest was held at the WAGGON AND HORSES INN, Catchems Corner, before W. H. Phillips, Esq, deputy coroner, on the body of a man named Amos Walters, who met his death by accident on the previous Saturday.

The deceased it appeared was a sinker at the Spring Vale Colliery, and on the above morning was descending a gin pit. When only about eight yards from the surface, however, the cotter pin came out from the winding machine, and the deceased was violently lowered to the bottom of the pit, some fifty or sixty yards, and was so fearfully injured that he died soon afterwards.

In the absence of any evidence showing how it was the cotter pin came out, the Jury, under the direction of the Coroner, returned an Open Verdict.”

Tamworth Miners Examiner 6/12/1873

“On Tuesday last, there was a meeting of the miners working in the Parkfield Colliery, near Wolverhampton, held at the WAGGON AND HORSES, Catchem. Mr. Joseph Spruce, on being voted to the chair, said this was a meeting called to take into consideration the advisability of withdrawing the field pay from the colliery, and paying into the respective lodges to which each member belongs, or leaving it as it now is under the control and authority of the proprietors of the colliery. Continuing, the Chairman remarked upon the advantages which would accrue from the men having the field pay under their supervision, and the likelihood of being able to form a widows and orphans fund from the surplus, or at least allowing the widow a small allowance for a certain period after the decease of her husband. After a few other remarks, he called upon Mr. Goring, who formed part of a deputation to wait upon the proprietors of the colliery on November the 8th and 10th, respecting the withdrawal of the field pay from the colliery. Mr. Goring, on rising, said: Mr. Chairman, I had the honour to wait on the Parkfield Iron Company, together with Mr. Ford, on Saturday, November the 8th. One of the proprietors being away we had to be at the offices again on the following Monday morning, and, having been introduced by the manager, we opened our proceedings by stating what we wanted, namely, the field pay to be withdrawn from the colliery. After a short discussion with the proprietors, we could only arrive at a decision by leaving it in the hands of the men generally, whether it was or was not their wish to have it withdrawn, therefore this meeting will decide by giving its opinion on the question. I am proud to say that the proprietors looked on the scheme with a very lenient eye, and went so far as to say 'it would look less like pauperism,' and that they were quite proud to see that the miners were raising themselves in the social scale of society. (Cheers.)

Mr. Ford, on rising, said: Mr. Chairman and fellow working men, on rising to move the first resolution, I have great pleasure, and feel it is a duty to acknowledge before this meeting that on our two visits to the colliery proprietors we were received in the most courteous and gentlemanly manner possible, and treated with every respect. Whilst in the past field-pay has done good, we hope for the future it will do more good. No doubt we have been thankful for our 5s per week from the office; but for the future it will be less like pauperism, and we can receive it from our own lodges – (hear, hear) – if it is agreeable to the meeting here assembled. I am sure that every attention and care has been bestowed on the injured in times past, as the manager told us, and that in cases of poverty or distress he has added weekly to the sufferer's allowance – all honour to such deeds, wherever and by whoever performed. But if we take the field pay away, can we look for that support from the masters; can we look to our own sick society in the past, which has made gifts at different times to different members, and say that we shall be losers by transferring the field pay from the collieries to the lodge houses. We too, no doubt, shall be able to alleviate the sufferers wants, and check the widows and orphans grief. I shall therefore move that the miners employed under Parkfield Iron Company hereby tender their very best thanks and warmest gratitude to their employers for their past kindnesses and attention in cases of affliction. This resolution was seconded in a very heartfelt and sympathetic manner by a collier who had received special attention in time of need. The resolution was then put with a few complimentary remarks and carried.

The next resolution, which was the principal one of the meeting, was moved by E. Goring, seconded by John Isaacs, 'That the time has arrived to withdraw the field pay from the Parkfield Colliery.' The motion was carried without a dissentient voice, also, 'that the same come into operation with the new year.' A hearty vote of thanks to the Chairman brought the meeting to a close."

Thomas Wildman died in 1874.

"On Wednesday an inquest was held at the WAGGON AND HORSES public house, Bilston, before T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, on the body of Elizabeth Arrowsuch, about five years of age, who, whilst gathering flowers close to the engine pit of the Bilston Brook Furnaces, fell down the pit, which is about twenty-five yards deep, and was killed on the spot. She had been immediately before requested by another little girl to come away from the pit; but she replied that she should not do so until she had gathered all the flowers. Verdict, Accidental Death."

"On Wednesday night last an inquest was held at the house of Mrs. Maria Thompson, WAGGON AND HORSES, Bilston, before T. M. Phillips, Esq, Coroner, upon the body of Samuel Bodley, a man about twenty-nine years old, who came to his death by suffocation, in a pit near Bilston Broke Furnace, at Bilston. It appeared that he went down the pit, which had been worked out, to fetch something from the bottom. When he had descended to the bottom he cried out, 'The damp, the damp,' and a man who was at the top told him to fasten himself to the chain. The poor fellow was heard to stagger and fall. He was not got up for the space of an hour, when he was quite dead. The Jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death."

"At Bilston Police Court, on Tuesday last, Samuel Hughes was charged with stealing 11s 9d, the property of John Bladen. It appeared that on Sunday morning last the two men were drinking together at the house of Mrs. Thompson, WAGGON AND HORSES, Newtown, Bilston. Bladen got rather fresh and went to sleep, and while lying on the screen Hughes took out his money, in the presence of several men, counted it, and put it in his pocket, saying that he would take care of it for him. The company advised him to put it back, but he would not, and left the house in company with Bladen, whom he took home. During the Sunday Bladen missed his money, and on Monday morning went to the prisoner, whom he charged with robbing him, and he gave him into custody. When told the charge upon which he was apprehended, he promised to return the money. The Bench thinking the evidence insufficient to show a felonious intent, and Bladen not wishing to prosecute, the prisoner was discharged."

"On Saturday morning last, a most serious and fatal accident occurred at a pit in Messrs. Baldwin's colliery, near the Pothouse Bridge. It appears that the engine belonging to the pit in question is used for the double purpose of pumping and winding. At night it has been customary to detach or 'throw out of gear' the winding apparatus, to allow the pumps to work without interruption. On the evening previous to the accident the bands had been thrown out of gear, as usual. In the morning the engineer, finding the water out, stopped the engine and threw the bands in gear, ready for operation upon the arrival of the men at six o'clock. At that time seven men and two boys placed themselves in the skip to descend, and after being lowered but about ten or twelve yards, the winding part of the machinery flew out of gear, and the nine individuals were precipitated to the bottom of the shaft, a depth of 120 yards, at a velocity awful to contemplate; and, more sad still to add, the band became detached from the sudden jerk, at the extreme end, from the engine shaft, and the whole chain, about 160 yards long, and near two tons weight, fell upon and buried in its iron coils the poor unfortunate creatures at the bottom. Upon extricating the sufferers, the two boys were found to be dead, and the whole of the men most seriously mutilated. Two of the men, we understand, died in the course of the same day; and it is thought, from the very serious injuries received, that others will not survive.

An inquest was opened on Monday last on the bodies of the unfortunate men and boys, before T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, at the WAGGON AND HORSES, Oxford Street, Bilston, when several witnesses were examined; but the inquiry was adjourned in consequence of the necessary time not having elapsed since notice of the accident had been given to the Secretary of State.

On Thursday, the inquest on the body of William Payton, one of the boys killed, was resumed, when Richard Payton, a miner, stated that the deceased, who was about 12 years of age, was his son, and was employed at the pit, which was known as the Hall Pit. The pit was worked by a steam engine, and Alexander Jones, the engineer, was in the engine-house at the time of the accident. The deceased and five men and two boys were in the skip, and when it was lowered eight or ten yards, the chain began to run so fast that witness and others on the bank were alarmed. William Kinsey, one of the butties, ran to the engine-house, and the engine was stopped, but the chain continued running with greater speed until it broke from the barrel, when the skip, with the deceased and others, was thrown to the bottom, a distance of about 120 yards, and the chain, weighing about 30cwt, fell down the pit. Witness instantly ran to the engine, and upon examining it, found that it was not in gear. Alexander Jones was in the engine-house, and witness accused him of having neglected to put the engine in gear before he let the skip down the pit, which he denied, but if he had done so, he considered it would have been impossible for the chain to have run out, unless some part of the engine or workings had broken. Witness looked carefully at the teeth of the wheels, and found none of them broken. It was Alexander Jones's duty to put the engine in gear, and see all was right before letting the men down. Witness saw the deceased brought up the pit quite dead.

Edward Davis, a miner, stated that he was on the bank at the time of the accident, and instantly ran to the engine-house when he found that Jones had omitted to put it in gear, to which cause he also attributed the accident.

Edward Griffiths, the night engineer, deposed that he delivered the engine to Jones in, as he supposed, working order. He told him it was 'all right,' but it was his business to have ascertained this himself. The witness added that about four o'clock, a youth about 18, altered the gears, and let two persons down the pit, and then partly put it in gear again, which he (Griffiths) completed.

After hearing some further evidence, the jury returned a verdict of Manslaughter against Alexander Jones, who was accordingly committed for trial.

An inquest was also held on the other boy killed, John Boffey, 12 years of age, when similar evidence implicating Jones as the cause of the accident, was given, and a like verdict returned by the jury."

[In March 1852, Alexander Jones, appeared at Staffordshire Lent Assizes, indicted for killing and slaying Thomas Bloor. After hearing the evidence, the Judge directed the jury to acquit, as the charge could not be sustained.]

Coventry Standard 4/3/1853

"On the 22nd ult, an Irish labourer, who gave his name as Richard Price, and said he came from Oswestry, was brought up at the Police Court, Bilston, under the following circumstances.

Mr. Hancox, surgeon, stated that he had taken the responsibility of giving the prisoner in charge, in consequence of his acting 'the dying crow.' Ten or twelve days ago a person came running to his house in a state of great excitement, begging he would go with him to Moxley, to a poor man who was lying in the road, apparently in a dying state. On reaching Moxley, he found the man had been removed to a public house, where he was placed on a chair before the fire. One or two persons were engaged in rubbing him; a poor man present said he had given him threepennyworth of rum; another was warming him some spiced ale, whilst the landlord was busy in preparing him a basin of gruel, the man having stated that he had not tasted food for two days. The doctor, finding the circulation vigorous, informed the parties that there was no fear of the man dying, that they were treating him properly, and then left.

On the Saturday following he was again sent for in great haste to Mrs. Thompson's, the WAGGON AND HORSES INN, Bilston, to see a man who, he was informed, was dying in the tap room. Whilst entering the house a person exclaimed, 'Oh, doctor, I am afraid it is almost over with the poor fellow,' and a young lady present said she had given him a good glass of brandy and water, with some ginger, and hoped it would not hurt him. Mr. Hancox at once recognised in the patient (who was apparently writhing with agonizing pains, producing fearful contortion of the countenance) the man he had been called to see, under similar circumstances, at Moxley (and who, from an account in the Staffordshire Advertiser, had been playing the same tricks at West Bromwich). In the latter instance he was found lying by the roadside, benumbed with cold, and on his arrival at the Police Station restoratives were administered, under the direction of a surgeon, who attended him for some hours. Mr. Hancox added that the arrival of a policeman at the WAGGON AND HORSES had the effect of instantaneously restoring him. Committed to the House of Correction for one month as a rogue and vagabond."

Lloyds Weekly Newspaper 7/10/1855

"About six o'clock on the morning of October 1, Mr. W. Russell, of Bilston, a confidential clerk in the employ of Messrs. Perry and Sons, iron-founders, of High Fields, was aroused from sleep by the shrieks of his children, who were in bed in an adjoining apartment. Finding that his wife had left his side, he instantly rushed to the children's room. There he was horrified at perceiving his son Joseph, aged four years, writhing with a frightful wound in his throat, from which the blood was flowing profusely. At the same time he saw his wife dropping upon the floor with a large knife in her hand, which after having been used by her in taking the life of her child, had been drawn across her own throat with so much determination that her head was nearly severed from the body.

Mr. W. H. Hancox, surgeon, was speedily in attendance, but the boy died half an hour after his arrival.

The woman recovered consciousness only when she was being placed in bed, and then by a movement of her hands she indicated that she wished to be allowed to die without any attempts being made to restore her to life. In a state of partial stupor she now (6pm) lies, but she cannot possibly survive more than a few hours.

There exists but little doubt that the woman intended to take the lives of all her children, but was prevented by the alarm raised by the other two children, one of whom was eleven years of age. The only assignable cause for the dreadful occurrence is a depression of spirits from which the poor woman has been recently suffering – not, however, to an extent to occasion alarm, as she has gone about her customary duties and attended church last evening apparently in better spirits than usual. She was devotedly attached to her children; the loss of one of whom about twelve months ago has occasioned her considerable grief at intervals since.....

The inquest upon the body of Joseph Russell was held at the WAGGON INN, Bilston, yesterday.

The murderess still lives, and to prevent her being disturbed by the presence of the jury in her husband's house, the body of the child was brought down stairs out of the room in which the murder was committed. The boy seemed to have been a remarkably fine and healthy one. The wound in his throat was very large.

The evidence given was in accordance with the statements given already, and the jury, after a very brief consultation, returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against Ann Russell.

Since her recovery to consciousness, the murderess has stated to the Rev. Mr. Harper, the curate of St. Mary's, and to her husband, that she was unconscious when she committed the dreadful crime. She appears to feel very acutely her present melancholy and wretched position. But slight expectations are entertained of her recovery."

Wolverhampton Chronicle 17/10/1885

"The unfortunate woman, Ann Russell, who, up to Tuesday evening last, lingered in a hopeless state, breathed her last on Wednesday afternoon. The inquest upon the body was held on Saturday last at the WAGGON AND HORSES, Oxford Street, before W. H. Phillips, Esq, Deputy Coroner.....

William Russell, husband of the deceased, added that he had several times heard the deceased say, since the committal of the act, that she did not know why she did it. Before her son Joseph was interred the deceased wished to see him. Her wish was complied with and she appeared very much distressed at the sight. He considered she had had every care and attention paid to her by Mr. Hancox. Before she died witness called in Mr. Best, to see if he could do anything more to save her life. It was his firm opinion that the deceased must have been labouring under an aberration of mind when she committed the act. She was a good wife to him and an affectionate mother to his children. She had frequently complained before her death of a violent pain in her head. He had never seen anything to lead him to believe that his wife's mind was affected.

.....The Coroner briefly directed the Jury, who, after a brief deliberation, returned a verdict that the deceased committed Suicide whilst labouring under Temporary Insanity."

"An inquest was held on Thursday, at the WAGGON AND HORSES INN, Bilston, on Mary Ann Davis, wife of Henry Davis, puddler, whose death was said to have been occasioned through an indecent assault made on her by a toll-keeper named Howell, some weeks since. The evidence went to show that Howell had called at her house, during the absence of her husband, and committed a gross assault upon her; that he had thrown her down and knelt upon her, and thereby inflicted serious injury, she being pregnant at the time. She had suffered much pain at different times ever since, and on Tuesday night she died. The surgeon who attended her could not explain the cause of death except from some internal rupture. The inquest was adjourned for a post-mortem examination."

"The inquiry at Bilston, before W. H. Phillips, Esq, deputy-coroner, into the death, in child-bed, of Mary Ann Davis, a married woman, supposed to have been occasioned by injuries received in an assault with intent, was concluded on Tuesday week. The result of the post mortem examination showed that deceased died from Natural Causes, from what is technically termed 'extra uterine foetation,' an accident of rare occurrence, but in no way connected with any violence received during life."

“Staffordshire Adjourned Sessions.....

John Higgins, 24, miner, James Welsh, 29, labourer, Thomas Gorman (on bail), Jas. Marryon, 22, miner, and James Lamb, 35, miner, were indicted for unlawfully and violently assaulting John Denston and John Hacket while in the execution of their duty as police-officers, at Bilston. Mr. Griffiths appeared on behalf of the prosecution; Mr. Matthews defended Higgins, and Mr. Clayton Welsh and Marryon.

It appeared from the evidence of the two officers that shortly before twelve o'clock on the night of the 7th of January they were engaged in taking to the police station a man who had been disorderly at the WAGGON AND HORSES public house, Bilston, and that when they got to Hangmans Row his wife, who was following the police, gave an Irish howl, and a crowd of four or five hundred persons instantly assembled. The officers were knocked down and violently kicked, and the prisoner was rescued and recaptured eight or nine times. Denston swore that all the men were engaged in rescuing the prisoner, that Higgins knocked him down and kicked him, and that Lamb and Marryon also struck him. He was at last obliged to take refuge in the shop of a neighbouring pawnbroker. Hacket corroborated Denston in several material particulars, and added that Lamb and Welsh kicked him (Hacket), and that Marryon and Gorman assisted in rescuing the prisoner.

Thomas Ward, a passer-by, also gave corroborative evidence, and created considerable amusement by gravely persisting that at midnight on the 7th of January it was as light as at the moment of his examination (four o'clock in the afternoon of the 8th of March).

Superintendent M'Cree gave evidence with regard to the apprehension of the prisoners.

Mr. Clayton having addressed the jury on behalf of his clients, called several witnesses, all Irish who endeavoured to prove an alibi in favour of Welsh.

Mr. Matthews also addressed the jury on behalf of Higgins.

The noble Chairman having summed up, the jury returned a verdict of guilty against the first three prisoners, and acquitted Marryon and Lamb. Higgins was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment with hard labour, and Welsh and Gorman to four months' imprisonment each with hard labour.”

The evidence showed that at midnight on Saturday, the 27th ult, a number of drunken men came out of the BROWN LION INN, at Bilston, and met another party of men who had just before turned out of another public house called the WAGGON AND HORSES, and were conducting themselves so as to create a disturbance. The officer Bradbury had been trying to persuade them to go home, when he was attacked by a man named Gavon, and another man. After they had assaulted him the two men ran away. The officer followed them, when the men turned round, knocked him down and kicked him, and he was also set upon by some of the other men who had just before come out of the public house, who beat him most terribly; in the words of Mr. Spooner, who saw the officer on the Tuesday following the assault, his face was beaten to a jelly. He got away from them, and meeting with Police-constable Curtis, the two went in search of Bradbury’s assailants. They met Kean, who Bradbury recognised as a prominent actor in the recent scene, but inasmuch as he was surrounded by several others the officers wisely refrained from attempting his apprehension, and simply advised him to go home, intending to summon him on the following day. He went away in the direction of his home, and the police shortly afterwards followed; upon seeing them Kean challenged the two to fight, and became very abusive. The police then attempted to take him into custody, but he resisted, and the mob again coming up there was a second attack upon the police, in which stones were freely thrown, and it was only by the determined use of their staves that the two officers succeeded in getting their prisoner to the police station.

For the defendant witnesses were called to prove that he took no part whatever in the assault on the police, but their evidence failed.

Mr. Spooner characterised the affair as a disgrace to the town in which it occurred. He justified the conduct of the police as to the use of their staves to prevent the rescue of their prisoner and to defend themselves against the fury of the mob, and said that but for the fact spoken to by Superintendent M’Crea that Kean was usually of a quiet disposition and had previously borne a good character he should have passed upon him the severest sentence the law allowed; as it was he must pay a fine of £5 and costs, or go to prison for two months.”

Birmingham Daily Gazette 27/8/1868

“Yesterday, Martin Roche was charged with having violently assaulted Police-constable Bradbury. On the 4th February, 1866, the officer went with Police-constable Curtis to the WAGON AND HORSES, in Ford [sic] Street. There was a disturbance there, and on the officers going in a number of men came out, and again commenced making a noise. Bradbury remonstrated with them, when the prisoner and another man, named Gavons, commenced to assault him, doing so in a most violent manner, the prisoner himself striking him on the mouth, and also kicking him several times. The officer succeeded frequently in laying hold of him several times, but he was as frequently rescued by the other men about.

The Stipendiary said he remembered the case perfectly well. The officer’s face was beaten ‘all to a jelly.’

"On Thursday afternoon, an inquest was held at the WAGON AND HORSES, Oxford Street, Bilston, on the body of Israel Nokes, aged 41, who was killed on the 23rd inst, whilst working in a pit at the Moxley Colliery of Messrs. Groucutt. He was knocking down a 'tree' with his ten-feet banter, when the coal came down a yard nearer to him than had been looked for, and he was crushed to death beneath it. Witnesses deposed that no one was to blame. It transpired that the deceased, who has left a widow and seven children, was, like the rest of the miners in Messrs. Groucutt's employ, assured in an assurance company, by virtue of which his widow becomes entitled to £15, in addition to 1s from every one of the 400 men employed at the colliery. The Coroner expressed his regret that a similar method of securing substantial relief for the relatives of deceased miners was not more general in South Staffordshire."

It was ultimately resolved that the estate should be wound up by liquidation, that Mr. Barrow should be appointed trustee, and that the debtor should be discharged upon his estate realising 5s in the pound."

“An inquest was held yesterday (Tuesday) at the WAGGON AND HORSES INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, before W. H. Phillips, Esq, on the body of John Beavon, japanner, of Gozzard Street, who committed suicide by cutting his throat, on Saturday last.

The first witness called was Elizabeth Campbell, who stated that she lived next door to deceased, and assisted Mr. Hancox to dress the wound in deceased's throat. He made no statement to her as to why he committed the act. He had been ill for some time, and she had seen him most days during his illness. He had been confined to his bed for the last 12 weeks, and his mind seemed to be affected. He would frequently ask the same question over again. There was a quantity of blood on deceased's hands when she saw him on Saturday; he said, ‘What's this on my hands?’ Deceased fell downstairs on Tuesday night last, and said ‘his head felt very funny.’ Mr. Larkin attended him as his club doctor. Witness found the knife produced (a small dinner knife) in a pool of blood on the bedroom floor. Deceased died at 12 o'clock on Saturday night.

Henry Beavon (9), son of deceased, said his father had been ill for some weeks, but was up every day last week, except Saturday. Mr. Larkin saw him most days. About half-past ten o'clock on Saturday morning last, his father called him upstairs, and asked him to bring him ‘the sharp little knife used to cut the bread and butter with, for him to cut his corns.’ He took the knife upstairs; his mother was in the kitchen at the time, but he did not tell her anything about the knife. His father refused to have any dinner that day, and about half-past four witness took him his tea; he was all right then.

Mr. William M. Hancox, surgeon, said he was called in to see deceased about a quarter-past five o'clock on Saturday last, and found a traverse wound across his throat. Deceased was then in a state of collapse. There was a quantity of blood on the floor, and in a vessel near to where he lay. Deceased did not recover consciousness so long as he remained with him. The wind-pipe was laid bare, but was not penetrated. Deceased was in a very weak condition, and death was the result of haemorrhage and collapse of the system. From the position of the body and the wound, he was satisfied that it was self-inflicted.

Joseph Allcock said he knew the deceased very well, and had visited him since he had been sick as a brother Forester. He had not noticed anything strange about him. On Saturday night witness asked deceased why he had committed the rash act, and he replied ‘trouble.’ Deceased was secretary to two Foresters Courts, and had got into trouble with the accounts. There was no warrant out against him.

The Coroner having summed up, the Jury returned a verdict that deceased inflicted the wounds causing his death whilst in a state of Temporary Insanity.”

Dudley Herald 30/9/1876

“On Saturday, Mr. W. H. Phillips, deputy coroner, held an inquest at the WAGON AND HORSES, Bilston, on the body of James Walters, aged two years and three months, of Price Street. The child's mother deposed that at about nine o'clock on Wednesday morning the deceased came down stairs in his nightgown, and during witness's temporary absence attempted to light a piece of paper at the kitchen fire. His garment ignited, and when witness entered the room she put out the flames. Deceased was severely burned, and though Mr. Hancox, surgeon, attended, yet death occurred early on the following morning. A verdict in accordance with the evidence was returned.”

“John Jones (24), carter, 1, John Street, Bilston, was charged with stealing a flitch of bacon, the property of his employer, Mr. Kempson Pratt, grocer, Church Street, Bilston; and Joseph Taylor (42), grocer, of Bilston Street, Bradley, was charged with receiving the same knowing it to have been stolen. Mr. Fellows appeared for Jones, and Mr. Sheldon defended Taylor.

Charles Jones, assistant to the prosecutors, stated that on Monday last he loaded the defendant’s (Jones’s) cart, and at that time there was not a flitch of bacon in it.

Alfred James Burn, miner, of Chapel Street, Bilston, stated that on Monday night last he was in company with another man named John Shaw, in Oxford Street, Bilston, when he saw a cart belonging to Mr. Pratt come down the street and stop at William Nash’s door. The driver, after looking up and down the street, brought a side of bacon out of the cart, and took it to the back door of Nash’s house. About breakfast time the next morning witness was again standing in Oxford Street, when he saw the prisoner Taylor and another man drive up the street and then return down the street in the direction of Moxley. Shortly afterwards Taylor returned, and pulled up at the WAGGON AND HORSES, kept by Patrick Clines. The cart was then taken into Nash’s back yard, where witness saw someone put a flitch of bacon into the cart, and the cart was then driven off in the direction of Bradley by the man who accompanied Taylor, and another man he had not seen before.

John Shaw, carter, in the employ of the prosecutor, corroborated this evidence.

The case was adjourned till Tuesday next, the defendants being admitted to bail; Taylor, himself in £200, and two sureties of £100 each; and Jones, himself in £50, and two sureties of £50 each.”

“Bilston Police Court.....

‘You are a terrible character,’ the Chairman remarked, after perusing the record of James McDonald, a Scotchman, of no fixed abode, who was charged with doing wilful damage to a plate glass window at the WAGGON AND HORSES INN, Oxford Street, Bilston, on the night of December 26th.

The evidence of James Duggan, the licensee of the house, and the customers who were in the house at the time, showed that about 10.40 on Boxing Night a window of the public bar was smashed, and a boot came through and went under a table. Mr. Duggan hurried into the street and saw defendant, who was being held by one of the customers. He had only one boot on. He was under the influence of drink, but had not been on the premises of the WAGGON AND HORSES. The licensee took the man to the police station, and in answer to the charge he said, ‘Yes, I wanted a night’s kip.’

Asked what he had to say, defendant was very voluble. He said he was on the road between London and Edinburgh. He had _ glasses of whisky, three of rum, and _ bottles of stout, and they ‘got mixed up.’ The Chaplain at the gaol, he added, had said that the best thing he could do was ask the magistrates to send him to gaol for six months. He would come out and then he (the Chaplain) would make application to the Discharged Prisoners’ Society to send him back to Scotland.

Prisoner was sentenced to three months hard labour.”

“Samuel Ball, who has been previously convicted of horse stealing, was charged with stealing a horse, the property of Walter Davis, a carter, living at Monmore Green. He sold the horse and harness for 10s and half a gallon of ale, to John Silvester, landlord of the WELLINGTON INN, Bilston, who was taking it to the knackers for sale when he was told that the animal was stolen.

Silvester was asked by the bench if it did not strike him, when the prisoner offered to sell the horse and gearing for 10s, that he had not come honestly by them, and he replied that the knacker would not give a stranger more than 6s for the horse, and he (Silvester) would have sold the harness for 2s 6d. The horse had not a tooth in its head, and was worth nothing for work. The prisoner told him the horse was his own and that he had been using it to work a gin.

The prisoner admitted his guilt when apprehended by police-constable Beeley, but told the magistrates that a man whom he had met gave him the horse to sell. He was committed for trial.”

“Staffordshire Adjourned Sessions.....

Samuel Ball, 33, engineer, was indicted for stealing a horse, cart, saddle, bridle, and pair of hames, the property of Walter Davis, at Wolverhampton. The prosecutor, a poor old man, living at Monmore Green, Wolverhampton, deposed that he was a carter, and that on the night of the 10th of February he ‘supped’ up his horse and fastened the stable door by driving in a staple to make it secure. At four o’clock the next morning the horse and harness, which he valued at £7, were gone.

William Gibbons deposed that the prisoner offered to sell him the horse and harness for 25s, between nine and ten o’clock on the morning of the 11th of February, in Oxford Street, Bilston; and a man named Silvester, engaged to purchase old horses on commission for Mr. Leach of that town, stated that he gave the prisoner 10s and half a gallon of ale for the horse and harness, and considered that that was 2s 6d too much. (Laughter.)

Police-officer Bealey deposed that when he apprehended the prisoner, and charged him with the robbery, he admitted that he had taken the horse. The prisoner denied that he made any such admission to the police officer; and asserted that a man who met him on the road asked him to sell the horse. He was convicted by the Jury. A previous conviction for horse stealing last year besides various other convictions, was proved against him, and he was sentenced to four years’ penal servitude.”

Silvester junior, were driven in Whittaker’s brakes, and private vehicles, to Tong, a large banner bearing the words ‘Wellington Judge and Jury Club’ being hung over the first vehicle. Dinner and tea were partaken of at the Bell Inn, when the host (Mr. Stanley) did all he could for the comfort of the party. ‘Memories of a Black Country Life’ by Minnie Clark (nee Harpin)

“My earliest recollections are of life at the WELLINGTON INN, a small and very old public house which was situated in Price Street, Bilston. In those days, Price Street consisted of only eight houses plus the WELLINGTON INN, all of which ran on the one side of the road overlooking the school rooms of the Holy Trinity Catholic Church. My grandfather, Charles Glen, had moved firstly to Birmingham from Hull, long before I was born. I never knew my grandmother, Mary Ann, she died young leaving six children. Inevitably most of the family grew up and went their separate ways, my grandfather eventually remarrying before being widowed once again and moving to Bilston to become the publican of the inn. With him, to Bilston, came his sister, my great aunt, who, incidentally preferred to be called Great Aunt Forth (her married surname), my Uncle Bert (grandfather’s stepson from his second marriage), my mother and Uncle Will (her younger brother) My father, John Thomas Harpin, lived locally in Brook Terrace after they got married they lived in the WELLINGTON INN with the rest of Mom’s family. And it was there, on 10th November 1914, that I was born.....”

Bilston & Willenhall Times 28/2/1925

“Much interest has been taken for some months in the question of whether a licensed house should be erected on the Green Lanes estate, where council houses stand. Some of the residents are in favour, others are not. Notices, however, have been published of the intention of Messrs. Butler and Co. Ltd., to apply at the adjourned Licensing Sessions at Bilston on March 6th for the transfer of the license of the WELLINGTON INN, Price Street, Bilston to a house and premises proposed to be erected at Villiers Square, Villiers Avenue, which is part of the Green Lanes estate. Local temperance workers are likely to oppose the application.”

“Mr. Tom B. Adams, of Wolverhampton, presided at a meeting of the County Licensing Committee, held at Stafford on Saturday, when a proposal to erect a new hotel at Bilston was revealed in an application by Cyril Tom Wynn, brewers traveller, on behalf of Messrs. Butler and Co., for provisional grant of removal of the license of the WELLINGTON INN, Price Street, Bilston, to new premises to be erected in Villiers Square, Bilston, to be known as the VILLIERS ARMS.

Mr. F. O. Langley, who appeared in support of the application, said that the conformation of the action of the Bilston justices in agreeing to the proposal was sought. He contended that Bilston, with a population of 30,000, was entitled to a new hotel, and it would be located in a new suburb, which was rapidly growing with estate development. There was only one bedroom in the present hotel accommodation in the town. In addition to the WELLINGTON INN, the brewery company were prepared to give up a second licensed house, the name of which would be given to the committee if the application was granted.

Evidence was given in support of the application by Mr. W. J. Nash, draper, of Bilston, who said it was absolutely necessary that a hotel with bedroom accommodation should be provided in Bilston. Councillor Beech (chairman) and other members of the Bilston Urban District Council also supported the application.

Mr. A. V. Hadyn (Walsall) opposed on behalf of the Bilston Temperance Trust, and said those who instructed him were asked to do so by members of the working class. The trust was not actuated by any spirit of awkwardness or vindictiveness, but they felt that the real road to progress in licensing matters lay along the road of elimination rather than repetition. He urged that the policy of elimination should be pursued, and that one license should not be merely taken from a congested area and removed to a purely residential district which was just being opened up. Mr. Hadyn called no witnesses, but said a petition against the application had been signed by 485 persons over the age of 18. The committee unanimously decided to grant the application.”

“Charles Glen of WELLINGTON INN, Price Street, Bilston, Staffordshire, died 1 December 1925. Administration Lichfield 21 January to Willis Glen, hotel waiter. Effects £32 18s.”

It closed on 2nd December 1926.

The license was transferred on 3rd December 1926 to the VILLIERS ARMS.

Birmingham Daily Gazette 4/12/1926

“Bilston Licensing Bench yesterday granted the transfer of the license of the WELLINGTON INN to the VILLIERS ARMS HOTEL, Green Lanes housing estate. The new hotel was opened last night, and the owners are Messrs. Butler and Co. Ltd.”

Wolverhampton Chronicle 2/8/1865

“Yesterday, at the Bilston Petty Sessions, before E. B. Dimmack, Esq, a jannanner named William Evans, in the employ of Mr. James Dean, was charged with assaulting Police-constable Price. The defendant is a cripple and uses a crutch.

The complainant deposed that at half-past one that morning he went into the WHEAT SHEAF to clear the house and as he was leaving the defendant came up to him and, without any provocation, pushed him down the steps in front of the house. Police-constable Webb confirmed the plaintiff's statement.

Defendant denied that he had touched the complainant, who, he said, fell down the steps himself whilst he was being ordered out of the WHEAT SHEAF by the landlord for officiousness in his house and disturbing the company by offering to bet them all round. When the officer arrested him he offered to appear at the Petty Sessions if he should be required, and gave him his address. At the same time the landlord of the house tendered himself as bail for him. But Price insisted upon taking him to the Police Station, and he had been confined in the cells all night. For the defence, Evans called Joseph Baggott, the landlord of the WHEAT SHEAF, who deposed that the complainant, upon entering his house, said, 'Do you want your house cleared; if you want it cleared, I will clear it in a minute.' Witness replied that the company were quiet, and he did not wish to disturb them. If he wanted the house cleared he would do it himself, but if he should find he could not he would send for a policeman. Price then offered to lay a wager with anyone or everyone in the house, and was becoming a nuisance, when he (witness) ordered him out of the house. The officer was going out of the house, and slipped down upon the steps. After slipping down, he laid hold of the defendant, who was standing behind him (witness), and, charging him with an assault, said he was his prisoner. Witness said, 'For God's sake don't arrest the man! What has he done? I will be bail for him. He has done nothing.' Price, however, insisted upon taking the defendant to the lock-up. The defendant did nothing to the complainant. Police-constable Webb entered the house before Price fell. A communication was then made to the Magistrates, by Superintendent McCrea, which was understood to be to the effect that the complainant had been reported for being drunk on Monday night. Evans offered to call further witnesses to prove his innocence, but the Magistrates said it was not necessary, and dismissed the charge."

"The annual meeting for the renewal of existing licenses, and for receiving applications for fresh ones, was held at the Police Court, on Friday.....

At the commencement of the proceedings, the Superintendent of Police presented the following report.
Bilston Division, August 31, 1866.

'I beg to submit to the Magistrates the attached list of licensed victuallers who have been complained against during the year. Twenty-five have been convicted, and three have paid costs; one had been convicted three times, and five convicted twice. This is a large increase on last year's list; but I think it has arisen from the police being more particular in reporting cases of permitting drunkenness – as it was found to be an evil rather on the increase. I believe it has caused landlords to be more careful in supplying drink to persons intoxicated.'

H. McCrea, Superintendent.

Mr. and Mrs. Froggatt ably provided for the company, and after partaking of a well-catered supper, and the chairman giving the usual toasts, a hearty vote of thanks was given to the committee, for their services in securing for the widow and orphans the funds to enable the widow to commence a small business."

“On Saturday night, a woman named Mary Taylor, residing in Free Street, Bilston, retired to rest, having with her an infant child three weeks old, named Mary Ann Taylor, who was then in a perfect state of health and went quietly to sleep by its mother’s side. When the mother awoke in the morning she was much alarmed to find the child dead, a drop of blood being on its night gown, and another on its face. Information was conveyed to the Coroner, who held an inquest at the WHEAT SHEAF INN, Oxford Street, on Tuesday. The evidence tended to show that the child was accidentally overlain, and a verdict in accordance with this was returned.”

“On the 2nd inst, at the Wesleyan Chapel, Bilston, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Stephen William Tyler, eldest son of Mr. Tyler, of Darlaston, to Miss Martha Annie Lloyd, niece of Mr. John Froggatt, of Bilston.....

By the kindness of Mr. Froggatt, the workpeople of the Crown Japan Works to the number of 80 were provided with a good dinner at the WHEAT SHEAF INN. After dinner the toast of the evening ‘long life, and prosperity to the happy couple’ had been drunk, an address was presented, and a handsome marble timepiece, supplied by Mr. F. Harper, of Bilston, with an inscription engraving in brass, ‘Presented by the workpeople of the Crown Japan Works, Bilston, to S. W. Tyler on his marriage, March 2nd, 1886,’ was presented to Mr. Tyler, who, in replying, thanked them and hoped the same good feeling would exist in future as had done in the past. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Froggatt for the manner in which he had provided was accorded, and his health and that of Mrs. Froggatt drunk with musical honours.”

“On Thursday last an adjourned inquest was held at the WHITE HART, Shropshire Row, Bilston, before T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, on the body of Hannah Thomas, about eleven years of age, who had been living as servant at the WHITE HART for some time, and had not enjoyed the best of health. Some days, however, previously to her death, a man had blacked her face in a ‘lark,’ and another had pushed her into the kitchen, but it seemed in the struggle which took place she received no injury; and at the adjourned inquest it was stated by Mr. C. J. Mason, surgeon (assistant to Messrs. Harper and Watts, surgeons, Bilston), who had made a post mortem examination of the body of the deceased, that in his opinion her death was caused by rapid absorption of pus into the lungs from scrophulous disease of the ankle joint. He added that there was no appearance of any recent injury upon the ankle or other part of deceased’s body. The jury returned a verdict in accordance with the medical evidence.”

“Staffordshire Spring Assizes.....

Joseph Edward Reilly, a young man, was charged with robbing William Mills, a fishmonger, of Wolverhampton, of 4s 6d. Mr. Brown appeared for the prosecution.

William Mills, a fishmonger, of Wolverhampton, said that on Tuesday, the 3rd inst, he went to the WHITE HART public house, at Bilston, at about a quarter before one o’clock. He saw the prisoner there, and two men named Parker and Mills. He had 4s 8d in his pockets when he went out of the public house. He took it out in the presence of Reilly to pay 2d for beer. He went away soon afterwards with 4s 6d in his pocket. As he went along the road he was feeling the money he had in his pocket and was jingling it, and singing 'Mary Blane.' His strains were interrupted by a sudden 'wipe across the nose,' which knocked him down. He soon got up again, and there was another 'wipe' made at him, but he closed with the 'party,' and after a struggle both fell to the ground. The other party got the best of it, and left witness so insensible that when he recovered he looked about to find what part of the world he was in. He lost a great quantity of blood, and the four-and-sixpence. He was quite sure that the prisoner was the person who struck him and struggled with him.

Police-constable Southwood said that on the night of the 3rd inst, three persons – the prisoner, and men named Parker and Mills – asked him where they could get lodgings. About ten minutes afterwards he met Mills, the fishman, who was bleeding from the nose, and was under the influence of drink. Mills described a person who he said had robbed him, and from the description he went in search of Reilly, and arrested him. When Reilly was brought to the police station, Mills was there and said, 'That is the man that struck me.' There were marks of fresh blood upon the coat which Reilly wore, and there was also fresh blood on a basket which he had on his back. There was no money found upon Reilly, but upon Parker, who was also arrested but had since been discharged, there was found 3s 6d.

William Smith, a special constable, of Wolverhampton, was also examined, after which the jury found the prisoner guilty.

His Lordship said that offences like that of which the prisoner had been found guilty of were very frequent of late, and it was necessary to treat the guilty with severity in order to put a stop to these offences. But this case was not an aggravated one; for instance, the prisoner did not make any use of any weapon. His Lordship therefore passed upon the prisoner a sentence of four years' penal servitude."

"The annual meeting for the renewal of existing licenses, and for receiving applications for fresh ones, was held at the Police Court, on Friday.....

'I beg to submit to the Magistrates the attached list of licensed victuallers who have been complained against during the year. Twenty-five have been convicted, and three have paid costs; one had been convicted three times, and five convicted twice. This is a large increase on last year's list; but I think it has arisen from the police being more particular in reporting cases of permitting drunkenness – as it was found to be an evil rather on the increase. I believe it has caused landlords to be more careful in supplying drink to persons intoxicated.'

“The licensee of a Bilston pub has given up raising cash for charity after complaint about noise. Mr. Ram Kishan Tura who runs the WHITE HART in Salop Street, was told he faced prosecution by Wolverhampton Council over alleged noise nuisance if he held further charity discos on his premises. The threat from the environmental health department follows a recent disco which raised more than £300 for the Zeebrugge Ferry Disaster appeal fund. But while it was being held environmental health officers monitored the sound levels which were found to be sufficient to form a statutory nuisance under the Control of Pollution Act.

Mr. Tura said, ‘I don’t know what the council is complaining about. People passing on the footpath 10 yards from the pub wouldn’t know anything was going on because they wouldn’t be able to hear anything. It’s too quiet. I have been here a year and there have been no complaints before the Zeebrugge ferry disaster disco. I even had an extension from the court and there was no objection from anyone.’

Mr. Tura had been planning to hold another charity disco next month to raise money for the blind.”

“Edward Reece, James Hayworth, and James Micklewright, and a fourth man, who did not appear, named William Thornton, were charged at Bilston Police Court, on Friday, with having done wilful damage at the house of Samuel Butler, the WHITE HORSE INN, High Street, Bilston, with having violently assaulted the landlord and likewise Police-constables Chatfield and Chaplain. It appeared from the evidence that late on Tuesday night the defendants went into the complainant’s house in a state of intoxication, and commenced tossing for quarts of ale. The landlord refused to allow them to toss in his house, or to supply them with drink, and also requested them to leave. They refused to do so, and became very violent, and upon the landlord endeavouring to eject them he was violently assaulted. The police-officers above named were then called to assist in turning the defendants out, but the latter still resisted and assaulted them also, and likewise smashed one of the public house doors and several panes of glass. It did not appear that Micklewright took any part in the disturbance, and the charge against him was therefore dismissed. The other defendants were ordered to pay the amount of damage, £1, amongst them, and a fine of £1 each and costs for assaulting the police.”

“Charles Taylor was summoned for being disorderly in the WHITE HORSE public house, High Street, Bilston, and for assaulting Samuel Butler, the proprietor of the house, and James Butler, his son, on Monday, the 18th of January. Mr. Barrow, who appeared for complainant, was about to make an opening statement, when Mr. Spooner requested him not to do so, as the defendant had no attorney. Defendant said he had engaged Mr. Bowen, and paid him a fee of 15s, but he now refused to appear in the case, and declined to give any reason why he did so. He wished to know if he had no remedy in the matter. Mr. Spooner said defendant could take proceedings in the County Court if his statement was correct. Mr. Bowen shortly afterwards entered the Court, and on being informed what had occurred, intimated that he refused to appear without an ‘extra fee,’ as he had already attended three times and the case had been adjourned. Defendant agreed to pay an extra fee, and Mr. Bowen undertook the defence.

The evidence on behalf of the complainant was that on the night of the 18th January the defendant went to the WHITE HORSE to see a servant there, and after sitting in one of the rooms he went into the bar, and struck James Butler, and threw him against the table, and on Butler’s father going into the bar and requesting defendant to leave the house, the latter also assaulted him.

There was a cross-summons charging the two Butlers with having assaulted Taylor. It was alleged in behalf of the latter that he had been drinking all the afternoon in the house and engaged in some horse play with James Butler, which eventually turned to foul play; that Butler became offended, and began to fight, after asking Taylor to ‘put up his maulies;’ and that Taylor was thrown to the ground and abused, Mrs. Butler seizing his hair and the elder Butler kicking him.

“At Bilston Police Court on Tuesday, Oliver Brown, licensee of the WHITE HORSE, was summoned for selling spirits, namely one-fifth part of a gill of rum, 30 per cent under proof, at a price exceeding the maximum and there being two summonses for this and a similar offence. He was also summoned that he omitted legibly to mark the maximum price at which spirits might be sold on the receptacle from which such spirits were drawn in such a manner as to be visible to the purchaser, contrary to the provision of the Spirits (Prices and Descriptions Order), 1919.

Mr. Turner, who prosecuted, said this charge was preferred by the Ministry. Defendant, who kept the WHITE HORSE HOTEL, had been licensee for some time and had lived on the premises and managed them for some years on behalf of relatives. There were two charges of over-charging in his public bar for a glass of rum. Two inspectors called at the public bar on December 19th and called for a glass of rum each, and the charge made was 6d. In the Order it was distinctly laid down that the maximum charge should be 5d. The defendant therefore overcharged the customers to the extent of one penny. In addition to that he failed to exhibit the notice of the price at which spirits were retailed in the bar – a serious infringement of the Spirit Order. His explanation was an extraordinary one. He said, ‘I am entitled to sell rum for 6d and I was under the impression I was entitled to do it.’ This Order had been in force two years, and if this man has been doing that it showed he had been overcharging his customers for some time. In one case which had been before the Court an old lady had acted in ignorance, but this was a deliberate infringement.

Mr. Pritchard, in defence, said this was a matter of defendant not having understood the Order, some of these Orders were very complicated. On certain proprietary brands of whisky 4d per glass was allowed. This was special Jamaica rum, which was delivered in bottles in cases, and the defendant was under the impression that he was entitled to charge 6d. In fact, he was not conscious otherwise. He thought it was clear that you could sell whiskey at 6d. There was a great chance in these complicated matters of a man making an honest mistake.

Defendant gave evidence, and in cross-examination said he was not a member of any association of licensed victuallers in Bilston.

Mr. Turner: Is there such an association? – Defendant: There is one in Wolverhampton.

Mr. Turner: It would be a good investment for you to join that. You have never thought it worth while to spend a penny on a copy of the Order? – Defendant: No.

Mr. Turner read over the Order for defendant’s instruction, remarking that he had got it in black and white now. Assuming that there were 25 glasses in a bottle, he asked defendant had he not been making an illegal profit of 2s 1d per bottle. Defendant said he had only had eight gallons in the house since last October.

The Chairman said there had been an unusual amount of negligence in this case, and a failure to take account of what was required by the law. Defendant would be fined 40s in each case and £5 for not having the notice exhibited, together with £3 3s costs.”

"It will be in the recollection of our readers that early in the morning of the 30th of April last, the body of a female named Elizabeth Hopley, and who was employed as a bankswoman at a colliery, was found in a canal at Bilston. An inquest was held on the following Friday, and adjourned until Tuesday, the 5th of May, to give opportunity for a post mortem examination. On the 5th of May there was a further adjournment until the 24th. In the meantime a man of the name of Philip Clare, a butty miner, in whose employment the girl Hopley had some time been, and who was believed to harbour ill feeling against her, was apprehended as her murderer, on the information of George Powell, a watchman, who declared that he had witnessed the whole transaction. Clare was taken before the Stipendiary the next Tuesday, when Powell repeated the statement he had made to the police. An adjourned inquest was fixed for the following Tuesday, but before that day Powell absconded. The inquest was then further adjourned in the first instance to the 19th of June, and then to the 5th of October, whilst a warrant was issued for the apprehension of Powell. Nothing was heard of this person, however, until Monday last, when he was taken to Warwick Gaol, having broken the workhouse windows on being refused relief. Powell, who had lost a leg, had disused his wooden substitute and taken a crutch. On being asked his name by the warder at the prison, he gave that of Powell, and then, recollecting himself, that of Powis. This caused suspicion, and he was eventually identified and handed over to the authorities at Bilston, where he arrived on Tuesday last. On the evening of that day Clare was again taken into custody, and yesterday morning an adjourned inquest was held at the WHITE LION, Bradley, before W. H. Phillips, Esq, Deputy Coroner. Mr. Waterhouse, solicitor, Bilston, watched the proceedings on behalf of Clare.

The first witness examined was the man Powell, who deposed as follows: My name is Samuel Wall. I am a labourer, and have chiefly gone by the name of George Powell. I have had no fixed place of residence since my father's death. I did not know the deceased. In February, March, April, and May, I was employed as watchman for Mr. David Rose. When I went to be a watchman at Mr. Rose's, I first became acquainted with Clare, who introduced himself to me. My duty was to look after the fields and the engines during the night. On the night that this happened I was out on my beat. I thought it was then about half-past twelve o'clock, but when I came into the main road I heard the Moxley clock strike twelve. On coming to the railway bridge, (Bradley Bridge) I saw the shadows of two persons on the bridge. I could see it was a man and a woman. This would be about a quarter past twelve. On getting below the bridge I heard a woman say, 'Philip, don't kill me; you said you would kill me before.' I then saw the man lift his hand and strike the woman. I think the blow was upon the head. It knocked her down. I did not hear a word after that. I then recognised the man as Philip Clare, who is now present. I went up to him and said, 'Philip, you will have to suffer for this.' He said, 'If you tell any one, I'll kill you; I'll serve you the same.' I did not see the woman's face; I could not. She had like a red frock on, and was quite a stout body. Clare then took the woman on his shoulder. She remained insensible. I followed Clare to the end of the wharf. He then repeated, 'If you tell anybody, I will kill you; I will serve you the same, and I will set someone on to watch.' He (Clare) then carried the woman a little way further, and put the woman into the water. There was only one blow struck by Clare, and the woman never struggled from that time till she was put into the water. From first to last, these things occupied from a quarter of a hour to twenty minutes. Wall continued that he then went away, along the new railroad, and after having gone about a quarter of a mile towards 'the little engine' Clare overtook him, again threatened him in the event of his informing, and ultimately went off in the direction of Moxley. Witness then went and locked himself up in the little engine, being in fear of his life. He was several times afterwards threatened by Clare, and at last went and gave information to the police. On being asked by the coroner why he had afterwards absconded, he said it was because he was afraid Clare would kill him. On the deposition being read over, Wall said, 'It's quite right, sir, that's the truth.' In answer to a jurymen, he repeated that the night was a nice moonlight one, and to Mr. Whitehouse, who asked him why he had changed his name, he replied that it was because he was the last of the Walls.

Samuel Hale, Lea Brook, a watchman on the Great Western Railway, was next called, and his former evidence read over to him. On being asked if he had any additional matter to communicate, he said about eleven o'clock on the night in question he was watching the Bradley Bridge for another watchman, when he heard a man and a woman talking on the bridge in a common way. He went to sleep afterwards, but was awoken by a loud screaming noise, as of a woman. The first words he heard were, 'Don't hit me.' Immediately afterwards he heard her say, 'You said you would, but don't, don't.' He then went outside, and heard some people talking, but could not say whether they were men or women. He sat down again for about twenty minutes, after which he heard somebody on the line, and shortly afterwards a goods train came up. This train arrived, as appeared by the company's books, at 11.45 that night. Hall said he had not made this statement on his first examination, because he had no business at the bridge at that hour, and he did not want it to be known that he had been there. At the time he thought the voices were those of people quarrelling in some adjoining houses; and in answer to Mr. Waterhouse, he said that the loud screaming occurred before he heard the words he had repeated.

Samuel Whitmore, an engineer, was examined on the part of Clare. He said that he was at work at Bradley Field on the day of the alleged murder. He heard afterwards that old George knew of it. Directly afterwards he met George, and told him what he had heard, and recommended him to go at once and speak the truth. He replied that he did not know Clare, never saw him in his life, and had only passed the bridge on the night of the murder at half-past ten.

The Jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against Clare, who was committed for trial on the Coroner's warrant. When the reporters were leaving the room the prisoner said, 'Gentlemen, before you go, I wish to say something. I am no murderer. I am as innocent as God who sits on his own throne. No one is more innocent than I am. I wish she could come forth herself, and tell who did it. I am innocent as the angels on their thrones in heaven.'

Sheffield Independent 26/12/1857

“A remarkable case occurred at Stafford assizes. Philip Clare, a miner, was tried for the murder of Elizabeth Hopley, a young girl, at Bilston. Her body was found in a canal; death had resulted from suffocation. She might have accidentally fallen into the canal; such casualties are frequent thereabouts. She had worked for Clare at a pit’s mouth, and they had a dispute about wages. The case against the prisoner rested almost entirely on the testimony of Samuel Wall. He swore that he had seen Clare knock the girl down, late at night, on a railway bridge, and then carry her body to the canal, where he thrust it under water. If the Jury believed this man, conviction was inevitable; but they did not believe his minutely circumstantial story, and at once acquitted the accused.”

Wolverhampton Chronicle 10/12/1845

“An inquest was held on Tuesday last, at the WHITE LION, at Millfields, Bilston, before T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, on the body of Henry Downes, a labourer, residing at Mill Lane, about thirty-four years of age, who was found dead in a pit in Mill Lane, between eight and nine o'clock that (Tuesday) morning. The pit, which is twenty-five yards deep, is in a field near to the deceased's house, and is very much exposed, there being no fence round it. There is a footpath, which has been made by trespassers, near to the pit, and in the direction of Downes's house. There were cuts and bruises found upon the body of the deceased sufficient to cause death. He left the BLACK HORSE, at Bilston, on Saturday night about twelve o'clock, to go home, and was then intoxicated. The road by the side of the pit was his nearest way home. The jury returned a verdict of Found Dead.”

Phillips, Esq, coroner, on the body of Catherine Prasser, a child about eight years old, who, while amusing herself by riding on some iron called a 'dog,' at the end of a tramway waggon, was run upon by some other waggons, notwithstanding the efforts of the driver to check the horses, and thrown down, when the wheels of the last pack of waggons passed over her head and body, and caused instant death. Verdict, Accidental Death.”

“An inquest was held on Tuesday last, at the WHITE LION, Mill Fields, before T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, on the body of a man whose name was unknown. The body was dreadfully burnt in various parts and the abdomen was so far consumed that the intestines were visible. The remains of the deceased were found on a cinder heap, near Bilston furnaces, on Monday morning, where the unfortunate man appeared to have gone to find a warm place to rest. The man who found the body said he saw some one, whom he believed was the deceased, at the same place late on Sunday night, and he appeared then in want, and, as he thought, not sane. A verdict was returned in accordance with these facts.”

“On Monday last, T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, held an inquest at the WHITE LION INN, Millfields, on the body of James Hanmore, a collier, aged thirty-six. The deceased was employed at the Bilston Colliery, the property of Mr. George Jones, coal and ironmaster, and about six o'clock in the evening of Thursday, the 16th instant, he descended a stone-pit with five other persons. On arriving at the bottom, the men commenced working, the deceased and two others being employed in setting timber, about 150 yards from the bottom of the shaft. About nine o'clock a man, who was at work about forty yards from the deceased, heard a noise as if something had fallen from the roof, and the deceased immediately called out for assistance. The man (named . Morris) went and found him lying upon the ground, partially covered with dirt which had fallen from the roof. The soil was removed, when it was found that the poor man was dreadfully crushed across his loins, and that his leg was broken. After considerable delay, caused by the lid of the air-pump of the engine being off, which rendered it impossible to work the engine till it was replaced, the deceased was drawn up the pit and conveyed home. He was subsequently attended by Dr. Bell, the field surgeon, and Mr. Cooper's assistant, but he died on the 21st inst. It appeared that the clod fell from the roof only a short distance from where the deceased had just previously set the timber. The jury returned a verdict in accordance with the evidence. The unfortunate man has left a wife and four children.”

Brierley Hill Advertiser 9/5/1857

“This week has added another to the numerous distressing accidents we have lately had the painful duty to record, by which many lives and much property have been destroyed. The accident occurred about half past three o'clock on Tuesday afternoon last, by which three unfortunate individuals were buried into eternity, and several others very severely injured. The facts attending this melancholy catastrophe, as far as we can glean up to the present time are these.

A blast furnace on the ironworks of Messrs. Riley, at Mill Fields, near Bilston, suddenly, and from causes yet unascertained exploded, forcing out the surrounding brick work, and scattering the burning scoria throughout the casting house, in which at the time were employed two men and a boy, who were literally burnt to cinders. Their names were Thomas Davis, aged 25, moulder, Samuel Thomas, 25, moulder, and Thomas Fletcher, a lad of 9 years of age, employed in the same capacity. The following were immediately removed to the South Staffordshire Hospital, Wolverhampton: John Marr, aged 35, Griffiths Buildings, Bilston; Henry Taft, 38, Gibbett Lane, near Bilston; Patrick Portell, 26, Bilston; William Rigby, 34, Gibbett Lane, near Bilston; and James Corbett, 46, Bilston. The House Surgeon, S. B. Farr, Esq, states that the first four named are extensively burned all over the body, that John Marr and Henry Taft are burned to that extent as to leave their recovery hopeless. James Corbett, who escaped with the fewest injuries, has been removed to his family. John Mortboy, 40, Ettingshall, was also removed to the Hospital last evening badly burned.

The inquest on the bodies of the three unfortunate men killed was commenced before W. H. Phillips, Esq, at the WHITE LION yesterday afternoon. The bodies were viewed by the jury, and presented a most horrifying spectacle, the flesh being completely burned off.

From the evidence of Enoch Ledbitter, it appeared that the frightful occurrence took place at half past three o'clock on the preceding day, at the moment the witness was passing the doorway of a foundry leading to No.2 furnace, where the deceased were at work. It was this furnace that exploded, a vast mass of flame rushed by the witness, and he observed a large quantity of embers and molten metal issuing from the furnace. The metal and scoria were blown from the fore part of the furnace, over the wall, dividing it from the casting house. The injured men, now in hospital, were at the time employed between the wall and the furnace. The wall was eight feet in height. Witness assisted in getting the deceased out, and should suppose that about two tons of metal, cinders and coke were blown into the casting house. Ten minutes elapsed before the bodies were got out. Their clothes were completely burned off, and some of their limbs were reduced to cinders. All the men at work between the furnace and foundry wall were injured. He could give no explanation of the cause of the explosion. It is not usual to have a wall between the furnace and the foundry, but this had been erected to keep out intruders. The exploded furnace was similarly constructed and worked as others at which he had been employed. He had worked at the furnace for four years.

Henry Taft, now in hospital, had the management and control of the furnace. George Stanley, a furnaceman was in the 'big pit' at the time of the explosion. Taft took day, and witness night turns. The witness examined the furnace after the occurrence, and found that four courses of the brick work had been blown out from the 'breast,' the result of which would be that the hot metal would be forced through the aperture. He subsequently saw the 'tweers' taken out, and discovered a defect in one. He believed the cause of the explosion was that the molten iron had risen to such a height, that it had burned the back tweer, which, however, had not burst, but was burned on the lower side, near the end connected with the furnace and the consequence would be that the water from the cooling pipes would be forced into the furnace. The tweer in question had been placed there about a week previously by Henry Taft. It was the duty of the keeper to examine the tweers once an hour, and Taft had been on duty all the day. The metal was being run out at the time of the explosion. Though the tweer had been put in a week, it had not been used until Tuesday, when contrary to the orders of Mr. Field, furnace manager, Taft had set it to work. Mr. Field had forbidden the use of it because the furnace was out of repair. The furnace had a 'bad cinder on,' and the stuff, instead of descending gradually, had come down suddenly, and this would have the effect of stopping up the tweers. Taft, who was paid by the ton, told the witness that he used the additional tweer with a view to work more iron. Had Taft drawn the iron fifteen minutes sooner, the explosion would not have taken place.

Mr. John Thomas Field, manager of the furnaces, deposed that at the time of the explosion he was not on the premises. He had examined No.2 furnace half an hour previously, and found that the tweer he had forbidden Taft to work had been set on. He gave confirmatory testimony as to the cause of the catastrophe, and said that the tweer was placed lower than was consistent with safety. The furnace was properly constructed, the breastwork was in good order, and everything had been done to ensure security. The rise of the molten iron could have been perceived by Taft through a notch, by which the metal could have been left off.

John Carboy said he assisted Taft and another man to put in the tweer.

The Coroner here said that, although the witnesses who had been examined agreed as to the cause of the explosion, it would be more satisfactory to the public to have evidence of disinterested practical men, and he would, therefore, adjourn the inquiry until Monday next, at eleven o'clock."

Brierley Hill Advertiser 16/5/1857

"Two more of the sufferers by this sad accident have succumbed under their injuries. Patrick Portell and Michael Marr, thus making five victims in all. The enquiry into the cause of the catastrophe was re-opened on Monday forenoon, at the WHITE LION, Millfields, before W. H. Phillips, Esq, Coroner.

The first witness examined was Isaac Cooksey, who said he lived in Bilston, and was a furnace manager at Messrs. Hickman's Bilston Street Furnaces. On Saturday last witness examined the furnace at the Millfields Works, where the explosion took place. Examined the tuyeres and levelled the ground around. Found the furnace properly constructed. Believed the tuyeres to be then in the same place as before the explosion. Saw the tuyere that had melted. It was burned sufficiently to let water into the furnace. Had nothing more to say about the works except that he considered the furnace generally properly constructed. As furnace manager it was witness's duty to direct the men under his control as to how many tuyeres they should use, and to see these put properly in. That was the usual rule in all furnaces. A furnace keeper ought in no case use more tuyeres for the sake of making more money. Witness would, however, consider that was taking the power out of the manager's hands.

The Coroner here read over a portion of the evidence taken on the first day of the inquest, and asked the witness if he concurred in opinion with the witnesses then examined as to the cause of the accident. He said he did.

In answer to one of the Jury, Mr. Cooksey said that if he knew of a tuyere being four inches below its level he would consider it his duty to get it shifted.

Thomas Griffiths, furnace manager at the Bilston Furnaces, was next examined. On the Tuesday immediately after the explosion, he had examined the exploded furnace at Millfields. All the tuyeres were in the furnace. One of them was melted. It was the water running in through that tuyere that caused the explosion. That tuyere was in its proper place, but the others were a little raised to increase the fire. Could not see why the melted tuyere should not have been worked if the keeper did not allow the iron to rise too high. Considered the tuyere in a proper position – such as one as witness himself, had he been manager, would have placed them in. Examined the melted tuyere when it was taken out, and never saw a better. Could not see that any blame was attached to the manager. The iron must have got up to the tuyere and burnt it. The keeper must have allowed the iron to rise too high. He (the keeper) might have seen that the iron was rising too high and ought to have let it off. The burnt tuyere was a little above the notch, but the notch might have been dammed a little too high. Had seen many explosions. In this case considered that the water had accumulated for some time, and when the iron was drawn and rushed into the middle of the furnace, enabled to do so by the falling down of the loose stuff after the iron had been removed. Would allow a keeper little discretion in putting an extra pair of tuyeres on, as a keeper working the furnace ought to know how it was better than the manager.

George Stanley, one of the furnace keepers at Millfields, recalled: Had received orders from Mr. Field several times not to use the tuyeres that got burned. Taft, the other furnace keeper, was present when these orders were given, and they were given to both witness and Taft. On the morning of the explosion, the metal was let off an hour and a half before the regular time. It was let off so much earlier in order to repair the furnace – among other things to put in a few new tuyeres. The one that was burnt was among those that were to be replaced.

The Coroner here read the depositions of Henry Taft, the furnace keeper, in charge at the time of the explosion, taken in the hospital. Taft says: I am a furnace keeper at No.2 furnace, Millfields. I was there at the time of the explosion, having the management of that furnace. I was at the place where the iron is run out. The furnace had been out of fettle. Some time before the explosion, I had gone to tap the lower tuyere. I did not then think there had been so much iron in it. The cause of the explosion was from the iron reaching the lower tuyere and melting it and then the water running in. I do not blame the master or the manager. I do not blame any one. I was about to run out the iron at the time the explosion took place, observing that the flame was altered.

The Coroner pointed out how completely this deposition corroborated the opinion as to the cause of the accident expressed by Mr. Griffiths, but added if the Jury had any idea that Taft was culpable they must leave the deposition out if their consideration. After rather more than an hour's deliberation, the Jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death."

“The Coroner, Mr. T. M. Phillips, resumed the inquest yesterday, at the WHITE LION public house, Millfields, on the body of John Ashby, who was killed by being drawn over a pulley at the Millfields Colliery, belonging to Messrs. Sparrow.

James Phillips, engineer, stated that he was engineer at the colliery. He worked during the day, and Enoch Davis worked during the night. He left the engine in good working order the evening before the accident, and when he was called up the following morning, and was told that a man had been drawn over the pulley and killed, he went and examined the engine, and found it in the same order that he had left it the previous evening.

Mr. Baker, the Inspector of Mines, stated that he had since examined the engine, and found it in a good state, but when the man was standing at the hand gears it was impossible for him to see the pit. He (Mr. Baker) had ordered the working of the pit to be stopped because of that fault.

The Coroner having summed up, and directed the jury that if they thought it occurred through any negligence on the part of the engineer, Enoch Davis, they ought to return a verdict of manslaughter against him.

The Jury, after a brief consideration, returned a verdict of Accidental Death.”

“On Monday evening, about 4.40, a workman named Wilkinson discovered, in the canal at Spring Vale Furnaces, the body of a boy aged thirteen or fourteen. His clothes showed that he belonged to a decent family, and his name is now found to be Joseph Henry Bibb, of 10, Dudley Street, Bilston. It seems he had been bathing with some other boys in the canal, at a place where the water is seven or eight feet deep. Deceased could swim a little, and had dived under a canal boat. As he failed to reappear on the other side of the boat, his companions got frightened and ran away. This occurred about 4-5pm, and the alarm was not given till he had been twenty minutes in the water. Immediately after the body was recovered, Mr. Thomas, manager of the ironworks, sent for Dr. Ridley Bailey, but life was extinct. The body was removed to the WHITE LION public house, Millfields, where, on Wednesday, Mr. Phillips, district coroner, held an inquest, with the result that the jury returned a verdict of Accidentally Drowned.”

“Yesterday, Mr. T. M. Phillips (Coroner) held an adjourned inquest, at the WHITE LION INN, Millfields, on the body of Richard Colley (20), boiler-maker, Ward Street, Ettingshall, who was killed on the 20th inst owing to the fall of a scaffold at the Springvale Ironworks of Messrs. A. Hickman and Sons. It may be remembered that the scaffold upon the top of a heating-stove in course of erection at the works collapsed, and that the four men at work upon it fell a distance of 60ft or so. Mr. A. W. Hickman was present at the enquiry.

William Scott, builder, Wolverhampton Road, Bilston, was the only witness called. He said that at the request of the police he had examined the remains of the timber used in the erection of the scaffold. He saw the boards from the scaffold, and a byatt that had supported one side of it. The three remaining byatts were in their positions in the stove. The one that had fallen was of spruce timber. Witness considered that it had broken whilst in its position in the stove. In answer to the Coroner, he said that spruce was a very uncertain timber to depend upon to bear well. However, only five men were employed upon the scaffold, and there was nothing in the appearance of the byatt likely to indicate to its users that it was not safe. The byatts which still remained in the stove had been placed in a proper position. Nailing the byatts or lashing them with rope would not have prevented them from going. The only way to prevent that would have been to run a pole underneath them. As an independent person witness did not attach any blame whatever to the persons who put up the scaffold. It was not usual to test byatts before they were used, and witness should not attribute negligence to those who erected the scaffold because they did not test them.

The evidence of Robert Edward Probert, one of the injured men, which has already been published in the Daily Post, was then read.

[Robert Probert had overseen the erection of the scaffolding on behalf of his father, Edward Probert, who thought that the riveting of two men might have jarred the plank and caused it to break.]

In answer to the Coroner the jury said they were satisfied that no criminal negligence had occurred. The Coroner said that he placed great dependence upon Probert's evidence. He thought, however, that it was rather soon to have the men hammering before the boards were put in position. A verdict of Accidental Death was returned. A similar verdict was returned at the inquest subsequently held at the NEW MARKET HOTEL, Wolverhampton, on the bodies of Thomas Judson, Millfields, and Thomas Bennett, Ladymoor, who were injured in the same accident, and died in the Wolverhampton Hospital."

"Yesterday Mr. T. A. Stokes held an inquest at the WHITE LION INN, Ettingshall, on the body of Charles Oakley (8), of Greencroft, Bilston, who was drowned in the Birmingham Canal on Saturday night. The evidence showed that, against the orders of his mother, deceased went fishing with another boy, named Thomas Small (11), and, while standing by the side of the canal, the earth collapsed, and they were precipitated into the water. Small stated that he swam to the side and got out. He did not trouble to remain to assist his little friend, but ran to the house of his aunt, about half a mile away. He added that he was frightened at what had occurred, and, therefore, did not raise any alarm, and, because he had been forbidden to go fishing, he said nothing to his aunt of what had happened.

The Coroner said it was a sad case. If Small had not been so much concerned about his own wretched skin for disobeying his parents about going fishing, the probability was that the life of the child would have been saved.

The jury returned a verdict of Accidentally Drowned, and at their request Small was censured for his cowardice. The Coroner advised him to be a brave and better lad. He thought Small was morally responsible for the death of his companion."

"Representing Messrs. Harper, brewers, Mr. Graham Milward made application to the Bench for approval of plans for rebuilding the WHITE LION INN, Millfields Road, Bilston.

Mr. Milward said that the plans of two different schemes would be put before the Bench but the one which it was hoped the Bench would sanction slightly extended the drinking area beyond that of the present premises. He did not think that this would in any way increase the sale of intoxicants, but would afford larger and healthier rooms, and also be an improvement in the domestic accommodation. The other scheme was identical with the first except that the rooms would be 'squeezed in.'

The Bench gave approval to the larger scheme, by which the house will be farther back from the Millfields Road, and a piece of land apportioned to the Tarmac Road."

“An inquest was held on Wednesday last at the WHITE LION, Bilston, before T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, on the body of Joseph Revell Pitt, a child about two years and two months old, who had died from loss of blood under the circumstances detailed in the following evidence.

Mary Ann Pitt deposed that she was the wife of Joseph Pitt, a tin-plate worker, residing in Temple Street, in that town, and the mother of the deceased child, who had been in perfect health up to Saturday last. About one o’clock on that afternoon he was playing about a chair, and began to climb up the back of it; the chair overbalanced, and fell with the child to the ground. She raised him up, but could not perceive that he was hurt anywhere excepting on the lower lip and the upper gum, both of which were bruised a little. He did not appear to be in much pain, and soon began to play again. About six o’clock in the evening she had her tea, and gave her child some, upon which she perceived that the upper gum bled a little. She and her mother immediately took the child to Mr. Dickenson, surgeon, who dressed the gum, and the bleeding ceased for about an hour; but about eight o’clock it commenced again, and continued to bleed all night. About eleven the next morning she again took the child to Mr. Dickenson, who applied something to the gum, and then bound it up with tape. Mr. Dickenson applied something more on Sunday evening, but the bleeding did not cease. The gum continued to bleed till Monday forenoon, about eleven o’clock, when she took the child to Mr. Hancox, another surgeon, at whose suggestion she washed the mouth with alum water two or three times a day. She continued to do so until the death of the child, which took place about six o’clock on Tuesday morning. The bleeding did not cease from the time it commenced until the death of the deceased, except for about an hour on Sunday evening.

Hannah Phillips, grand-mother of the deceased, stated that she had lost four children from bleeding to death, and in the family twelve other persons (making altogether sixteen) had bled to death – not one of them having been seriously injured; the injuries were slight cuts or falls. Some of them had bled to death from teeth being drawn. Medical aid had always been procured, but without effect.

Mr. T. W. Dickenson, surgeon, corroborated the evidence of Mary Ann Pitt, as to his attendance upon the deceased. In his opinion the deceased died from loss of blood, arising from a slight contusion of the upper gum, and from relaxation of the system and the watery state of the blood. He had attended numerous members of the family of Hannah Phillips for loss of blood during thirteen or fourteen years. In some instances death had ensued, although he had used every means in his power to stop the bleeding. Other surgeons had also attended; but without avail. The coroner having summed up, the jury returned a verdict in accordance with the above evidence.”

“An investigation took place on the afternoon of Thursday week, at the WHITE LION, Temple Street, Bilston, before T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, touching the death of a newly-born infant, the illegitimate child of Mary Nelson Baker, about twenty-one years of age.

Mary Madders, who lives in Temple Street, Bilston, said that Mary Nelson Baker lived at her house. She had lived with her fourteen years, and witness had adopted her as her daughter. About four months ago she perceived that Baker was in the family way, and accused her of it. But, notwithstanding, she repeatedly denied the accusation up to the last moment; she was delivered of a child on the Monday previous. The infant was dead. A man named Thomas Garland, who lodges at the house, admitted that he was the father of the child. The fellow had beaten the mother about a fortnight ago; he knocked her over a chair. On account of the many reports afloat affecting this witness and the mother of the child, and the many suspicious circumstances attending the case, the coroner thought it was his duty to adjourn the inquest until Monday last, when the inquiry was resumed.

The principal evidence was that Mr. Cooper, surgeon, residing in Bilston, who had made a post mortem examination of the body, and who was of opinion that the child died from pressure on the umbilical cord, caused by protracted labour. He would not engage to say that the child would have been saved if the mother had been attended by a surgeon.

The jury returned a verdict in accordance with the medical evidence.”

“On Thursday last, an inquest was held at the house of Mr. Joseph Winsper, WHITE LION, Bilston, on the body of a boy named Richard Lydall, whose death was caused by his clothes taking fire. It appeared that on Saturday the 12th of December, the child, who was only five years old, was left by his mother in the house, while she went to take her husband’s dinner to the pit. During her absence his clothes caught fire, and he run into the yard, when several persons went to his assistance; but the poor sufferer was so seriously injured, that after lingering until Tuesday, the 22nd instant, death put an end to his sufferings.”

Wolverhampton Chronicle 17/10/1849

“An inquest was held on Wednesday evening last at the WHITE LION, Temple Street, Bilston, before T. M. Phillips, Esq, coroner, upon the body of James Ellmore, a child three years and five months old, who met with his death under the following circumstances.

On Friday, the 5th instant, during the temporary absence of his mother, he attempted to take a hook off the crane which hung over the fire, when the flame caught his pinafore, and he was burnt on the left breast and down his neck in a shocking manner. Mr. Hancox, surgeon, attended him up to Tuesday evening, when he died. A verdict of Accidental Death was returned.”

“Jesse Hodgkiss, a butty miner under Mr. Bruerton, appeared before the magistrates on Tuesday, in answer to a summons preferred against him by Alexander Jones, under the 5th and 6th Vict, cap.39 (Lord Ashley’s Act), for paying him his wages at a public house, whereby he had incurred a penalty not exceeding £10, nor less than £5.

It will be remembered that about a month ago, Hodgkiss summoned Jones and a man named Barker before the Court for removing ‘stamps’ in the pit, when at Mr. Leigh’s suggestion the charge was withdrawn. It then transpired that the defendants were paid their wages at a public house; hence arose the present charge. Mr. J. W. Hall, of Bilston, appeared for the complainant, and Mr. Shipman for the defendant.

Jones stated that he was engaged by Hodgkiss on the 30th September, at the rate of 3s 4½d per day; the 4th October (Saturday) was reckoning day, and Hodgkiss told him to go to Mr. Bruerton’s, the WHITE LION, Temple Street,

Bilston, and 'get a quart of ale,' and he would receive his money; about eight o'clock in the evening he was paid 5s 6d by the defendant's wife. Hodgkiss at this time was sitting by the fire; the remainder of his wages he had received in 'tommy.'

William Barker and Thomas Jones proved the payment of wages as above stated.

For the defence, Mr. Shipman contended that there was no proof that the house in which the complainant was paid was a public house.

Mr. Hall replied that the terms of the Act were an ale house or house of entertainment.

The bench, after a short consultation, fined the defendant £5; in default two months' imprisonment with hard labour; one half of the penalty to go to the informer."

"An inquest was held on Friday, before the coroner, T. M. Phillips, Esq, in the body of William Wall, at the WHITE LION, Temple Street, Bilston, who it appeared was fourteen years of age, and was killed by a fall of coal at a pit belonging to Mr. Rose, of Moxley. A verdict of Accidental Death was returned.

There was also a second inquest held on the body of a child named Sarah Ann Jones, who was about three years of age. The child, which was lost on Wednesday night after eight o'clock, was found in the canal about eleven o'clock, and it is supposed that she had unfortunately missed her way, and fell into the canal."

"Charles Angel, the landlord of the WHITE LION, Temple Street, Bilston, was yesterday brought up on a warrant on the charge of assaulting his wife.

The complainant, Jane Angel, stated that on Saturday fortnight she had a warrant for an assault out against the prisoner, which was allowed to remain in abeyance in consequence of his having removed himself and his clothes from her house, stating that if he were to remain there the result would be that he should be hanged for her. At one o'clock on the morning of Friday he burst into the house, entered a room where she in bed with her niece, dragged her forth, and thrice flung her violently on the floor.

The accused, who pleaded that he merely sought to re-establish his conjugal rights, was ordered to enter into his own recognizances of £20 to keep the peace towards his wife."

"Charles Angell, landlord of the WHITE LION beerhouse, Temple Street, Bilston, was summoned for ill-treatment of his wife. Defendant did not appear, and the complaint was heard in his absence. This was the third time that she had appeared against her husband, who was under sureties of the peace to her. On Sunday afternoon he returned home drunk, and after going upstairs and abusing his wife, who was in her bedroom, he fell asleep in the parlour, where he was left when the other inmates of the household retired to rest. They were aroused about one o'clock by his violence in his attempts to grope his way upstairs, and his wife in terror sought to escape him by going into her niece's room. Thither he followed her, struck her as she lay in bed, and attempted to set the clothes on fire. When at length he quitted the apartment and got a gun, with which he threatened to shoot her, his wife barricaded herself in the room by placing the bedstead against the door. When the constable went to serve the present summons upon him, defendant drew a knife, with which he threatened to stab his wife, and used language such as the officer said he had never heard before.

The bench made out a warrant for the commitment of the defendant to three months' imprisonment with hard labour, and ordered that at the end of two months he should find sureties of the peace for twelve months. Shortly afterwards he was dragged into the police station handcuffed, having offered a desperate resistance, and attempted to use his gun to prevent his arrest."

“At the Sedgley Police Court, yesterday, before Mr. Isaac Spooner (Stipendiary), Thomas Collins, landlord of the SHAMROCK INN, Temple Street, Bilston, was summoned for adulterating ale, on the 22nd of June. Samuel Toy, assistant to Mr. J. G. Horder, inspector, said that on the day in question he visited the defendant’s house, and was served with two quarts of ale by Mrs. Collins. He told her that he was having the ale for the purpose of being analysed, and sealed it up in her presence. Mrs. Collins told witness that the ale was out of a barrel from a brewery in Bilston. He afterwards took the ale to Mr. Horder. Mr. Horder proved receiving the ale, and forwarded it to Mr. Jones, county analyst, on the 23rd of June. He received, on the 19th ult, a certificate proving that the ale was adulterated with common salt, of which it contained 65.62 grains in the imperial gallon. Defendant said he only put a halfpenny worth of salt in the whole of the brewing, and did not know that he was doing any harm. Mr. Spooner said, as it was not a bad case, he should only fine defendant £2 and costs.

Charles Hughes, an ex-constable and landlord of the WHITE LION, Temple Street, Bilston, was charged with a similar offence. The ale was adulterated by containing 80.38 grains of common salt to the imperial gallon. Defendant said he had kept his house for over twelve years, and during that time no complaint had ever been made against the house. Mr. Spooner said he fully believed defendant; at the same time he believed in the decision of Mr. Jones that the ale was adulterated, as he knew that Mr. Jones’s analyses were similar to the London analyses as they had been tried. As the present case was worse than the last, defendant would be fined £3 and costs.”

“At the Bilston Police Court, yesterday, before M. Ironmonger and W. Ward, Esqs, Alfred Brown, landlord of the WHITE LION INN, Temple Street, was charged by Police-constable Hayward with selling drink after hours on the 24th ult.

The officer stated that after 10 o’clock on the night in question, he saw a woman and named Mulloy receive from the daughter of the landlady, a jug filled with beer. In reply to his questions, the landlady said she had given the woman a jug of penny beer, but he tasted it, and thought it ‘a bit too good for that.’

Mr. Fellows appeared on behalf of the police, and Mr. Bowen defended.

The woman Mulloy was called, and swore the beer was a free gift, on account of her requiring sustenance for her four months old baby.

Hayward denied that Mulloy had a baby with her at the time.

Fined £7 4s 6d, including costs, the fine to be reduced to £1 upon the present landlady giving up the house within a month, it being explained that defendant was only the nominal landlord.”

“At Bilston Police Court, yesterday, Henry Jones, landlord of the WHITE LION INN, Temple Street, was charged with keeping his house open during prohibited hours for the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Police-constable Moss deposed that at half-past ten on Sunday morning, the 7th inst, he saw a man named Kearns leaping over a wall at the back of defendant’s house, and he heard him tell someone on the other side to ‘fill that bottle.’ He went up and detained Kearns in conversation, and shortly afterwards a voice over the wall, which he thought was the landlady’s, asked Kearns to take the bottle over, upon which Kearns’s wife came up and took from over the wall a brown stone bottle. Witness followed her home, and found that the woman had hidden the beer in a bedroom. Witness then took Mrs. Kearns to the landlady, who denied that she had supplied any beer.

Mr. Downing, for the defence, also denied that any beer was sold. The beer-machine was locked up on Saturday night, and was not unlocked until half-past twelve on Sunday.

Several witnesses were called in support of this statement, but in the end Mr. Levridge said the defence appeared to be an ingenious one, but it would not hold water. A fine of 20s and costs would be imposed, but the license would not be endorsed.”

Staffordshire Advertiser 5/6/1909

“James Rogers, of Gozzard Street, Bilston, was charged with burglariously entering the WHITE LION INN, Temple Street, and stealing a bicycle and a number of other articles. Police-constable Whitehouse saw him at Moxley with the lady’s bicycle, and when the defendant noticed the officer he hurried over a pit mound. The officer pursued him, and in the chase the defendant threw the machine down and ran away, but he was captured. The bicycle had been stolen from the WHITE LION, and some tablecloths, spoons, and other articles were also missed at the same time. The defendant was committed for trial at the Staffordshire Quarter Sessions.”

Lichfield Mercury 18/6/1909

James Rogers (25), blaster, was indicted for having broken into the dwelling house of Mary Ann Williams, at Bilston, on May 27, and stolen a lady’s bicycle, ten bottles of stout, two tablecloths, and four teaspoons. Mr. Benyon Harris prosecuted.

It appeared that the prosecutrix, who resided at the WHITE LION INN, Bilston, made the doors and windows of the house fast before going to bed on the night of May 27, but at six o’clock the next morning she found that the house had been entered during the night and several things stolen. About four o’clock the same morning Pc Whitehouse was proceeding along Great Bridge Street, when he saw the prisoner examining a lady’s bicycle, which was lying on the road. When he saw the officer prisoner made off, but he afterwards concealed the machine behind a mound. The bottles of stout were subsequently found concealed between a hedge and a wall.

Prisoner, in giving evidence, said he found the bicycle outside the TRAVELLERS REST INN, and was going to take it to the Police Station. The jury found prisoner guilty of common larceny, and he was sentenced to twelve months’ imprisonment.”

“.....I was a train spotter myself in the early 1940s The third line that was mentioned was known as the Loop on which they used to divert the freight trains on to Wednesbury and bring them up as far as Temple Street so they could keep the passenger trains running specially in the holiday season.

When the main lines had gone quiet they would let them go, that's if they could find the driver and fireman. At times they would telephone the signalman and tell him they were going for a pint. Then they would descend down the embankment and into the back entrance of the WHITE LION in Temple Street.....”

“Arthur Lester applied at the Police Court, yesterday, for the license of the WHITE ROSE INN, Temple Street, Bilston, to be transferred to him from J. W. Jones. In reply to questions, Lester said that for the past eight years he had ben clerk and valet for Mr. Bull, of the Royal Adelaide Hotel, Windsor. Mr. Bull was a bookmaker, and was known as ‘Chippy Norton.’ There were some running grounds next door to the WHITE ROSE, but he (Lester) did not intend to use the premises as a betting house. The application was refused.”

“At the Police Court, yesterday, Mr. W. S. Smith, solicitor, of Wednesbury, applied to the magistrates (Messrs. C. Wells, F. A. Homer, and S. Wilkes) for the transfer of the license of the WHITE ROSE INN, Temple Street, Bilston, from J. W. Jones to Arthur Lester,

Mr. Smith said a similar application was made on Tuesday last, and it was then refused. There was no objection to the personal character of Lester, and he might say that his certificate of character had been signed by Mr. S. B. Cole, the chairman of the Bilston Township Commissioners, Dr. Larkin, and several Bilston tradesmen; but objection had been taken to Lester on the ground that he had been a clerk to Mr. H. Bull, who, although in possession of a good old English name, was better known as ‘Chippy Norton,’ and was a professional bookmaker. Lester had, however, now given up that business, and had settled down to obtain a proper livelihood in this public house. The house was owned by Mr. William Bird, of Wednesbury, who had threatened to turn Lester out if any betting took place there. He knew that Superintendent Longden was conscientious in his opposition to the application; but if this opposition was continued they would probably have to have angels behind the bar, and no man who had ever put a stake on the Derby would be allowed to have a license.

Superintendent Longden stated that the application was similar to the one made on Tuesday, and the magistrates sitting on that day (Messrs, G. Ward and J. R. Cartwright) had refused it.

Mr. Homer said the magistrates were not prepared to sit in judgement on their brother magistrates. He could only say that if they had been at Court on Tuesday that would have agreed with them in refusing the transfer. The application would therefore be again refused.”

Lincolnshire Chronicle 13/12/1907 - Advert

"Her Trembling Body. St. Vitus Dance Completely Cured in the Case of a Bilston Girl by Dr Williams Pink Pills. A representative of the Birmingham Echo recently paid a visit to 24, Temple Street, Bilston, and interviewed Mr. and Mrs. Fellows, who keep the WHITE ROSE INN, and who have been well known and highly respected residents of the district for close upon thirty years. He then gathered details of the remarkable cure of their daughter, Susannah, of St. Vitus Dance by Dr. Williams Pink Pills for Pale People after she had been attending hospital for eighteen months.

'When my daughter was about fourteen years of age,' Mrs. Fellows remarked to the newspaper representative, 'she used to complain of pains in the stomach after eating. Doctors medicine seemed to have no good effect, for under treatment she got worse. She developed gastric ulcer of the stomach, and was cured at the Wolverhampton Hospital. She had only been home a little while when all the old symptoms manifested themselves, and she became a victim of St. Vitus Dance. Again I took her to the hospital, and for eighteen months she attended once a week. But during this time she lapsed into a dreadful state. Any food caused violent pains. Twitching and nervousness manifested itself, and she could not keep the left side of her limbs still. It was painful to watch her twitching and jumping, first her face, then her arms or legs. Night and day she could not keep her limbs still, and the constant strain made her terribly weak. The St. Vitus Dance became more acute, and affected her all down the left side, and it made our hearts ache to look at her. We did not know what to do, as we had tried several doctors, the hospital, and many medicines without deriving benefit. One day we read of a case similar to Susie's. It was that of a youth at Wolverhampton who had been cured by Dr. Williams Pink Pills. My husband and I decided to try them with our dear daughter. Very soon we were astonished at the improvement which manifested itself. The colour came back to her cheeks. Then the St. Vitus Dance, the evidence of which had been diminishing, disappeared altogether, to our great relief and delight. She is now sixteen years of age, and no one who looks at her now would ever think she had undergone such an illness. She is, through Dr. Williams Pink Pills, in the best of health, as strong and hearty as possible, without any trace of her former disorders.'

The only way to cure Nervous Complaints is to fill the veins with Rich, Pure Blood. It is because Dr. Williams Pink Pills do this that they have cured many forms of Nervous Disorders, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Headaches, Women's Ills, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, Anaemia, Indigestion and Rheumatism.

Dr. Williams Pink Pills for Pale People are sold by all dealers, or you can obtain them direct from the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, post free, one box 2s 9d, or six boxes for 13s 9d."

"At a Transfer Sessions at the Bilston Police Court on Friday.....

Mr. A. W. Higgs made an application with respect to the WHITE ROSE, Temple Street, which really meant a reconstruction. The architect explained that there would be a decrease in the drinking area of 113 square feet, and there would be better supervision. The application was granted on condition that various points made by Superintendent Higgs were carried out."

Express and Star 7/2/1995

"A Wolverhampton landlord fled with more than £2,000 of his pub's takings after he caught his wife and a customer in a compromising embrace, a court heard today. John Timmins disappeared to Blackpool and when he returned he started a blaze at the customer's home, causing £8,000 worth of damage. Timmins, who ran the WHITE ROSE public house in Bilston, admitted theft and arson being reckless whether life was endangered at Stafford crown court yesterday.

Mr. Tim Newman, prosecuting, said Timmins had found his wife Mary and Derek Brittan – a customer who befriended them – together at the pub in Temple Street. Timmins, aged 26, left with £2,118 from the pub and went to Blackpool. He claimed the cash was then stolen from his hotel room. Mr. Newman said Timmins had later returned, smashed a window at Mr. Brittan's home in Dover Street, Bilston, and started a fire. Neighbours in other flats raised the alarm when they noticed smoke pouring through their floorboards.

The case against Timmins, now of Broad Street, was adjourned for reports. He was granted bail."

Sandwell Evening Mail 26/7/1995

“A Black Country pub landlady who told police she had been mugged in order to cover up thefts from the till by her barman husband, was ordered to do 80 hours community service. Mary Timmins maintained she had been robbed of weekend takings of £1,475 at the WHITE ROSE pub in Bilston as she made her way to the bank. But the mugging was bogus, Mr. Bernard Linnemann, prosecuting, told Wolverhampton Crown Court. He said the offence came to light when a new landlord at the pub found documents which had been reported stolen in the robbery in the cellar. Timmins told police the problems were caused by her husband who had suggested the false robbery, said Mr. Linnemann.

Timmins, of High Street, Bilston, admitted perverting the course of justice and stealing money belonging to Wolverhampton and Dudley Breweries.

Recorder Peter Rhodes told the 37-year-old, ‘I am quite satisfied the prime mover in this case was your husband and that you were very much under his influence.’ Mr. Linnemann said her husband John was serving a custodial sentence for theft.”

Black Country Bugle (September 1996)

Pub of the Month. WHITE ROSE, Temple Street, Bilston

“.....Today, Temple Street can boast of just one public house to serve the local community, the WHITE ROSE. Yet, in 1900, there were six drinking establishments here, and in 1850 there were nine – not bad for a street just a couple of hundred yards in length!

The WHITE ROSE was included in the redevelopment plans of the 1960s. The old pub (which stood just to the side of the present-day WHITE ROSE) was pulled down 28 years ago, when the new pub opened its doors for the first time.

For the past eighteen months, Keith and Jean Thomas have been at the helm of this popular Banks’s house, bringing with them many years of pub-keeping experience. Their pub is today a worthy successor to those earlier Temple Street watering-holes – and provides a true focal point for the local community, where a good pint of beer, a friendly welcome, and a full programme of pub activities are the vital ingredients of their success. The bustling WHITE ROSE has entertainment in the lounge seven nights a week, plus a full array of pub games – darts, dominoes, crib and pool – in the bar. Keith and Jean even find the time to give support and backing to a Saturday football team.

It’s a hectic schedule alright, but one that the Thomases thrive on after so long in the trade. Running pubs is second nature to them – and thirty years ago, Keith, then nineteen, became the youngest steward in the country, when he was appointed to that position at South Staffs Golf Club, Tettenhall. But he was only following a well-trodden family path, for his parents were themselves licensees, at the old TOWN HALL, Wolverhampton, and the FOUR ASHES, Stafford Road. ‘Since then, I’ve kept many pubs of my own,’ said versatile Keith, who is a qualified chef and has also picked up numerous pub management and cellar awards along the way. Long-time WHITE ROSE customers reckon that they’ve never had a bad pint since Keith and Jean took over the pub lease, and bar snacks and superb value Sunday lunches have also added to the pub’s local appeal.....”

Two teams from here took part in the Bilston and Bradley Friday Night Darts League. [1996]

It was closed for a minimum of 14 days on 12th April 2001 when mice were found there.

Express & Star 12/6/2008

“A pub in Bilston faces being bulldozed and replaced with houses under new plans revealed today which could see yet another Black Country bar confined to history. Proposals have been submitted to Wolverhampton City Council to demolish the WHITE ROSE in Temple Street and build six houses. If the development is approved, it will become the latest in a long line of once-popular pubs to bite the dust across the city following a downturn in trade. Bilston councillor Bert Turner said today, ‘There are so many pubs closing at the moment – it is tragic that yet another one looks as though it is going to be bulldozed. Lots of pubs like this have lots of land and it seems as though it is easier to get rid of them and build houses. It is another nail in the coffin for the community pub.’”

“A 46-year-old publican who let customers smoke in his Black Country pub has become the first in Wolverhampton to be prosecuted since the smoking ban came into force. Dial Singh, of the WHITE ROSE, Temple Street, Bilston, was told to pay £1,745 after the court heard environmental health officers saw two people smoking in the pub as a member of staff was a few feet away in February – seven months after the nationwide ban came into effect. Customers tried to hide ashtrays under tables as the officers were there. At Wolverhampton Magistrates Court yesterday, Singh, of Bhylls Lane, Merry Hill, Wolverhampton, was fined £650 in his absence. He was also given £1,080 costs and a £15 victim surcharge. Magistrates found him guilty of failing to prevent smoking in a smoke-free premises.

Councillor Barry Findlay, Wolverhampton Council cabinet member for the environment, said, ‘Environmental Services officers worked closely with all businesses in Wolverhampton prior to the introduction of the Health Act and it is our duty to ensure it is being complied with. The act is viewed as the most important piece of public health legislation for a significant number of years and is aimed at reducing the effects of passive smoke in premises by preventing people from smoking inside enclosed or substantially enclosed premises. This case is another example of how we are committed to our duty to ensure the act is being implemented and doing all we can to protect public health.’

Council spokesman Tim Clark said officers told Mr. Singh about people smoking on the premises. The pub is shut and faces demolition under plans to build five homes on the site. Dial Singh today told the Express & Star he had been in India for a ‘family emergency’ and was not aware of the court’s verdict.”

“A Staffordshire publican has lodged an appeal against a fine for allowing the smoking ban to be breached at another of his pubs. Dial Singh, who runs The Moon Under The Water in Huntington Terrace Road, Cannock, claims that his good name has been ‘besmirched.’ He also owns the WHITE ROSE in Temple Street, Wolverhampton, and earlier this week he became the first publican in the city to be prosecuted since the smoking ban came into force. The 46-year-old was found guilty by Wolverhampton magistrates on Monday of failing to stop smokers in a public place and ordered to pay almost £2,000. The hearing took place in his absence and Mr. Singh said if he had been allowed to explain himself, the prosecution would not have stood. He insists the pub was not trading at the time environmental health officers visited and found drinkers lighting up and ashtrays on the tables.

Officials from the council dropped by the pub for a routine visit on February 1 this year, seven months after the nationwide ban came into effect, and two months, Mr. Singh claims, after he closed it down because of poor business. He said he returned from India following a family bereavement on Monday night to find he had been prosecuted in his absence despite asking the court for a postponement. ‘I am very angry that the case has gone ahead even though I went to the court on October 8 to tell them I was attending a family funeral,’ he said. ‘I brought in my air ticket as requested as proof that I was travelling on October 10. I have now seen my solicitor and we have lodged an appeal. I have not traded at the WHITE ROSE since December 15. The pub has been closed and I have had four lads living there for security purposes so the building doesn’t get damaged. They were smoking in there when the inspectors walked in but they weren’t selling alcohol, it was a private gathering. The inspectors are talking absolute rubbish.’

The publican, who lives in Bhylls Lane, Merry Hill, Wolverhampton, also runs the HOP POLE in Oxley Moor, Wolverhampton, and the RED COW in Coseley. He said, 'I have a good name in the business and I feel it has been besmirched. I would never break the no smoking ban, and I don't in my other pubs. I tried to surrender the WHITE ROSE licence after I ceased trading there but I was told it would have to run for the full 12 months whether I was open or not.'

The court heard that officers identified two people openly smoking in the bar during a visit to the February visit. Mr. Singh was interviewed and little evidence was provided to show what measures or instructions had been provided to prevent people smoking within the premises. The pub was boarded up by the council last month."

St. Vitus' Dance completely cured in the case of a Bilston girl
by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

A representative of the "Birmingham Echo" recently paid a visit to 24, Temple-street, Bilston, and interviewed Mr. and Mrs. Fellows, who keep the White Rose Inn, and who have been well-known and highly respected residents of the district for close upon thirty years. He then gathered details of the remarkable cure of their daughter Susannah, of St. Vitus' Dance, by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, after she had been attending hospital for eighteen months.

"When my daughter was about fourteen years of age," Mrs. Fellows remarked to the newspaper representative, "she used to complain of pains in the stomach after eating. Doctors' medicine seemed to have no good effect, for under treatment she got worse. She developed gastric ulcer of the stomach, and was cured at the hospital.

PAINFUL TO WATCH HER.

"She had only been home a little while when all the old symptoms manifested themselves, and she became a victim to St. Vitus' Dance. Again I took her to the hospital, and for eighteen months she attended once a week. But during this time she lapsed into a dreadful state. Any food caused violent pains. Twitching and nervousness manifested itself, and she could not keep the left side of her limbs still. It was painful to watch her twitching and jumping, first her face, then her arms or legs. Night and day she could not keep her limbs still, and the constant strain made her terribly weak.

MISS SUSANNAH FELLOWS,
Cured of St. Vitus' Dance
by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

"The St. Vitus' Dance became more acute, and affected her all down the left side, and it made our hearts ache to look at her. We did not know what to do, as we had tried several doctors, the hospital, and many medicines without deriving benefit. One day we read of a case similar to Susie's. It was that of a youth at Wolverhampton, who had been cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. My husband and I decided to try them with our dear daughter.

ASTONISHMENT AND JOY.

"Very soon we were astonished at the improvement which manifested itself. The colour came back to her cheeks. Then the St. Vitus' Dance, the evidence of which had been diminishing, disappeared altogether, to our great relief and delight. She is now sixteen years of age, and no one who looks at her now would ever think she had undergone such an illness. She is, through Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, in the best of health, as strong and hearty as possible, without any trace of her former disorders."

The only way to cure Nervous Complaints is to fill the veins with Rich, Pure Blood. It is because Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do this that they have cured many forms of Nervous Disorders, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Headaches, Women's Ills, St. Vitus' Dance, Paralysis, Anæmia, Indigestion, and Rheumatism. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are sold by all dealers, or you can obtain them direct from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, post free, one box for 2s. 9d., or six boxes for 13s. 9d.

Pub of the Month. WILLIAM BUTLER, John Street, Ettingshall.

“.....The New Village district of Ettingshall remained more or less intact until the early 1960s, when plans to demolish and replace all the old houses and small businesses were carried through, and a ‘new’ New Village was born. At the heart of this redevelopment was the WILLIAM BUTLER pub (opened in 1966) and, remarkably, despite all the cosmetic changes hereabout, much of the old neighbourly togetherness survived, with many of the old families of John Street, Frost Street, and environs being rehoused close to their former homes. Hence, the WILLIAM BUTLER quickly acquired the importance of a community-based pub, at the heart of most of the social activities in the ‘village’ and undoubtedly this is still the case today.

Today’s licensee is John Street born Keith Davies, who bought the freehold of the WILLIAM BUTLER two years ago, with his wife Joyce. Since then they have worked hard to provide Ettingshall fold with a friendly, well-run and thriving ‘local’ which lives up to its description in every sense of the word. Keith explained, ‘I was born almost opposite to where the pub stands, in 1953. I attended the local school and chapel, and knew the area before it was redeveloped, so I’m a John Street lad through and through, and have known most of my customers all my life.’ It’s not surprising then that Keith and Joyce (a Tipton wench by birth) have a great rapport with their regulars, and were immediately accepted into the New Village fraternity when they took over at the pub, after a spell at the BULLS HEAD, on nearby Catchems Corner. ‘We were happy to stake our future in this pub when we learnt that the freehold was available,’ said Keith, ‘and since moving in we have exclusively stocked Banks’s beers, which are the most popular in this area.’

Since Keith and Joyce moved here, pub games have featured very strongly. The lads in the bar put out darts teams in local leagues, on Sunday lunchtimes and Wednesday and Friday evenings. The women of the pub (Joyce included) are not to be outdone, for they also field a team in the Bilston and Bradley Ladies Darts League, on Tuesday nights. Meanwhile, dominoes night is on a Monday, and pool on a Thursday (with ‘gaffer’ Keith figuring in both these teams, and also chairing the Bilston Pool League).

Apart from the lively bar, the pub has a children’s room and a comfortable and spacious lounge, which is available for functions. A recent addition to the WILLIAM BUTLER facilities is an attractive rear patio/garden area, complete with barbecue. This is a really colourful asset, especially with all the lovely weather of the past couple of months, and is enhanced by twelve hanging-baskets and an attractive border.....”

Keith Davies was a lay preacher at George Street Methodist Church.
He died in December 1994.

HOW TO USE THE INFORMATION

PUB NAME

This is generally the name by which the pub was officially known. Other names, either changes or nicknames, are to be found in the notes section.

Names marked with + are, at present, not specifically identified as being any of those listed before them, and have not been attributed yet because of the lack of data available.

Pubs are not listed necessarily under their current name.

A number of beerhouses were never given a name, and these appear at the end of the pub lists as Beerhouse – Unnamed. Only those that I am pretty sure had 'on' licences are included.

This is sometimes the case with alehouses too.

Can't find the pub you want?

It's probably had its name changed. Try using the search facility to locate the pub name, or nickname, that you know.

ADDRESS

Eg. 52, (79), Haden Street, (Haden Lane) / Cox Alley, Kates Hill, DUDLEY

Numbers and street names in brackets denote earlier addresses. These are usually detailed in the notes section. Buildings were renumbered with development and demolition, or the renaming of the street etc.

Sometimes districts are also included, such as Kates Hill above. These are often historical and are now obsolete, but can be located on early maps.

OWNERS

These are listed where known.

They include companies and individuals, and occasionally the dates acquired and prices paid.

LICENSEES

Often the owner was the licensee, and even when they employed managers their names would appear in directories.

Where known, names are appended with (manager, non-resident, tenant etc.).

Dates

These are differentiated by the use of brackets and/or italics.

[1862] = This was the case in 1862. Where the date appears on its own it refers to the earliest or latest reference found.

This also applies where a pub has its name changed, eg.

[2001] followed by "Its name was changed to XXXXX. [2003]"

This means that in 2001 it still had its previous name, but by 2003 its name had been changed to XXXXX.

[1862] = Information from a directory dated 1862, so may have been out of date when it was published. As much as five years in some cases!

[1860's] = Some time in this decade.

[] = No date available, but the detail is inserted in roughly the right chronological place.

(1862 – [1863] = Started in 1862 and was still the case in 1863.

(1862 – 1863) = Started in 1862 and ended in 1863.

(1862 – 1863); the ; signifies that the licensee was immediately followed by the next person in the list. Sometimes the licence transfer came months after a person's death, but the transfer date is the one used, if date of death is not known.

Sometimes the licensing registers contradict findings from other sources such as directories. Where this occurs the ; is still used, the anomalous name is given a question mark and is placed in a suitable chronological place, and the next person is the one that follows the ;

Eg.

Fred Smith [1916] – 1927);

Joseph Bloggs [1921] ?

George Jones (1927 – 1932)

In the register George Jones follows on from Fred Smith, but Joseph Bloggs was mentioned in another source in 1921. He is left in for completeness.

When using original documents, such as licensing registers, which are sometimes damaged, it is impossible to read some material (including dates). Where this has occurred, and only the decade or century is decipherable, I have used underscoring to replace the missing digits in an effort to keep the licensees in the correct order.

Eg. Fred Smith (188_ – 18_);

John Jones (18__ – 189_):

If the date is followed with a : this signifies the last person to hold the licence.

NOTES

These start with locations, and are followed by previous names or nicknames of the pub. These are then followed by other details, often where dates are unknown.

Historical details then follow chronologically where possible.

Some pubs listed are the same as others, but so far I have been unable to connect them. This is especially true when directories only list the pub name and licensee, and more than one pub of that name existed at the time. These are often identified by:-
Check OTHER PUB NAME.

Licensees are often associated with more than one pub, and pubs are sometimes rebuilt on different sites to their original one. These are identified by:-
See OTHER PUB NAME

Titles – only Miss and Mrs are used here (when known).
No other titles are used.
ie. Major George Cox was not a major. Major was his first name.

Often names were spelt differently in the sources used. This is identified where possible, and one spelling is used for consistency.

Where I have decided that different spellings are the same person I have identified this
eg. Smith = Smithe = Smyth

Where I am unsure about this I have identified it thus

* possibly the same person

* probably the same person

Where sources are quoted these appear in colour, followed by the quote in black in a different typeface from the remainder of the information. Sometimes I have paraphrased a quotation, and some have had additions entered by myself.

Information which has been transcribed by me from handwritten sources, such as censuses, parish records, licensing minutes etc., should be correctly spelt, but the reader is advised to check the original for themselves. In cases where I have been unable to transcribe individual names, only those letters that are clear are given.
eg, Osbal__on ? The underscore does not indicate the number of missing letters, as this is often as unclear as the name itself.

Where I am not 100% sure that I have deciphered a name correctly this is indicated by a question mark in parentheses ie. (?)

Census records are presented in a different form than the original.

This is followed by the name and (age).

Relationship to [1] follows, and then occupation (if any is listed).

Finally comes the place of birth. Where these places are local to the Black Country, or are larger towns and cities, no county name is given.

Where birthplaces are given in the Black Country it has to be remembered:-

(a) Harborne once included Smethwick

(b) Kingswinford once covered places such as Brierley Hill, Pensnett, Quarry Bank and Wall Heath

(c) Sedgley once included Coseley and the Gornals

(d) West Bromwich once included Great Bridge (now in the Tipton file), Great Barr and Hamstead (not considered by me as part of the Black Country).

Most local newspapers were weekly and appeared on a Saturday.
This does not apply to the Express & Star, Midland Counties Evening Express, or Evening News / Star.

Newspaper articles sometimes spell the same thing (eg. Surname) differently in a single report. Where the proper spelling is known this is altered by me, but when I am unsure they are left as they appear.

A gazeteer is provided to give approximate locations of place names in relation to larger towns and cities in Britain.

Where a licensee changes her name by marriage, her former surname appears in brackets ie. Jane (maiden or previous married name) Smith.

Where names of spouses are known, they are listed in the past tense, even though many may be still husband and wife. This is merely a convention used by me for convenience.

[text] Where square brackets occur, with text in a different typeface inside, this signifies comments of my own.

Some entries, in all sections, are followed by a number of question marks (without parentheses). These show the extent of doubt that I have over that entry.

The historical nature of the contents has meant that the old currency of pounds shillings and pence is used frequently. A pound (£) was divided into 20 shillings (s) and a shilling was divided into 12 pence (d). Halfpennies and farthings (1/4d) were also in use.

This is also the case where other measures, length, weight etc., are used. See glossary for details.

THE ACTS

Below is a list of some of the Acts of Parliament relating to licensing, and some of their effects.
By no means is all legislation here.

Alehouse Act, 1828

Laid down, for the first time, a uniform code of procedure for annual licensing and transfer sessions. Premises licensed under this Act were enabled to sell not only 'Ale' but other intoxicating drinks.

Beerhouse Act, 1830

A reforming Act intended to discourage the consumption of spirits (especially gin). Excise licenses could be taken out without having to go through the justices, and this resulted in the growth of beerhouses nationwide.

Refreshment Houses Act, 1860

Effectively put the sale of wine on an even footing with beer, as it enabled a refreshment house keeper to sell wine without obtaining a justice's license.

Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869

Gave the licensing justices control over all premises where intoxicating liquor was sold for consumption on the premises. No new licenses could be obtained without applying to them, but existing beer and wine licenses were protected (see ante 1869, above).

This inhibited the continuing growth of beerhouses resulting from the 1830 Act.

Licensing Act, 1872

This established a procedure whereby a new license was only valid after a second, Confirmation procedure had taken place.

Licensing Act, 1902

This granted justices the same rights over off licenses as they had over on licenses, since 1869.

Licensing Act, 1904

This set up the compensation procedure for the extinguishing of unnecessary licenses, or those of unsound premises, but did not affect ante 1869 beerhouses.
